This second group again comprises four works, three of which are for string quartet. These include the Phantasy Quartet from which an example was given in the earlier portion of this article, the Quartet in C which is dedicated to the composer's colleagues in the Philharmonic String Quartet as it was then constituted, and the two sketches 'By the Tarn' and 'Jack o' Lantern.' It was with intention that I selected as an illustration, in the opening section of this article, a fragment of the lyrical portion of the 'Phantasy' as representing a more thoughtful mode of expression. Had the object been to show no more than increased proficiency, the portion corresponding to the Scherzo would have answered the purpose better. As a whole, the Phantasy may be regarded as Goossens's first thoroughly characteristic work, its predecessors having shown the suggestion rather than the achievement of personality. The Quartet is in three movements dedicated respectively to Arthur Beckwith, Raymond Jeremy, and Cedric Sharpe. It might be inscribed 'to my friends pictured within,' had not Elgar the right of priority to the title. We may gather from it, incidentally, that Mr. Jeremy has something of the thoughtful gravity which belongs to his instrument, and that Mr. Sharpe is not averse from an occasional visit to a music-hall, whence he has acquired a liking for the tune 'You're here and I'm here.' These, however, are considerations which do not affect, one way or the other, the musical value of the work, whose recognition they may even have retarded, for it is still far from being appreciated as it deserves. Of the two sketches, it is scarcely necessary to speak, as by now they must be familiar to all frequenters of chamber concerts. They represent modern tone-painting in its most alluring form.

The Rhapsody for 'cello and pianoforte is another extremely characteristic work, rather more full of inner meaning than his other music of this period. There is—notably in its concluding pages—a depth of emotion that one did not suspect then, though there has been further evidence of it since. The Coda on a sustained pedal-note (E) is profoundly impressive.

Once again, a phase of Goossens's writing is rounded off with an attack of pianistic playfulness, which seems to be his method of clearing the way for new departures. Once again it would be easy to underestimate the artistic value of his 'Kaleidoscope,' but it would be an error repeated in aggravated form, for these twelve little pieces have other qualities besides their ingenuity and their humour. One may smile at the clever dissonance of the 'Hurdy-Gurdy Man,' or the imitative blatancy of the 'Punch and Judy Show,' but there is genuine poetry in the 'Lament for a Departed Doll,' and remarkable imaginativeness in a 'Ghost-Story,' despite its superficial indebtedness to Moussorgsky. To the critic, these pieces are of great interest because they contain in their simplest form many of the devices which, when elaborated, provide the composer with his vocabulary for utterances of deeper import. One could compile from them a glossary of his method, and even of his mannerisms, and their simplicity is an aid to the comprehension of his aims in larger works. In the first portion of this article I gave an example from 'Promenade,' showing, naked and unadorned, his characteristic use of parallel chords. They are not always so easy to discern when imbedded in a rich context to which they supply the fundamental colouring.

The 'Four Conceits' belong to the same class of work, in a more advanced state of elaboration. The fourth bar of the following example:

'A WALKING TUNE,' OP. 20, No. 3

('Four Conceits').

represents the same method, but the composition to which it belongs is conceived in a rich vein of musical poetry. The preceding number, 'Dance Memories,' written simultaneously in the two keys of A major and E flat, achieves a fanciful impressionism by means of these superimposed tonalities. The difficulty of reading the two signatures at once must be charged against the inadequacy of our modern notation, for there is nothing inherently complicated in this fascinating little piece, which it would be child's play to read in a notation based upon a scale of twelve degrees. The other two numbers, 'The Gargoyle,' and 'The Marionette-Show,' belong to a more obvious order of imagining, as the composer himself seems to have found when scoring the four pieces, for the two middle ones easily assume the garb of miniature symphonic-poems, whilst the first retains, in spite of clever orchestration, something of the nature of a pianoforte piece, and the last had to be elaborated for orchestral purposes.

Turning the page upon this spell of pianoforte writing, we arrive at Goossens's most recent works, comprising a Violin Sonata and a Pianoforte Quintet. If one excepts certain portions of the 'Cello Rhapsody,' it is here that we meet for the first time, in full deployment, the more emotional side of the composer's personality. One might almost think that he deliberately set out to contradict those critics who, because of brilliant external qualities in his earlier works, had assumed that he was incapable of expressing the deeper feelings. It is perhaps too soon to say in what measure he has succeeded, for the great beauties of the more lyrical portions of these two works are imbedded in a context which has so much of contradiction in it that one is tempted to suspect a gleam of irony. It will need far greater familiarity with both compositions to determine how much apparent contradiction is merely contrast. The Sonata is in three movements, from which we append examples. The first is taken almost at random from the first movement, and shows one of the permutations of its principal subject. The second (from the slow movement—1st, 2nd, and 3rd subjects together):

Molto adagio.
sul G.Molto adagio. L.H. R.H.mfff dim.Con moto.mfcres.ff

&c.

shows two subjects in combination in the course of the slow movement, and the third (from the Finale, 2nd subject):

is a characteristic example of harmonization.

The Quintet is in one movement, and founded upon one principal subject, which, however, is shown in such conflicting aspects as to become almost unrecognisable in its many transformations. One perplexing thing about it is that the composer, practically for the first time in five-and-twenty works, has had recourse to some of the devices sanctioned by usage on the part of those of his predecessors who aimed at pathetic effects. It would be interesting to know the exact relation of sincerity to artifice in this, for there is necessarily something of both; but that is one of the secrets a composer must never be asked to reveal. The music must speak for itself, and it depends upon the personal equation with what accuracy the sentiment is communicated.

This ends our summary of Goossens's achievements to date. The rapid, and in fact somewhat disquieting development of his style, must bear the blame if one is led to divide into the three conventional periods the works of a composer of twenty-six as one would those of a composer of seventy. No doubt all this will have to be revised as the perspective broadens. It is at best a convenient method for accentuating certain stages in the evolutionary process, and does not pretend to prove a series of intrinsic changes. Goossens has now written enough for his work to be judged in the aggregate; and, rare good fortune, all of his more important works are available in print. All that is needed is the requisite curiosity; but that, unfortunately, is not the commonest attribute of musicians.

LIST OF COMPOSITIONS.

- | | | |
|------|----------|--|
| 1911 | Op. 1. | Variations on a Chinese Theme for Orchestra. |
| 1911 | Op. 2. | Miniature Phantasy for String Orchestra. (Goodwin & Tabb.) |
| 1911 | Op. 3. | Octet for flute, clarinet, horn, harp, and strings. |
| 1912 | Op. 4. | (a) Chinese Folk-song for violin and piano-forte. (Goodwin & Tabb.)
(b) Serenade for flute. |
| 1912 | Op. 5. | Four Sketches for flute, violin, and piano-forte. |
| 1913 | Op. 6. | Suite for flute, violin, and harp. (Chester.) (Impromptu—Serenade—Divertissement.) |
| 1914 | Op. 7. | Five Impressions of a Holiday, for piano-forte, flute, and 'cello. (Chester.) (In the Hills—By the Rivers—The Water Wheel—The Village Church—At the Fair.) |
| 1914 | Op. 8. | 'Perseus.' Symphonic-poem for orchestra. |
| 1914 | Op. 9. | Two Songs—Alfred de Musset. (Chester.)
(a) Chanson de Fortunio.
(b) Chanson de Barberine. |
| 1915 | Op. 10. | Concert-Study for pianoforte. (Chester.) |
| 1915 | Op. 11. | Symphonic Prelude to a poem by Ossian—for orchestra. |
| 1915 | Op. 12. | Fantasy for string quartet. (Chester.) |
| 1916 | Op. 13. | Rhapsody for 'cello and pianoforte. (Chester.) |
| 1916 | Op. 14. | String Quartet in C major. (Chester.) |
| 1916 | Op. 15. | Two Sketches for string quartet. (Chester.)
By the Tarn.—Jack o' Lantern. |
| 1916 | Op. 16. | Deux Proses Lyriques. Edwin Evans. (Chester.)
Hier, dans le jardin ensoleillé.
Mon chemin s'était assombri. |
| 1916 | Op. 17a. | 'Tam o' Shanter.' Scherzo for orchestra. |
| 1916 | Op. 17b. | 'Persian Idylls.' Edwin Evans. (Chester.)
Breath of Ney—Heart of Kalyan. |

- 1917 } Op. 18. 'Kaleidoscope.' Twelve short pieces for 1918 } pianoforte. (Chester.)
1. Good Morning.
 2. Promenade.
 3. The Hurdy-Gurdy Man.
 4. March of the Wooden Soldier.
 5. The Rocking Horse.
 6. The Punch and Judy Show.
 7. A Ghost Story.
 8. The Old Musical Box.
 9. The Clockwork Dancer.
 10. Lament for a Departed Doll.
 11. A Merry Party.
 12. Good-night.
- 1917 Op. 19. Three Songs. (Chester.)
Afternoon—G. Jean-Aubry.
Epigram—Edwin Evans.
Tea-time—G. Jean-Aubry.
- 1918 Op. 20. Four Concerts for pianoforte. (Chester.)
1. The Gargoyle.
 2. Dance Memories.
 3. A Walking Tune.
 4. The Marionette Show.
- 1918 Op. 21. Sonata for violin and pianoforte. (Chester.)
- 1918 Op. 22a. 'The Cows' (Barbor). Recitation with pianoforte. (Chester.)
- Op. 22b. 'The Curse' (Barbor). Song. (Chester.)
- Op. 22c. Two Scotch Songs. (Chester.)
Behave yourself! before folk.
I'm ow'r young to marry yet.
- Op. 22d. Three Variations on 'Cadet-Rousselle.' (Chester.)
- 1918 Op. 23. Overture and Incidental Music to Verhaeren's 'Philip II.'
- 1919 Op. 24. Quintet in one movement for pianoforte and strings. (Chester.)

THE CZECHOSLOVAK FESTIVAL.

BY ROSA NEWMARCH.

The Czechoslovak Festival, held at Queen's Hall and Wigmore Hall between Monday, May 26, and Wednesday, June 4, has left us wondering what to admire most: the innate musical capacities of this valiant and rapidly-advancing people or the courage and foresight of the new Republic which did not shrink from equipping and sending to London over two hundred artists to speak to us in the one language that admits of no misapprehensions.

I use the word 'equip' in its most literal sense, for Bohemia has been throughout the war so systematically denuded by Austria of all she possessed, and is so cut off from a renewal of her supplies, that I understand it was necessary to purchase in this country sufficient cloth to ensure the orchestra and choirs being presentably dressed for the occasion. These gentlemen did justice to their new clothes—one wishes all artists looked as happily unconscious of them as they did. The same thoroughness characterised their musical, as their sartorial, preparations. It made the hearts of several British conductors envious to hear of the month's steady, and almost daily, drill carried on by this little musical army before it started on its friendly invasion of our country. Once arrived, rehearsals were reduced to a minimum, which accounts for the fact that though the performances were wrought to the highest degree of perfection, there was never the least sign that the singers or instrumentalists were stale from over-training.

The Festival week opened with a pleasant informal afternoon at Æolian Hall on Sunday afternoon, May 25, to which the Press and a number of music-lovers were invited. An atmosphere of friendly interest was created which no doubt contributed to the ultimate success of the Festival. As an old friend of the Slav ideals, I was asked to speak a few words of greeting and explanation. A fuller elucidation of the meaning of the folk-songs might have been an advantage. But this was impossible, because until the choirs arrived, at midnight on Saturday, bringing their music with them, the programme could not be definitely arranged.

The first public concert took place at Queen's Hall on Monday evening, May 26, with a strong combination which included the orchestra of the Prague National Opera (Narodni Divadlo), under its conductor, Karel Kovarovic, the Prague Choral Society of Teachers, and Madame Emmy Destinnova as soloist. It was happily decided at the last moment that the Moravian Choral Society of Teachers should also take part in the programme.

The orchestra came in its full strength—ninety players—and it was good to see once again such a full body of strings on the Queen's Hall platform. One was immediately struck by the admirable quality of the ensemble—the rhythmical pliancy and resilience; the fine balance of tone; the ease and perspicuity of the conductor's gestures, and the instant and intelligent response they evoked. In these respects the orchestra is above criticism. When, however, it came to weighing the merits of individual instrumental groups, one felt that our own orchestras could very well bear comparison with the Praguers. The quality of our own strings is richer. If circumstances compelled the Prague Orchestra to reduce the number of their strings to that which is generally employed by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, for instance, the effect would be much less telling. I admired the fine horn-playing, less mellow perhaps than that to which we are accustomed, but worthy of the country in which the traditions of Palsa and Janatka still linger. The lovely tone of the first clarinet seemed 'to bathe us in a clear delight'; but I have heard better oboes here, especially in the Queen's Hall Orchestra, where the suspicion of a sticky tone does not commend itself.

Passing on to the larger question of interpretation, it is not too much to say that the music of Smetana and Dvorák as played by Kovarovic and his orchestra stood out in a new light—a light thrown on it by the most intimate knowledge and emotional kinship. Personally, the choice of Smetana's symphonic-poem 'Sharka' as the opening work of the Festival had disappointed me. Neither the poetic basis nor the score of this work appealed to me very strongly. I thought of it as a kind of Slavonic 'Walkürenritt' with a dash of the 'Joy of Vengeance' movement from Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Antar.' Kovarovic made me realise for the first time that Sharka does not merely depict a virago—a prehistoric militantsuffragette, proclaiming in music an insensate sex-hatred. All through the work the freshness and restraint of his interpretation was noticeable: in the march of Ctirad and his mercenaries; in the wonderfully vivid section (3-4, D major) in which the soldiers pass from light-hearted gaiety to wild revelry, and then sink into heavy sleep; in the dolorous passages for clarinet which follow the fatal horn-call summoning her women to vengeance, which seemed to speak of Sharka's last retrospective glance at womanly love and happiness; and finally in the frenzied climax which depicts the massacre, and is so tense and brief that we have no time to weary of the racket and glitter as so often happens in musical pictures of warfare. From first to last, Kovarovic makes of Sharka a luminous and clearly-coloured fresco from his national story. After this, we were prepared to follow an exceptionally poetical reading of 'Vltava,' our thoughts moving with the river from its limpid source, through the romantic gloom of forests, under the darkling walls of Prague, until we lose sight of its gleaming curves in the haze of the sunny plain.

The Prague singers, under their conductor, Prof. F. Spilka, began work with Smetana's popular 'Rolnicka,' a song in praise of the brave, sensible, hard-working Czech peasant; joyous, solid, outdoor music of rather old-fashioned type. Suk's setting of a Serbian folk-poem concerning Peter Dojchin, the reckless Lord of Varasdin, was the most modern and dramatic item in their group. The way in which they 'orchestrated' the vocal music took us by surprise. M. Spilka, who was known as an orchestral conductor before he took over the Prague Choral Society, makes a special feature of these instrumental effects. The enunciation of the words, and close connection between the music, the text, and the singing was wonderful. The Czech language is very expressive and musical, it would be almost impossible to get such rapid utterance, such swift variations of accent, in our speech. The translation of such part-songs would be the most difficult task imaginable. A delightful series of genuine folk-songs in a lighter vein completed the group.

Early in the day I had heard the Moravians singing Suk's picturesque arrangement of a Montenegrin Cradle Song, a tender and melancholy tenor solo which stands out against a rather sombre and virile vocal accompaniment. It struck me as offering a complete contrast to the more vigorous compositions of the Prague singers, so I begged that it might be added to the Slovak folk-songs which the Moravian Choir were to contribute to the programme. In the Prague choir solo-singing is never permitted.

Madame Destinnova chose songs from national operas still unknown to us here: Vendulka's Lullaby from the first Act of Smetana's 'The Kiss,' a work which some Czechs rank even higher than 'The Bartered Bride,' and an aria from Dvorák's 'Russalka' (The Water Nymph), which holds a permanent place in the repertory of the Prague Opera.

On Friday afternoon, May 30, the audience was rather sparse. One felt sorry for those who missed hearing Kovarovic's rendering of Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony. The familiar work came out fresh as a dusty hedgerow after spring rain. More than ever I felt that its negro melodies must have travelled from Africa to America by way of Bohemia. The choral singing, too, reached its highest level at this concert. The Prague choir gave impressive performances of two intensely dramatic part-songs. Jan Kunc is a young Czech composer whose work has been greatly influenced by the intensive development in Bohemia of choral societies which are always crying aloud for new complications to overcome. His 'Ostrava,' the 'Song of the Silesian Coal Miner,' the text by the workman poet Peter Bezruc, has provided the Prague singers with a kind of vocal obstacle race. It bristles with technical difficulties which they surmount with consummate ease. The song with its brooding sense of rebellion against injustice, its strange subterranean rumblings and passionate outcries, might be commended to the notice of statesmen ignorant alike of the geographical situation and the prevailing sentiments of such an obscure place as Teschen! The dramatism of Novak's 'Ballad on the Vah' is quite as grim, but less realistic. It is a wonderful piece of music in which psychological delineation and landscape painting are combined in a masterly way. The Prague choir has identified itself completely with its fierce and sombre beauty.

These performances were hard to beat. Yet, on reflection, I think the Moravians' singing of Ostrcil's 'Christmas Legend,' the words by one of the greatest Czech poets—Jaroslav Vrchlický, was the most astonishing tour de force of the afternoon. The part-writing of the 'Christmas Legend' is of the most complicated description. It was finely rendered by the Moravians, who seem to me rather more in sympathy with the mystical side of their art than the brilliant and perfectly trained Praguers. The remainder of their selection consisted of a series of bewitching Slovak folk-songs, buoyant, or touched with sadness, but always emotionally sincere and manly. The sentimental element in Czech music is German. M. Kocian gave a distinguished, though not very forceful, reading of Dvorák's Violin Concerto. By Monday, June 2, the achievements of the Czechoslovak musicians had become the talk of the town, and hundreds of applications for tickets to the final concert at Queen's Hall had to be refused. Musically it was not so interesting as the two previous concerts. Novak's 'Slovak Suite'—the orchestral novelty of the evening—consists of five clear and attractive pictures of rural life, and was written in his earlier days before he had deserted the ways of Dvorák for the more obscure and devious paths of so-called modernism. The work was well-received and will no doubt find its way into our repertories. Although one would rather like to have a mandate to use a blue pencil here and there in Suk's Fantasia for Violin and Orchestra, the work is on the whole interesting.

Written, as regards the solo part, with the sureness and effectiveness that only a first-rate violinist knows how to secure for his own instrument, the Fantasia is full of good things—a phantasmagoria in which flashes of genuine emotion and snatches of beautiful melody succeed each other rapidly and sometimes aimlessly. The flame of inspiration flickers; but with all its needless extension the music is never dull. M. Karel Hoffmann, the leader of the Bohemian Quartet, was evidently in complete sympathy with the romantic lyricism of the Fantasia. Zdenko Fibich was represented by his Romance for Orchestra, 'At Dusk,' a pleasant, restful work, but by no means great music. Madame Destinnova sang the principal soprano aria from Dvorák's 'The Spectre's Bride,' and afterwards wound up a group of charming folk-songs with the (Czech National Hymn, 'Kde domov můj,' which is surely the least chauvinistic song of its kind. The singing of the choirs was somewhat of an anti-climax after their splendid work at the earlier concerts. Both choirs combined with the orchestra in three Choral Poems recently composed in honour of the Czechoslovak legions who fought for the Entente and for their country's freedom. Novak has not been well inspired for the occasion; the melodies are not very characteristic, and the orchestration is noisy without being imposing. Remembering the songs of the Czech regimental choirs, I do not think these Choral Poems will take a place beside the old battle-hymns of Bohemia. I have not space to deal here with the two enjoyable concerts given at Wigmore Hall by the Bohemian Quartet with the co-operation of the pianists Jan Hermann and Vaclav Stepan, although they formed an integral part of the Festival.

Besides their appearances at Queen's Hall, the Moravian and Prague Choirs sang at the Royal College of Music, and were deeply touched by the kindly welcome accorded to them by the Principal, the staff, and the students. They also took part in a service of thanksgiving for their deliverance 'from centuries of oppression,' held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, when they sang, among other things, the glorious 13th century hymn, 'Svate Vaclave' (Invocation to St. Wenceslaus).

I heard them for the last time in the very early hours of Wednesday, June 4, when they sang me two farewell songs on the platform at Victoria Station while waiting for their train. It was a perfectly spontaneous outburst of song, and drew guards, porters, and policemen from obscure station haunts. I thought as I watched them intently listening to our guests that they looked rather wistful, as though they would enjoy a similar outlet for the 'divine discontent' which, we are told, lies at the root of labour unrest.

The Czechs went home very happy at the reception they had received from the nation they admire most in the world. The trip will cost their Government some thousands of pounds, but they do not regard the money as ill-spent. Have not over two hundred school teachers—the choirs are drawn exclusively from this class—seen and closely observed all kinds of interesting facts about mighty England to tell their scholars when they return to the routine of the class-rooms? Nor is their visit wasted upon us. True, it has not revealed to us any great new creative genius, nor shown us anything that can put us hopelessly out of conceit with our own efforts; but it has opened a window on a totally different musical life, one which I think is in less danger of drifting into commercialism than our own. Our musical life at home during the war had grown rather stuffy for lack of those outside currents of air without which no art-life keeps wholesome for long. The Czechs are well-disposed for an exchange of musical amenities. The Prague conductor, M. F. Spilka, has already asked me to invite a certain English composer to send the choir 'the most difficult piece of choral-writing he chooses to invent.'

ELGAR'S STRING QUARTET.

No department of our native art is in a more flourishing condition than chamber music. There are various reasons for this. Much of the credit must go to Mr. W. W. Cobbett, some of the best of recent works having been written in response to his generous competition schemes. It is certain, too, that the revival of home-music led to the formation of many amateur quartet parties. These players and their friends have undoubtedly helped to swell the audiences at chamber concerts, and so given practical encouragement to the activities of the professional chamber-music organizations. Moreover, whereas orchestral programmes have been chiefly composed of familiar works (owing partly to the cost of rehearsals, but even more to the lack of enterprise which was already a pronounced failing before the war), our chamber-music players have given us a constant succession of novelties, many of them by British composers. As a result, the appeal of the most delightful and intimate form of music has been widened—a fact that cannot fail to be of great educational benefit in the near future.

Sir Edward Elgar's entry into this field is particularly welcome. The strongly personal note in his music is admirably suited to the medium, and no one can excel him in sympathetic treatment of stringed instruments. The Quartet is his Opus 83, and is the second of the three chamber works written at Brinkwells in 1918. The first movement (Allegro moderato, ♩. = 80) opens with an austere—even ecclesiastical—bar:

Ex. 1. Allegro moderato.
legato.

but the mood quickly becomes restless and charged with emotion. The third bar gives us one of the most important constituents of the movement in the downward leaping fourths :

balanced two bars later by :

The little two-note figure is a germ from which a great part of the movement grows. From it we have passages differing so widely in emotion as :

with its passionate energy, and :

a serene poising that recalls Franck.

The second subject is a typically-Elgarian theme, which comes stealing in over a reminiscence of Ex. 1 :

It undergoes considerable change of mood later, appearing più lento in broken phrases, allargando ff, and, finally, appassionato ff, with the melody in octaves. From this material is compounded a movement the dominant mood of which is passionate questioning. Nowhere is this felt more than in the final six bars, where the austere opening phrase is played twice by the lower strings, under a repeated B of the first violin. Beginning ff, the passage tails off into a whisper of the second bar of Ex. 1, the first violin being left suspended alone for a bar and a-half before the final cadence. Even this keeps up the anxious spirit of the music by wavering between a major and minor conclusion.

The slow movement, piacevole (poco andante), $\text{♩} = 104$, is one of the loveliest examples of Elgar's work. It opens with three-part harmony, the first violin being reserved until the nineteenth bar, where it enters with a repetition of the theme, in octaves with the second violin. Here are the opening bars :

Note that the second strain is shared between the 'cello, viola, and second violin, the resultant contrast of tone-colour being of a delicacy obtainable from no other medium. A similar effect occurs in the ensuing episode, where a plaintive four-note figure is repeated at the same pitch by different instruments. A repetition of the opening four bars leads to fresh material, a good deal of which is obviously derived from the passage quoted above. There is some striking treatment of the strings in this section, e.g. :

which is continued for eight bars. A little later the chief subject reappears, ff, the melody played in octaves by the second violin and viola, while the first violin delivers a soaring counter-theme. Thereafter the music follows the usual formal course until the Coda. This, brief as it is, contains some characteristic touches—e.g., the breaking up of the melody, the holding-note between the fragments, the semiquaver phrase carried down from instrument to instrument, and the final reminders of the opening bar, the 'cello playing above the viola.

The Finale (Allegro molto) strikes an energetic note at once with a short wedge-like figure played by viola and 'cello in octaves, answered by ejaculations from the violins. From this rugged opening emerges what may be regarded as the first subject proper :

This is repeated by the 'cello, and again by the first violin, a bridge-passage then leading into a syncopated subject not very interesting in itself, but made effective by a significant accompaniment derived from preceding material. A repetition of Ex. 9 (with a splendid rushing passage in octaves), and further reference to the opening bars, brings us to the second subject :

The remaining important constituent is a semi-quaver theme which bustles round in a small compass, being bandied about from part to part, and adding a welcome touch of humour. Mention should also be made of a subject derived from the second bar of Ex. 10. It is used with fine effect towards the end, where it appears thus, with a bass founded on the wedge-like figure with which the Finale opened :

The printed page gives one but a poor idea of the beauty of the Quartet as a whole. It must be heard to be appreciated. Fortunately, the impression made by its first performance was so vivid that there is likely to be ample opportunity for becoming familiar with it. Thoroughly characteristic of Elgar in his most personal mood, it can hardly fail to rank as one of the finest and most attractive examples of modern chamber music.

Interludes.

The news that a revival of some old light operas of the Offenbach type is held up because of the necessity for providing a new English version, serves to remind us of the stacks of fine music waiting rescue from undeserved oblivion. Almost invariably this oblivion is the result of an absurd libretto. Think of the windy bombast to which Handel set some of his finest strains. While the public felt that

So long as the tune has a right good swing
It doesn't much matter what words you sing, the disparity was of no great consequence. But we have become much more fastidious to-day, and as a result a good deal of Handel will be heard no more. I do not join with those who say 'a good job, too.' We may regret the Handel obsession and yet enjoy the old man's music, and if there are gems hidden among his forgotten operas and other works they should be rescued and made available by the provision of suitable words or by such other adaptation as may be necessary.

For example, it is generally agreed that 'Semele' is one of his best works, and yet what choir or audience to-day could tolerate the absurd libretto? They would need to concentrate all their attention on the music if they would avoid unseemly mirth at Semele's words to Jupiter:

I ever am granting,
You always complain;
I always am wanting,
Yet never obtain.

Jupiter plays up like a man with:

Speak, speak your desire;
Say what you require;
I'll grant it!

Nothing could be more handsome, and Semele promptly pins him down with:

Swear by the Stygian lake!

which he does in this wise:

By that tremendous flood, I swear;
Ye Stygian waters, hear!
And thou, Olympus, shake,
In witness to the oath I take.

Styx and Olympus duly hear and respond, as per stage direction:

Thunder is heard at a distance, and underneath.

After this exciting moment we come to earth with:

Semele: You'll grant what I require?

Jupiter: I'll grant what you require.

Owing to Handel's regrettable failure to grasp the situation, this is not followed by:

Chorus: He'll grant what she requires.

Apropos this oath of Jupiter's, here is a point in which I diffidently join issue with Dr. Ernest Walker. In his 'History of Music in England' he says that 'the representation of the oath by three bars for drums soli is one of the most "modern" things in Handel's works.'

But does the passage represent the oath? Surely it is merely a rather sketchy way of giving us the thunder alluded to in the stage direction:

[Thunder is heard at a distance, and underneath.]

pp Timpani.

It is odd that Handel gave us no more thunder than this brief and mild allowance. It is called for on several other occasions, but is not forthcoming. Few—if any—modern composers could resist such directions as 'A loud clap of thunder'; 'Flashes of lightning issue from either side, and thunder is heard grumbling in the air.'

'Semele' is a striking case of a delightful composition killed by its 'book.' Even such a still popular work as 'Judah' contains some poor lines. Its definite story and warlike music more than compensate for such a fatuous couplet as:

From mighty kings he took the spoil,
And with his acts made Judah smile.

Doesn't the second line give one a picture of the chosen race looking on and rubbing its hands?

And I never hear or look at the music without wishing for a singer who would bring down the house by amending the rhyme:

From mighty kings he took the spile.

Popular vocal methods, however, are all against the vowel 'i,' and the rhyme is generally put right in quite another way:

And with his acts made Judah smole.

Although I did not set out with the intention of discussing Handel's libretti, I cannot refrain from mention of one or two more extracts, especially as they will support my real point, if and when I reach it. 'Susanna' contains some gems of solemn, unconscious humour, chiefly in the amorous rhapsodies of the two Elders. Perhaps the pick is Susanna's air, following this of the First Elder:

Permit me, fair, to mourn thy fate severe,
And for thy sorrows shed one pious tear.
Round thy urn my tears shall flow,
Joy no more this heart shall know,
The remembrance of thy woe
Never ceasing,
Still increasing,
With the length of time shall grow.

In response to which the 'fair' indignantly recits.:

'Tis thus the crocodile his grief displays,
Sheds the false tear, and, while he weeps, betrays.

The name of the 'Susanna' poet has not come down to us. Handel was usually much better served by Jennens and Morrell. But Humphreys, who provided the words for 'Deborah,' runs the anonymous one very close. Perhaps he excels him, his absurd flights being longer. He is seen at his most banal in a metrical version of a portion of 'The song of Deborah.' Possibly the taste of that day found the magnificent prose-poetry of the Old Testament lacking in polish. We can imagine Humphreys writing the following, and patting himself on the back for having improved on the rugged original:

Barak.

See, the glad assembly wait to know
How thou didst rid them of so fierce a foe:
Already thou hast told it me;
But the relation will please more from thee.

Jael.

When from the battle that proud captain fled,
Vengeance divine to my pavilion led
The trembling fugitive; who, pale with care,
Besought me, panting, to conceal him there;
With flaming thirst, and anguish in his look,
He asked for water from the limpid brook;
But milk I gave him in a copious bowl;
With ecstasy he quaff'd, and cooled his soul,
And then, with his laborious flight oppress'd,
In some few moments he sank down to rest.
Then was I conscious, Heav'n, that happy hour
Had placed the foe of Judah in my pow'r:
The workman's hammer and a nail I seiz'd,
And whilst his limbs in deep repose he eas'd,
I through his burning temples forc'd the wound,
And rivetted the tyrant to the ground.

The repetition, which is so impressive a feature of the Old Testament version, is reproduced thus in a later stanza :

Low at her feet he bow'd, he fell,
And laid in dust his haughty head ;
And late posterity shall tell
That where he bow'd, he fell down dead.

Now we may safely say that the most inspired music would be relegated to the shelf if set to such lines as these. It happens that Handel's setting is merely worthy of them, and no harm is done, so far as this portion of the oratorio is concerned. But owing to these passages the work as a whole is doomed, and some fine numbers are lost. Why should they be? A generation ago it was customary to take the Masses of Mozart, Haydn, and other classical composers, and remove the original text in favour of Scriptural passages at which no Protestant could take offence. He had no objection to the work being called a Mass so long as the words were by David or by some other good English Protestant. Nor was he concerned if the new words utterly failed to fit the emotional character of the music. Why should not similar pains be devoted to setting new words to such songs and choruses of the older composers as are in need of them? Would not the rescue of a few masterpieces be a far better treatment of a composer than the working to death of a few familiar things?

For example, one of the most brilliant of Handel's shorter choruses is, 'To man God's universal law,' in 'Samson.' Imagine a choral society to-day singing such nonsense as :

To man God's universal law
Gave pow'r to keep his wife in awe ;
Thus shall his life be ne'er dismay'd,
By female usurpation sway'd.

How many of the tenors and basses wish to keep their wives in awe, even if they could? And, as a matter of fact, all the signs point to the boot being on the other leg, if not now, very shortly.

It would be easy to fit this attractive chorus with suitable words, and make it available for use as an anthem for festival occasions. Or (the music being, like so much of Handel, not particularly religious in character) it might be made into a secular chorus. In a miscellaneous choral programme, with orchestra, it would be a brilliant and popular number. This is only one of scores of such cases to be found in Handel.

I mention these Handelian examples because they are so get-at-able. I do not press specially for a crusade on behalf of his less familiar music. He has had a splendid innings, and is still running. There are other old composers who need attention far more than he does.

We have all sorts of societies to-day, some for boosting up, some for pulling down. I often think there is room for a Music Salvage Society. Some such office is already being filled by the Carnegie Trust, who are rescuing our splendid early polyphonic music. But there is ample work for a body organized for salvage purposes alone. Such a society would employ musicians of eminence in the particular branches in which research was being made, and the publication would be entrusted to the houses dealing chiefly with such types. Failing such a society, publishers should appoint a little committee of their own to do the work.

Salvage is needed not only, or even chiefly, by vocal compositions. There are many charming old instrumental works that deserve hunting out, copying, and adapting. The most popular pieces in Kreisler's repertoire are some of the old Italian and German pieces for strings, adapted by the violinist. And among the most appreciated specimens of old music at Queen's Hall for years have been the Bach numbers adapted by Sir Henry Wood. Recently a Suite by Boyce (adapted, I fancy, by Parry) was played with such success that it has been repeated. Nor must we overlook the delightful Purcell Suite arranged by Mr. Colles. All these little Bach, Boyce, and Purcell pieces would be unknown to the general public, and even to the bulk of musicians, but for good salvage work by enthusiasts. Valuable work has been done, too, by various editors in the madrigalian field, and by Mr. John E. West in the matter of our early English organ music. The articles by Mr. F. A. Hadland in the Musical Times have drawn attention to much excellent music by English composers of a few generations ago—music which will well repay examination, and a good deal of which would make pleasant hearing. But what is anybody's job is nobody's, and so long as important work of this kind is left to private enterprise it can never be done thoroughly. I can imagine no better way of showing our appreciation of our forefathers than this. Monuments, tablets, and biographies are all very well. But we may be sure that old William Boyce would be made happier by the thought of a 20th-century audience enjoying his music than by anything we give him in the way of marble.

Even some modern choral works need a helping hand. Mr. Gilbert Webb, in an article in the Musical Times for August, 1915, put in a plea for abbreviated editions of some recent examples that suffer undeserved neglect through their length. Mr. Webb ended thus :

It is evident that what are wanted by the public are strength and terseness : oratorios and cantatas occupying about an hour, symphonies of half-an-hour or forty minutes, overtures, concertos, and pieces that end exciting a wish that they were longer. Now there is a huge store of British music which has all the elements of popularity but which is hopelessly barred by its diffuseness. When these works were written composers were constrained to follow prescribed forms. 'Padding' was as necessary as in an Elizabethan doublet. Repetitions had to be made and dramatic laws violated to fulfil academical requirements. Why do we not remove this padding, omit the repetitions, and shorten these works to the limits of sweet reasonableness? Let condensed versions be made of these three-hour oratorios, two-hour cantatas, and prolix orchestral works. It has been done with popular operas for performance in concert rooms. In their original form it is doubtful if they will ever be performed. What hope is there for Mackenzie's 'Rose of Sharon' or 'Bethlehem,' Parry's 'Judith' or 'King Saul,' or Stanford's 'Eden'? Yet all these works contain splendid ideas. The task would be a delicate one, and should be undertaken by a musician who is intimate with public requirements. After he had done his task the approval of the composers should be sought. It is too much to ask the composers to mutilate their own children, for so they would regard the shortening process. Moreover, the discretion of the most self-sacrificing might well be doubted.

An editorial note pointed out that in the case of 'The Rose of Sharon' an abbreviated edition had already been prepared by the composer.

Sometimes we come across a fine orchestral work, modern, but already needing rescue. Such a one is Elgar's 'Carillon.' Are we never to hear it again now that the war is over? Surely it should not be difficult to adapt it for performance as a piece of pure music. It is one of the composer's best works, and it will be a grievous loss if he does not give us a revised version, with a 'victory' touch at the end. Those of us who heard it in the early days of the war, with all the added poignancy of the recitation, will never be able to dissociate it from black memories. But we should enjoy it as a brilliant piece of work—one of the finest, if not the finest, examples of a ground bass in all music.

Mention of a ground-bass reminds me of the composer who was in my mind when I began this article. Perhaps of all the older writers he calls out most for judicious salvage. He was an Englishman, and therefore has a first claim on us. As he needs a whole chapter to himself, I must reserve him for next month. I will merely add now that his name is Purcell.

FESTE.

DÉODAT DE SÉVERAC.

BY LEIGH HENRY.

In the programme of orchestral interludes to be performed between the ballets during the Diaghileff Russian season at the Alhambra is included the 'Fête des Vendanges' of Déodat de Séverac—a first performance in London, and an item of particular interest, in view of the unique position which the work of de Séverac as a whole occupies among contemporary compositions.

To define the general character of the music of this French composer, one can discover nothing more exact than the word 'pastoral.' The use of this title, however, is liable to convey a false impression of the nature of de Séverac's music. A superstructure of conventional associations has grown up about the term, so that to-day it has a generally-accepted meaning which implies an artificiality and sentimentality of matter and content which is, de facto, entirely foreign to the naïve essential significance of the word, and to the meaning intended by its use in the present instance.

The work of de Séverac is, above all, distinguished by its spontaneity of impulse and expression. With the hyperbolic extravagance of the English Elizabethan pastoral poets, or the studied postures of Marie Antoinette and the 18th century Court of Versailles, it has nothing in common: Phyllis, Corydon, Silvius, and Phœbe, and the sentimental stock-figures of the masques—with the product of the Dresden porcelain manufacturer, the moon-obsessed, languishing dames and gallants of Watteau, and the perverse courtizans of the 'Fêtes Galantes'—have no part in it. Vital and sincere, with the candour and absorption of a child, the music of de Séverac has no need of artificial stimulus. De Séverac has the clarity and finesse of the Latin intelligence, and these save him from the hallucinations born of emotional effusion and sentiment. Susceptible to the wonder of actual natural beauties, he has the developed sensibility to appreciate them individually, and to express them in his own terms.

Yet, while free from affectations, the music of de Séverac is scarcely likely to be popular in the ordinary sense, since it can only appeal to those who, like himself, have a sensibility acutely reactive to the beauties of landscapes or undulating green vistas, shimmering foliage, sunlight, shadow, and all the diversity of form and colour pertaining to natural life; a feeling for images and places, for the genius loci akin to that which has imprinted itself on the poems of Francis Jammes, Paul Fort, Guy Charles Cros, and the Verlaine of 'La Bonne Chanson.'

Nevertheless, the music of de Séverac betrays no intellectual pretension, no classicism in the traditional sense, though classical in the modern French meaning, in its purity of expression, its lack of emotional effusion, it certainly is. Hence, while M.-D. Calvocoressi designates de Séverac a writer of modern musical 'georgics,' and while the composer himself has sub-titled one of his works 'Poèmes georgiques pour piano,' I prefer to use the term 'pastoral' when treating of the poetic content of his music. Both words may be equally accurate or inaccurate; I select the one with the least implied intellectual bias. The term 'georgic' turns the mind inevitably to a definite type of classical expression, and tends to confuse, by associating therewith the characteristics and spirit of de Séverac's music. To my mind the word 'georgic' implies a definite style of poetic or artistic expression; the term 'pastoral' a type of feeling emanating from rural interests and atmospheres. De Séverac, far from being a deliberate perpetuator, or developer, of any given art-form, seems to be entirely free from mental bias, or purpose, beyond experience, and the most direct statement of the same. He takes no technical models, no emotional 'stock-types' (to use Whitman's phrase) in either his choice of subject-matter or in his treatment of poetic and musical themes. He inhales life, and lives himself into actuality; he 'lives up to' nothing. Probably, after the passage of years, he will be utilised by the academic type of mind which lacks the sensibility to distinguish anything save in the generalised terms of such a stock-type, and will find himself labelled as 'the musical Theocritus,' or 'the Virgil of sound.' But the vital content of his work will still keep it living even when hung about with the parasitic growth of pedantic terminology, and critical analysis will eventually reveal the absurdity of such designations. For while common elements exist between de Séverac and the classical bucolic poets, there is a wide divergence between the emphatically physiological and actualistic mind of the former and the inherently ethical and idealistic mentality of the Greek and Græco-Roman periods. De Séverac is too personal in consciousness, is always in too intimate and direct contact with actual life, and his intelligence is too clear, direct, and positive for him to need to revert to any pantheistic fantasy or animism, to the abstract images of fauns, dryads, nymphs, and satyrs, in order to render his conceptions comprehensible. He is a modern, one in whom the multiplication of activity and forces resultant on generations of research and invention has bred a correspondingly multiple consciousness, which informs even his perception of that pastoral life which has undergone comparatively small change. Hence, when I speak of him as a pastoral poet it must be understood that I mean that he is one who deals with that contemporary development of pastoral life and its influences which some may prefer to call modern rural existence. In so doing, despite the introspective tendency which it evinces, his music shows no trace of that 'legacy of wild philosophy' of which Tyler speaks. De Séverac's clear sense of relativity and proportion is never obscured; his refined taste enables him to eliminate everything superfluous to the direct statement of his individual impressions and conceptions; he is the antithesis of Wagner. Although his music is full of his love of nature—the attraction exercised over him by open air and country, wide vistas, rural images and incidents, and all the wonders of immediate contact with the varied phenomena of changing days, nights, and seasons—his work bears no trace of pantheism or mysticism. His own sensations, his own consequent reactions of mood and thought—in short, his own experience, the sole demonstrable basis for all personal cognisance and truth—is the material of his art. It is music emanating from the operation of the rural aspects of modern life on a remarkably sentient nature, and therein lies its psychological interest for us to-day, since it affords illuminating testimony to the truth of Mach's affirmation, 'The dualism of the physical and the psychical (in psychological research) is both artificial and unnecessary.'

THE CONTENT OF DE SÉVERAC'S MUSIC.

The obvious manifestations of an impulse to break from the cul-de-sac of abstract ideas into which human consciousness has been side-tracked during past periods, and to re-enter the broad stretches of sensory life emanating from actuality, is a marked feature of all de Séverac's work, and demonstrated his conceptual kinship to the evolved and vital art-tendencies of to-day. The closeness of this relationship becomes more markedly apparent in the subtle features of colour and form, and the consistent mental direction which a particularised survey of his music reveals. Although de Séverac covers ground traversed by many others, both poets and musicians, he enters his poetic territory from a new point, with a different sensibility, a different capacity for psychological reaction, with the more complex sensibility created by the complex forces of contemporary existence. Hence, in his work, the most familiar facts and features attain a new aspect which gives them fresh significance. He penetrates down to the psychological fundamentals of the pastoral spirit. Few composers are more informed of the subtleties of light, and of rare and rich atmospheres; none are more sensible of the exquisite imagery, the infinite suggestive influence of the varied colours and forms of landscape; none have translated such quantities with such penetrative exactitude into their tonal equivalents. Yet de Séverac is no mere musical transcriber of photographic effects, nor does he attempt to convey the psychological significance of rural scenes and surroundings by the crude, imitative, 'realistic' devices employed in works such as Beethoven's 'Pastoral Symphony,' or that later chronicle of pretentious sentimentality, Strauss's 'Alpine Symphony.' He has more than the vulgar curiosity of the tourist; his interest goes beyond petty features and romantic landmarks. In the rich, multiple, and subtly-graded and contrasted tonal colour of his musical scene-impressions one discerns the operation of a sensibility keenly alive to all the delicately inter-operative factors producing such impressions, but his clear sense of proportion saves him from over-emphasis or exaggeration. His musical presentation has the acute, synthetic vision of Cézanne's broad colour-planes, and, like the painter, he has a faculty for eliminating all save essentials. Keenly objective in his vision of actuality, de Séverac is conscious of the reactive effect on his own being of the scenes among which he moves. But no matter how intimate and personal the mood which may grow up in the statement of his impressions, the presence of the actual physical factors producing the impression is always palpably evident in the warm vibrant tonal colour, the delicate, shifting tissues of harmony and theme, and the subtle rhythmic nuances of the music. Above all, there is no trace of sentimentality, no nostalgie des paysages. His exuberant temperament renders all his music joyous in the truest sense; he moves happily, like a child, in the wonderland of his sensations and impressions. Particularly is he a creature of the sunlight. The greater part of his work is immersed in radiance—sometimes passively, as an animal basks in the sun, but oftener actively, with an eager intensity which rarefies and spiritualises the music, giving it at times a texture so ethereal that, using Mockel's description of van Lerberghe's poem, it hovers about one's senses 'comme une poussière d'or suspendue.'

THE CHARACTERISTICS OF DE SÉVERAC'S MUSICAL STYLE.

Although, like Albert Roussel, educated in the midst of French musical classicism, being a pupil of Vincent d'Indy, principal of the Schola Cantorum, the citadel of philosophical, systematised musical formalism in France, de Séverac has survived and transcended his tutelage. The musical tendencies of de Séverac are in a direction ultimately the antithesis of that taken by his master. While d'Indy is a consistent formalist, de Séverac, in all save two of his works, approaches near to the Impressionists in the fluid, malleable conception of form which distinguishes his writing. Yet de Séverac is no mere follower of a cult or movement: he has remained unsubordinated to the influence of even so fascinating a personality as Debussy. Investigation of his music convinces one that the medium which he has selected, notwithstanding its close affinity to that of the Impressionists, is the result of a real choice, not of external influence—a choice inevitable for one to whom content takes precedence of external form. The very subtlety and elusiveness of the atmospheric conditions playing so great a part in the conception of de Séverac's work naturally calls for a free treatment of tonal colour, for the successive juxtaposition of unresolved dissonances, and the restless shifting of tonalities which one notes in some of de Séverac's music, and which gives his work a certain resemblance to that of the Impressionist group. But an important point of difference between the two styles is discernible in the method by which such quantities are utilised in each. While Debussy and the Debussysites have elaborated certain features, such as the whole-tone scale, to the extent of a mannerism, and while they reiterate and revolve monotonically about a single musical phrase or motive until it is so charged with subjective feeling as occasionally to verge on sentimentality, de Séverac treats his material more objectively, arranging his tonal effects not monodically, but kaleidoscopically, so that each component operates both independently and interactively, rather than being dominated by a pervading phrase-device. In brief, de Séverac, though not so radical or consistent as Stravinsky, evinces an impulse in a similar direction as that so sanely and brilliantly taken by the Russian, namely, towards a freedom from any pre-fixed system of writing, and towards the development of a purely personal style. Otherwise the two have little in common, either conceptually or technically.

THE WORKS OF DE SÉVERAC.

In the matter of his compositions, i.e., the poetic conceptions forming the basis of the music, de Séverac is consistently and specifically pastoral. He has a particular habit of writing in cyclic forms, that is, in grouping sets of pieces together in such way that, while each has its own individual entity and interest, the group as a whole, as also in the sequence of its various successive portions, embodies some general conception in varied aspects.

This method of presentation is apparent in the set, 'Cerdana: Études pittoresques pour piano,' where each number, complete in itself, serves, when taken in conjunction with its fellows, to present a general survey of the impressions and emotions pertaining to a certain type of locality. It is also interesting in that it conveys a curious sense of personal narrative, which, from the first number, 'En Tartane,' with its intimate undercurrent of exhilaration, through the second number, 'Les Fêtes,' permeated by vibrant harmonic colouring and strong rhythms, the pastoral revelry of the third number, 'Ménétriers et Glaneuses,' to the mere objectively veristic concluding number, 'Le Retour des Muletiers,' creates a series of moods more passive than active, a sense of participation akin to that of sympathetic and interested observation, through which an element of reactive emotion goes beyond the objective matter, and, despite the movement and elan of the music, brings about the feeling of a certain spiritual aloofness.

The cyclic combination is even more apparent in 'Le Chant de la Terre: Poèmes géorgiques pour piano,' to which I have already referred, where de Séverac treats a poetic conception of wider dimensions than those usually embodied in his works. The component numbers (Prologue; 1. 'Le Labour'; 2. 'Les Semailles'; 3. 'La Grête'; 4. 'Les Moissons'; Epilogue) form a condensed epic-cycle, in which the matter is arranged with a view to dramatic continuity with the intention of conveying one unified conception. Here de Séverac presents a remarkable series of genre studies as vivid, objective, and experienced as, and of kindred conceptual proportions to, the vers libres epic-poems of Verhaeren, 'Les Villages illusoires' and 'Les Campagnes hallucinées,' but without the Belgian's subsidiary symbolic significances. Objective in treatment as in perception, the cycle presents, in a series of broad impressions, a particularised aspect of rural life. The whole work is a chant of energy, essentially modern in source and statement.

In the third of such cyclic groups, 'En Languedoc: Poèmes pour piano,' de Séverac deals with the impressions derived from the features of a particular locality, of a country not only teeming with elusive beauties of form and colour, or interesting in isolated features, but possessing, in its peculiar attributes, a marked general character of its own. This cycle presents the composer's impressions of Languedoc, the land of 'stirring hive-like working districts,' of which Alphonse Daudet writes, where, 'between the houses, narrow little gardens wander up the hill-side, tiny gardens of Southern climes, faded and burned up, arid and airless, full of cactus and aloes, of tall bottle-gourds, and of great sunflowers, turning their full-blown faces towards the West, with the bent attitudes of corollas seeking the sun, and filling the atmosphere with the sickly odour of their ripening seed'; where the stony hills are 'crowned with old, deserted windmills, ancient purveyors of the towns, left standing on account of their long services, the skeletons of their sails standing out against the sky like gigantic, broken antennæ, their stones slowly loosened and scattered by the wind, the sun, and the stinging dust of the South.' Here, where the whole environment breeds intimate interests, and a meditative mood which rivals the quiet religious fervour of Brittany, and where the landscapes, despite their sun-devoured nature, have such subtlety of impression-variation and capacity for transformation that they, 'bare, sterile, grey like the dusty olive-trees, assume, in the many-coloured settings of their relentless sun, a gorgeous resplendence traversed by fairy-like shadows which seem the decomposition of a ray, the slow and gradual death of a rainbow,' de Séverac has moved with a great, gentle sympathy, opening his heart to its influence, apprehending its quiet, subtle nature as a living, rare thing. Here one has all the composer's most brilliant capacity for using vibrant, kaleidoscopic tonal-colour effects, as in the first and last numbers, 'Vers le Mas en Fête' and 'Le Jour de la Fête au Mas'; and here also one has his free atmosphere in the third number, 'À Cheval dans la Prairie,' his subjective delicacy, tenderness, and introspection in the other two numbers, 'Sur l'Étang le Soir,' where the mood is an expression of a physical state rather than of reflective thought, and 'Coin de Cimetière au Printemps,' perhaps the most intense and moving thing de Séverac has written, where the music is filled with a certain poignancy quite uneffusive in statement, the effect of a delicately poised contrast of the beauty of a southern Spring, of that warm life suffused in what Maurice de Guérin describes as the 'Larges et liberales effusions de lumière du ciel du Midi,' against the realisation of that perpetual sleep which the surroundings of the composer have evoked, something of a tenderness in which the maudlin and sentimental have no part, and which only the French term 'pitié' seems adequately to convey.

In addition to the above works, de Séverac's compositions include the 'Baigneuses ou Soleil,' a pianoforte work full of shimmering, harmonic imagery, and of a direct beauty of form and colour reminding one of that other remarkable study, so close to it in matter, the 'Bathers,' of Cézanne; 'Le Soldat de Plomb,' and other pieces for children; a 'Suite pour Orgue,' and a number of very sensitively-written songs ('Le Chevrier,' 'Les Cors,' 'Chanson de Blaisine,' 'L'Eveil des Pâques,' and 'Infidèle'), almost all written to texts of a purely pastoral nature. As well as these works, de Séverac has written an opera, 'La Cœur du Moulin,' in which all the deep sense of rustic life informing his songs and pianoforte works finds broader and more sustained expression, and which, by reason of the human element of the action, exhibits much of his penetration in direct psychological delineation. As an operatic work it stands almost alone in the field of its expression, unless one except perhaps the 'Village Romeo and Juliet' of Delius. The whole work leaves one with a sense of intimate understanding and a clarity of vision and statement akin to that found in literature in Flaubert's 'Story of a simple heart.' Through it, however, runs persistently that bright imagery, that sense of open spaces and free air, of natural colours and forms, and, above all, that quality of light and atmosphere which always preserve a contact with actuality, and which have made de Séverac's music a powerful factor, both metaphorically and actually, in bringing modern French musical art to 'a place in the sun.'

BIRMINGHAM AND MUSIC.

BY SYDNEY GREW.

The new plans for Birmingham music are thorough, fairly comprehensive, well based financially, recognised and supported municipally, and controlled by a representative body of citizens and local musicians. They are likely to prove successful, ideas and influences which in the past ten or fifteen years have led to failure not having any longer a free hand. The new scheme is however only fairly comprehensive, not fully; and to be assured of complete and final success it should be widened as I suggest below.

A symphony orchestra of about seventy players is being established on permanent lines, with a regular training master. Twelve symphony concerts are to be given on alternate Wednesdays and about thirty Sunday orchestral concerts (these last in the new Futurist Theatre, I understand, which seats several thousand people). Light concerts, blended possibly with dancing, may be given on Wednesdays intervening between the symphony concerts. Arrangements will be made to provide Saturday concerts on all evenings when local choral Societies are not giving concerts, the desire being to use the Permanent Orchestra at least three times a week through the normal musical season. Orchestral concerts are to be given to school children on Saturday mornings. It is hoped that if the Theatre Royal Promenade Concerts are resumed, the Orchestra will be the band to play, and that the Orchestra may be engaged for all local concerts and concerts generally in the Midlands; also that eventually it may be engaged for the Beecham Opera performances. With the development of Parks music, a full twelve months' work may be found for the Orchestra, which will include the best available local performers.

A grand committee of guarantors and others interested is to be formed. From this will be elected an executive committee comprising five private guarantors, five members of the City Council, three members of the local music trade, four resident musicians (official or private), one member of the Permanent Orchestra, and one representative of the Musicians' Trade Union. From the executive committee will be formed various sub-committees as required.

The municipal yearly grant amounts to £1,250. Private guarantors at the moment number about twenty persons. Every local music firm is a guarantor, the sums guaranteed amounting to £1,660. The guarantors bind themselves to continue for five years; the municipal grant, however, is permanent. Among the guarantors are certain of the Birmingham newspaper proprietors.

All this is sound and business-like, and will be satisfactory in result if continuously carried out with thoughtful regard for local conditions and peculiarities. But success will not be immediate and complete unless a policy of public propaganda is at once adopted, and unless the plans are widened educationally.

The matter of music must be brought to people in all the outlying districts by means of lectures, meetings, and press discussions. (With but one exception, it is not to be denied that the Birmingham newspapers have hitherto failed to deal with music generously and authoritatively.) During the coming months a sort of election campaign should be instituted, beginning at once and increasing in intensity as the season approaches. There are several competent lecturers and writers on music in Birmingham, and at least twenty newspapers. There is quite a public awakening to music at the present moment (this is typified by the recent very exceptional 'featuring' of Mr. Appleby Matthews in the Birmingham newspapers), the cause, it seems to me, arising largely out of the use music is to be put to in the various Peace Celebrations and out of the general quickening of national thought and emotion, and the new scheme should take advantage of the mood of the time. The solid success of the first Midland Musical Competition Festival was considerably helped by the public meetings and discussions held in the first part of the year (1912), and by judicious newspaper activity.

This local propaganda work for the scheme should at the beginning of the season be confirmed by local concerts and musical lectures. There are a dozen suburban halls and institutes where a small orchestra could give concerts that would be profitable artistically and financially. The adjacent districts are ripe enough for music, despite the failure of Mr. Richard Wassell's plucky attempt to establish orchestral concerts in West Bromwich. I consider we should have from fifty to a hundred light orchestral concerts given next season within a radius of ten miles of the centre of the city.

And music must be taken to children in the schools, not merely the children brought to music in the Town Hall. Students must have facilities to take full advantage of the opportunities of rehearsals and concerts; and all educational establishments, from Council Schools to private schools, also all social clubs and similar organizations, should be interested in the matter of music and helped to benefit by the scheme. Existing musical societies should be induced to associate themselves in committee; and every possible fraction of musical activity, power, and interest should be blended into a unified whole. For it is the way of Birmingham to do things well only by wholes. I think it is most important that unity of aim should exist between the Press and the organizers of Birmingham music.

Much must be learnt from the failures of the recent past, and from the successes also—for we have had successes in Birmingham. The prevailing idea that Birmingham is musically na-poo (as the soldiers say) is a wrong one. Quite a decent case could be cited to prove that music suited to the town spells success. All that has been required at any time is that local tastes, ideas, and needs be considered, and that all concerned in the matter identify themselves with the place. This last point is of the extremest importance. Birmingham exercises the English right to absorb into itself and convert to its own nature all foreign substances. Its local mentality is powerful; when it encounters an individuality that refuses to be absorbed, it sets up a condition of antagonism which (being unlike the condition of fair competition which makes for good in Birmingham as elsewhere in the country) in the long run does harm to that non-native individuality. And when the town suspects that what is offered is offered in a spirit less large and general than its own view of public responsibility, it rejects the offering. Fifty years ago the municipal, educational, and artistic life of Birmingham was controlled by men who were either native to the place or as good as native; it then earned the title of 'The best-governed town in the world'—a phrase since ridiculed, but originally respected. It was then as musical as any other large, materialistic, immature, intensely active English town, because what was provided for it in the way of music suited the genius of the place. Since 1905 or thereabouts matters unsuitable have been offered, and the city has rejected them. Yet during those years it had accepted other offerings, and accepted them with a completeness that but for certain English traits would have been advertised in its praise. No other city has a better record than this of Birmingham since 1905: the Promenade Concerts under Mr. Landon Ronald, Mr. Max Mossel, Dr. Russell, and other gentlemen; the Harrison Concerts, and later the Max Mossel Subscription Concerts; the Catterall Quartet Concerts; the popular concerts of local Choral Societies; the Competition Festivals; the recent Appleby Matthews Sunday Concerts (following the Sunday Concerts given as part of Sir Thomas Beecham's scheme two years ago); Grand Opera and Comic Opera as provided by the various touring companies; all of which, with several further minor features, prove that with wisdom and courage and consistency music may be made with profit in the town. Coleridge says we can receive fully only by giving rightly:

Ah! lady, we receive but what we give,
And in our life alone does nature live.

His words are true of Birmingham and music; they explain why some attempts succeed and why some fail. They suggest the principle which must determine all future musical work in Birmingham.

Occasional Notes.

There have lately been some wild and GERMAN whirling words in the Daily Mail on this subject. The outbreak began with Mr.

Diaghilev's tirade against London's apparent fondness for the German classics. The ball was kept rolling by Mr. Boyd Cable, who considers that 'it is disgusting,—worse, it is abominable and insulting to the memory of our dead—that British concert halls, British conductors, British musicians, should echo to the music of the Hun.' As they have echoed it during the war, it is rather late in the day to ask them to stop now. And there are limits to the power of the Daily Mail as a moulder of opinion. As might be expected, Messrs. Diaghilev and Cable caught it hot from Mr. Ernest Newman. The Russian hit back skilfully and at considerable length in the Observer, but he had weakened his case by overstating it, and though he went down fighting, he went down undoubtedly.

In the Birmingham Daily Post of June 2, Mr. Newman proceeded to deal faithfully with Mr. Boyd Cable—again an easy task, because Mr. Cable's case, already weak, was enfeebled by its hysterical setting forth. Moreover, few, if any, musicians have ever contended that we should give up the older German music because of the war. Obviously we had to forego that of to-day, because its performance would mean trading with the enemy, if only indirectly. After laying Mr. Cable out, Mr. Newman goes on:

It is all purely a question of musical taste and appetite, not of patriotism; and the gentlemen who persist in shrieking that no one can be really fond of his country who does not think as they think, and do as they do, will end by straining our tolerant good-humour a little too far.

Mr. Newman's 'tolerant good humour' has long been a household word. The examples we quoted recently will be fresh in our readers' memory, and he has lots more in the article under notice. But it really seems to have been slightly strained at last, for he goes on:

But of course it is only the smaller minds that yelp these accusations of anti-patriotism and pro-Germanism against all who have the temerity to disagree with them on this or any other subject.

He then proceeds to complain of an 'Occasional Note' in the May Musical Times, in which he was accused of a lack of sympathy for the works of his own countrymen, and of bias in favour of German music. Mr. Newman says pityingly that 'something may be forgiven to any writer in a bad temper' (odd that it is always Mr. Newman's opponent who is angry!), and then points out that he has been warm enough in his praise of many British composers:

Foreign work has never appealed to me [he says] merely because it is foreign. The reason I have no friends in any camp, indeed, is that I apply the same critical standard to them all . . . The English nationalists are wrath with me because I always refuse to accept twelve-and-sixpence for a sovereign.

If there is any wrath, it is because of Mr. Newman's eagerness to prove that sovereigns minted here are generally seven-and-sixpence short. For example, Vaughan Williams's song-cycle 'On Wenlock Edge' has met with universal approval from musicians of all sorts and is the most frequently performed of any work of its type to-day. We all took it, and still take it, for a sovereign. 'Tut,' said Mr. Newman, 'It's only twelve and sixpence,' and filled nearly ten columns of the September, 1918, Musical Times in attempting to prove it. (After which, stupid and daring people still persist in regarding it as a pound of the best!) How often has he taken ten columns to acclaim a native work? This is an example—an extreme one, we admit—of the kind of thing that strains the 'tolerant good humour' of Mr. Newman's readers.

Nor is this passage in his article calculated to soothe:

I am no more going to call Mr. Frank Bridge a great composer merely because he is English than I am going to call Mr. Charles Garvice a great novelist merely because he is English.

Now, we do not suppose that Mr. Newman really means to imply that Mr. Frank Bridge is the Garvice of music. But he must not complain if his hasty parallel is misunderstood. Surely he could have found the name of a tenth rate native composer for his illustration. Nobody knows better than Mr. Newman what lots of them we have.

We do not want Mr. Newman to acclaim any musician merely because he is British. We merely ask that our composers shall have fair play, and there is more than one way of seeing that they get it. Mr. Newman's only demand of music is that it shall be good, and we shall not quarrel with him there. Would he call the following works good?—Elgar's 'Falstaff,' the two Symphonies, 'Enigma' Variations, Introduction and Allegro for Strings, Stanford's Irish Symphony and Rhapsodies, and latest Pianoforte Concerto, Bantock's 'Pierrot of the minute' and 'Fifine at the Fair,' Benjamin Dale's Pianoforte Sonata, and Butterworth's 'Shropshire Lad' Rhapsody (the list might easily be lengthened). How many performances have the above received during the past few years? The Stanford Concerto was played in America about four years ago, and received its first London performance last May, having reached the capital via Bournemouth and Woking. The Butterworth Rhapsody was first played in London in the spring of 1914, and was then laid on the shelf until the composer's death in action, in 1916, drew attention to it. It received its second London hearing in 1918. Has Mr. Newman's enthusiasm for good music of whatever nationality ever led him to protest against this kind of treatment? Nor is it only fine native works that suffer through the German ob-ession. We are sure that Mr. Newman admires Franck's Symphony. How often was it heard in England before the war drew attention to the great Belgian? Even now it receives one performance to about half-a-dozen of Beethoven's No. 5. If Mr. Newman has ever written a protesting word against this kind of thing we have somehow missed it. Surely it is a part of the duty of a powerful critic to use his influence in such a way that good music is never shelved for long. As Mr. Bernard Shaw says in the latest Bulletin of the British Music Society:

If the commercial concert-givers are ever to insist on their conductors undertaking the labour of studying new works by troublesome young men, they must be sharply criticised for their neglect and made to feel that programmes without a single novelty, whether British or foreign, are ridiculous.

Who is better able than Mr. Newman 'sharply to criticise' this neglect? And what critic does less of it? If Mr. Newman says he is entirely indifferent to a composer's nationality we are bound to believe him. But he must allow us to say that he has so far disguised his impartiality uncommonly well. When he treats the less inspired German classics with the severity he deals out to British works we shall find his internationalism convincing. Until then we must regard him as merely a perverted nationalist.

Mr. Newman's association of the Musical Times with the anti-Hun-music screams of the Daily Mail is evidently a specimen of the Jackjohnsonian tactics of which he is so proud. It does not worry us. Our readers know that we have never taken any more of an anti-German line than Mr. Newman himself. But we have protested, and shall continue to protest, against the unduly frequent performance of a handful of German classics at the expense of such native works as those we have mentioned above. We do not protest because the particular works happen to be German, but because they have become threadbare. So little anti-German-music feeling have we that we shall rejoice at the opportunity for hearing again the best of Richard Strauss. When 'Till Eulenspiegel' disports himself once more at Queen's Hall we shall be on the spot as early and as eager as Mr. Newman.

Those of us who have been puzzled by some of Mr. Newman's judgments of modern works find a glimmer of light in the Observer of June 15, wherein, discussing the new public rehearsals scheme of the Patron's Fund, he says:

Every critic knows that the most difficult part of his work is that dealing with students, or beginners of any sort . . . To my thinking, the only sensible course in the long run is to apply precisely the same critical tests to the work of students as to the work of the masters. . . . It is to be hoped, therefore, that no one concerned with the scheme will feel any resentment against the critics if they judge Brown by the same standard as Beethoven, or Williams by the standard as Wagner.

I wonder if the Ernst Naumanns who sat in judgment on the early works of Beethoven thought that the only suitable course was to apply to them the same standard as to the best works of Bach and Mozart. And do our dramatic critics judge new plays by the standard set up by Shakespeare and Molière? Mr. Newman, we know from his own words, has no great opinion of British song composers. Evidently he has been testing them by the giddy heights reached by Beethoven in this branch of music. No wonder 'On Wenlock Edge' came to grief: it made a poor show beside the 'Liederkreis.' And presumably the reason why one of our best composers is bracketed with our feeblest novelist is because he has not yet written anything of the same standard as the 'Prometheus' Ballet Music or the 'Turkish March' from the 'Ruins of Athens.' We hope he never will—indeed, we don't think he could.

ANOTHER
PRELIMINARY BLAST.

Yet another new musical journal is promised in The Musician, due on September 1. The announcement states that:

The Musician will be entirely different to (sic) all other music papers. An attempt will be made to gain the ear of the music-loving section of the United Kingdom. [No new enterprise: we've been after that ear for three-quarters of a century.] We believe—and we make the statement without egotism—The Musician will make the first real attempt to provide reading matter that will be of live interest to the professional, amateur, and others.

Old-established journals that have done their best to provide such reading matter by employing all the best musical writers must hide their heads till The Musician starts showing them how. There is a fine sample of confidence, too, in the remark that 'we expect to reach a circulation never dreamed of by any other music paper.' If only The Musician knew what we have dreamed of in this way! Our suspicion that the prospectus was written by the senior office boy in one of his brighter moments seems to be confirmed by the statement that 'As regards advertisements, the pages devoted to same will be limited.' Nevertheless we shall be surprised if anybody tendering an advertisement will find The Musician refusing same.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES ON 'THE MUSICAL OUTLOOK.'

Dr. Walford Davies gave his inaugural address as Professor at Aberystwyth University on June 5. We are glad to be able to give a verbatim report:

In this address I propose to put before you the musical prospects in Wales as far as I can see them at the moment. I hope to put them in such a way as to help to release, and perhaps to quicken, your own thoughts on the subject; and it is my hope that since we do not begin musical work in earnest till October, you will in the meantime take some trouble to make those thoughts and your musical desires known to me either by word of mouth or by letter, that we may the more effectually pool our musical energies and resources when the time comes, and in order that I, having now the responsibility and honour of leading your musical activities, may learn the more quickly to know your admirations, and lead you if I can through them to greater admiration and attainment and vision of musical excellence. For surely the Welsh are born to excel in every kind of music. And let us incidentally remember that Aberystwyth, in its central position, has national musical responsibility. What Aberystwyth dreams and does to-day may become the vision and experience of Wales to-morrow.

To-night I propose, first, to speak to you of the present position in the world of music; next, as to a certain great principle which is behind music; last, as to our possible policy and local prospects.

The present position in the world of music seems full of new interest and new possibilities. Some of these existed before the war and are clearly part of the normal history of musical development. Some have arisen out of the war. Of the former, two are specially worthy of note to-day, since they seem to me to bear upon music in Wales in a special degree. First in importance are the remarkable developments and almost baffling promise in harmonic fields. The opening of the 20th century, coupled with the name of Debussy and others, will probably stand out among musical landmarks as clearly as did the opening of the 17th century coupled with the names of Monteverde and the Florentine group. Three-note chords were the basis of music in the golden age of Palestrina (who died in 1594). Monteverde opened the flood-gates to four-note chords about the year 1600; and in a similar way Debussy and others—notably Scriabin—have shown six-note chords to be easy to think, workable and enjoyable. The discouraging mistake is sometimes made that when a novel chord arrives an old one automatically departs. It is important both for musicians' comfort and their progress, if not for their sanity, to remember that since music is young and still in formative stages, the arrival of a six-note chord so far from deposing the common chord merely enhances the value of the 'C major of this life,' much as a reed-stop on our organ enhances the diapasons; and it would seem likely that coming composers while reaching forward will also choose to reach back even to the simple two-note chords of Hucbald in the Fantasies and Symphonies of the future. Now Wales has ever been accustomed to rich choral harmony. The harmonic tradition behind its people's music is surprising and apparently unique among nations, if Gerald the Welshman was even approximately right when he described the natives in the 12th century as already possessing an old tradition of singing 'not uniformly as is usual elsewhere, but manifoldly in many manners and many notes; so that in a multitude of singers as many songs are to be heard as there are singers to be seen and a various diversity of parts, finally coming together in one consonance and organic melody under the smooth sweetness of the B flat.'

In the light of such a tradition does it not seem that Wales should prove very good ground for new harmony to thrive in? Let us try to be fearlessly and alertly receptive; and let it be remembered that a new chord is merely a new colour in sound. It may baffle the ear for a day, but to-morrow the same ear may grasp it with ease; and there is no chord which, if the notes in it are disposed carefully and sounded quietly, cannot pass into the language of music. For this reason, the music-lover need neither shrink from new strange chords nor say farewell to old familiar ones; nor need he attach too great importance to either the one or the other, for it is the use to which they are put that matters.

Second perhaps only to the great harmonic promise of the future is the spontaneous interest shown of late years in folk-melody. I do not of course refer to the fads for what Dr. Terry has called 'Wardour Street antiques,' nor to the passion for curing our past tendency to talk broken German by presently talking little but broken old English in a quasi-Dorian mode, but I refer to the enthusiastic research into countless melodies of the people—Cecil Sharp has recently collected over a thousand in the Appalachian forests. This interest is a symptom of a line of melodic development which, strangely enough, seems destined to fit well with harmonic expansion. It will perhaps seem puzzling to imagine how the apparent complexities of futurist harmonies and the simplicities of past melodies can agree. But an example may make it clearer. Last Monday Dr. Deverres, in a learned and helpful lecture on Celtic music, quoted a Breton melody in its original form and showed how the harmonization of this tune as 'Llydaw' in a truly classical style by Ieuan Gwyllt in 1850 had destroyed its real character. At the same lecture Dr. Deverres gave an example of an old Scottish tune as it is harmonized by Debussy; and though one may prefer to see a Scotch tune clothed in a kilt rather than a Parisian costume, yet the truth is made clear that with the removal of 12th century limitations (of tonic and dominant) and the disappearance of the narrower views of key, the means and power to harmonize modal melodies without doing them violence is so greatly increased that ancient modal systems may well be transmuted into new key systems. Instead of one major and one minor key, we may easily have many with special characteristics of their own.

A word must be added here as to the rhythmic position. Rhythm is one of the three great factors in music, and being that one which is held in common with poetry, dramatic speech, dancing, and the arts of gesture and movement, its appeal is far wider than that of either harmony or melody. Our present position in the musical world is that we use one set of rhythms in a very square way in twos, fours, and eights, and our slavery to these 'common metres' is so thoughtlessly general that we even take the exquisite speech-rhythms of the psalms in church and pack them ruthlessly into little rigid tunes called chants without noticing the enormity of it all. Now there must shortly come an emancipation from this slavery. It will be good to be in the vanguard of this movement, and we have time to take our place there if we will. The Welsh language (which, alas, I have yet to learn) must have its own rhythmic ideals, its own native correlations of quantity, accent, and spacing. The country which solves the rhythms of its own language in terms that may be called musical deserves well of the whole world; for that kind of faithfulness to the verbal and musical compact which perfects the sweet consent of voice and verse is all too rare, and when attained deserves to live, as Milton puts it, 'and sing in endless morn of light.'

This then is the position in the world of music—great strides forward in harmony, curious backward searching among the modal treasures of old folk-melody for what is lovely and true to our nature, and a slowly moving revolt against square, narrow, rhythmic restrictions of twos, fours, eights. If Wales will use all chords and modes that appeal to her, using them natively, unaffectedly, together with a new child-like rejoicing in rhythm and in her own rhythmic freedom, she can, I am convinced, play a highly serviceable part in the world's musical history at this engrossingly interesting epoch, while reaching forward to new harmonies, reverently turning back to her own and the world's ancient melodies with no childish taste for antiques, but purposing to advance through faithful study of past treasures up to future glories.

There are two other notable factors in the present musical position which are undoubtedly due to the war. One is a new naturalness. It showed itself as between a rough-and-ready camp-singer or an extemporized camp-band and their hungry, tired audiences. War-music was a grim necessity. If we had not made it, the very stones would have cried out. This gave it naturalness. Why should it not retain this quality? Professionalism is at all times deadly, and in saying this there is no wish to cast a slur on the professor of music or at his expense to extol the amateur, for so-called amateurishness is every bit as deadly. 'Professionalism' is the name given to that artificiality that besets the professional, a sin into which he or she need never fall. The real professional must remain at all costs an amateur, a lover; and he must, while acquiring the coveted mastery, retain his first freshness and naturalness. Incidentally I firmly believe that half the affected nonsense of professional singers, especially of the opera-singers and others of us who forget ourselves (and our neighbours), would be cured if we were condemned to hear our own noises in a phonograph, say three times a day for three weeks. Soldier audiences in France had the curious courtesy to walk out if they were not interested. They did not appreciate the wrong thing in artistry. If audiences will only have it so, the naturalness newly found in adversity may be maintained, if we performers will but think musically, listen carefully, and love our audiences as ourselves. Post-war standards in this as in all other matters can never be the same as pre-war standards, however much men try to revert. The second war-factor in music seems to me to be a temporary lowering of the standard of taste. Now naturalness pays this price, that we find ourselves lower than we wished to find ourselves and lower than, theoretically, we ever were. These poor rag-times and some of the present music-hall perversities seem to me to bear the same relation to the total edifice of modern music as the grinning gargoyle of old architecture bear to the stately cathedral they adorn. They tell us the truth, so long as we recognise that they only tell us a little part of the truth. Rag-time is right music if we remember that it is only a very small part of right music. Art must be both natural and higher-natural (or super-natural, as men sometimes call it). It must combine the foreground of the real with the horizon of the ideal. All our Welsh music-making must hitch on, so to speak, to our real and ideal requirements.

For a moment it will be well to think of and mentally note for future reference a certain great principle which lies behind music. I call it the principle of musical quality. We are all vaguely aware that somehow or other music expresses life, and that now and then it expresses our own inner life in a surprising way that transcends word or gesture. It seems an invisible, intangible record in the world of sound of experiences, and of something more, of motives. Has a motive dimensions? Certainly; it is possible to measure it. In what way can one measure a motive? By its intensity, by its duration and by its direction, if we admit that a motive may be directed low or high, and surely it can. Now music has dimensions, in exactly the way that the motives of a man's will have dimensions. It records varieties of intensity and of duration and direction (or, as we call it—pitch). All varieties of intensity we are wont to call expression, those of duration we call rhythm, and those of direction we call melody. But you will observe here a notable omission. Where does harmony, the greatest thing in music, come in? In reply to the question, I wish to direct your thought to what I have called the principle of musical quality. It is of course a universal principle, but it is exceptionally clear in music. Harmony is a combination of dimensions impressing us instantly as a unit. A vase or any such ornamental object has quality because it has shape, conditioned by a combination of dimensions apprehended by us as a whole instantly. But the principle of quality applies not only to a chord. It can apply to that which is spread out in time. Structure is quality. A tiny folk-tune has quality in a remarkable way. Its total impression upon the mind is dependent upon its structural proportions. A symphony is an extraordinarily complex unity, and it manifests this amazing human interest of quality spread over fifty minutes of life. A man's whole output of music has quality. Listen to Shakespeare:

'To-night we'll wander through the streets and note
The qualities of people.'

Listen to the judicious Hooker.

'It is with the clergy even as it is with other men; their quality many times far beneath that which the dignity of their place requireth.'

And in another place he notes how different are the 'creatures that have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do they neither can excuse nor approve themselves.'

I think it is true that music, whether we will have it or not, is a unique record of quality—the quality of the men and the age that produce it. For this reason it deserves the constant, reverent, faithful attention of ordinary men.

We may now turn from the more arduous considerations to the question of a future musical policy. What I say now with regard to this can only be suggestive. The time has not arrived for a categorical announcement of plans. But let me say at once that the most important music in the College will, I consider, be that which assists the cultivation of the knowledge and intelligent enjoyment of music by the man who is not going to be a professional musician. It seems desirable, and I hope to help in the musical education of a literal host of part-time musicians.

A distinguished old Aberystwyth student, now at Whitehall, pointed out two days ago that even the Chinese schools a thousand years before the Christian era included the science and art of music 'as an essential element in the education of statesmen and administrators as incorporating the soul of harmony and the conciliation of discords.' The Aberystwyth students destined to become teachers, ministers, or statesmen stand greatly to gain if the College Choral Union, the College band—however modest—the College weekly concerts, the open lectures on musical elements, and the College Song-Book do their work and create the right permanent musical atmosphere. Though the students who contemplate music as a profession must here find means for adequate preparation as specialists, and for taking their musical degree at their own College, even greater importance attaches to that part of the College musical education which can be shared by students in other faculties. Like importance for still larger reasons attaches to the extra-mural work in Wales; to the proposed illustrated lectures on appreciation which it is hoped to organize for such local centres as are keen and ready to receive them; to the institution of circulating libraries of music in appropriate centres; and to the possibility of a central fund for the supply of expensive orchestral instruments (such as the double-bass) to local conductors who can find players to use them. But all such policies and plans must await the preparatory work of the new National Council of Music for Wales which is to hold its first meeting this month. To this Council not only the constituent Colleges but musical Wales in general will fitly turn for inspiration and constructive help.

In conclusion, let me suggest, the important thing to-night is for all of us who can to resolve to get a move on from where we now stand. Almost all who listen to-night can help. There are three kinds of helpers in this room: 1. Those who know what can be done. They are potential leaders. 2. Those who will do what is to be done when told. They are potential workers, awaiting a lead. 3. Those who will welcome new efforts even at the cost of some of their personal comfort. They are appreciators, essential to the bargain. And then these classes of music-lovers are not in watertight compartments. An appreciator can sometimes become a worker, and occasionally a worker can help to lead with brilliant suggestions. It is by friendly, candid conference, and later on by constructive criticism, that progress is speeded up, and all with indomitable good will. I beg you to remember that the force of example is very great in music. The Czecho-Slovak orchestra from Prague and two choral Societies of teachers have been amazing London last week with music born in adversity, and wonderfully, stimulatingly alive. They sang their native hymns on Sunday in a Congregational Church in London, and The Times on Monday described how the tones 'leapt like flames into the roof.' One man's example can quicken a crowd. One nation's example can quicken a world.

Here is another moving thought. In the 19th century our fathers sang to themselves and their own age. There were no gramophone records. Our music of the 20th century is being recorded, and will be heard by musicians of every succeeding century. Again, Sir Oliver Lodge recently pointed out to the public that human speech (therefore also song) can be 'transmuted from sound-waves into ether-waves which are capable of travelling enormous distances and can then be re-translated into sound-waves, with all their distinguishing features [that is, their quality] accurately reproduced.' Are our sounds upon earth some day to be transmitted to Mars? Has some other world conceivably already overheard us on electrical instruments of infinite delicacy? Whether that be so or not, we know intuitively that the quality of our daily music is of importance as an energizing record of our wills and motives.

I would ask the music-lovers of Aberystwyth to seek and to cultivate in their future music, whether instrumental or vocal, three things: joyous life, careful mastery; and wonderment. These are present in all fine work, and to them and in them all let us strive to add unaffected naturalness of expression. In doing this our musical output will be national, as we desire. It will be Welsh; but in being so it will, probably be something greater. It will probably be of universal value, precisely because it is true to itself.

THE EIGHTEENTH AND THE EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLISH MUSIC.

By F. A. HADLAND.

(Continued from June number, page 286.)

The object of this series of articles being to indicate a few specimens of English instrumental music belonging to a particular period, it necessarily happens that certain works are included which, with the exception of an isolated movement here and there, have fallen into oblivion through a want of musical interest sufficient to keep them alive through several generations; but the patient researcher finds his labour rewarded by some really beautiful things scattered among the pages of out-of-date sonatas and concertos.

A most undeservedly neglected composer is Jeremiah Clarke, the first organist of the present St. Paul's Cathedral, a great part of whose work is forgotten to-day, although his compositions for the Church are in some measure preserved, such as are ever employed being generally valued by Church musicians. The Royal College of Music library has two volumes of harpsichord music by him dated respectively 1700 and 1702, and among the MSS. at the British Museum is a Suite in C minor—Allemande, Courante, and Minuet.

Among printed books may be instanced 'A Choice Collection of Ayres for the harpsichord or spinett,' dated 1700, containing six numbers. A very interesting volume was published by his brother-in-law, Charles King, in 1711, four years after Clarke's death. It has the book-plate of the Rev. William Gostling, also that of the late Julian Marshall, from whom it was acquired, and was at one time in the possession of Dr. Crotch, whose name is written on the fly-leaf. It contains twenty-five separate numbers. Perhaps someone desirous of lecturing on the music of the period might care to play through the whole set, or at least some of these short pieces. Besides Minuets, Corantos, Almands, and other dance-tunes, are a Ground, an Entry, and a 'Round O' in the primitive rondo form, consisting of three sections, of which the first is literally repeated after the second, and again after the third. These pieces rank high among the best English instrumental music of the period. There are copies at the British Museum, Sion College, and the Fitzwilliam Museum.

A volume of MSS. which belonged to the late Julian Marshall contains seventeen pieces for harpsichord, and another volume of lessons for harpsichord by various composers has an Allemande, Courante, and Minuet by Clarke.

A volume of MSS. which once belonged to Vincent Novello, and previously to Dr. Philip Hayes, has an introduction in the handwriting of the latter, in which he declares his opinion that Clarke possessed a most happy native genius for composition. Much of Clarke's music seems to have perished altogether, although everyone who has had anything to say about him asserts that it was both tender and graceful. His tragic end in 1707 casts a tinge of melancholy over his memory. His age at death is somewhat doubtfully given as thirty-eight; but even if rather older he was likely to have composed more music of equal or greater value, and to prove beyond doubt what has often been asserted—that he was one of the worthiest of Purcell's immediate successors.

Charles Avison was a most prolific composer, and is interesting in the musical history of England as one who revolted against the supremacy of Handel, with whom he was contemporary. He studied in Italy, and afterwards with Geminiani, who made his home in England, and later in Ireland. Avison was evidently a man of wide culture and study, and his book, 'An Essay on Musical Expression,' and a sharp controversy with Dr. William Hayes, attracted the attention of the musical world at the time. After Avison's return to England he became the leading organist at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where he officiated at St. Nicholas Church, now the Cathedral. His influence with a coterie of musicians, professional and amateur, in the North of England was great, and even in his remote position he became a leader of musical opinion. He died in 1770. From about 1740 to 1766 he poured forth a stream of sonatas and concertos, some published in Newcastle and some in London. Among a number of rather dry pieces some really excellent things reveal themselves to the searcher.

John Beckwith, junior (1788-1819), organist of the Cathedral, Norwich, and St. Peter Mancroft, does not appear to have written much, but a concerto for harpsichord or organ in D, Largo (a long movement), a second Largo, and a Minuet, Allegretto, and Rondo, are at least worth looking at. Robert Broderip, of Bristol, who died in 1808, has a very pleasant harpsichord Concerto in E flat to his credit.

Although this article is mainly on English composers, we may perhaps be permitted to cross the St. George's Channel and cast a glance at Dublin, whose fine musical traditions might well detain us for a long time. In fact, to one who has been under the spell of St. Patrick's and Christ Church, and gained more than a little benefit from Sir Robert Stewart, the attraction is great, and tempts to a long digression which cannot be indulged.

Dr. Philip Cogan was a native of Cork, where he was a chorister in St. Finbarre's. He afterwards went to Dublin and entered the choir of Christ Church, later becoming organist of St. Patrick's. His compositions do not seem ever to have been known in England to any great extent, but his reputation in the best Irish musical circles was great. There is a Concerto of his in the British Museum for pianoforte with accompaniments for two violins, flute, horns, alto, and bass, and three Sonatas for pianoforte or harpsichord. Michael Kelly, who was one of his pupils, has left emphatic testimony to his great abilities as a pianist.

Dr. William Hayes has not left much secular music of interest, but the Overture to the opera 'Circe,' which was composed for his exercise for the degree of Bachelor of Music in 1735, and was published in 1742, for hautboys, violoncello, fagotto, first and second violins, alto viola, and organ, is a good specimen of its class; and Harry Hargrave, who is practically ignored by the dictionaries, published in London, circa 1760, five concertos.

Perhaps Dr. Philip Hayes, his son, was not very inspiring in his secular works, but he was evidently held in great esteem in his day, and a volume of six concertos for organ, harpsichord or fortepiano was brought out with an imposing list of subscribers, and other works for pianoforte or harpsichord and violin are in existence.

The old City Church of St. Andrew Undershaft, in St. Mary Axe, Leadenhall Street, has memories of the maypole and its sudden destruction in a fit of puritanical zeal; but for musicians its main interest is for Dr. John Worgan, who was organist there in the middle of the 18th century. He was greatly esteemed, and was the subject of praise from his admirers which at the present day appears rather fulsome. However, his six Sonatas for harpsichord, published in 1769, are worth attention. George Jenkins, of Edinburgh, by his collection of eighteen airs for two violins and bass, published about 1795, preserved some old melodies.

Apart from the individual interest attaching to the works above mentioned, their chronological features, as indicating the development of the Suite and the attainment of definite Sonata form, are a chapter in musical history which is always worth study. The influence of Corelli is often manifest, traceable largely to the fact that Geminiani, who was his pupil, diffused a knowledge of his master's principles of violin playing.

It has, however, been found impossible to mention the various composers and their works alluded to in strict chronological order, the conditions prevailing until quite recently having made it impossible to obtain access to them when specially required.

Among numerous works by James Nares a harpsichord lesson in three movements is quite distinguished. The first edition of Grove's Dictionary did but scant justice to Nares, but this indifference to an excellent composer is rectified in the present edition.

John Camidge, born at York in 1735, founder of a line of organists, son succeeding father for four generations at York Minster, and in the case of the fifth at Beverley Minster, composed Six Lessons for the Harpsichord.

Among other sonata composers for pianoforte or harpsichord is Dr. Samuel Howard, who drew from Busby the remark that his easy, simple melodies approach nearer to Arne's style at his best than any other composer's music.

William Howard and George Kirshaw deserve mention, as do also J. B. Adams, William Goodwin, and Samuel Long.

(To be concluded.)

THE IMPERIAL CHOIR IN HYDE PARK.

BY 'ONE OF THE CROWD.'

And such a crowd! Estimates as to its size vary so widely that I prefer to leave figures alone, contenting myself with quoting the opinion of a Park official that it was by far the biggest gathering in recent years. So dense was it that, like other holders of tickets for the enclosure, I failed to reach my objective. This was a good thing, although I did not at first realise the fact. By wandering ('elbows, please') from point to point I was able to make some interesting discoveries in acoustical vagaries. For example, in one spot the choir was hardly audible: ten yards away it was heard with startling vividness. There was no apparent reason for this, and I should have been disposed to ascribe the effect to wind but that there seemed to be none. It was odd, too, how that an insignificant noise near me drowned choir and band. A small child stepped on a piece of loose gravel, and a bar of the 'Hallelujah Chorus' was blotted out. Again, the immense choir sounded curiously small. At no point did I feel that I was listening to thousands of voices. I heard not one big, massive effect. The unanimity and detail, however, were remarkable. The 'Hallelujah Chorus' was taken at a good round pace—so much so that its opening bars made me anxious. But it went off like clockwork, and the effect at some hundreds of yards' distance was that of a good church choir on its best behaviour. As might be expected the trebles and tenors made the best show, the altos and basses being practically inaudible save when singing in their higher registers. That this was not due to any deficiency on their part was proved by the fact of the lower notes of the brass instruments being similarly ineffective. I longed for an octave of good organ pedals at such moments.

THE PROGRAMME.

There is not a wide choice of music designed for outdoor performance on a big scale. The scheme on this occasion was as good as could be managed at short notice. Probably some of our composers and publishers will soon see the need for increasing the supply of the right kind of thing—music simple, broad, with a good tune, and occasional unison passages. The most effective items in the Hyde Park concert were 'Men of Harlech' (surely the best of all national anthems), 'Wi' a hundred pipers,' 'Rule, Britannia,' and the 'Hallelujah Chorus.' The most popular were the 'Soldiers' Chorus' from 'Faust' and 'Rule, Britannia,' the chorus of the latter being taken up and repeated many times. The programme included also Sullivan's 'Song of the Homeland,' 'God bless the Prince of Wales,' 'The Minstrel Boy,' and a couple of hymns. The massed bands played Mackenzie's 'Britannia' Overture and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' (with the choir singing 'Land of Hope and Glory'), and accompanied the choir.

Dr. Harriss had his huge forces splendidly in hand. He will be interested to hear that the more ample his gestures became the more he was admired by the crowd. One Ajax-defying-the-lightning attitude, in particular, called from my neighbours the warmly-expressed opinion that 'that chap is some conductor, ain't he?' His stout work with the megaphone was also much appreciated, whether the instrument was used for issuing edicts or as a whirling aid to unanimity in the cheers.

THE CROWD.

No crowd can be other than interesting. This gathering was even more so than the average. The good humour and orderliness were of the type we expect in an English crowd, but there were signs that much of the old stolidity had gone with other pre-war things. It was far more liberal with its expressions of approval than we should have expected. Thus each item was greeted by a tempest of hand-clapping, and the 'Soldiers' Chorus' was re-demanded by a roar of 'encore' and cheers. The demonstration when the King and Queen mounted the rostrum was an amazing outburst—hats flew into the air, the National Anthem and 'For he's a jolly good fellow,' and the chorus of 'Rule, Britannia,' were being sung in a score of places at once; the man in the street, with no mind to sing, gruffly remarked in a general sort of way, 'Good old George! he's a real sport'; and the wife of the man in the street held up as many as possible of the younger and lighter offspring, who added a shrill quota to the hullabaloo. If any Hyde Park orators of the usual disgruntled type were in the neighbourhood they must have taken their tubs home—depressed.

It was on this social side—in gathering an immense crowd of average people, keeping them interested for a hour and a half, and sending them away in good humour, with their steam pleasantly let off—that Dr. Harriss and his choir scored their greatest success. The concert was a triumph of organization. It seems incredible, but it is a fact that the choir was got together, the music-books printed, many rehearsals held, and all the arrangements made in a little over a month. Well may Dr. Harriss's admirers call him 'the lightning conductor'!

THE MUSICAL RESULTS.

If the effect from a purely musical point of view was nothing like in proportion to the effort expended Dr. Harriss is not to blame. The laws of sound, like those of gravitation, have an inconvenient way of asserting themselves. A huge choir, singing on a level in the open air, would probably provide a rich treat for the occupants of a balloon hovering about a furlong overhead. With an audience also on the level their efforts must inevitably be wasted to a great extent. Those of the crowd who were stationed on a neighbouring tree-topped rise had the best position, though even here, as I have said, the choir sounded anything but large. Incidentally, Londoners far away from the park had a pleasant surprise. I have heard of one who, shaving in the top room of a flat, and opening the window, suddenly found the air filled, like Prospero's isle, with sweet sounds that give delight and hurt not. Another—a well-known musical knight—walking along a street a long way off, found himself greeted by an aerial chorus. The sounds capriciously missed some streets near at hand, and descended on others far beyond, evidently meeting with sideslips and air-pockets on their flight. This by the way. The question is whether better musical results would not be obtained by a much smaller choir singing, say, in front of the National Gallery, or on the slope which on this occasion was occupied by a portion of the crowd. One thing is clear: there are great possibilities in open-air choralism. Nothing is more delightful, given the proper surroundings. Those of us who have heard the Oriana Madrigal Choir at one of its al fresco concerts in the grounds of Leighton House will agree that certain types of music, such as the ballets of Weelkes and Morley, gain by being transferred from the concert hall to the garden. Of course, if a big crowd is required, a big space and choir are necessary. But in the long run a greater number of people would benefit if a choir of ten thousand were split up into local sections of a few hundreds. A resident of Streatham or Wormwood Scrubbs may not like the prospect of a journey to Hyde Park, an immense crowd, and a struggle for a bus or a strap for the return journey, so he regretfully stays at home. But if the Streatham and Wormwood Scrubbs sections of the Imperial Choir would sing in the adjacent green-wood, the resident would be there enjoying himself. The plan would be that followed by the L.C.C. Parks bands—rehearsal en masse by the conductor-in-chief, and performances at various centres under their own conductors. With travel facilities in their present condition, the more we can decentralise celebrations the better. But whether Dr. Harriss decentralises or goes one better in the way of mammoth choirs and crowds, we are not likely to forget his great feat of May 24. They have some big things in this way across the water, but I doubt if li'l old New York has had a 'community sing' to beat it. If they have, and Dr. Harriss hears of it, I can see him very soon getting busy again. He will have the biggest ever, and then some!

The Musician's Bookshelf.

BY "FESTE."

So many new books on musical subjects have lately appeared, and the stream seems so likely to continue, that the Editor has asked me to deal with them from time to time under the above heading.

Acting on his suggestion, I shall not confine myself to purely musical works. He is of opinion—and it is not for me to differ from him—that there are a fair number of books no musician can afford to neglect, e.g., some dealing with art in general, certain aspects of education and sociology, &c. Occasionally a novel appears of special interest to our profession. While giving most space to books concerning music, these less directly important volumes will also be touched on.

Daniel Gregory Mason's 'Contemporary Composers' is one of the sanest and soundest critical books of late years. Biographies of the great dead are to be had in plenty. Books on living composers are quite as important, though in a different way. They would be more plentiful, probably, if they were not so difficult to write. An author who sets out on a critical discussion of unfamiliar music by a contemporary has little or nothing to serve as pointer, and must use a fine blend of courage and discretion. Mr. Mason has before now shown himself to be possessed of the right qualities, and his latest effort will enhance his reputation.

He here considers Strauss, Elgar, Debussy, and D'Indy, and as a kind of makeweight throws in a couple of essays on 'Democracy and Music' and 'Music in America.' His enthusiasm for the best work of Strauss is well-founded. There will be never much of a vogue for 'Elektra,' 'Salome,' or the 'Alpine Symphony,' but such things as 'Don Quixote,' 'Death and Transfiguration,' and 'Till Eulenspiegel' surely belong to the music that lasts. Perhaps in a few years' time Strauss will return to the sanity and comparative simplicity of these earlier symphonic poems. He has given sensationalism and 'blugginess' a fair trial, and apparently found them profitable. Now that Europe has had its fill of both, Strauss (who, more than most composers, knows on which side his bread is buttered) is more likely to try to amuse it than to make its flesh creep. The Elgar chapter is very appreciative on the whole, though Mr. Mason is perhaps rather hard on the 'Pomp and Circumstance' Marches. He thinks they are 'saved' by their 'buoyant high spirits.' I wish more of our orchestral standing dishes had as many 'saving' qualities as these Marches! Mr. Mason evidently likes his music subtle and complex, and is not often inclined to unbend.

He discusses the Elgar Symphonies very fully: indeed, there is nothing better in the book than his pages on these fine works. His analyses should be carefully read against the day when our conductors wake up and give us all a pleasant shock by playing the Symphonies. Such a revival might involve the sacrifice of a few of the weekly performances of the 'Eroica' and the 'C minor,' but we will do our best to bear up.

Mr. Mason's judgment on the respective merits of Debussy and D'Indy is contrary to the popular verdict, but I shall be surprised if in a few years his opinion is not generally endorsed. He fills over seventy pages with interesting matter on D'Indy, but finds twenty-nine sufficient for Debussy. The fact is, we are beginning to see that Debussy's music is merely a by-path—a very charming one, of course, but still a by-path, with the limited outlook and possibilities that belong to such pleasant excursions. And it has for some time been evident that nicely calculated effects based on harmonics and the sonorities of the pianoforte, consecutive seconds, and the whole-tone scale, are mere relishes of which the healthy palate soon tires.

In 'Democracy and Music' Mr. Mason gives us a thoughtful essay on a topic that was never so much in our minds as it is to-day. The final chapter, 'Music in America,' contains some home truths, as a result of which a good many Transatlantic danders will be riz. Perhaps Mr. Mason takes ragtime a bit too seriously. Indeed, I am inclined to fancy that he takes most things too seriously. His book, excellent as it is, shows some lack of a sense of humour. I do not mean that Mr. Mason ought to have been funny, but I think he might well have credited his readers with more imagination. He is apt to make his points and clear them up a little too thoroughly. For example, his analogy between ragtime and chewing-gum would have been better had he merely drawn attention to it, instead of developing it fully. Implication is generally so much better than elaboration in matters of this kind. But this is a small defect in such a first-rate book. I put 'Contemporary Composers' on my shelf among the volumes that will often be overhauled, and I recommend you to get it and do the same.

In 'The Story of British Music,' by Clement Antrobus Harris (Kegan, Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.), we have a book lacking in the quality of tidiness of which Mr. Mason has perhaps a little too much. It contains a great deal of very interesting matter, much of which is set forth attractively. But it is not all relevant, and some of it will leave the reader still in the dark. Thus, in the chapter on Church Music, we are told that 'In the early Christian Church there was a practice of speaking or singing with the spirit but without intelligible words, which has considerably puzzled commentators.' The practice referred to is that of singing elaborate passages to the final syllable of 'Alleluia,' at the end of the gail. This vocalise was known as the 'jubilus,' and by the addition of words was developed later into the sequence. Mr. Harris mentions jubila, without explaining the term, and so fails to make clear an interesting matter—one which has 'puzzled commentators' a good deal less than he imagines.

Another serious defect in the book is that it deals overmuch with our past and barely touches on the present and future. We could have spared some of the matter on birds, bards, skalds, &c., so that space could have been found for a chapter on the great revival that took place in the Victorian era, thanks to Parry, Mackenzie, Stanford, Cowen, and others. And in regard to Church music, it would have been better to sacrifice some of the antiquarian lore in favour of a section devoted to our early polyphonic writers, whose music is among the glories of our history. On the whole, I fear I must say that although the book makes interesting reading it does not give us the story of British music in a coherent or complete form.

At last we are waking up to the fact that audiences, like performers, must be trained. It takes at least two to make a quarrel, and the same minimum is required for a concert—performer and listener. Generally only the performer knows his job. If his colleague will diligently study 'The Listener's Guide to Music,' by Percy A. Scholes (Humphrey Milford), the matter will be put right. In a hundred pages Mr. Scholes covers an astonishing amount of ground, explaining musical terms, composers' methods, musical forms, the orchestra and its instruments, giving a sketch of the 'chain of composers,' an admirable glossary, a chapter of hints on the use of the book for class purposes, &c., &c. The illustrations are excellently produced, and give us neat pictures of the wood-wind and brass instruments of the orchestra, a facsimile of a page of the full score of Elgar's second Symphony, and a reproduction of three quaint extracts from an early 19th century piece of programme music. The arrangement is clear and the style free and entertaining. I could not forbear chuckling over Mr. Scholes's story (apropos the term 'opus') of the two men he overheard discussing the arrangement of a concert. 'The guiding principle of the construction of the programme was laid down in these words—"no classical music, all good popular stuff,—none of them ops!"' I hope these two men will come across Mr. Scholes's book, and read it. They will be helped to see that some of the most enjoyable and 'popular stuff' ever written is to be found among 'them ops.'

(Continued on page 360.)

Oh! the noble Duke of York.

A HUMOROUS FOUR-PART SONG.

The Words Old English.

Arranged by N. F. BYNG JOHNSON.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Quick time.
mf

SOPRANO.
Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! the no - ble Duke of York, He

ALTO.
Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! the no - ble Duke of York, He

TENOR.
Oh! the no - ble Duke of York, He

BASS.
Oh! the no - ble Duke of York, Duke of York, He

ACCOMP.
(For practice only.)
mf
Quick time. ♩ = 84.

had five thou-sand men, He marched them up to the top of the hill, And he had five thou-sand men, He marched them up to the top of the hill, And he had five thou-sand men, He marched them up to the top of the hill, And he had five thou-sand men, five thousand men, He marched them up to the top of the hill, And he

Left! Left! Left! Left!

Also published for Male Voices A. (or T.) T.B.B. in THE ORPHEUS, No. 560.

marched them down a - gain. And when they were up, they were up, marched them down a - gain. So they were,
 marched them down a - gain. So they were, marched them down a - gain, down a - gain. And

The first system of the musical score consists of four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal staves are in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The piano accompaniment is in bass clef with a key signature of one sharp. The music features a repeating rhythmic pattern of eighth notes with accents, followed by a melodic line. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves.

So they were ; they were so they were ; And when they were on - ly half way up they were so they were ; And when they were on - ly half way up they were when they were down, they were down, they were

The second system of the musical score continues the vocal and piano parts. It features the same vocal staves and piano accompaniment as the first system. The lyrics continue below the vocal staves.

nei - ther up nor down. They look - ed all a - round, But nei - ther up nor down. They look'd, . . . look'd all a-round, But nei - ther up nor down. They look - ed all a - round, But nei - ther up nor down. They look - ed all a - round, But rall. a tempo.

p rall. a tempo.

mf rall. a tempo.

p rall. a tempo.

no - thing could they find, Ex - cept a hay - stack

no - - - - - thing could they find, Ex - cept a . . hay - stack

no - thing could they find, Ex - cept a hay - stack

no - thing could they find, Ex - cept a hay - stack

cres.

cres.

cres.

cres.

in a . . field, they left be - hind, they left be - hind.

in a field, they left be - hind, left be - hind.

in a field, And that they left be - hind. . . . The . .

in a field, they left be - hind. . . . The . .

The Eng - lish - man said it was a haystack, The Scotch - man he . . said

The Eng - lish - man said it was a haystack,

Eng - lish - man said it was a hay - stack, The Scotch - man he said

Eng - lish - man said it was a hay - stack, The Scotch - man he . . said delicately.

p.

delicately.
p.

mp

mp

delicately.
p.

mf

delicately.

mp

mp

mp

cres.

Nay, . . . The I - rish - man said it was a church With the mf cres.

The I - rish - man said it was a Cath - o - lic church With the

cres.

Nay, . . . he said Nay, he said Nay, he said

cres.

Nay, . . . The I - rish - man said it was a Cath - o - lic . . . church With the

cres.

stee - ple blown a - way. They stee - ple blown a - way. They look'd a - round, . . . But

Nay. They look - ed . . . all . . . a - round, . . . But stee - ple blown a - way. Oh! the no - ble Duke of York, He look'd a - round, But no-thing could they find, Ex - cept a hay - stack

no - thing could they find, ... Ex - cept a hay - stack

no - thing could they find, ... Ex - cept a hay - stack had five thou - sand men, He marched them up to the

This system contains the first four staves of the musical score. The first three staves are vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, and Tenor) in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#). The fourth staff is the piano accompaniment in bass clef. The lyrics are: 'look'd a - round, But no-thing could they find, Ex - cept a hay - stack' on the first staff; 'no - thing could they find, ... Ex - cept a hay - stack' on the second and third staves; and 'had five thou - sand men, He marched them up to the' on the fourth staff. The piano part features a rhythmic pattern of eighth and sixteenth notes.

in a field, And that they left be - hind. It's a

in a field, And that they left be - hind. It's a in a field, And that they left be - hind. . . .

top of the hill, And he marched them down a - gain.

This system contains the next four staves of the musical score. The first three staves are vocal parts in treble clef. The fourth staff is the piano accompaniment in bass clef. The lyrics are: 'in a field, And that they left be - hind. It's a' on the first staff; 'in a field, And that they left be - hind. It's a' on the second and third staves; and 'top of the hill, And he marched them down a - gain.' on the fourth staff. The piano part continues with a similar rhythmic pattern. The first staff of this system includes a forte (f) dynamic marking.

hay - stack, it's a hay - stack! Tut, tut!

hay - stack, it's a hay - stack! Tut, tut!

It's a Cath - o - lic . . church with the Nay, nay! Nay, nay! Nay, nay!

Tut, tut! Tut, tut!

Tut, tut! Tut, tut!

stee - ple blown a - way. Och! shure! Tut, tut!

Nay, nay! Tut, tut! Tut, tut!

(Continued from page 352).

Here was a little job that needed doing, and Mr. Scholes has done it excellently.

'The Spiritual Foundations of Reconstruction: a plea for New Educational Methods,' by F. H. Hayward and Arnold Freeman (P. S. King & Son), is a volume that should be read by all who have to do with education. I deal with it here only in regard to the musical part of it, and I am sorry to have to fall foul of the authors. Their idea that 'the class teaching of music should be largely abolished in favour of a liturgical, ceremonial, or celebrational treatment' on the ground that the subject is 'not so much to be "learned" as "imbibed,"' is a retrograde step. By all means, teach children, through the pianola or by any other medium, to enjoy listening to the best music, but the more active and practical side should be not less fully considered. Have the authors any conception of the excellence of school singing in places where a competent teacher is available? It has been proved over and over again that the capacity for delightful singing is to be found in any average elementary school. As a matter of fact, the best school choirs in recent years have been found in some of the least salubrious parts of London, just because the teacher happened to be on the spot. Should not this side of school music be developed rather than snubbed? There is a touch of the uninstructed amateur about some of the suggestions in this book. Thus, in the plan of the celebration of a 'League of Nations Day' we read that at a certain point in the proceedings 'the music gives the tune of that part of Beethoven's Choral Symphony which runs:

Welcome, all ye myriad creatures,
Brethren, take the kiss of love, &c. ;

and at another point, this passage is played 'very softly at first,' then 'joyously.' Now, if there is one section in the Symphony that more than any other bears pianoforte transcription badly it is this one. The unison phrases especially suffer. Given out ff by tenors and basses, trombones, 'celli, and double-basses, they are impressive. Played on the pianoforte, even 'very softly at first,' they are meaningless.

After the passage has been played, the words are to be sung as a solo and later by all, presumably in unison. Beethoven's chorus thus re-arranged would be both difficult and ineffective.

Again, here is the music suggested for an 'In Memoriam' passage: 'Portions of the Dead March in "Saul," of Chopin's Funeral March, of Beethoven's Funeral Marches.' But why portions of several instead of one complete? At another point 'instrumental music of a tempestuous kind' is called for. We know that kind: it accompanies the entry of the villain, and is familiarly known as 'a few bars of agit.'

The suggestion that musical phrases, subjects, and whole movements should be associated permanently with specific ideas, or with such names as Abraham Lincoln and Florence Nightingale, is one that needs cautious carrying out. A given piece of music may mean a dozen different things to as many people; it may even mean a dozen things to the same person on different occasions. That is one of music's most mysterious charms; to harness a movement to one idea is to limit its appeal. And perhaps the composer's idea—if he had one—was quite different. Messrs. Hayward and Freeman would go a great way in this connection. They suggest that 'some of the leitmotives of Wagner and some of the subjects of Beethoven may deserve to be embodied in a scheme of 'auditory symbolism. The "Curse" motif associated by Wagner with the power of gold in modern life, may very well be linked with that passage in "Timon of Athens" where the ramifications of the curse through every institution of society are incomparably described: "Gold! Yellow, glittering, precious gold!"' &c.

How Wagner's 'Curse' motif is going to help out Shakespeare I fail to see. But my chief quarrel with the authors is on the score of their ignoring native music of all kinds. Surely our school celebrations might make use of a little music of Purcell, Sullivan, Elgar, Stanford, and a dozen others. The book seems to imply that only Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, and Mendelssohn are fit to be drawn on. True, in connection with the Shakespeare celebration, native settings of his songs are suggested, but even then the authors can think of nothing better for 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' than the feeble music of Arne, who was as much out of his element here as he was in it when setting 'Where the bee sucks.' Altogether, the musical side of the volume is about a quarter of a century behind the times.

The book contains a set of 'Notanda Quædam from which I quote:

During the retreat through Serbia, English doctors and nurses, when gathered together for a few minutes of social intercourse, found they had no knowledge of any songs that they could sing in common.

At the memorial service for Nurse Cavell no English music was employed.

Presumably the authors wish such absurd anomalies to be impossible in future. But if their suggestions are carried out our nurses and doctors meeting abroad in the next war will still be badly off for songs to sing in common. Possibly they may be able to make shift by humming a Wagner 'Curse' motif, or by listening while one of their number plays on the Y.M.C.A. pianoforte, 'very softly at first,' the 'O ye millions' section of the Choral Symphony. But I have my doubts.

Church and Organ Music.

ECCLESIASTICAL MUSIC.

In connection with the proposed Chair of Ecclesiastical Music at London University, a series of four lectures illustrating four different styles of ecclesiastical music were delivered at King's College during May.

The first of these was given by Mr. Arthur M. Friedlander, director of the choir of the Bayswater Synagogue.

The subject of Mr. Friedlander's lecture was 'The Music of the Synagogue.' There were so many important details to be considered in this connection that he ventured the opinion that a series of lectures would be necessary in order to deal at all satisfactorily with them. This he hoped to do in his forthcoming work on the 'History of the Music of the Hebrews and of the Synagogue.' There was so much to be said also concerning the history of the Jewish liturgy to which he would have to refer. Moreover, in treating of the manner in which the Romish Church had derived some of its music from that of the Hebrews, it was also necessary to demonstrate how very much it had borrowed its liturgy from that of the Synagogue.

In tracing the sources from which the music of the Synagogue is derived from the time before the fall of Jerusalem under Titus, Mr. Friedlander particularly laid stress on the subject of 'cantillation,' which he considered to be extremely ancient, and referred to the discovery he had made, showing how the Romish Church had borrowed its earliest music from Jewish music. This was strikingly made evident by the lecturer playing on the organ the music to the Te Deum, and by his vocal rendering of the Hebrew cantillation of a portion from Zechariah ii., 10. The Musical Times, January, 1914, contained an article from Mr. Friedlander's pen dealing with this subject. The late Sir Hubert Parry, in a letter to him in connection with his discovery, expressed as striking and interesting the similarity which he had shown to exist in the music, and considered he was in an exceptional position for establishing the connection between Ecclesiastical Plain-song and Jewish music. Several beautiful illustrations of traditional Hebrew music were effectively rendered by Mr. de Guzman, and by members of the choir (boys and men) of the Bayswater Synagogue, and by a choir of mixed voices which was especially formed for the occasion by the lecturer, who presided at the organ. The illustrations included the blowing of the 'Shophar' (ram's horn) by Mr. Frankel, which was followed by the singing of a beautiful melody, the chant for the Song of Moses. This is held to be of very remote origin. According to an ancient Spanish work, 'some have affirmed that what we now sing to the Song of Moses is the same [melody] Miriam and her companions sang.' This legend would not merit any serious consideration here, except that it undoubtedly proved that the knowledge of the origin of the melody was already long lost when this ancient Spanish book was written. It is therefore highly probable that the melody belongs to a period anterior to the regular settlement of the Jews in Spain. Included also was the oldest chant surviving for Psalm xcii., sung upon the Sabbath day, the theme of which Sir Edward Elgar had used in his 'Apostles,' a very melodious setting to 'Adon Olom' ('Lord of the Universe'), composed by an eminent Italian composer, Salomo de Rossi, which was published in 1623, and Mr. Friedlander's setting to Psalm lxvii. (published by Novello), which he specially composed for the Intercession services held in the Synagogues in 1915, was given as an illustration of the music of the Synagogue in modern times. This was rendered by the choir with much effect. The large audience showed its appreciation in marked manner by frequently applauding the lecturer's remarks and the musical illustrations.

In the unavoidable absence of Sir John Monash (who was to have presided) the Rev. Clement F. Rogers was in the chair. At the close of the lecture he moved a vote of thanks to the lecturer, and to the choir for their kind assistance, which he said, was much appreciated.

We understand Mr. Friedlander contemplates giving a series of lectures on the 'History of the Music of the Synagogue.'

The second lecture of the series was given on May 15, by Mr. Basil T. Timotheeff, director of the choir of the Church of the Russian Embassy, Welbeck Street.

In showing how the Russian music had grown from its earliest known state, he demonstrated that there were two classes of Russian Church music, the Znamenye Rasper or traditional melodies and original works of ecclesiastical composers. The former were taken over from Byzantine music and rendered by the Bulgars, for the first Metropolitan was a Bulgar who brought with him a choir of his countrymen. It is shown from evidence of MSS. that, till the 15th century, the melodies remained practically unchanged, but then corruptions crept in through mistakes of ignorant copyists. Towards the end of the 16th century Russian composers began to set their own words to Greek melodies, and when the Metropolitan of Moscow became a Patriarch there was a call for more solemn music, and new melodies were composed in the old eight modes. Meanwhile the language had changed. The 'hard' and 'soft' sounds were disappearing, but the notes to which they had been sung remained, often altering the meanings of the words. Thus the word that had meant 'sing' came to mean 'drink,' with disastrous results. Moreover the service was long. They did not wish to cut out any part, so the custom arose of singing different parts simultaneously. A commission on church singing was appointed, which collected and edited the old MSS. that in the 17th century were put into modern notation. The need for new music created a school which had its headquarters at Kieff, and abridged and modified the old chants while retaining their free rhythm. When Romanism in the South-West threatened to draw away the Orthodox by its music, the Patriarch Nikon, to provide a counter attraction, introduced harmony, bringing choirmasters from Poland, and this soon became popular in spite of the opposition of the Old Believers. In the 18th century the influence of German and Italian operatic music was felt, and we read of a Te Deum sung by three hundred voices with five hundred instruments as well as an accompaniment of bells and cannon! Soon however Russian native composers arose, students of the traditional melodies but writing contrapuntally, taking phrases from the old but harmonizing them. Since that time Russian Church music had developed in two directions, the one more severe and the other more harmonized. Several illustrations were well rendered by a men's choir.

'The Music of the Latin Church' was the title of the third lecture of the series, which was given by Dr. R. R. Terry, choir-director of Westminster Cathedral. He pointed out that much of the discussion heard about Church music was due to lack of historic sense, and that the first thing to consider was what constituted fitness. The fundamental idea of Church music was that of corporate worship, and corporate action did not use the language of intimacy. Its tone was more impersonal and detached than that of ordinary conversation, and the greater the idea to be expressed the greater was the need for symbolism and detachment.

From earliest times this worship had taken the form of singing Psalms. The Latin liturgy was a later product of the Roman utilitarian genius for simplification. Where Greek devotion was efflorescent, Latin was terse and concise. So it was also with the music of the West. The Office and music grew up together. That of the Mass was not the first.

The official music of the Roman Church was the authorised plain-song. The floriated and syllabic styles grew up side by side. The German 'reform' movement of the 'sixties, in attempting to 'pare away excrescences and reduce the music to its primitive simplicity,' only mutilated the melodies and made them more difficult. There was no measured music in the 11th century; all the world sang plain-song. So far from music being, as our little handbooks used to tell us, 'fettered in ecclesiastical tradition,' it was of the same character whether sung by monks or troubadours. The Church only attempted to record and get into order what was universal. The lecturer explained what were the various parts of the liturgy to be sung. His aim was to show the liturgical basis of it all, and to point out that the mediæval mind took the secular and consecrated it. Plain-song was still the basis of the polyphonic school, but modern composers, following rather Luther, Bach, and the Viennese school, wrote often with little reference to liturgical studies. Dr. Terry deprecated the harmonization of plain-song by any other means than that of modal harmony, and in accompanying on the pianoforte the illustrations (well rendered by his choristers from the Cathedral, men being unavailable), he showed the difference between one form and another.

In the unavoidable absence of Dr. Allen, director of the Royal College of Music, the last lecture was given by Mr. S. H. Nicholson, organist of Westminster Abbey, who at short notice read an address on English Church music. He demonstrated that this was of three periods. The earliest archaic period was unaccompanied and had no strict time. Crude attempts at harmony in the 11th century developed into an organized art in the 16th century. The second period was that of the 16th and 17th centuries, the era of pure polyphonic music for voices in chorus with no accompaniment, full of contrapuntal devices but confined to simple chords, with no marked attempt to illustrate the meaning of the words—absolute music, dependent on itself. The English masters of this classical period were Tallis, Tye, Byrde, Gibbons, and others. The troubles of the Civil War silenced the choirs of the Cathedrals, though the tradition was not entirely lost. At the Restoration, owing to the taste of Charles II., French music, with its opportunity for the display of individual voices, influenced our composers, and gave scope for the writings of Blow and Purcell. By the end of the century all the modern forms of music had been created and Bach and Handel were born. The appearance of the latter coincided with the death of Purcell. Handel dominated all English music, though Croft, Green, Boyce, and Battishill still maintained much of the old tradition. In the 19th century such masters as Attwood, Wesley, Crotch, and S. S. Wesley revived the old national style and infused it with new life. The influence of Bach began to tell, but chiefly through Mendelssohn, who almost completely captured English taste. To the later influence of Spohr and Gounod can be traced most of the less satisfactory features of modern compositions. Mr. Nicholson urged that music of three classes should be recognized: that of the country church, that of the larger town church, and that of the cathedral. The music should depend on the capacity of the choir and of the organist. There was no need for music in a service, but all that there was should be an added ornament. There was no necessity, for instance, to sing the Psalms unless they were well sung, or to play a voluntary unless it was well played. They must start from the plain service and beautify it, but with discretion. The clergy were fond of saying that the service must be attractive, but they must consider whether in so doing some worshippers might not be repelled. This attempt to attract by bad art was a serious matter. In conclusion the lecturer said that what was needed was education. This would not be secured until organists were taken seriously and given salaries sufficient to enable them to qualify themselves for their work, till the clergy were better trained, and until they had some system of diocesan advisers to go round and hear what was being done and to suggest how defects might be removed.

THE TEMPLE CHURCH.

Dr. Walford Davies having been appointed professor and director of musical education in the University of Wales, will necessarily be absent from London for a good part of the year. The Benchers of the Inner Temple desire, however, that he shall continue to hold office at the Temple, and have therefore appointed Mr. George Thalben Ball to be acting-organist and choirmaster. Mr. Ball has been organist at Paddington Parish Church. Though young, he has already made a reputation as a fine player and choirmaster.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Mr. Haldane Campbell Stewart, director of music at Tonbridge School, has been appointed successor to Dr. J. Varley Roberts. Mr. Stewart was a chorister at Magdalen in 1878, when Sir Walter Parratt was organist. Before going to Tonbridge he was at Lancing and Wellington Colleges.

A Festival Thanksgiving Service was held in Lincoln Cathedral on May 21. The principal works were Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture (played in memory of those who have fallen in the war), Gounod's 'Redemption' (Part 1), and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.' The soloists were Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Pansy Moore, Miss May Brummitt, Mr. J. B. Render (in place of Mr. Gervase Elwes indisposed), Mr. C. Woodward, and Mr. L. W. Endersby. Dr. G. J. Bennett conducted a band and choir of over three hundred (the band led by Mr. F. Mountney, of Nottingham), and Dr. E. C. Bairstow was at the organ, playing at the close of the service César Franck's Finale in B flat. There was a large congregation, and the collection amounted to upwards of £100.

The forty-ninth Anniversary of the Gregorian Association will be kept on Thursday, July 3, when a choral celebration of Holy Communion will be conducted by the Bishop of Nassau at St. Mary's, Graham Street, Sloane Square, at 11 a.m. In the evening, at 7.30, the usual festival service will be held at St. Paul's Cathedral. The choir of six hundred voices will be conducted by Capt. Francis Burgess, with Mr. B. Herrick Edwards at the organ. Before the service a selection of organ music will be played by the Rev. Norman C. Woods, and the preacher will be the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Gore). The music to be sung at the St. Paul's service is printed in the Festival Service Book, obtainable from Messrs. Novello.

The organ at Westminster Chapel, Buckingham Gate, one of the largest and best-known Congregational Churches in London, is to be rebuilt. The present instrument, one of three manuals, was built by Father Willis in 1870. In the new scheme a solo organ, with Tubas voiced on 15-inch pressure, is to be incorporated, and the mechanism and tone of the entire instrument will be brought up to date. The work has been entrusted to Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, of the Cathedral Organ Works, Liverpool, and will be put in hand immediately.

Mr. Norman Collie has just completed a fine series of weekly recitals at St. Luke's, Tunbridge Wells. He has given a hundred recitals since his appointment, and, the town not being favoured with orchestral concerts, he has wisely included a good proportion of transcriptions. In all he has played nearly four hundred works, the organ pieces and transcriptions being alike of good quality, and drawn from a wide field. Recitals of this kind are a valuable educational factor.

Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt has been giving excellent recitals on Wednesdays at St. John the Evangelist's, Edinburgh, playing amongst other organ music, Guilman's first Sonata, Stanford's 'Verdun,' Mendelssohn's first and second Sonatas, Lemare's 'Summer Sketches,' Boëllmann's Gothic Suite, Ireland's 'Villanella' and 'Sursum Corda,' and some excellent transcriptions of Debussy, Saint-Saëns, Bantock, Sibelius, Grainger, Cyril Scott, &c.

Dr. G. J. Bennett gave a recital at Lincoln Cathedral on June 9, in aid of St. Dunstan's Hostel, a collection of over £23 being taken. The programme included Mendelssohn's fifth Sonata, Bach's 'Jig' Fugue, Franck's Pastorale, Widor's 'Pontifical' March, and the Finale from the 'Pathetic' Symphony. Miss Bessie Unwin, of Sheffield, sang 'With verdure clad,' and Franck's 'Panis Angelicus.'

The recent performance of 'Messiah' at St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, resulted in the conductor and promoter, Mr. Ernest Harcourt, being able to hand £14 10s. 6d. to local charities. The same choir and orchestra, largely augmented, has now commenced rehearsals of Handel's 'Deborah,' which will be given in October for the first time at Norwich.

'Messiah' was sung at St. Edward's Parish Church, Romford, on May 26, under the direction of Mr. A. C. Chappell-Haverson. The soloists were Miss Annie Cross, Miss Wilhelmina Lawrence, Mr. Fred P. Hammond, and Mr. Cyril J. Whipps. Miss Ethel Thompson presided at the organ. The proceeds were given to St. Dunstan's Hostel for Blinded Soldiers.

Mr. S. Maurice Popplestone has resumed his duties at All Saints' Church, Weston-super-Mare, after three years' service with the Royal Air Force, and on May 22 commenced a series of organ recitals in aid of the new organ fund. He was assisted by Mr. Seymour Dossor, the well-known tenor, and Miss Elfrida Gairdner (violin).

Another youthful organist: Master Leslie Betteridge, aged fifteen, has been appointed to St. Mary's, Charlton Kings, Cheltenham. At a recital on May 21 the boy played Guilman's Grand Chœur in D, and the Toccata from Widor's fifth Symphony.

Mr. W. R. Anderson has resigned his post as organist at St. James Street Presbyterian Church, Londonderry, on being appointed officer instructor in music in hospitals in the London area, under the Army Educational Scheme.

Mozart's 'Requiem' was sung at Ely Cathedral on May 27, followed by Harwood's Motet, 'Jesu! Thy boundless love to me,' and two of Parry's Choral Preludes.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. T. H. Collinson, Usher Hall, Edinburgh (two recitals)—Concerto No. 2, Handel; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; Britannia Overture, Mackenzie.

Mr. Harry Wall, St. Paul's, Covent Garden (four recitals)—Choral and Menuet from Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Allegretto in B minor, Lemare; Preludes 'Christ the Lord is risen again' (a) Reger, (b) Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 3, Guilman; Berceuse, Lemare; Lied, Vierne; Villanella, Ireland; Chant de Mai, Jongen.

Mr. W. Henry Maxfield, St. John's, Altrincham—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Serenade, Widor; A Morning Song, Maxfield; Postlude, Allegro Pomposo, Smart.

- Mr. Albert Orton, Walton Parish Church, Liverpool (two recitals)—Toccata in D minor, W. G. Wood; Prelude and Fugue in C (9-8), Bach; Minuet in D, Calkin; Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Scherzo in C minor and Marche Triomphale, Guilmant.
- Mr. Ernest H. Smith, Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool.—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Three Short Preludes (Winchester New, Tallis' Canon, St. Albinus), Ernest H. Smith; Finale in F, Hollins.
- Mr. G. H. Sadler, Holywell Cross Chapel, Chesterfield.—Toccata in F, Bach; Overture, 'Tannhäuser'; Fantasia on Scotch Airs, Mansfield; Storm, Neukomm.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (two recitals)—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Madrigal and Divertissement, Vierne; Elegy, Bairstow; Toccata from Symphony No. 5, Widor; Scherzo Fanfare, Loret; Prelude, 'The Blessed Damozel,' Debussy; Sonata, Arne; Study, Goodhart.
- Mr. C. E. B. Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (five recitals)—Fantasia, Lyon; Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Henniker; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Introduction and Variations on a Ground Bass, Haynes; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger.
- Mr. Leonard Brown, Central Mission, Nottingham—Grand Chorus in D, Guilmant; Caprice, Crackel; Marche Solennelle, Maily; Impromptu, Dobson; Prayer, Faulkes.
- Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Andante Cantabile, Tchaikovsky; Prelude to 'Gethsemane,' Bantock; Finale to 'Everyman,' Nunn; Solemn March, Gounod; Good Friday Music, 'Parsifal.'
- Mr. Harold Helman, St. Margaret's, Ilkley (four recitals)—Sonata, Reubek; Légende, Dvorák; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Sonata in F minor (first movement) and Phantasie (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. John's, Red Lion Square—Sonata in E minor, Merkel; Minuetto, Gisby; Lamentation, Guilmant; Marche Solennelle, Borowski. St. Thomas's, Regent Street (four recitals)—Two Sketches (Op. 58, Nos. 3 and 4), Schumann; Romanza and Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Finale from 'Tristan and Isolde'; Festal Commemoration, West; Idylle, Elgar; Marche Triomphale, Guilmant; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Four Transcriptions, Sibelius.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Elegiac Fugue, Guilmant; first movement, Symphony No. 2, Vierne; Choral and Fantasia Pastorale, de Severac; 'Siegfried' Idyll; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, Usher Hall, Edinburgh (two recitals)—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Villanella, Ireland; Irish tune from County Derry; Idyll No. 6, Gray; Andantino in G minor, Frank; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Scherzo in B flat, Wolstenholme; Evening Song, Bairstow; Military March, Elgar.
- Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (two recitals)—Concert Fantasia and Fugue in C, W. G. Wood; Romance with Variations, Stuart Archer; March for a Church Festival, Best; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Concert Fantasia on Scottish Airs, Mansfield.
- Dr. F. H. Wood, St. John's Parish Church, Blackpool (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Evening Song, Bairstow; Overture in E flat, Faulkes; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Impromptu, Nicholson; Marche Héroïque, Lemare.
- Mr. S. Maurice Popplestone, All Saints', Weston-super-Mare—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert; Chanson d'Été, Lemare; Grand Solemn March, Smart.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (five recitals)—Choral and Scherzetto, Vierne; Scherzo, Hollins; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Fantasia Sonata (first movement), Rheinberger; Summer Sketches, Lemare; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme; Prelude in F minor, Bach; Sursum Corda, Elgar; Pæan, Harwood; Tempo di Minuetto, Stanford; Overture 'In der Natur,' Dvorák; Choral in A, Frank.
- Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Two Canons, Salome; Pæan, Harwood.
- Mr. W. Brennand Smith, Ladock Parish Church—Introduction and Fuga in F sharp minor, Handel; Four Transcriptions, MacDowell; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; Cantilène, Rheinberger.
- Mr. Fred Gostelow, Hockliffe Street Baptist Church, Leighton Buzzard—Overture No. 1, Hollins; Sonata in A, Borowski; Fugue in D, Bach; 'Anitra's Dance' and 'A Little Bird,' Grieg.
- Mr. F. J. Tarris, St. John's, Red Lion Square—Grand Chœur in B flat and Cantilène Nuptiale, Dubois; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Madrigal, Quef; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (three recitals)—Andante, Moszkowski; Air with Variations in F sharp minor, Wesley; Prelude and Fugue in G and Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Toccata in B minor, Batiste.
- Mr. Ronald A. Chamberlain, St. Clement Danes, Strand—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Preludes on 'Jesus, the very thought,' and 'As pants the hart,' Parry; Fantasia, West.
- Miss Elaine Rainbow, St. Clement Danes, Strand—Sketch in C, Schumann; Chorale Prelude on 'Melcombe,' Parry; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. Edmund West, St. John's, Territet—Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach; Pastorale, Frank; Overture to 'Samson'; Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger.
- Mr. Paul Rochard, Hincley Parish Church (two recitals)—Allegro Pomposo, West; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry.
- Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church (two recitals)—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Finlandia'; Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Prelude to 'Gerontius'; Légende, Dvorák (collection for Musicians' Gift Fund, £87s. 6d.).
- Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Allegro, Corelli; Rhapsody, Faulkes; Gavotte, Bach; Minuetto, Gigout; Alleluia, Bossi.

APPOINTMENTS.

- Mr. Fred A. Elliott, organist and choirmaster, Holy Innocents', Ravenscourt Park, W.
- Mr. W. J. Horne, organist and choirmaster, St. Canice's Cathedral, Kilkenny.
- Mr. C. St. Ervan Johns, organist and choirmaster, Chepstow Parish Church.
- Mr. D. J. Cecil Moyce, organist and choirmaster, Keston Parish Church.
- Mr. Albert Orton, organist and choirmaster, Newport Parish Church, Isle of Wight.
- Mr. D. E. Roberts, organist and choirmaster, St. Peter's, Peterhead.
- Mons. F. van de Velde (organist of Galway Cathedral), organist and choirmaster of the Redemptorist Church, Limerick, vice M. Bellens, returned to Belgium.

Reviews.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Gaudete. By W. G. Ross.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Trois Méditations; Rapsodie sur deux Noël; Introduction et Allegro moderato. By J. Guy Ropartz.

[Durand, Paris.]

Mr. Ross here gives us an excellent essay in what is generally known as postlude form. Its main portion consists of a bright theme over a moving pedal. The middle section is rather more subdued in style, though the animation proper to the title is kept up. The laying-out for two manuals (pages 2 and 3) is not happy, the more prominent part consisting sometimes of single notes, sometimes of chords. The passages may easily be played on one manual, and most organists will probably prefer that method, with mf Great diapasons. This section is introduced again, ff, at the beginning of the very effective Coda. The piece is only moderately difficult, is easy to register, and is suitable for recital or voluntary purposes.

M. Ropartz is little known in this country as an organ-composer, but he has to his credit some excellent short pieces based on plainsong themes, and a Suite containing a fine fugue. These works are published by the Schola Cantorum. In them, as in the pieces under notice, he shows himself so much in sympathy with the organ that the smallness of his output is regrettable. The Meditations are perhaps too uniformly subdued in character to attain any great popularity. Meditations, to ensure a large sale in England, should contain something in the way of a solo with an attractive accompaniment (lieblich arpeggios for choice), or the sentiment should be of a slightly lachrymose kind. In M. Ropartz's Méditations the interest is very largely harmonic, although there is nothing far-fetched. The pieces abound in the felicitous touches that may be expected from a pupil of Franck. Perhaps the pace is generally a trifle too slow. Of the set, the best is No. 3, an 'In Memoriam' with some beautiful harmony and deep feeling. The Introduction and Allegro is a piece eleven pages in length, opening with a weighty largamente, from the first bar of which is derived the beginning of the Allegro. There is a delightful section, Poco meno Allegro, and an equally effective passage on page 6, which recalls Franck's 'Pièce Héroïque'—indeed, there are many reminders of Franck throughout. Admirable, too, is the treatment of the Poco meno Allegro on page 7, with Great and Swell uncoupled. There is a broad Coda, based on a major version of the largamente opening. The work is a thoughtful essay that grows on the player. It is not very difficult, but it needs a tasteful and sympathetic performer. On more popular lines is the 'Rapsodie' for two Noëls. This is a field in which French organ-composers are supreme, partly because of the excellence of the old French carol tunes, and also because the organ-music based on them usually contains a piquant mixture of modal and modern harmony. The two tunes treated by M. Ropartz are from Haute-Bretagne, and are good specimens of naive folk-music. The writing for the first two pages is studiously simple and reticent, but there are many happy touches, such as the quaint little interludes between the strains of the carol. The second tune is announced in conventional pastoral fashion over a drone bass. The harmony then becomes freer—here and there strangely commonplace for such a fastidious composer. A happy stroke is the use on page 6 of a phrase of the 3-8 carol in 4-4 time. There is some very effective contrapuntal writing before a resumption of the first tune brings in a quiet Coda with which the work ends. The Rhapsodie needs neat playing and registering, but is not really difficult. M. Ropartz's other organ works are dated 1897-98. It is to be hoped that he will not wait so long before his next essay.

SONGS.

The Cherry Tree; By Wenlock Town; Rest at Mid-day.
By Janet Hamilton.

[Winthrop Rogers.]

Beata Solitudo. By Norman Peterkin.

[Boston Music Company.]

Janet Hamilton is a composer of undoubted talent. Her songs are very modern in idiom, with a pronounced touch of austerity, and the writing for the keyboard is excellent. The voice-part, though not conventional, is vocal. For the first two songs the composer has drawn on Housman's 'A Shropshire Lad'. All three need a high baritone or mezzo-soprano.

Norman Peterkin's setting of some verses by Ernest Dowson is difficult for both singer and player. It has some beautiful moments, and its only fault is a too constantly luscious flavour. One begins to find it rather cloying towards the end. When Mr. Peterkin learns the value of reticence and contrast he will do much better work than this. G. H.

CHURCH MUSIC.

Sing unto God. By Charles Macpherson.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis (in G). By Alan Gray.

Te Deum Laudamus (in F). By Henry Smart. Arranged for boys' or female voices by John E. West.

Recit. and Air, 'Where shall I fly?' Handel.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Requiem Mass. By Theo. Keynes.

Solemn Te Deum (in B♭). For choir and congregation in unison, with a descant for boys' voices. By Sydney H. Nicholson.

[The Faith Press.]

Dr. Macpherson's anthem, 'Sing unto God,' received its first performance on May 20, at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the occasion of the 265th annual Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, for which it was specially composed. It is described on the title-page as 'An Anthem of Thanksgiving and Commemoration after the Great War,' and is an elaborate work running to thirty-one pages.

It opens with a bold theme (Andante con spirito, ma maestoso) mainly built up on notes of the common chord, which is given out (f) by tenors and basses in unison to the words 'Sing unto God, O ye kingdoms of the earth.' This is accompanied by repeated crotchet chords in the treble register, above the voices, with a persistent demisemiquaver figure (♩♩♩), till the entry of the remaining voices fifteen bars later. Here appears a new quaver figure which is later on made use of in the working of an interesting pedal point. Eighteen bars from the end of this section the opening theme is resumed (ff), the voices entering in close stretto on a tonic pedal lasting for twelve bars. This movement, which occupies eight pages, is not difficult, and would make an effective short anthem for general use.

A short section (Largo) to the words, 'The grave cannot praise Thee,' leads into what is perhaps the most beautiful part of the whole work. A single soprano voice gives out (quasi Recit.) the words, 'I heard a voice from heaven,' and this is followed by an expressive setting (Andante dolce) for four solo voices of 'Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.' Ex. 1, condensed to two staves, gives some idea of the style of vocal-writing which predominates in this short movement; the accompaniment duplicates the voice-parts, with the addition of the pedal C:

'SING UNTO GOD.'

Ex. 1.

The musical score for 'Sing unto God' (Ex. 1) is presented in two systems. The first system shows the vocal part (Soprano) and the Organ Pedal. The vocal part begins with the words 'Bless - ed, . . . bless - ed' and the organ part provides accompaniment. The second system continues the vocal part with 'are . . . the' and the organ part with 'dead, . . . the &c.' The organ part is marked 'Organ. Ped.' and the vocal part is marked 'pp'.

This quartet would serve admirably for use at funerals or commemoration services, and would provide a welcome change from the well-worn strains of Spohr.

The final movement, 'Blessed are they that dwell in Thy house' (Andante moderato), makes greater demands upon both choir and organist. There is plenty of contrapuntal writing for the voices, and the organ part is written throughout on three staves:

Ex. 2.

mf prais - ing Thee, al - way.
be al - way prais - ing, be...
house; they will be al - way

*Gl.
L.H.*

prais
f al prais way
f prais ing
Gl.

Gl. to Ped.

Contrast is afforded by the simple treatment of the words, 'Who going through the vale of misery,' followed by some bold, straightforward writing for 'They will go from strength to strength.' The first subject is then resumed, and shortly afterwards an effective climax is worked up on a long pedal-point to the words, 'They will be always praising Thee.' Three bars for organ alone lead to the entry (ff) of all the voices in unison with the theme with which the work opened, 'Sing unto God.' A brief excursion into the key of B $\flat$ leads to an imposing conclusion.

This last section, which is the longest, would be very suitable for use at Dedication Festivals. For such occasions as All Souls' Day, &c., the portion from 'I heard a voice' to the end might be sung. Dr. Macpherson is to be congratulated on having produced a very fine work, which deserves to be widely known.

Choirmasters who are on the look-out for Church music that is distinctive in character and that consistently avoids the obvious and commonplace, should make the acquaintance of Dr. Alan Gray's latest setting of the Evening Canticles. Opening with an expressive melody for sopranos (mf), the treatment for four pages is mainly on quiet lines, with several passages for unaccompanied singing. Pages 6 and 7 ('He hath showed strength,' &c.) contain some vigorous writing for the voices and a finely-developed organ-part, following which relief is once again afforded by the setting for voices alone of 'He remembering His mercy.'

In the opening pages of the Nunc Dimittis also, the voices are left largely to their own resources, the organ combining with the full choir (with divided trebles) for a rich climax in the last verse.

Although not difficult, the music needs a well-equipped choir to do it justice, as all the parts have something to say and all are equally important. There is very little repetition of words, and the 'Glorias' to both Canticles are short and dignified. There is room for more Church music of the type Dr. Gray has here given us.

Mr. John E. West's arrangement of Smart's popular Te Deum in F is the latest addition to the 'Chorister Series of Church Music for Female or Boys' Voices.'

There are many choirs—in country villages, schools, colleges, &c.—where men's voices are not always available. Even in places which possess a full choir, there are frequent occasions—such as week-day services—when treble voices only can be depended on. In such cases as these, this admirable edition should prove welcome. Variety is obtained by full, unison passages, first and second trebles alternating, and two-part work. If necessary, the lower of the two vocal parts may be dispensed with throughout, and the whole sung by all the sopranos in unison.

The well-known excerpt from Handel's 'Hercules' forms one of Novello's collection of favourite songs, duets, &c., from the oratorios. This new issue of 'Where shall I fly' should be noted by mezzo-sopranos who are preparing for the L.R.A.M. diploma this year.

Mr. Keynes's setting of the Requiem Mass for use in the English Church is short and quite simple. It cannot be said, however, that the music possesses those qualities of strength and dignity which are now looked for in works intended for use in our Church services. The composer is too fond of weak chromaticisms, and the accompaniment to the Agnus Dei seems ill-advised.

In his setting of the Te Deum for choir and congregation, Mr. Nicholson has evidently had chiefly in view the needs of the congregation. He has provided music of a straightforward character, within the range of all voices, which may be sung throughout by choir and people as a unison service if so desired, or variety may be obtained by the boys of the choir singing a two-part descant in certain places while the main melody is sustained by the rest of the choir and congregation. The only relief from this procedure occurs in the final section ('Oh Lord, save Thy people,' &c.), where it is suggested that the first half of each verse should be sung, if possible, by a solo voice (bass) without accompaniment, the choir and people responding with the second half. Mr. Nicholson has provided an admirable, freely-written organ part, and if the congregation takes the trouble worthily to perform its share, the result should be effective.

From the point of view of musical interest and relief, however, we think that the composer has overlooked one important factor. In endeavouring to meet the claims of the congregation, he has gone the whole hog and kept them—and incidentally the organ—pounding away from start to finish. Of course, where there is no properly equipped choir, this may be the only thing to do. The ideal solution of the problem—that which enables both choir and people to take part in the singing and at the same time avoids monotony and is musically satisfying—lies somewhat in the direction outlined by Mr. Royle Shore in last month's Musical Times. There should be occasions when the choir employs its full resources, sometimes in addition to the people's part—perhaps taking the place of the organ in supplying accompanying harmonies—and sometimes quite alone while the people and the organ rest.

Meanwhile, congregations will doubtless be grateful to Mr. Nicholson for providing them with a Te Deum in the singing of which they may take a generous share. A 'People's Part,' containing the melody only, may be obtained from the publishers.

G. G.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Masterpieces. Simplified Transcriptions. By H. Elliot Button.

Stella-Mary Dances. By Ernest Austin.

Various Pieces. By H. Baynton-Power.

[J. H. Larway.]

Three Improvisations for the left-hand. By Frank Bridge.
[Winthrop Rogers.]

The cover of Mr. Button's Transcriptions tells us that 'the object of this series is to bring some of the masterpieces within the reach of those who have not the technique to overcome the difficulties of the originals.' At first one looks with suspicion on 'short cuts' of this kind, but, after all, everything depends on the way in which the idea is carried out. As to the principle involved, it must be remembered that composers have often been remiss in regard to putting their ideas on paper. They have frequently peppered their pages with accidentals when a change of key-signature would have left the music diatonic. Often an otherwise comparatively easy piece is made impracticable by a few difficult bars that yield little return for a great deal of trouble. Sometimes the laying out for the keyboard has been ungrateful. Mr. Button's skill in matters pertaining to the printed page is well known, and he has turned it to good account in this series. So far eight numbers have been published: Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude, the 'Parsifal' Prelude, the 'Prize Song' from the 'Meistersingers,' Schumann's Romance in F sharp, Chopin's Funeral March, Wieniawski's Legend, Liszt's second Hungarian Rhapsody, and Raff's 'La Fileuse.' Space will not permit of a full description of Mr. Button's methods of smoothing the path of the amateur, but a word is due to the most remarkable of the series—Schumann's 'Romance.' Originally written in F sharp, on three staves, it appears here in G, on two staves, and (it seems incredible) not a note has been added or taken away! It looks, and is, quite easy to play, and of course sounds exactly the same as the original. This method of popularising good music is new, and, in some cases, debateable. But there can be no question of the practical success of the works so far Buttonised.

Among the most acceptable novelties of last season's Promenade Concerts were the 'Stella-Mary Dances' of Ernest Austin. These six charming little pieces have now been arranged for pianoforte duet (published in separate numbers) and pianoforte solo (in three sets). The duet version, which lies before me, is about as difficult as Moszkowski's 'Spanish Dances.' Here and there I miss some of the orchestral colouring which was such a feature of the original version, but the music is so tuneful that it bears the test of pianoforte transcription remarkably well. With their delightfully fresh harmony and rhythm, and their happy turn of melody, the dances should make many friends in their new form. Teachers who (wisely) play duets with their pupils will find them a boon.

The pieces by H. Baynton-Power are of the rather easy type suitable for teaching purposes. They are more notable than such pieces are wont to be, because the composer has an unusually happy knack of writing this kind of music. Easy as they are, they have plenty of genuine interest. The titles are 'Twilight Stories' (four pieces), 'Pastoral Legend,' 'Rose of the Desert,' 'Romantic Prelude,' and 'Echoes in the Valley.' The first are easy, the rest moderately difficult. Those of us whose pupillage was many years ago, look back with a sigh when we remember how little good recreative material there was for our young fingers beyond Clementi's Sonatinas. And they were not very stimulating! Children of to-day expect a great variety of jam to help down the powder. They will enjoy the Baynton-Power brand.

Frank Bridge's three pieces for the left-hand are dedicated to Douglas Fox, a brilliant young organist who lost his right arm in the war. There are, unfortunately, many other musicians maimed in such a way as to cut them off from the ordinary instrumental repertory. Those who are good players and fond of modern music will be grateful for these Improvisations. They are difficult, and cover so much of the keyboard that at first sight they look like ordinary two-handed music. But much may be done by the pedals, and we know how great a facility is obtained by handicapped players. The three pieces are entitled 'At Dawn,' 'A Vigil,' and 'A Revel.' Apart from their special object, they should prove valuable to players who wish to develop their left-hand.

G. H.

First Principles of Music. By F. J. Read, Mus.D. (Oxon.). [London: Edward Arnold.]

This excellent little manual by one of the professors at the Royal College of Music is packed with information, concisely arranged and clearly explained in accordance with the course adopted by the author in the classes at the R.C.M., and which the experience of many years has proved successful. The requirements of examinations in the rudiments of music have also been kept in view, and some suggestions are made as to the method of working various questions. A useful feature is the inclusion of a number of specimen questions on the different sections of each chapter. The first part deals with notation, keys and scales, time, intervals, transposition, musical terms, signs and abbreviations, and ornaments. The second part, in addition to chapters on triads, cadences, ancient modes, scores, sound, &c., gives some useful information on the pianoforte and its predecessors, orchestral instruments (with illustrations), and musical form. Candidates for examinations will find this admirable little book invaluable.

G. G.

Letters to the Editor.

'FAIR PLAY FOR THE PROFESSIONAL.'

SIR,—Particulars of the following appointment of an organist may be of interest. In the May issue of the Musical Times appeared an advertisement for an organist and choirmaster 'who must be an efficient choir-trainer.' The advertisement added, 'Great opening as teacher for first-class man.'

I put in an application for the post, and in time had my testimonials returned, with a statement that an appointment had been made. By the same post I received a letter from a near relative who had been on a visit to the town a few days previously, and who had had some conversation with an old friend officially connected with the church. The letter contained the following facts, for the accuracy of which I can vouch:

'The organist appointed is a music-seller, &c., in the town, and the choirmaster is a schoolmaster at one of the local Board Schools.'

The question naturally arises: If the position was to be filled by amateurs, why was it ever advertised in this manner in a leading musical journal, thus causing probably a goodly number of professionals to go to the trouble of making fruitless application? Then, again, the filling by amateurs of an appointment that has carried a salary of from £80 to £120 per annum for a considerable number of years, and has been held by men of recognised worth, is surely a retrograde step. I am also informed that the organist who held the appointment during the war, and was obliged to join the Forces, received a salary of £150—£160.

I made my application from a military hospital, from which as soon as recovered I expect to be demobilised. I have no appointment at present, and am therefore faced with the possibility of nothing to return to, with a wife and family dependent on me.

Quite possibly other candidates may have been similarly situated, and one cannot help a feeling of disgust at the thought of two men, both holding positions which presumably carry a living wage, thus doing a professional, who has had an expensive musical training, &c., out of his job.

Does not such a case reveal the necessity for a 'Board of Appeal' or something of like nature?

I regret having to write under a 'nom de plume,' but the reason is probably obvious. I enclose my card.—Yours, &c.,

'AN UNSUCCESSFUL CANDIDATE.'

NASAL RESONANCE.

SIR,—Before the apple fell on Sir Isaac Newton's nose, the world wagged almost as well as it does to-day.

Quite apart from the quibblers, the law of gravity prevails. It has reconciled all the misconceptions and misunderstandings of the ages. We now see these matters in their proper perspective, and marvel at its extent—its illimitableness.

With regard to the nasal resonance supporters, the apple has not yet hit them on the nose. Acoustically they are quite innocent of the law of the perfect resonator—they are still quibbling. The truth of that law which discounts and embodies their little discovery has not dawned upon them.

Mr. Dawson Freer's very helpful and logical letter takes us back to the foundation of tone—the open throat—the normal tone (or, as I figuratively said in the November issue, the diapason quality). From this fact, the resonator for every note and every vowel within the sphere of the vocal 'lips' begins, i.e., the perfect note. (The system is being taught here in Glasgow on the co-ordinate movement principle, and is most successful in its results.) That phrase at the end of Mr. Freer's letter—re chest resonance—is a nasty knock for the nasal resonance clique. Mr. Hilton's belated echo from Africa—'like the flowers that bloom in the spring,'—has little to do with the case. 'Fair play's a jewel,' and I do not think it just of anyone because he obviously does not understand, or is afflicted with mental strabismus, to regard one's statements as 'doubtful.'

I have quoted scientific facts, and, as Burns says, 'Facts are chieft that winna' ding.' I shall not presume on your space to quote any youthful prodigy.

The experiment of filling the nasal cavities with milk was performed by the late A. B. Bach, of Edinburgh, who has related the result in one of his able books on the voice.—Yours, &c.,

DAVID HOUSTON.

14, Lyndhurst Gardens,
Glasgow, N.W.

June, 16, 1919.

[This correspondence must now cease.—ED., M.T.]

STRAVINSKY.

SIR,—It would be well if Stravinsky's literary disciples would emulate their master's 'persistent striving towards brevity, conciseness, and directness of expression,' and, overcoming their 'mania for completeness,' would endeavour to state what they have apprehended 'without need of laboured self-explanation and working out.'

The charge of obscurum per obscurius is old and well-known, but Mr. Leigh Henry's panegyric on Stravinsky in the Musical Times suggests a new variant of it, in that the author appears to have done his best to obscure an issue that was to most people perfectly plain before he began to expound it. To describe enharmonic modulations as 'sequential treatment of tonal colour-combinations on related or deliberately and acutely-contrasted harmonic planes, or polytonic treatment and chord-successions determined by tonal affinity'

may impress but certainly will not enlighten the average reader. It will more probably make him marvel at the writer's subsequent denunciation of:

'the often unbearably redundant artifice of symphonic form.'

The triple performance of Stravinsky's Three Pieces by the Philharmonic String Quartet seems to Mr. Leigh Henry 'to imply a certain obscurity, if not incomprehensibility in that composer's style.' But it might more reasonably be said to imply a shrewd foreknowledge on the part of the concert-givers that these three short and simple studies in onomatopoeia would prove a popular item in the programmes—which, in fact, they did, being encored and repeated on at least one occasion.

Mr. Leigh Henry tells us that Stravinsky 'marks a new direction in musical art.' He would have us see Stravinsky as a kind of musical Melchizedek—a unique phenomenon, without ancestry or relation to his forerunners. But there are blasphemous unbelievers who regard Stravinsky first and foremost as a past-master in the art of whipping-up an audience to a state of physical excitement by methods very closely resembling the Rossinian crescendo, and secondly as the legitimate successor of Richard Strauss in the onomatopoeic line. Such at any rate is the impression his music makes on the average hearer who listens 'objectively,' without searching for those 'metaphysical significances of philosophic intent' which are doubtless revealed only to the devout.

The music of 'Petrouchka' is marvellously apt and appropriate to the pantomime for which it was written, but, apart from a few small points of technical interest, has it any musical significance whatever? The evolution of Stravinsky, from the sentimentally Chopinesque pianoforte pieces of 1908, via the 'Firebird' (that pastiche so industriously compiled from reminiscences of Berlioz, Grieg, Rimsky Korsakoff, and the 'Casse Noisette' Suite) and the more original 'Petrouchka' to such soulless and consciously imbecile productions as 'Biroulki' and the songs for a cat, reveals the gradual elimination of every element that might be recognized as emotional or moving, in any but a purely physical sense. One feels quite sorry for his cat. It is more usual to try such things on the dog—but then it is just in these little details that Stravinsky's startling originality is most apparent.

This, of course, is as it should be, for 'We have had enough of romantics. We have been starved of humour in music. We crave for what music hitherto has most lacked.'

However, there is little ground for anxiety. Three cheers for the comic song!—Yours, &c.,

MORTIMER CATTLEY.

8, Warbeck Road,
W. 12.

A DOUBLE PEDAL PASSAGE IN BACH.

SIR,—The peculiar disposition of the parts at the end of Bach's Organ Prelude in D (alla breve) must have attracted the notice of many organists. The right hand is fully occupied, and both feet are employed, but the left hand is practically idle. Why is this?

Bach does not seem to use the double pedal for the sake of increased tone. Had this been his object he would have added one or two parts for the left hand as well, and not have given it nothing to do. The left hand was freed from playing because it was required for other work. Was not Bach's design to effect a gradual reduction of tone, the left-hand part being transferred to the right foot so that the hand might be available to push in the stops one by one? As a rule, such a gradual reduction of tone was not obtainable in Bach's time, for modern devices of stop-control had not yet been invented. Bach had throughout a piece to content himself with the same stops that he began with, employing only such contrasts as could be secured by changes of manual. His organ music is therefore designed as a series of terraces, not of slopes. But on this occasion Bach, regarding the slope as indispensable, was obliged to make this special disposition to obtain it.

If this view commends itself, from the ff on the $\curvearrowright$ in the closing bars of the Prelude a gradual decrescendo would be made to pp, and the 16-ft. pedal tone as quickly as possible reduced and eliminated. The downward slope would be decorated by a number of tasteful bits of colour, which on other occasions the player's hands are too fully occupied to attend to, even if they were appropriate. For example, the first beat of the last bar but two would be accented by the momentary addition of a soft 32-ft.; and if the use of the Swell pedal, unknown in Bach's time, is desired, the right-foot part would naturally have to be transferred to the left hand.—Yours, &c.,

X.V.Z.

FIVE-MANUAL ORGANS.

SIR,—Since my demobilisation I have been feasting on the Musical Times of several years, and in the issue for October, 1918, I see a list of organs with five manuals, in an article by E. Graham Dunstan. The organ in Radley College Chapel is described as by Telford, and the number of its stops is marked by a query. Twenty years ago I had the pleasure of seeing and playing on this organ, and in my note-book it is recorded as originally by Telford, enlarged and rebuilt by Walker, and twice ditto by Martin, of Oxford. It then contained 61 speaking-stops and 12 couplers, &c.

This information may be of interest to the writer of your article.—Yours, &c.,

E. BRUNDRIT MEADOWS.

Ifley House,
Thornton, Preston,
June 6, 1919.

ORGAN RECITAL PROGRAMMES.

SIR,—From the fine series of programmes of recitals to be given at St. Stephen's Walbrook, I find that out of fifty-nine pieces, thirty-eight are original organ music—nearly two-thirds. Not a bad percentage. But only thirteen of the fifty-nine are British pieces; less than a quarter!

At four recitals by Mr. T. J. Crawford at St. Michael's, Chester Square, out of twenty-six items only four are original organ pieces; and five British pieces out of twenty-six is all Mr. Crawford can give us.

Where stands British—and organ—music?—Yours, &c., 57, Torrington Square, W. R. ANDERSON.
London, W.C.-1.

BARRING AND RHYTHMIC ACCENT.

SIR,—I read Mr. Hugh Gardner's letter in the June number of the Musical Times with much interest. The problem of editing satisfactorily the vocal works of the Tudor composers is so difficult, that any suggestions are of value and may aid in its solution. The difficulties can only be fully appreciated by those who have attempted to deal with them in actual practice, and it must be confessed that until recently they have been wholly ignored, with the result that this music is commonly sung, as Mr. Gardner points out, with distressing effect as regards the true accentuation of the words.

Yet I think it will be agreed by all who have studied the subject that some sort of barring is absolutely essential as a guide to the eye in a vocal score, even if it is of no more than three parts. This in itself does not rule out Mr. Gardner's experiment of barring the words, and it might be worth trying if regular barring of the orthodox type were employed. At the same time the actual difficulties introduced by the constant repetition of the words are but dimly suggested in the simple examples cited in his letter.

If barring is introduced in the music, it must obviously be either regular or irregular. There are some musicians who still hold that regular barring gives the most satisfactory results if it be frankly recognized that it does not control the rhythmic outline of the music in any sense. Unfortunately the conventional attitude towards the bar is now so deeply rooted that few can free themselves easily from the feeling that a regular flow of accents is postulated by the bars.

On the other hand, the difficulty which is associated with irregular barring is complicated by the fact that the rhythmic outlines of the several voice-parts frequently do not coincide. In the preface of 'The English Madrigal School' I have explained my own method in dealing with this problem. But as to the point in this preface to which Mr. Gardner alludes, I added in the preface of the second edition that 'the bar-lines are intended to indicate the rhythmic outline except when they are over-ridden by accent marks.'

Meanwhile it is important to state that bars were employed by the composers themselves at least as early as the year 1600. This fact has been largely overlooked, because the great bulk of this music has survived only in separate part-books, whether printed or MS., in which the bars never appear. But in their vocal scores composers employed a system of irregular barring, the bars in 'square' time usually being eight minims in length, but varied by lengths of four, six, ten, or twelve minims; in triple time the normal standard of bar was six minims in length, with variations of three and nine. Even so the bar-lines did not control the rhythmic outline with any degree of strictness; nevertheless the true rhythms were much more easily perceived under such conditions.

The principle of irregular barring having been recognised and employed by the late Tudor composers, it seems reasonable that it should be adopted by a modern editor of their music.—Yours, &c.,

EDMUND H. FELLOWES.

P.S.—I may add that Purcell in editing the funeral service of John Parsons followed the principle of irregular barring. The interesting MS. of this score in Purcell's autograph is now in the library of St. Michael's College, Tenbury.

SIR,—Will you allow me to correct a printer's error in my letter in last month's issue? The second line in the extract from Morley's Ballet should read:

Sweet- | heart O | fear not, | . . .

The omission of a syllable has obscured the metre of this line.—Yours, &c.,

'Oakhurst,'
Harrow-on-the-Hill.

HUGH GARDNER.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

ERNEST FORD, F.R.A.M., born 1858, the first Goss scholar at the Royal Academy of Music, composer of an operetta 'Jane Annie' (produced at the Savoy Theatre), and 'The House of Lords' (produced at the Lyric Theatre), and 'Scène Bacchanale' for orchestra, played under Sir Henry Wood at Queen's Hall. His activities included conductorship at the Royal English Opera House (now the Palace Theatre), the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society, and a professorship in singing at the Guildhall School of Music.

WILFRID BRUIN, aged thirty-six, conductor of the South London Philharmonic Society. He will be widely regretted, as all his activities were marked by a generous enthusiasm and high ability, and he was a powerful force in the musical life of his district.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of July, 1859:

NOVELLO'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE OF MUSIC. A New Edition (196 pages), containing all the additions made since October, 1856, is now ready, bound in whole cloth, price 6d.; or, postage-free, 8d.

A MODULATING DICTIONARY, consisting of 552 Modulations, by three intermediate chords from and into the twenty-four major and minor keys; with the return Modulations. Arranged, for immediate reference, by CLEVELAND WIGAN. Price 4s.

FROM THE PREFACE.

"Although this little work is chiefly addressed to young composers and organists, there are occasions when more experienced musicians may perhaps find it of some utility. Extemporaneous 'interludes,' for example, demand considerable self-possession, and the most skilful organist is liable, from indisposition and other causes, to accidents which could hardly occur if the means were before his eyes of instant extrication from any key to which he had wandered."

Musical Contributions.—We take this opportunity of thanking many of our friends for their kindness in offering us musical compositions for publication, but it is right to state that it would be quite inconsistent with our arrangements to entertain any offer of this nature.

HANDEL CHORAL SOCIETY.—The members of this newly-formed society gave a concert in the School-room, at the Foundling Hospital, on the 8th of June. The performance consisted of Van Bree's St. Cecilia's Day, an aria by Mercadante, a part-song by Müller, and Mendelssohn's Athalie, all of which were sung with great precision and effect to a pianoforte accompaniment by Messrs. Callcott and Ganz. It may be observed as an apology for the Handel Society giving a concert without singing a note of Handel's music, that the title is adopted in recognition of the intimate association of Handel with the Foundling Hospital, the intention being to practise all classical choral compositions.

The York Minster organ is undergoing extensive alterations and improvements, by Messrs. Hill & Son, of London, which it is expected will render this a most perfect instrument.

HOXTON-HOUSE LUNATIC ASYLUM.—Mr. J. W. Coventry, organist to this institution, gave a musical entertainment to the inmates on the 27th of May, when the Creation was performed in a most creditable manner by the pupils of his instrumental and vocal classes. The music was listened to throughout with unflagging interest, and proved to be a very great amusement to those whose sources of recreation are necessarily so limited.

Mr. Vasco C. Akeroyd, conductor of the Akeroyd Symphony Concerts at Liverpool, has promised to perform a new British orchestral work at each of his seven concerts next season, and a new British chamber work at each of his four chamber concerts. Compositions should be submitted to the Liverpool branch of the British Music Society (Mr. W. Rushworth, 11, Islington, Liverpool).

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

This is a scheme for providing additional musical facilities for the members of His Majesty's Forces in the 2,600 Huts and Centres of the Y.M.C.A. at home and abroad.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Dr. H. Walford Davies

Hon. Secretary.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac.

Organising Secretary.—Madame Lily Henkel.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Universities House, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.1.

Total received to present date	£	s.	d.
Total received from January 1, 1919	3,943	0	0
Receipts during the month May 11 to June 10, 1919	1,013	0	0
	90	0	0

(a) PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS.

		£	s.	d.
Row,	Church Choir Concert, per
Dumbartonshire	Mr. Thos. H. Allwood ..	13	10	0
Liverpool	Miss A. W. Pritchard,
	Pupils' Concert	10	3	6
London	Madame Bertha Moore,
	O.B.E., Recital at Mrs.
	George Macmillan's ..	8	4	6
Brockley	Miss Edith Lucas,
	L.R.A.M., Pupils'
	Concert	5	12	0
Blackheath	Miss Charlotte Clarke,
	Lecture-recital	0	10	6
Bexhill-on-Sea ..	Madame Helene Gipps,
	Concert	1	16	7
		£39	17	1

(b) THE MONTH'S ORGAN RECITALS.

		£	s.	d.
London	Lyndhurst Road Church,
	Hampstead—Mr. R.
	Goss Custard, Mr.
	Wolstenholme, and Mr.
	G. D. Cunningham, per
	Mr. Norman Carter ..	20	0	0
	Clapton Park Congregational Church—Mr.
	Francis W. Sutton, per
	Mr. William Heath ..	2	0	0
Glasgow	Park Parish Church—Mr.
	J. Purcell Mansfield ..	8	7	0
Bearsden	Kilpatrick Parish Church
	—Mr. James Downie ..	6	14	7
	North U.F. Church, Mr.
	James Downie	5	13	3
		£42	14	10

(c) THE MONTH'S COLLECTIONS AND DONATIONS.

		£	s.	d.
Proceeds of Offertory, Derry Cathedral, per Mr. J. Trimble		5	6	1
Collected by Girls of Form Upper II, of St. Saviour's and St. Olave's School, New Kent Road, per Miss Dora Wright		1	0	0
Prize gained by Metropolitan Academy of Music Junior Orchestra, under conductorship of Miss Daisy Searle		1	0	0
Miss F. Andrews		0	10	0
Miss B. Isaacs		0	2	6
		£7	18	9

The needs in Germany, in the East, in Russia and elsewhere, are very great. It is hoped the summer will see no slackening of effort on the part of musicians at home, on behalf of musicians in the Forces. Organ recitals at seaside places and open-air entertainments are suggested as seasonable means of raising money for the Fund.

ABERDEEN.—The most interesting musical events of the month have been two concerts given on successive evenings—June 5 and 6—by the Queen's Cross Choir, under the directorship of Mr. Willan Swainson. Stanford's 'Revenge' was well sung on both occasions, the remainder of the programmes being miscellaneous. Mrs. Willan Swainson made a welcome reappearance, her violin pieces including Bach's Concerto in E, Dvorák's Indian Canzonette, and Frank Bridge's 'Gondoliera.' Miss Lottie Robertson was an efficient elocutionist, and Mr. Willan Swainson sang some fine songs, including Schubert's 'Erl Kìrg,' Parry's 'And yet I love her,' Ireland's 'The Bells of San Marie,' and Quilter's 'Shakespeare Songs,' in addition to directing the concerts generally.

D

NEW ENGLISH OPERA.

MR. R. SOMERVILLE'S 'ANTOINE.'

Under the direct guidance of Mr. Alfred Van Noorden the Carl Rosa Company is developing its Opera in English policy in the very desirable direction of native examples. The Company's recent visit to the Metropolis at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, though of but one month's duration, was marked not only by crowded houses at each of the eight performances a week, but by the production of two new operas. One was 'Stella Maris,' by the Belgian composer the late M. de Keyser, and the other a British work by Mr. Reginald Somerville. This is a good record, and one that is made all the more notable by the fact that the example of native effort in Mr. Somerville's opera is likely to retain its presence in the repertoire. Mr. Van Noorden is a practical man. He does not present the public with an impossible essay in opera; he gives them something they can take to and admire. And this means the increase of the good repute of English opera.

This is the value of Mr. Somerville's new effort. It is comprehensible in its terms, written with both a knowledge and a sense of the stage and with undoubted feeling. Mr. Somerville, who is his own librettist, has devised an effective working of the miracle by which a blind sailor recovers his sight through the waters of the Holy Well, only to learn of his wife's infidelity represented by her intention to elope with a Parisian lover who will give her all that her poverty-stricken husband denies her. There is a dramatic moment when the husband, now seeing, witnesses her preparations for flight. He says nothing, because of the vow imposed upon him by the village priest, who, having discovered that the blind man had recovered his sight, wishes to save up the 'miracle' for the public celebration of the following day. Fortunately for our peace of mind the wife exercises the privilege of her sex and stays by her blind husband only to find at the proper moment that he sees and knows. Between the blind man and his distress, the querulous wife, the consoling belle mère, the far-sighted priest, the singer-lover, and the Breton village maidens there is plenty of variety. Mr. Somerville depicts each with no small skill, displaying resource and imagination in the process as well as a sound knowledge of contemporary operatic style of the best kind. He writes well for the despairing blind man and equally well for the lover, showing further a sense of the picturesque in his treatment of the other phases of the story. The whole falls gratefully on the ear, and well deserved the enthusiastic approval bestowed upon it by the public. The piece may have its weaknesses—as must every opera based on the foreign model—but it is undoubtedly sound operatic writing and delightfully melodious to boot. Its frequent performance will do good service to the cause of English Opera. With the composer at the conductor's desk the work was well performed. At the hands of Miss Clara Simon as the Wife, Miss Doris Woodhall as the Mother, Mr. Hughes Macklin as the Lover, Mr. Arthur Winckworth as the Priest, and Mr. Kingsley Lark as Antoine, the opera received very effective representation, further aided by good scenery and costumes, and whole-hearted work from band and chorus and everyone concerned.

FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

SUCCESSFUL PROGRESS OF THE POST-WAR SEASON.

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

A change has come over the spirit of the Royal Opera, since the opening night of the post-war season which began in May. The curious operatic manner that marked the very early performances arose from the fact that during the past four years there had been a good deal of opera-giving in London. It was of a particular standard, created by the native artist—in itself a wonderful feat when the conditions are remembered, with a story of its own to be told some day with moral duly appended. But it was not the spirit of Covent Garden; of opera as London best knows it; of opera given by people who have been familiar with opera all their lives, and to whom the art and expression are second nature. Now the old spirit has become re-established, and Covent Garden is itself again.

It was the performance of Verdi's 'Aida,' with Madame Destinnova and Madame Kirkby Lunn, at the end of May, that definitely re-established the level to which the London opera-goer is accustomed. With the aid of Madame Destinnova in good voice, of Madame Kirkby Lunn not in such good voice but as dramatic and as sure as ever, M. Dinh Gilly as an Amonasro of wonderful intensity, M. Huberdeau as a tuneful King, M. Cotreuil as the High Priest, and M. Ulysse Lappas as Radamès, even though he seemed to be rather overwhelmed by his surroundings and incapable of doing all that was expected of him, there was a very fine performance. Signor Mugnone's conducting was a model for this class of opera. He introduced into his reading several points of his own that were in every way of service to a performance which was received with unrestrained enthusiasm. Prior to this eventful night there were many occasions of note. The first was the production in England of Massenet's 'Thérèse,' which had not been heard before. In this, one can trace the sympathetic hand of Sir Thomas Beecham, who knows possibly as well as anyone else how restricted the operatic répertoire has been, and how much it is capable of development in order to be representative. By 'Thérèse' one was not particularly impressed. It was written by the gifted Massenet in one of those moods when he imagined that the cloak of Richard Wagner had fallen upon him, with the result that the balance is bad. His charm of manner is ever present, but had he kept to it and not attempted to be dramatic à la Wagner the world would have been happier. Good work was done in the piece by Miss Leila Megane, a new-comer of great promise, and by M. Alfred Maguenat and M. André Gilly. The story is of the French Revolution, of the Royalists and Republicans of 1793. Those days and their deeds were really dramatic, and do not bear transference to the theatre, and never will until we get to the pitch of realism when the hero or heroine, either or both, are guillotined on the stage coram populo. To complete the bill Leoncavallo's 'I Pagliacci' was given with Miss Mignon Nevada as a very charming and effective Nedda, M. Couzinou as a notably good Tonio, and M. Lappas making his first appearance as Canio, creating something like a furore by his delivery of the monologue. He in fact achieved a success he has, down to date, yet to repeat, since none of the other parts in which he has appeared—including that of Pinkerton in 'Madama Butterfly'—suit him so well.

The next event of note was the revival after many years of Massenet's 'Manon.' The thanks of every lover of opera—not necessarily of Massenet only—are due to those who vouchsafed this act of justice. With all respect to Puccini, who is a genius in his own way, he does not reproduce the spirit of this story as Massenet does. The theme is typically French in spirit as in letter, and none but a Frenchman can reproduce it in music. All the grace of the well-remembered score was reproduced by the performance, for which Sir Thomas Beecham was responsible, and the occasion served to remind us of the good qualities of Madame Edvina, who appeared as Manon. It was a well-graded piece of work that succeeded in all points with the possible exception of the Gavotte, which in my opinion and without any hint of laudi temporis, was sung too heavily. The new tenor, a Belgian, M. Fernand Anseu, who made his first appearance in this opera, at once established himself as an artist of weight. He has a fine, rich voice of the French type—which causes him to be mistaken for a Frenchman—and uses it well. Record should also be made of the work in this opera done by Miss Katharine Arkandy, M. Huberdeau, and M. Maguenat, the last giving an extraordinarily clever piece of characterization as Lescart.

The rest of the operatic story consists of the achievements of various artists in different works, all of them familiar. At their head comes Dame Melba. To the delight of her admirers, to the gratification of those who hold pronounced views on the subject of the interpretation of the music of Gounod, she appeared as Marguerite in 'Faust' and carried everyone away by the brilliance of her singing. One has not heard the Jewel Song sung with such perfection of vocalization for many a year. M. Anseu sang well as Faust, M. Huberdeau was a most genial Devil, Miss Ruby Heyl Siebel, and M. Couzinou, the Valentine, but minus 'Dio possente.' Mr. Albert Coates made his appearance at the conductor's desk on this occasion and achieved much. He clearly knows his orchestra, and keenly appreciates its value. But there are one or two things about the present day 'Faust' the old hand must protest against as showing a tendency to 'hurry up the old thing' by scampering through the Kirmesse scene to the point of incoherence, and by 'cutting' the parts of Valentine and Siebel. One has already seen the King of Thule number slighted (elsewhere), and one wonders how long it will be before the Jewel Song is omitted. But Dame Melba's beautiful version of the part, with its grace of manner and its immense vocal variety, has proved an irresistible attraction to the public, and it has been repeated on many occasions—a triumph for the established singer. For the new-comers there is an equally favourable outlook. Miss Margaret Sheridan, who made her first appearance in 'La Bohème,' promises to become a favourite. She has an excellent soprano voice and responsive temperament. It would be idle to pretend that her singing is perfect, for it is not, but Miss Sheridan's future is in her own hands, and can be shaped as she will by the simple process of steady work. At present her lower notes are inclined to be used too openly—a practice from modern Italy, to which Mr. Thomas Burke is somewhat given. He has appeared several times, adding 'Madama Butterfly,' 'Rigoletto,' and 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia' to his list. The atmosphere round and about Charpentier's 'Louise' has been cleared by its restoration to the bill at Covent Garden, and Madame Edvina has renewed old triumphs, aided to good purpose by M. Anseu, M. Cotreuil, and Madame Bérat. Signor Sammarco has made his reappearance, showing himself to be at his best when 'Il Barbiere' was given. Signor Martinelli has also reappeared, with powers augmented to a degree that gives him the position of the best Italian tenor of the day so far as the present outlook is concerned. He sang finely in 'La Bohème,' and magnificently in 'Madama Butterfly,' giving with Madame Destinnova a memorable performance. Finally he it recorded to their everlasting credit that Miss Rosina Buckman, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Herbert Langley stepped into the breach early in the season and gave an excellent Saturday night performance of 'Madama Butterfly' in English.

GLASGOW ORPHEUS CHOIR.

COMPETITION FOR ORIGINAL CHORAL SETTINGS AND ARRANGEMENTS.

A hundred and forty-eight papers were received. The Council, after referring certain of them to Mr. Ernest Newman for report, has decided to divide the first and second prizes in each class into two equal firsts of £10, and to award two extra prizes of £3 each and six extra prizes of £2 each—a total of £58. The Council begs to thank all the competitors, and to express regret that, owing to the very high standard, so many fine compositions and arrangements have had to go unawarded. It is hoped that the competition will have stimulated an interest in Scottish song and Scottish poetry. In that connection the Council will be pleased to consider settings and arrangements of Scottish subjects at any time, apart from those already dealt with in the present competition, and to award prizes for meritorious work. The prize-winners were as follows:

George Tootell (Kendal)—'The heather.'
Francis George Scott (Glasgow)—'Aye she kaimed her yellow hair.'

ARRANGEMENTS.

W. G. Whittaker (Newcastle)—'The captain's lady.'
E. T. Sweeting (Winchester)—'Pibroch o' Donuil dhu.'

EXTRA PRIZES.

Harold E. Watts (Enfield)—'A Lyke-Wake dirge.'
Rev. S. Gregory Auld (Worcester)—'A Lyke-Wake dirge.'
William H. Harris (Lichfield)—'The heather.'
George Tootell (Kendal)—'The Titans.'
Frederick W. Blacow (Bournemouth)—'Canadian boat-song.'
Purcell J. Mansfield (Paisley)—'The captain's lady,' and 'O saw ye bonnie Lesley.'
Herbert Wiseman (St. Andrew's)—'The Standard on the Braes o' Mar.'
Robert T. Stannard (Uxbridge)—'Pibroch o' Donuil dhu and 'Aye she kaimed her yellow hair.'

THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL.

QUEEN'S HALL, MAY 19-24.

This series of six concerts was doubly important. It was probably the chief incentive to the impatient protests that broke out in the newspapers against classical music and 'Hun-music' generally. This column cannot concern itself with the rights and wrongs of the case, but it can give space for a little retrospect. The Beethoven Festival signalled the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Robert Newman's association with the Queen's Hall Orchestra, and thus it was the coping-stone of a great achievement in building up popular musical taste and appreciation. Beethoven's music was as granite to the builders, and it was fitting, in the eyes of those who can look backward as well as forward, that Beethoven's music should be used in the celebration of their work.

There is no need for detailed description of concerts whereat the music was familiar and the artists well known. The Symphonies were the 'Eroica,' the seventh, the C minor, the Pastoral, the fourth, and the eighth; the Overtures were 'Egmont,' 'Coriolanus,' and 'Leonora' No. 3. Miss Daisy Kennedy played the Violin Concerto; Moiseiwitsch played the 'Emperor' Concerto, and Mr. Lamond the C minor and G major Concertos. The programmes were filled up with works of Bach (four 'Brandenburg' Concertos, and the double Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, played by Miss Irene Scharrer and Miss Myra Hess); Mozart (the B flat Pianoforte Concerto, played by Mr. Leonard Borwick); Schubert, Schumann, Weber, Mendelssohn, and others.

Sir Henry Wood conducted throughout with the enthusiasm and interpretative power that have always been associated with his work.

THE GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL SCHOOL OF MUSIC-DRAMA.

Those who have at any time been interested in the Glastonbury Festival School will hear with pleasure that its activities, which were cut short by the war, have been resumed with the release from the Army of Mr. Rutland Boughton, its musical director, and undoubtedly its moving spirit.

To give some idea of the scope and tendency of this most interesting development it will be necessary first to run briefly over the factors which brought it into being. The idea in the abstract was patriotic in its inspiration. In the early days of the development of the music of Western Europe, England led the way. A school of English music and English music-drama lived and flourished when Italian music was in its infancy, and before the German school existed. But after the good old days of the Elizabethans, it would appear that the palm was wrested from us. At the present moment the opera and music-drama which is most popular with British audiences is foreign in its origin. To reinstate our own country in its old position among the leading musical nations—to recapture some of the inspiration which made its musical achievements great—these are the ideals to which the Glastonbury Festival School aspires.

Practically the idea of founding and developing a school for music-drama grew out of the collaboration of two gifted men—an author and a musician. The late Reginald Buckley wrote an epic, 'Arthur of Britain,' a series of dramas centreing round the English hero-king of legendary fame. Feeling that his work was still incomplete, he sought a composer, and after various vicissitudes found in Rutland Boughton a man after his own heart. To produce their joint work was the next consideration, and to produce it in as perfect and as attractive a form as possible. Both men had at heart the musical ideals briefly outlined above, and it was desired to found a school for the production and development of work such as their own, and for the best expression of national artistic inspiration.

The means by which this project was eventually carried out would make a long story. It is sufficient for the moment to say that it was achieved. Glastonbury, because of its romantic association with the Arthurian legends, was chosen as the centre for the activities of the new School, and because it was considered, to quote Rutland Boughton himself, that 'a nation's most vivid life ought to be concentrated in the country, where men are most in touch with the mystic and creative forces of the world.'

The year 1913 saw the production of a part of 'The birth of Arthur,' one of the 'Arthur of Britain' series, which was generally successful for its artistic insight and the striking originality and daring displayed in its production. In the years that followed, up to the time when Mr. Boughton was called up (1916), much had been done. Besides 'The Round Table' (Buckley and Boughton), 'The Immortal Hour'—Fiona McLeod's beautiful poem, and probably Boughton's greatest artistic success—such works as Gluck's 'Iphigenia in Tauris,' Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas,' the old English morality-play, 'Everyman,' and (here we come back to modern times), Edgar L. Bainton's 'Oithona' and Clarence Raybould's music-drama 'The Sumida River,' were produced. That the work being accomplished is one that should count in the future is testified to by the fact that it has the sympathy and support of such men as Sir Thomas Beecham (President of the School), Sir Edward Elgar, George Bernard Shaw, &c.

The School reopened in the early part of this year with an Easter holiday term, a few concerts, and performances of original ballets and dances. The Summer term should see, among other things, the revival of 'The Round Table,' 'The Immortal Hour,' and 'The Sumida River.' During the Easter term the classes included a course of Eurhythmics, based on the Jaques-Dalcroze system, and another of Hellenic dancing on the lines of the work done by Margaret Morris. There were also the interesting classes for scenic decoration and costume-making, the presiding genius being Christina Walshe. Her work in this respect has been declared by the critics to be on a par with that of Gordon Craig, Reinhardt, and Granville Barker. It certainly is original and attractive.

It is obvious to anyone who knows anything of the work of the Glastonbury Festival School that every influence which counts in the artistic world, both of yesterday and to-day, is being brought to bear on it, yet the School retains an individuality all its own. It is to be hoped that one of its immediate objectives—viz., the erecting of the long-desired National Theatre at Glastonbury, which is to be a Temple of Art especially adapted to the work being produced—will be realised in the near future. Whether this is indeed the beginning of a great renaissance in British music-drama and its allied arts only time can prove; but the sincerity and true artistic zeal with which the work is being carried on augurs well for its future.

D. E. L. S.

'IL CODICE 59.'

A RE-DISCOVERED AUTOGRAPH SCORE OF PALESTRINA.

To the meticulous research of Monsignor Raffaele Cassimiri, the present accomplished Maestro of the Lateran Arch Basilica in Rome, is due the re-discovery of a most important autograph score of Palestrina, a score which had for long lain hidden in the musical archives of the Lateran, and which is labelled 'Il Codice 59.' Monsignor Cassimiri is to be warmly congratulated not only on his great 'find,' but also on his publication of the whole Codex of ninety-four folios with facsimiles and full descriptive analyses extending to about 160 pages. The publication of this Codex—beautifully printed by the Vatican Press, Rome—makes accessible to students the contents of this long-lost folio, consisting of lamentations, motets, hymns, &c., all in Palestrina's own handwriting. Monsignor Cassimiri shows by numerous quotations that the late Canon Haberl was not a competent editor, and he amply corroborates the severe strictures of Dr. Terry (Musical Times, August, 1915) as to the inept methods of 'editing' adopted by the German Cecilian school—in fact, Haberl's 'tinkering' of Palestrina is here shown up ruthlessly. Musicologists will feel grateful to Monsignor Cassimiri for his scholarly volume.

W. H. G. F.

We have received No. 3 of the British Music Society's Bulletin. It opens with a characteristic paper by Bernard Shaw, entitled 'Starved Arts mean Low Pleasures.' There is much that is worthy of comment in it, and we hope to return to it next month. The Bulletin contains also notes as to the Society's doings. These pamphlets are well worthy of preservation. A bound set of them will be a valuable addition to the musician's library.

MUSIC IN LONDON WORKING GIRLS' CLUBS.

Convincing evidence of the excellent musical work in London Working Girls' Clubs was forthcoming at Queen's Hall on June 17, when a choir drawn from over thirty clubs sang. The concert was the third Festival of its kind, and it is hoped to make the event triennial. The following report is from the Morning Post:

At a Thanksgiving Festival given at Queen's Hall last night, a choir of 600 voices from the London Girls' Clubs sang some interesting selections of choral pieces under the direction of Mr. Harvey Grace. Unison and part-songs, as well as Welsh and Somerset folk-songs, were given in excellent style, and in some modern examples by Elgar, Walford Davies, and Stanford, the choir's work was of good quality, in tone and precision, especially in the unaccompanied numbers. The orchestra from Queen Alexandra's House, conducted by Mr. T. F. Dunhill, also contributed some enjoyable performances during the evening, playing Sir Hubert Parry's Suite for strings, Grainger's 'Mock Morris,' and a Canon for strings by F. Purcell Warren (a composer who was killed in action in 1915), which proved a very effective little piece. Some solos by Mr. Gervase Elwes and Miss Maude Gold, a clever violinist, also added to the interest of the concert.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

An interesting chamber concert was given by the students on May 28. The programme, which was an exceptionally well-varied one, included two movements from a Sonata by Böellmann for violoncello and pianoforte, admirably played by Lilly Phillips and Lillian Southgate, Hasselmans's 'Conte de Noel' for harp (Florence Edgcombe), two Dance Measures for violin by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, played by Gladys Chester, recitations given by Phyllis Bradley and Desirée MacEwan, and three MS. songs of more than ordinary interest and character by Arthur Sandford (scholar), admirably sung by Thelma Howarth. The other items were pianoforte solos, songs, vocal duets, and part of Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins and string orchestra. The solo portions were played by Jean Pognet and Cecil White, the conductor being Mr. Spencer Dyke.

The members of the Dramatic Class gave two excellent performances of Sheridan's play 'The Rivals' on Friday and Saturday, June 6 and 7. There was a different cast each evening. The whole of the arrangements were under the able direction of Mr. Acton Bond, and the performances reflected the greatest credit upon all who took part in them.

An orchestral concert was given on Friday, June 20, at Queen's Hall. The programme included a Symphonic Poem (MS.), 'The Seekers,' by Paul Kerby (student), a Fantasic Waltz (MS.), 'Cinderella at the Ball,' by Eva Pain (Josephine Troup scholar), the Ballad of the Death of Saul, 'Wilt thou take vengeance' ('King Saul'), Parry, Pianoforte Concertos by Liszt and Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Violin Concertos by Mendelssohn and Elgar.

The annual distribution of prizes will take place on Friday afternoon, July 18, at the Central Hall, Westminster. H.R.H. The Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, K.G., the President of the Royal Academy, has kindly consented to distribute the awards.

A new scholarship, called the Sisselle Wray Scholarship, has recently been founded by Mrs. Wray in memory of her daughter. Candidates must be British-born subjects between the ages of seventeen and twenty years. The first competition will take place in September, and will be for soprano vocalists.

The Matthew Phillimore prize for male students of the pianoforte, competed for on Wednesday, June 11, was awarded to Leslie H. England, Egerton Tidmarsh being highly commended and Leo Livens commended.

On Thursday, June 12, Miss Beatrice Harrison and Miss May Mukle acted as judges for the Piatti prize for violoncello playing, and awarded it to Hildegard Arnold, Nora L. Parker being highly commended and Peter Muscant commended.

London Concerts.

ROYAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The 107th season of the Society came to an end on May 29, when Major Geoffrey Tovey again conducted. After a sombre beginning with Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, the programme assumed romantic life which culminated in the gorgeous barbarities of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite, 'Scheherazade.' Well as the music plays its part as an impulse to choreography, it became clear that it loses much in the theatre; for familiarity with the 'Scheherazade' of the Alhambra does not prepare the listener for such vividness and so direct an appeal as the Suite made in the concert-room. A revival of Delius's tone-poem 'In a summer garden' was a timely reminder of a composer whose individuality and rich imagination entitle him to more attention than he is generally receiving. The soloists of the concert were Miss Myra Hess, who played Rachmaninoff's second Pianoforte Concerto, and Miss Olga Haley, who sang Chausson's 'Poème de l'amour et de la mer.'

Dr. Arthur Somervell's new Clarinet Quintet, produced in the course of Miss Marjorie Dunn's chamber concert at Wigmore Hall on May 19, is a refined and pleasing work in the manner of a generation ago.

Some ensemble playing of the highest order was heard at Wigmore Hall on May 20, when the London Chamber Concert Society continued its series. It was provided by the Misses d'Aranyi, Mr. Tomlinson, and Mr. Arthur Williams in the G minor Quartet of Glière.

A Fantasia Appassionata for pianoforte Trio, written by Mr. J. L. Reason, brought forward by Mr. Isidore de Lara at Steinway Hall on May 21, gained well-deserved approval. The same programme included a Violin Sonata by Mr. J. R. Heath. On May 28 Mr. de Lara devoted his programme to British works that had been heard before, the most worthy being Frank Bridge's three 'Idylls' for string quartet.

On May 22, Madame Donalda, who had not been heard in London for over five years, made her reappearance at Æolian Hall. The beauty and delicacy of her singing gave unbounded pleasure to a large audience.

The String quartet in C, by Norman O'Neill, that was produced at Æolian Hall on May 24 by the London String Quartet, proved a work of high individual attraction. Its manner is refreshing and its workmanship full of interest.

A series of concerts devoted to old Italian music was opened at Wigmore Hall on May 26, the artists being Miss C. Fino-Savio (vocalist), Miss A. Mazzuchelli (violinist), and Mr. N. Benvenuti (pianist). The music, which was largely unfamiliar, included two hitherto unknown songs of Bassani, and a Violin Sonata of Veracini that has only lately been printed. The concerts were continued on June 2 and June 5.

A Violin Sonata by J. B. McEwen was included in the programme of Miss Nancy Phillips's recital at Æolian Hall on May 26.

Mr. Herbert Heyner demonstrated to a large audience at Æolian Hall on May 27 that he is an accomplished singer. Three picturesque songs by Cui, and a well-chosen British group, were the features of his programme.

Elgar's Violin Sonata was played in an individual manner by Mr. John Dunn at Æolian Hall on May 27. The same programme included Mackenzie's 'Pibroch.'

Miss Edith Abraham employed orchestral accompaniment for her violin recital at Wigmore Hall on May 28, and made good use of her opportunities by a performance of Elgar's Concerto, in which she showed fluency and expressive power.

A new Pianoforte Quintet by Cyril Scott, characteristically bizarre, elaborate, and pleasing, was given by the Philharmonic String Quartet and Mr. Moiseiwitsch at Wigmore Hall on May 30. Its individuality was so striking, and at the same time much of its appeal so elusive, that a re-hearing would be welcome.

An excellent concert was given at Æolian Hall on May 30 by the Kinsey String Quartet, which showed British chamber-music in a good light by performing Frank Bridge's String Quartet in G minor. Spanish musical impressionism was represented by a three-movement work of Turina entitled 'Scène Andalouse,' written for string quartet, viola, and pianoforte.

On May 31 the London String Quartet celebrated its hundredth 'Popular' Concert at Æolian Hall, and chose as a representative British work for the occasion, Vaughan Williams's cycle 'On Wenlock Edge.' The instrumental works were Debussy's Quartet, an unambitious Serenade in C for Strings by Stenhammar, and Dorlay's 'Avec une folle bien-aimée,' for string quartet, flute, and pianoforte.

Special reference must be made to the recitals of Mr. Cortôt at Wigmore Hall on May 31 and June 14, for they finally established him in the eyes of London audiences as one of the world's great pianists and unequalled in his peculiar characteristics. Wherever pianoforte music appeals by texture, picturesqueness, and romance—and a wide field is included therein—M. Cortôt is a wonderful interpreter.

Somervell's 'Maud' song-cycle was given by Mr. Gregory Stroud at Æolian Hall on June 2.

At Æolian Hall on June 3 Miss Olivia Etherington-Smith sang a well-chosen group of British songs that included Parry's 'The Maiden,' Ireland's 'I have twelve oxen,' and 'Over the sea,' a setting of Christina Rossetti by Martin Shaw.

A new orchestra organized by M. Otscharkoff out of an ensemble class at Eastbourne and strengthened with professional 'leads' was heard at Central Hall on June 3 in a well-chosen programme, which was carried out in excellent style. Massenet's Overture to 'Phédre' made a dignified and unfamiliar opening. Miss Marjorie Hayward played Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto.

At the same Society's concert on June 3, the Misses Harrison and Mr. Hamilton Harty played Ravel's Pianoforte Trio, and, with M. Tinayre as vocalist, assisted in carrying out an interesting programme in a manner few could equal.

Ireland's 'The Island Spell,' York Bowen's Romance in F, and pieces by Corder and Bax, were among the items in a well-chosen programme given by Miss Joyce Ansell (pianist) at Wigmore Hall, on June 4.

Miss Marie Dare (violincellist) played the Sonata in G of Eccles at Æolian Hall on June 4, and added pieces by Goossens and Frank Bridge.

The sixth concert of the Alsace-Lorraine musical Festival, held at Steinway Hall on June 10, brought three works under notice. These were a Violin Sonata by M. J. Erb, a Poème for violin by Henry Lutz, and—of chief interest—a Pianoforte Quintet by Gabriel Pierné.

A new Sonata in A minor, by Mr. James Friskin, played by Miss Kate Friskin (the composer's sister) at Steinway Hall on June 12, had all the qualities that have previously distinguished Mr. Friskin's work—abundant invention, sustained strength and musicianship, and a character that is not derived from any foreign source. The programme included also Parry's 'Shulbrede Tunes.'

Ireland's pianoforte work, 'The Island Spell,' was a feature of Miss Chilton-Griffin's programme at Wigmore Hall on June 12. On the same day, at Æolian Hall, Miss Fanny Davies included Ernest Walker's Variations on a Northern Theme and other British works in her programme.

Mr. Johnston-Douglas, a capable singer who was heard at Wigmore Hall on June 13, chose his programme well. Bantock's 'The celestial weaver,' Ivor Gurney's 'The fiddler of Dooney,' and 'The penny whistle,' Harold Boulton's 'Mollie Lee,' and Ford's 'Faire, sweet, cruel,' were interesting items in his English group.

A welcome opportunity of re-hearing Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet was afforded by the London String Quartet and Mr. William Murdoch at Æolian Hall on June 14. The impression of rich romantic beauty and unexpected moods carried away from the first performance was heightened. The slow movement again made a deep appeal. Brahms's String Sextet opened the programme.

Violin Concertos in D by Brahms and Hamilton Harty were played by Miss Katie Goldsmith at Queen's Hall on June 14, with accompaniments provided by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood. Mr. Harty's work is one that should be kept before the public.

Durham and Oxford Universities have lately honoured themselves by conferring the Degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, Charles Macpherson and Ralph Vaughan Williams respectively.

Messrs. Hawkes & Son offer prizes of £50, £30, £20 and £15 for short melodious instrumental pieces, the competitors to be British.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

The scheme for a Permanent Birmingham Orchestra is rapidly advancing, and there is every prospect that the matter will soon be a fait accompli. It is contemplated forming an orchestra of seventy instrumentalists, for the most part local players. The season is to extend over thirty weeks, from October to May, and it is proposed to have popular Sunday and Saturday evening concerts as well as a series of twelve Wednesday Symphony Concerts in addition to a number of evening concerts devoted to light music followed by dancing. A suggestion has also been made by the Education Committee, and favourably received by the committee in charge of the scheme, that free concerts for the children of the schools should be arranged. The annual cost of the undertaking for a season of thirty weeks, including the management, is put at £8,500. Deducting the revenue (£6,000) reasonably to be anticipated from the concerts and engagements of the orchestra, it is estimated there would be a deficiency of £2,500, one half of which, it is suggested, should be covered by a City Council grant, and the other half guaranteed privately over a period of five years, after which it might be expected that the undertaking would be self-supporting. Prof. Granville Bantock expressed his opinion on the subject of appointing a permanent conductor. Naturally he said there would be visiting conductors for the Symphony Concerts, but for some of the popular concerts local conductors and the permanent conductor would be relied upon. There was pretty general agreement as to the most suitable appointment for the permanent conductorship, but it would be premature to make any statement just now. The whole subject will be brought before the City Council this month.

The three chamber concerts given at the Royal Society of Artists' Gallery, by Mr. Percival Hodgson and Miss Joan Willis terminated on June 4, and judging by the artistic success achieved and by the support given they will no doubt be continued next season. The performers were Mr. Percival Hodgson (violin), Mr. Charles W. Bye (second violin), Mr. Paul Beard (viola), Miss Joan Willis (violinello), and Mr. J. A. Beard (second viola). The vocalists included Miss Alice Vaughan and Mr. Aubrey Millward. The solo pianist was Mr. Michael Mullinar.

Of special interest to all musicians was the first performance at Birmingham of Elgar's String Quartet at the Royal Society of Artists' Gallery, on May 31, by the Catterall Quartet. The work made a great impression, and it was at once apparent that the performers were in thorough sympathy with Elgar's erudite work, giving a truly inspired and masterly reading, grandiose in tone-quality. A week previously Mr. Catterall and Mr. Hamilton Harty gave a virile and noble interpretation of Elgar's Sonata for violin and pianoforte, Op. 82, in E. The same work was also given here by Mr. Percival Hodgson and Mr. Michael Mullinar in quite efficient manner.

The nineteenth annual Town Hall concert in connection with the Midland Institute School of Music was given on June 4, under Prof. Granville Bantock's direction. The orchestra numbered eighty-two performers, in which all the teachers of the various instruments took part, an altogether representative and excellent rank and file. The purely orchestral items were restricted to Elgar's 'Imperial March' and Brian's 'Festal Dance,' the latter being scored for a large orchestra including the usual strings and wood-wind, reeds, four horns, three trumpets, three trombones, tuba, drums, glockenspiel, triangle, tambourine, side-drum, bass-drum, cymbals, and pianoforte. Prof. Granville Bantock gave a vivid and impressive performance of both pieces, in which was revealed the steady progress achieved by the Institute orchestral class. Two of the pianoforte students exhibited pianistic skill in Rubinstein's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, No. 4 (first movement only), and in Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, Op. 31. The performers were Miss Emily Ellis and Miss Cecilia Yeoman. An attractive feature of the concert was Miss Nellie Woodward's remarkably clever interpretation on the fine Town Hall organ of Widor's Toccata in F from the Symphony No. 5. This performer's mastery of the instrument was quite astounding, and her playing was received with great and well-deserved enthusiasm. Mr. Howard Rutter, the talented violinist, was heard in Bach's Violin Concerto in A minor, played with flawless technique and in scholarly manner. The solo vocalists were Miss Frances Petty, Miss Dorothy Showell, and Mr. Sydney Lewis.

It was a great mistake on the part of the promoters to give a concert at the Town Hall on Whit-Sunday evening, although its object was a charitable one, viz., to imburse the Blinded Soldiers and Sailors After-care fund (St. Dunstan's). Judging by the poor attendance it is doubtful if much benefit will accrue to the charity. The chief attraction was the Peace Pageant Band, conducted by John Wilson (late of H.M. First Life Guards). In addition to the band a number of songs were contributed by Miss Alice Robinson, Miss Nancy Guest, and Mr. Sidney Stoddard. The solo pianist and accompanist was Miss Cecilia Yeoman.

The great Peace Pageant (also in aid of the Blinded Soldiers and Sailors After-care fund) which took place during Whit-week at Calthorpe Park proved a brilliant success. The master-mind directing the vast operations was Mr. Leolyn Hart, who was also the writer and inventor of the Pageant. To him all credit is due for the magnificent and successful way everything was arranged. The performers numbered two thousand five hundred, and the wonderful spectacle presented was divided into five episodes, opening with the singing of 'Land of Hope and Glory' by a representative choir of eight hundred voices, under the direction of Mr. Appleby Matthews. The choir was constantly requisitioned. There was also music throughout the Pageant from the special band under the direction of Mr. John Wilson and from the smaller Khaki band which accompanied the military episodes.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company once more occupied the stage of the Prince of Wales' Theatre for three weeks, starting their operatic season on Monday, June 16. Two novelties were produced, 'Stella Maris' and 'Antoine,' and for the first time here Puccini's 'La Tosca' was given by this Company. Much appreciated was the revival of Ambrose Thomas's 'Mignon,' otherwise the repertory for the first fortnight comprised such old favourites as 'Faust,' 'Madame Butterfly,' 'Tales of Hoffmann,' 'Carmen,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'La Bohème,' 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and 'Pagliacci' and the ever-popular 'Trovatore.' Further reference and comment on the season will be given in the August number of the Musical Times.

BOURNEMOUTH.

Beyond the summer series of Symphony Concerts, which are far less ambitious in scope than the winter series, there has been little orchestral music here of interest to record this month.

The first and second of the Symphony Concerts, given on May 14 and 21 respectively, were extremely pleasurable, the programmes being almost up to the standard of those presented during the winter months, but more recently there has been a slight falling-off, when some compositions of small attractiveness have been rescued from oblivion. Beethoven's eighth Symphony and that by Kalinnikov in G minor are works that will strengthen any programme, and possibly the same may be said, with reservations, of Sterndale Bennett's G minor Symphony, but the example catalogued as No. 8 in E flat by Haydn, and such compositions as Gade's 'Recollections of Ossian' Overture, Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques' Suite, Hartmann's 'Vikings' Overture, and even Schumann's 'Dreams' (anglice) arranged for string orchestra, are more in keeping with concerts of the popular promenade type than with those boasting of the appellation 'Symphony.' We are fully aware that during the summer the time for rehearsal is very limited, necessitating the exclusion of any works of a complex nature, but we have yet to learn that recourse to lighter and less exacting compositions renders unavoidable the resurrection of such musty specimens as the aforesaid Gade and Hartmann Overtures et hoc genus omne. On June 11, however, compensation was forthcoming in the shape of Schubert's ever-fragrant 'Unfinished' Symphony, in the playing of which there were some very charming moments. In fact, at most of the concerts the orchestral playing has been exceedingly good, and if more works of greater value had been presented there would have been little call for criticism.

The restrictions as to rehearsals referred to above were forcibly demonstrated on May 28, when Miss Ethel Perress, who had been announced to play Liszt's second Pianoforte Concerto, was prevented from fulfilling her undertaking owing to lack of time for adequate rehearsal, the pianist having instead to substitute some pianoforte solos. At this concert Miss Margaret Perry, a young ex-scholar of the Bournemouth Conservatoire of Music and a pupil of Mr. Hamilton Law, the principal of that thriving institution, sang the charming air, 'My heart is weary,' from Goring Thomas's 'Nadeshda,' with orchestra, her mellow voice and expressive interpretation being so much appreciated that an encore was demanded. At the first concert of the season Miss Maud Agnes Winter was heard in Kimsy-Korsakov's somewhat anæmic and ineffective Pianoforte Concerto. The performer's reading was not a very striking one; she has been heard to much greater advantage on former occasions. The following week's concert had one outstanding feature—Miss Daisy Kennedy's playing in the Beethoven Concerto. This clever violinist was at the top of her form, her rendering of this fine work being of the highest order. On June 4 Mr. Hend Wolters, principal 'cellist of the Orchestra, again furnished proof of his artistic temperament through the medium of a rather matter-of-fact Concerto by Lindner. Finally, Mr. Gordon Bryan, a talented pianist who has appeared at the Winter Gardens on several occasions, was very successful in the delightful Grieg Concerto, his playing being noteworthy for its tastefulness and ease.

BRISTOL.

Mr. Cecil J. Sharp gave a highly-interesting address on the concluding day of the Mid-Somerset Musical Festival at Bath on May 17, where a number of Bristol competitors were successful. Mr. Sharp is the hon. director of the English Folk-Dance Society. He lectured on 'Folk Songs from the Appalachian Mountains,' and his lecture was remarkably fascinating, as it showed an extraordinary recovery of old songs. In the vocal illustrations he was assisted by Miss Karpeles, who was his companion and colleague on his journey of research. Mr. Sharp said the folk of the Appalachian Mountains seemed to be reproducing the same kind of life that was lived in England a century and a-half or two centuries ago. The people, although quite unlettered, were exceedingly musical, and sang some most charming songs. During the three years (1916-18) which Mr. Sharp spent among them he took down the music of no fewer than 1,700 songs, whilst Miss Karpeles recorded in shorthand the words of the songs handed down from an unknown ancestry. Some of the typical songs were sung by the lecturer and Miss Karpeles, without accompaniment; and although only the five notes of the scale were used, as compared with our own scale, the singing of them proved interesting to the large audience, comprising most of the leading teachers of the district, and especially those who make folk-dance and song their particular study. The lecturer expressed hope and an opinion that all these songs would be published in due course, although he confessed that it would be too great a task to be accomplished in his own lifetime. Whilst among the Appalachian Mountains Mr. Sharp received invaluable help from Harvard University, and he has left with the University authorities useful notes of reference so that—whether on the American side of the Atlantic or on the European—the result of his monumental work will not be lost.

A very happy reunion of members of the Harmonic Male-Voice Choir, one of Bristol's progressive bodies of musicians, took place during the month at Stuckey's, to welcome home over thirty members who had been away on service. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Jenkins, the enthusiastic conductor and his wife, received a wedding-gift, comprising a case of cutlery and a silver fruit-basket, and a great tribute was paid to Mr. Jenkins's work for the Society and for music. A very delightful musical programme followed.

One of the features of the month's music was a recital at Victoria Rooms by Mr. William Guidott, a baritone of fine tone and range, a resident of London, invalided from the Navy. He gave a most artistic interpretation of a classical selection—not of the heavy order, but quite out of the sphere of the ordinary concert programme. It included excerpts from Massenet's 'Roi de Lahore,' Debussy's 'Pelléas,' Schumann, Georges, Moret, and Rachmaninoff, and selections from the modern English school, among them a new dramatic song, 'Rhapsody' by Mr. Herbert Parsons, the West of England Chopin exponent, who, along with Mr. Percy Lewis (the 'cellist), also contributed to a delightful evening.

Bristol Cathedral Old Choristers' Association had its seventh annual Festival on May 18, a service at the Cathedral and a reunion at the Royal Hotel, the Bishop presiding, forming part of the scheme. Mr. John Barratt, in toasting the 'Old Choristers,' said that he was admitted to the Cathedral choir in 1845—seventy-four years ago!

Bristol is very poorly served in the matter of bands, a reason perhaps being that public support is of very little monetary value: but the band at the Zoological gardens and Mr. Sydney Jones's band on the Durdham Downs plateau, have been well patronised since their opening for the season.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

Only two concerts worth recording have taken place in Torquay Pavilion. On May 28 Mr. Barry Squire (violinist), who was for some time leader of the former Pavilion orchestra, gave a recital with the assistance at the pianoforte of Mr. Harold Samuel. Sonatas played were the 'Kreutzer' and the César Franck, and Mr. Barry Squire played music by Pugnani-Kreisler, and Beethoven. His brother, Mr. W. H. Squire, played 'cello music by Boccherini and arrangements of Schubert's songs; Mr. Samuel played Poldini's 'Poupée Valsante.' The three instrumentalists collaborated in trios by Frank Bridge and Tchaikovsky, and Miss Hilda Blake sang songs by Puccini, Henschel, and Liza Lehmann. On the first Wednesday in June sonatas by Rubinstein and Grieg for 'cello and pianoforte were played by Mlle. Fernande Kufferath and Mr. F. Stuart Young, and the 'cellist displayed great proficiency in music by Popper, Davidoff ('La source'), and Jarnefeldt. Miss Muriel Michell was the vocalist.

An interesting evidence of the survival in Devon of the spirit of mediæval England is the revival of a Miracle Play Society at Kelly, with Miss Mary E. Kelly as guiding spirit. On May 29 three performances were given of a Biblical play, 'Joseph,' written by Miss Kelly, beautiful in construction and dramatic in representation of the story. The play was introduced and rounded off by the singing of appropriate verses from the Psalms, the Testament of Joseph, and the Book of Genesis, rendered in plainsong by a choir of female voices under the direction of the Rev. Greville Cooke. The simplicity of the entire performance was thoroughly in accord with the spirit of old miracle and morality plays, and served the desired purpose of stimulating thought and interest.

A pageant, 'The home-comers,' given at Bridwell on Whit-Monday, depicted in five scenes the return of warriors and various epochs in the country's history, and songs, choruses, and dances provided a conspicuous feature. Specially may be mentioned the song, chorus, and country dance in the Waterloo scene. Mr. R. Bareham (Tiverton) was the musical conductor, and the band of the R.M.L.I., Plymouth Division, was a great factor in the success of the performance.

Supported by Mr. E. J. Labbett's orchestra, two operatic performances at Bideford on May 14 included scenes and music from 'A midsummer night's dream,' 'Macbeth,' 'Hamlet,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' and 'Merchant of Venice,' the Ladies' Grecian Choir giving the musical numbers.

Seaton Operatic Society, with an excellent orchestra, and conducted by Mr. E. Brokenshire, gave three performances on May 23 and 24 of the opera, 'Dogs of Devon'; and at Totnes on June 4 performances of 'The Sorcerer' and 'Pirates of Penzance' were successfully given by Mrs. Herring-Mason's Ashburton Operatic Society, with Miss Fifine de la Côte as prima donna.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company occupied Plymouth Theatre Royal for the week beginning May 12 without reproducing any but well-tried favourites.

The only choral event for the month has been supplied by the enterprising Winkleigh Choral Society, which sang 'The Banner of St. George' and part-songs on May 29.

Mr. J. F. Lane conducted the choir of fifty voices, and a string orchestra, the principals being Miss M. Cowle, Mrs. M. Fothergill (Exeter), and Mr. S. J. Bishop (Exeter Cathedral).

Before Torquay and District Organists' Association, at Torquay, on May 17, Mr. Harold Rhodes, organist of St. John's, read a paper, 'Wagner twenty years hence,' with illustrations on the pianoforte, and Mr. Cyril Church (Crediton) gave a recital in St. Andrew's Church.

An organ recital was given at Northtawton on May 21, by Dr. Bussell, with vocal and violin music. Friends from Crediton gave vocal and instrumental music at Kennerleigh on May 25, when Mr. C. G. Church, organist of Crediton Parish Church, gave a recital. The Rev. F. W. Bodger, at his organ recital at Lynmouth on May 30, played Bach's Prelude and Fugue in E minor, and Marches by Smart and Gounod. Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor were played by Mr. F. G. Bradford at Exmouth (St. Andrew's), on May 8, followed by Borowski's Sonata in A minor, and pieces by Guilmant and Lemaigre; Mr. S. H. Stowell played violin music.

CORNWALL.

Sticker is a tiny Cornish village on the hills above St. Austell, and it is to its credit that it maintains a choral Society of its own, with Mr. W. Brennand Smith as conductor. On June 5 a very artistic and enjoyable performance was given of 'The May Queen' with violin (Mr. Hinchcliffe), pianoforte (Mr. Horace Crocker), and organ (Mr. W. Hancock) accompaniment. The choral singing was tuneful and bright, and evidenced keen interest and good training.

Preparatory to taking part in the Cornwall Music Competitions, Marazion and District Ladies' Choir gave a concert on June 5. The test-pieces for last year and this year's competitions were excellently sung, comprising 'Early Spring,' 'There is a garden,' 'Spring-time,' 'Sir Eglamore,' and trios were 'Absent' and 'Rest thee on this mossy pillow.'

An excellent rendering of the operetta 'Pearl, the fisher-maid' was given at Hayle on June 4, under the direction of Mrs. P. R. Hosking.

Mr. George Sellers (St. John's, Penzance) gave organ recitals on the recently renovated organ in Perranuthnoe Church on June 12, and the choir sang anthems and choruses. An organ recital at Marazion on May 25 was given by Mr. W. Jacobs, assisted by St. Ives Quartet. An organ and violin recital was given at Roskear on June 12 by Mr. H. C. Tonking (Newquay) and Mrs. G. B. Hooper (Camborne).

LIVERPOOL.

Thanks to the Crane Hall Wednesday afternoon concerts we have not been without opportunities for hearing music worthy of the name even during the dog days. Notable was Mr. Cyril Scott's second visit on May 21, when he played several of his pieces in lighter vein, with general acceptance. These included examples of delicate and individual charm in his 'Lotusland,' 'Sea Marge,' 'Caprice Chinois,' and 'Butterfly Waltz.' In these miniatures, Mr. Scott's art is indeed captivating and unexcelled in its way. But similar appreciation, on a first hearing, is by no means a foregone conclusion in the case of his Sonata, Op. 66, which is a spun-out work of inordinate length, with little attractive in its constructive modernity. Moments of beauty are all too rare and transient. In two groups of his songs Mr. Scott was again fortunate in having Miss Astra Desmond as his interpreter. The immediate interest and charm of 'Invocation,' 'A Birthday,' 'A Tyrolean Evening,' and others, typical of the composer's individual song-melodies and harmonic inventiveness in the accompaniments, so deftly played by Mr. Scott himself, were completed by the first performance of two quaintly-original songs from the Chinese—'In Absence,' and 'Alone.'

In Crane Hall, on June 4, Mr. Anderson Tyrer gave brilliant performances in the Grieg and Tchaikovsky Pianoforte Concertos, in which a compressed orchestral accompaniment was well played on a second pianoforte by Mr. G. J. Freeman. Mr. Tyrer is an artist of consummate technical skill, in whom vitality and vivacity are combined with a fresh temperament and sense of atmosphere. He especially showed real expression and tender feeling in the tragic beauty of the slow movement of the Grieg Concerto. Two singers—Miss Dyson (contralto) and Mr. Riddell Hunter (baritone)—contributed acceptable vocal relief. Mr. Hunter's range of styles and artistic singing were again noteworthy.

The perennial freshness of the Gilbert and Sullivan masterpieces, familiar as household words, was again shown by the successful performances by the D'Oyly Carte Company, which delighted large audiences in the Royal Court Theatre during a three weeks' season from May 19. Mr. Billington is, alas, no more, but the Company included such prime favourites as Messrs. Leo Sheffield and H. A. Lytton, inimitable in their respective rôles. Mr. Walter Hann was director of an adequate band and chorus. Another popular organization, the Allington-Charsley Opera Company, conducted by Mr. Harrison Frewin, has been successful in a round of familiar operas performed in the Shakespeare Theatre.

Under Mr. J. E. Matthews the Oxtou and Claughton Orchestral Society, a large and worthy combination of professional and amateur players, gave a successful concert in Birkenhead Town Hall on May 24, when the magnificent pianoforte playing of Mr. Frederick Dawson in Tchaikovsky's Pianforte Concerto was alertly supported by the orchestra, which was also heard in the 'Meistersingers' Overture and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. The vocalist was Mr. J. C. Brien, who sang very well in the Prologue to 'Pagliacci.'

A beautiful memorial window to a deeply-regretted young lady, Miss Helena Hays McCullagh, was recently unveiled in the Belvedere School for Girls, Princes Park. In its noble design and exquisite workmanship the window is one upon which the artist (Mr. H. G. Hiller, of Liverpool) no less than the subscribers may well be congratulated. It is a worthy memorial of one whose personal qualities and musical attainments had endeared her to a wide circle outside the Philharmonic Society at whose concerts she was regarded as an unexcelled accompanist.

The Philharmonic Society is as usual looking ahead in making its arrangements for next season. At the first concert, on October 28, Mr. Busoni will conduct, and also play, and Mr. Albert Coates has been engaged as conductor at two concerts. M. Pierné, with Cortôt as solo pianist, will appear on November 25, and it is hoped that Sir Thomas Beecham and Sir Henry Wood may find it possible and accept engagements. The concert on January 13 will be choral (no orchestra), and on this occasion Mr. Ernest Bryson's unaccompanied 'Drum Taps' will be performed here for the first time.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

In striking contrast to its policy during the earlier seasons a few years ago, it now pleases the Beecham management to ignore applications for Press facilities, so comment on the five weeks' season just concluding cannot be made. The novelties mentioned in the June issue for first performance in Whit-Week, and the concluding week, were all withdrawn, and money returned. In common fairness to the management it must be recorded that never before has this happened, and it cannot be matter for surprise if people begin to wonder whether Sir Thomas is not prone to assume too onerous responsibilities for adequate justice to be done by him to all.

There have been two concerts which, even in the full flood of the winter season, would rightly have excited more than ordinary attention. On June 3, Mr. Walter Mudie, an amateur in the truest sense of the term, displayed the same high degree of ability which used to be revealed sometimes at the bigger competitive Festivals, when, at the Tuesday Mid-day Concert, he conducted a most efficient string orchestra, mainly amateur also, in three works for pianoforte and strings—Bach's Concerto in F, Saint-Saëns's 'Wedding cake' Valse-Caprice, and a work by Julius Harrison, written in 1912, for harp and strings, and now transcribed (and played for the first time) for pianoforte and strings. The pianist in each work was Mrs. J. S. Bridge. The Harrison piece is a thoroughly stimulating item—spontaneous in expression, easeful in style, never giving the impression of being conceived on a bigger scale than the medium in which it is expressed, nor of having been tossed off as 'only a trifle for strings.' Not very often does one chance on works so modern in feeling, so well within what I should call, without offence, the scope of really competent amateur string players, and, withal, possessing character and quality. Mr. Mudie handled all these widely-contrasted styles of composition with evident versatility, and may be accounted lucky on being able to present the Harrison item especially in such attractive manner. Manchester has produced gifted choral conductors: given health and strength, Mr. Mudie may easily become an equally stimulating influence.

The first performance of the new Elgar Quartet on May 27, by the Catterall Quartet, drew the customary 'first-time' audience—but four o'clock on Tuesday, the principal market-day on the Royal and other Exchanges, is hardly an ideal time. Dr. Brodsky—to the members of whose Quartet the composer has dedicated the work—was a delighted listener.

One records initial impressions for what they may be worth, to be confirmed or otherwise with fuller knowledge and experience. The players were completely at ease in the first two movements, and played with superb finish and lucidity, the serenity and tranquillity of the slow movement—heard, as it was by many, after the harassments of a busy afternoon—coming as soothing balm after the heat of the day. The more strenuous Finale hardly convinced one as did the other sections. Were the players less completely under the spell of its influence, or was the listener unable so swiftly to effect the mental readjustment demanded after the wonderful close of the piacevole?

If it be allowable to indulge a tendency to seek poetical or nature-moods corresponding to music like this slow movement, it might be suggested that lines towards the close of one of John Drinkwater's poems (collected edition, p. 103):

Peace on the hills, and in the valleys peace,
And Rotha's moaning music sounding clear,
The passing song of wearied birds that cease,
Moving among the reeds of Rydal Mere;

seem to one Lakeland lover at any rate to establish that perfect identity of thought and feeling.

For the benefit of the Students' Subscription Fund Dr. Brodsky has handed to the treasurer of the Royal Manchester College of Music, £32, being the proceeds of the Brodsky Quartet season.

The Council has been obliged to raise its fees (organ and wind-instrument students excepted) £2 per term. All things considered this must be regarded as a very slight increase.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

MILAN.

On May 18, Prof. Romagnoli, on invitation of the Università Popolare, held a conference in which he drew a parallel between Italian and German music. He pointed out how German music had reached the zenith of its development at a later period than Italian music, deriving benefit from the more advanced phases of modernised art over the less evolved Teutonic art. He determined the differential characteristics incorporated in the music of the two races, viz., the prevalence of the constructive and dynamic element—hence the system of a restricted number of themes, elaborated indefinitely—in the case of German music, and the prevalence of the animated pathetic element, with its variety and exuberance of melody, in Italian music.

At the Teatro del Popolo, a grand orchestral concert was given on May 19. The Sunday concerts of the season organized by the Comune, under the management of the Società Orchestrale Milanese, are devoted exclusively to the working classes. The large hall was packed to overflowing, every piece being enthusiastically applauded. Where uncultured masses are concerned, greater success is obtained with music in which the constructive element, no matter how elaborate, permits the melodic and rhythmic elements to emerge, so to speak, as separate constituents. The second Symphony of Brahms, in which the purest symphonic texture is all-prevalent, came within popular appreciation and understanding, the Allegretto and brilliant Finale being much applauded. There was no room to doubt the spontaneity of its reception. The afternoon programme also included the 'Tannhäuser' Overture; the Overture of 'Le Donne Curiose' (Curious Women) of Wolf-Ferrari; the Scherzo of Dukas, 'L'Apprenti Sorcier,' and the 'Introduction and Allegro of Elgar. Maestro Vittorio Gui conducted admirably.

'The Spiteful Lovers' (I dispettosi amanti) is the title of a new opera which was given at the Carcano Theatre on May 22—new at least to Italy, although it had already been performed elsewhere with, it is reported, considerable success. The libretto is by Comitti, music by Parelli. It is a lyric comedy in one Act. The plot, character, and general style of the work can lay no claim to originality. The music is presented under different aspects. There are short, simple melodies which remind one of Cimarosa; the young Italian School is represented by broad, pathetic arias, and there is also a touch of Donizetti. While there is a deficiency of pure lyric quality in the work, in scenes where the comical element predominates the musical parlance runs elegantly enough with catchy expressive songs backed by a perky orchestration. As a whole the work was applauded, and evidently diverted the audience. The success attained would appear to augur well for its future.

With the object of worthily commemorating the fiftieth year of the existence of the Civic Popular School of Music—a ceremony held over last year on account of the war—the Municipality of Milan has decided to give in La Scala Theatre in November of the current year a choral and instrumental concert with the collaboration of all the pupils and ex-pupils of the School.

An interesting exhumation in the world of opera took place when Bellini's 'Pirata' was performed last month at Catania. This opera had practically been relegated to the shelf. It is rich in sweetest melodies, and was greatly appreciated by the audience.

Luisa Tetrazzini has been awarded a gold medal with Diploma of Honour of the Italian Red Cross in recognition of her generous efforts in numerous charity concerts benefiting disabled and wounded soldiers.

The Verdi Theatre of Padova, which had been seriously damaged during an air-raid last year, is now being rapidly restored, and will be ready for the winter season of opera, 1819-20.

Francesco Mottino, who died in March last, at Milan, had obtained considerable renown as a baritone singer, and had sung with Patti at Covent Garden on several occasions. His talent was more conspicuous in dramatic art. He acquired fame as a master of elocution and acting, pupils coming to him from England, America, Russia, and Poland. Mottino's activity at Milan extended over a period of fifty years, his rooms being a veritable gallery of photographs of celebrated lyric and dramatic artists who had been initiated by him into the tricky art of scenic comportment, while he was also a writer of no mean ability. An enormous quantity of poetry—political, satirical, social—novels, libretti of opera, comedies, dramas, and a treatise on elocution, came from his prolific pen. In 1880 he founded and edited a paper called L'Utopista (The Utopian), which lived for seven years. Mottino was born at Courgne.

Concerning the production of the much-discussed posthumous opera, 'Nerone' (Nero), of Boito, there is no definite news to hand. We know that 'Nero' is complete, in four Acts, and that it has been handed to the competency of Toscanini, Dr. Gaetano Césari, and Smareglia, which commission will decide the where, how, and when the opera is to be represented. Hearsay has it that the work is a masterpiece in every way, and we believe this, because the composer of 'Mefistofele' was a punctilious, painstaking, self-criticising genius.

Opera-composers are getting busy with new works. Mascagni's 'Il Piccolo Marat' ('Little Marat') will be given in the autumn along with three one-Act operas of Mancinelli. Franchetti has composed 'Moabita,' after a libretto of Angelo Orvieto, and a pastoral drama taken from a novel of Giovanni Verga. The author of 'Adriana' has written a new opera, 'Ritorno all' amore' ('The return to love'), a fairy-tale in three Acts of Renato Simone. Other novelties are 'La Principessa Lontana' of Montemezzi, 'La via della finestra' of Zandonai, 'Debora e Jael' of Pizzetti, 'Fata Malerba' of Vittorio Gui, 'L'Aviatore di Dro' of Pratella (a futurist composer), 'La leggenda di Sacuntala' of Alfano, and 'I fuochi di San Giovanni' of Camussi. Such are the new finished works of the more celebrated composers.

May, 1919.

E. HERBERT CESARI.

ROME.

The series of Sunday afternoon concerts at the Augusteum closed on May 18 with an orchestral concert directed by Signor Casella, with Signorina Lydia Cartaglia as pianist. This young lady, who completed her studies at the Accademia di Sta. Cecilia in 1917, is gradually becoming well known in Rome, and it is rumoured that she is shortly to undertake a tour in England. The programme presented on this occasion was as follows:

'Freischütz' Overture	Weber
Concerto in A minor for pianoforte and orchestra ..	Grieg
Suite for orchestra	Casella
Symphony No. 6	Beethoven

The inclusion of Beethoven's Symphony in Signor Casella's programme was the occasion for no small amount of criticism, as this gentleman figures amongst the most determined anti-Beethovenites. In fact, the criticisms threatened to become so severe that a second concert which had been projected, with the fifth Symphony on the programme, was abandoned.

At the time of writing the Costanzi Theatre is occupied by the 'marvellous infant,' Willy Ferrero, who is already known in England, where he directed some concerts at the Albert Hall before the war. This little phenomenon is a great favourite in Rome, and has gained new laurels by his début in the field of opera, his second programme at the Costanzi having included the Prologue of Boito's 'Mefistofele.' This is the first time that Willie has directed opera, and his success was immediate and assured. He entered his fourteenth year last month, and chose this period to signalise his triumphal début in a new field of direction. The first programme presented by the young conductor was as follows:

Fifth Symphony	Beethoven
Prelude to 'The Meistersingers'	Wagner
Notturmo	Martucci
Overture to 'Tannhäuser'	Wagner

In the second programme the well-known bass, Argentino, added the attractions of his beautiful voice to the splendour of the execution, when the following was the music performed:

Prologue to 'Mefistofele' (Introduction—Coro—
Monologo—Coro degli angioletti—Preghiera—
Perorazione)	Boito
Three Selections	Mancinelli
'Redemption'	Frank

LEONARD PEYTON.

Miscellaneous.

Leeds College of Music celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary during June, when several special concerts were given and a group of free scholarships offered for public competition. Sir Joseph Barnby made the inaugural speech at the opening of this successful music centre in 1894. He alluded to the great difficulties which confronted serious students in their search for a sound musical training. Since that time the townsfolk have shown much appreciation of the work of the College, thousands of pupils having availed themselves of its resources. Some of these have since become famous, and many have filled important appointments. Throughout the North of England, and further afield, the influence of this popular College has made itself felt. The foundation and maintenance of the College has been due to the Haddocks, a well-known family of Leeds musicians who for more than a century have been in the van of English musical leadership in the Yorkshire district. The present principal, Mr. Edgar Haddock, is a violinist of considerable repute, who on one occasion appeared with Joachim in a Grand Duo by Spohr. The Haddocks have been famous collectors of old fiddles. Kubelik plays a Strad that was long theirs.

An important concert was given by the Croydon Philharmonic Society on May 28. The capabilities of the choir satisfied an exacting test in a complete performance of Elgar's 'The Spirit of England,' ably conducted by Mr. Alan J. Kirby. Miss Caroline Hatchard and Mr. John Booth sang the solo parts. The instrumental numbers in the programme included Mackenzie's 'Nautical' Overture and a delicate and pleasing 'Italian Serenade' by Mr. W. H. Reed, of which the composer conducted the first performance.

Elgar's 'For the Fallen,' Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' Stewart's 'The bells of St. Michael's,' and Bath's 'The Wedding of Shon Maclean' formed the programme of the concert given on May 22 by the Windsor and Walkerville Choral Society under the direction of Mr. Whorlow Bull.

Mr. C. a Becket Williams recently lectured on 'Modern English Pianoforte Music' to the Blackheath Branch of the British Music Society. Illustrations were chosen from the works of Bax, Ireland, Cyril Scott, Grainger, and the lecturer.

Bach's 'Magnificat' and a selection of works by Gustav Holst formed the programme of the Students' Concert at Morley Hall on May 31, given under the direction of Dr. R. R. Terry.

Mr. Tobias Matthay gave his lecture on British Music for Children at Bournemouth Winter Gardens on May 17, Miss Désirée MacEwan playing a large number of the illustrations. The Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, has recently acquired the autograph score of an unknown and unnamed opera by Alessandro Scarlatti.

CONTENTS.

Page

Modern British Composers—IV. Eugène Goossens.
By Edwin Evans (concluded)	329
The Czechoslovak Festival. By Rosa Newmarch ...	334
Elgar's String Quartet	336
Interludes	338
Déodat de Séverac. By Leigh Henry	341
Birmingham and Music. By Sydney Grew	344
Occasional Notes	345
Dr. Walford Davies on 'The Musical Outlook' ...	347
The 18th and the Early 19th Century in English Music. By F. A. Hadland	349
The Imperial Choir in Hyde Park. By 'One of the Crowd'	350
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	351
Church and Organ Music	360
Ecclesiastical Music	360
Reviews	364
Letters to the Editor	366
Obituary	368
Sixty Years Ago	368
The Musicians' Y.M.C.A. Gift	369
New English Opera: Mr. R. Somerville's 'Antoine' Royal Opera, Covent Garden. By Francis E. Barrett	369
Glasgow Orpheus Choir	370
The Beethoven Festival	371
The Glastonbury Festival School of Music-Drama ...	371
'Il Codice 59': a Re-discovered Autograph score of Palestrina	371
Music in London Working-Girls' Clubs	372
The Royal Academy of Music	372
London Concerts	372
Music in the Provinces	373
Musical Notes from Abroad	376
Miscellaneous	377
MUSIC:
'Oh! The noble Duke of York.' Humorous Four-Part Song. Arr. by N. F. BYNG JOHNSON ...	353

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—

'Let us now fear the Lord.' Harvest Anthem. By Arthur M. Goodhart.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—There is a VACANCY for an ALTO LAY CLERK. Commencing salary, £120, with prospect of pension. Apply to The Rev. The Sub-Dean, the Cathedral, Manchester.

SOLO BOY WANTED for high-class Concert work in London and District. Must rehearse West-End. Apply by letter only, stating age, &c., to "Belmont," 11, Clarendon Gardens, Maidua Vale, W. 9.

SOPRANO SOLOIST WANTED for American Church, Nice. Season, 8 months—October-May. Salary, 3,000 francs. Light work. Candidates must have some private means. Apply to the Organist, J. W. Potter, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST (Lady) WANTED for English Church, Nice. Season, as above. Salary, 1,000 francs. This appointment and the above would be suitable for two friends. Address as above.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALLOTEY-PAPPOE, J. E.—"Ere we leave this House of Prayer." Vesper Hymn. 1d.

BRADLEY, C. L.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in G. 6d.

BREWER, A. HERBERT.—"Alexander." (No. 183, Novello's Octavo Edition of Two-part Songs.) 2d.
—"The King." Four-part Song for Mixed Voices. (No. 1333, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 2d.

BRIDGE, SIR FREDERICK.—"Peace lives again." Motet for A.T.T.B. (No. 99, Novello's Services, Anthems, &c., for Men's Voices.) 3d.

JOHNSON, N. F. BYNG (arranged by).—"Oh! the Noble Duke of York." A Humorous Four-part Song. (No. 917, The Musical Times.) 1½d.

MEERS, E. G.—Prelude, Variations, and Fugue on an American Melody. For the Organ. 2s.

NALA.—Two Songs: "The Crossing Sweeper" and "Fishing." 1s. 6d.

OULD, S. GREGORY.—"O Sacrum Convivium." For Alto, 4 Sopranos, and Organ. 4d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—Eucharistic Hymn, No. 1. ("Come unto Me.") 1d.; 2s. 6d. for 50.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 325) contains the following music in both notations:—"The Laird o' Cockpen." Scotch Song (arranged by David Stephen). "Yea or Nay." Unison Song. Hungarian Melody. 1½d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo.) B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 247—"Spring Song." Four-part Song. MYLES B. FOSTER — 1½d.

No. 1219—"Whispering Wind." Two-part Song. EDWARD J. LABBETT — 1½d.

SHORE, S. ROYLE—"Missa Simplex." Service for the Holy Communion. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:—

No. 2296—"Alexander." A Humorous Four-part Song. A. HERBERT BREWER 1½d.

„ 2300—"All people that on earth do dwell." "Old Hundredth." 1d.

WALKER, LEONARD J.—"My life is like a garden." Song. In B flat, C, and D. 2s. each.

—"The Summertime of Love." Song. In C. 2s.

ORGANIST (Gentleman) WANTED for Mission Church. Two-Manual and Pedal Pipe Organ. Good choir. Commencing salary, £25. "Vicar," Mill Hill, N.W. 7.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED. Churchman and Communicant. Salary, £70. Apply by letter, stating qualifications and giving references. "Rector," Wem, Shropshire.

POST REQUIRED as BASS CHORISTER and ASSISTANT-ORGANIST in London District. Well experienced in Church music. "W. J., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

FOR SALE.—PIANO (BORD), with Norman & Beard Organ Pedals. Good condition. £48. 29, The Avenue, N. 10.

DOUBLE-MANUAL ORCHESTRAL REED ORGAN, by Cramer, of Liverpool, in handsome walnut case, with side blower; stool to match. Price, 100 guineas. Can be seen by appointment. 37, Castle Bar Road, Ealing.

ANTIQUE PIPE ORGAN, Nine Stops, Mahogany Case, FOR SALE. "Moon," Library, Leyton.

VIOLIN BY ANTONIUS AND HIERONYMUS AMATI, CREMONA, 1623. One of the finest known specimens in existence. Hill's guarantee. J. E. Lacy, Baden House, Felixstowe.

PIANO CART FOR SALE. £25. Very good condition. Could easily be converted into a motor body if desired. Apply, 135, Westbourne Park Road, W. 2.

COMPOSERS' MSS. placed to best advantage by Experts who protect their clients' interests. Terms for stamp, Cambridge Music Agency, 8, Henrietta Street, W.C. 2.

TO LIBRARIES and COLLECTORS.—FOR SALE. Complete Set BACH-GESELSCHAFT. 32 Volumes substantially bound, rest unbound. £50 or near offer. "R. L., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ANTHEMS FOR TRINITYTIDE.

COMPLETE LIST.

*Almighty and everlasting God	Gibbons	1½d.
Angel spirits ever blessed (Hymn to the Trinity, No. 3)	P. Tchaikovsky	2d.
Ascribe unto the Lord	S. S. Wesley	4d.
Behold, God is great	E. W. Naylor	4d.
Beloved, if God so loved us	J. Barnby	1½d.
Beloved, let us love one another	Gerard F. Cobb	1½d.
*Be ye all of one mind	Arthur E. Godfrey	3d.
*Blessed angel spirits (Hymn to the Trinity) ..	P. Tchaikovsky	1½d.
*Blessed is the man	John Goss	4d.
Blessing and glory	Boyce	1½d.
*Blessing, glory	Bach	6d.
Come, ye children	Josiah Booth	3d.
*God came from Teman	C. Steggall	4d.
*God so loved the world	Matthew Kingston	1½d.
Grant, O Lord	Mozart	1½d.
*Hail, gladdening Light	J. T. Field	2d.
*Hail, gladdening Light	G. C. Martin	4d.
He in tears that soweth (S.S.A.), in Key of A	F. Hiller	1½d.
*He in tears that soweth (S.S.A.), in Key of A flat	F. Hiller	1½d.
*Holy, holy, holy	Crotch	3d.
Holy, Lord God Almighty	Thomas Bateson	4d.
*How goodly are Thy tents	F. Ouseley	1½d.
*How lovely are Thy dwellings	Spohr	1½d.
*Hymn to the Trinity (Blessed angel spirits) ..	P. Tchaikovsky	1½d.
Hymn to the Trinity, No. 3 (Angel spirits, ever blessed)	P. Tchaikovsky	2d.
I am Alpha and Omega	Ch. Gounod	3d.
*I am Alpha and Omega	J. Stainer	1½d.
I am Alpha and Omega	J. Varley Roberts	3d.
I beheld, and lo!	Blow	6d.
I know hat the Lord is great	F. Ouseley	1½d.
I saw the Lord	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
I saw the Lord	J. Stainer	6d.
I will magnify	J. Shaw	3d.
I will sing of Thy power	Greene	4d.
*I will sing of Thy power	A. Sullivan	1½d.
I will sing unto the Lord	H. Wareing	3d.
*In humble faith	G. Garrett	1½d.
*In Jewry is God known	J. Clarke-Whitfield	1½d.
In sweet consent	E. H. Thorne	3d.
In the fear of the Lord	J. Varley Roberts	3d.
Let the peace of God	J. Stainer	4d.
*Light of the world	E. Elgar	3d.
*Lord of all power and might	William Mason	1½d.
Lord of all power and might (Men's Voices) ..	J. Barnby	2d.
Lord, we pray Thee	H. A. Chambers	1½d.
*Lord, we pray Thee	J. Varley Roberts	1½d.
O Father blest	J. Barnby	3d.
O joyful Light	B. Tours	4d.
*O Lord, my trust	King Hall	1½d.
*O taste and see	John Goss	3d.
*O taste and see	A. Sullivan	1½d.
O taste and see	A. H. Mann	3d.
O where shall wisdom be found?	Boyce	6d.
Ponder my words, O Lord	Arnold D. Culley	1½d.
*Praise His awful Name	Spohr	2d.
Rejoice in the Lord	G. C. Martin	6d.
*See what love hath the Father	Mendelssohn	1½d.
Sing to the Lord	Mendelssohn	8d.
*Stand up and bless	John Goss	4d.
Teach me Thy way	W. H. Gladstone	1½d.
*The Lord hath been mindful	S. S. Wesley	3d.
*The Lord is my Shepherd	G. A. Macfarren	1½d.
The Lord is my Shepherd	J. Shaw	3d.
The Lord will comfort Zion	H. Hiles	6d.
Thou shalt shew me the path of life	Alan Gray	1½d.
*We give Thee thanks	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
We have heard with our ears	H. Aldrich	1s.
Whatsoever is born of God	H. Oakeley	1s.
Who can comprehend Thee	Mozart	3d.

THE "LUTE" SERIES

124a Almighty God, Who hast promised	H. Elliot Button	1d.
124b Grant to us, Lord	H. Elliot Button	1d.
*7b Let Thy merciful ears	A. R. Gaul	1½d.
22 O God, Who hast prepared	A. R. Gaul	2d.
69 Teach me Thy way	Frank L. Moir	3d.
124c We humbly beseech Thee	H. Elliot Button	1d.

Anthems marked thus () may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1d. to 2d. each.*

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO (AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

FOR

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE ARABESQUE

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

If you are a Modernist

THESE COMPOSITIONS, which represent some of the most effective and original of the modern school,

WILL INTEREST YOU.

FOR PIANO.

RICHARD JOHNSON:

Arabesque: Prelude - Each 2/- net.

WILLIAM MAYERL:

Egyptian Suite - - - - 4/- net.

FOR VOICE AND PIANO.

"The Lonely Flowers" - - 2/- net.

By WILLIAM BOWYER. Words by CECIL DUDLEY.

OF ALL MUSICSELLERS.

THEMATIC SLIPS OF THE ABOVE ON RECEIPT OF A POSTCARD.

The Renaissance Music & General Publishing Co.,

36, CROMWELL HOUSE, HIGH HOLBORN, W.C. 1.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION
THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY
SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY
J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, 10s. per 100; String Parts, price 9s.; Wind Parts, 14s. 6d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION
THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY
THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY
HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling.
Words only, 5s. per 100. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY GEORGE GARRETT.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY
ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY
JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 5s. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY
JOHN E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings.
Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY
FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, 15s.

THE GLEANER'S HARVEST

FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY
C. H. LLOYD.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY
C. M. VON WEBER.

Price One Shilling.
Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 8s.; Wind Parts, 7s.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY
C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 5s. per 100.
String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, 15s.

HYMNS, ETC.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.
Price One Penny.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNBY.
Price One Penny.
Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.
Price Three-Halfpence. Words only, 1s. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.
Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.
Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.
Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNBY.
Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.
Price Three-Halfpence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH, AND SEA

By J. BARNBY.
On Card, Price One Penny.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNBY.
Price One Penny each.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	7s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
--	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.
--	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL
SACRED SONG.THE WORDS BY
F. W. FABER.THE MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AFTER TUMULT, REST
TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

I WILL EXTOL MY GOD

ANTHEM FOR THANKSGIVING
AFTER WAR, OR GENERAL USE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PRICE THREEPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

Venite—Two settings in Chant Form—one in G	2d.
and one in A	each.
Te Deum laudamus in A	4d.
Benedictus in A	3d.
Jubilate in A	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A	4d.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Eight Organ Pieces in Four Sets:—	s. d.
No. 1. Air in C; Larghetto in F; and Andante in D... .. .	1 6
No. 2. Russian Air in G, varied. An Air from Pierson's "Jerusalem"... .. .	1 6
No. 3. Andante in E flat and Andante in F, from Concerto by Cramer	1 6
No. 4. Fantasia alla Marcia in C	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR PEACE CELEBRATIONS.

Peace Hymn, "PAX TRIUMPHANS," written and composed by HARRY HARRISON (Author of "National Song in War"), and published by Novello & Co., Ltd., in Victory Year, has been rendered with great effect by Orchestras, Premier Brass Bands, Prize Vocalists, and by many Church Choirs.

£5 given, out of the proceeds of the first impression, to the King's Fund for Men Disabled in the War.

Eminent Chorusmaster of one of England's most famous Choirs has written the following unsolicited eulogy:—"Your 'Pax Triumphans,' I consider, is worthy of inclusion in any celebration."

Eighth Thousand. Price Sixpence each.

ADDRESS, H. HARRISON, CLAPHAM, LANCASTER.

COMPOSITIONS

BY

B. J. DALE.

SONATA IN D MINOR, for Pianoforte	5 0
SUITE, for Viola and Pianoforte	5 0
BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS, for Chorus and Orchestra	1 0
TWO SONGS FROM SHAKESPEARE (In the Press):
1. O MISTRESS MINE .. Two Keys, each	2 0
2. COME AWAY, DEATH .. Two Keys, each	2 0
IN BETHLEHEM, THAT NOBLE PLACE (Carol)	0 1
THE HOLY BIRTH (Carol)	0 1

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

EDITED BY

HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price 2s. 6d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE
BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.

January. Lullaby for the New Year.
February. (St. Valentine) Flirtations.
March. Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April. In Springtime.
May. Italian Serenade.
June. Birds.

BOOK 3.

July. Butterflies.
August. Mid-day Rêverie.
September. Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October. Autumn Evening Song.
November. Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
December. Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	—	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	...	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	...	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible

1. FIVE-FINGER STUDIES Part 1	31. DOUBLE NOTES Part 1
2.* " " " 2	32. " " " 2
3. SCALES Part 1	33. " " " 3
4. " " " 2	34. " " " 4
5. BROKEN CHORDS Part 1	35. OCTAVES Part 1
6. " " " 2	36.* " " " 2
7. " " " 3	37. CHORDS Part 1
8. " " " 4	38. " " " 2
9. " " " 5	39.* STACCATO
10. LEFT HAND Part 1	40. REPETITION.. .. Part 1
11. " " " 2	41.* REPETITION AND TREMOLO " 2
12. " " " 3	42. " " " 3
13. " " " 4	43.* PART-PLAYING Part 1
14.* ARPEGGIO Part 1	44. " " " 2
15. " " " 2	45.* ORNAMENTS Part 1
16. " " " 3	46. " " " 2
17. VELOCITY Part 1	47. ACCOMPANIED MELODY.. .. Part 1
18. " " " 2	48. " " " 2
19. " " " 3	49. EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS Part 1
20. " " " 4	50.* " " " 2
21. " " " 5	51. RHYTHM Part 1
22. " " " 6	52.* " " " 2
23. " " " 7
24. FIGURES IN SEQUENCE Part 1	53. EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS.
25.* " " " 2	By J. A. O'NEILL.
26. BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES Part 1	54. WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenksübungen). By ARNOLD KRUG.
27. BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES Part 2	55. EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDEPENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbstständigkeit der Finger). By ARNOLD KRUG.
28. SHAKES Part 1	56. PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vorübungen für das polyphone Spiel). By ARNOLD KRUG.
29. " " " 2
30. " " " 3

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

The present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S STANDARD OPERATIC AND CHORAL WORKS.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., beg to draw the attention of Choral Societies, &c., to the undermentioned Standard Works, which are now in great demand with the resumption of performances by Choral and Dramatic Societies :—

CONCERT VERSION

OF MERRIE ENGLAND
COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

SCOTTISH RHAPSODY.

THE WEDDING OF SHON MACLEAN

FOR CHORUS, SOLI, AND ORCHESTRA

By HUBERT BATH.

FAUST

By CH. GOUNOD.

CONCERT VERSION

OF TOM JONES
COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

CONCERT SELECTION

OF
A PRINCESS OF KENSINGTON
COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

LOOK AT THE CLOCK

By HUBERT BATH.

THE MARTYR OF ANTIOCH
By ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

VOCAL SCORE, CHORUSES AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS.

FULL PARTICULARS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION TO—

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO :

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	complete	3s. 0d.
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	separately, each	1s. 6d.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	...	...		6s. 0d.
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra...	...	...		7s. 0d.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra...	...	...		12s. 0d.

Full Score (Full Orchestra)	...	...	...	5s. 0d.
Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Strings, each Number	...	...	...	2s. 0d.
Separate String Parts,	6d. each.
Military Band Arrangement	...	...	...	15s. 0d.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Let us now fear the Lord

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR M. GOODHART.

953. A charge to keep I have ... King 3d.
 584. A crown of grace for man Brahms 4d.
 478. A few more years shall roll H. Blair 3d.
 597. A prayer for peace ... Crotch 3d.
 801. A solemn prayer ... A. H. Brewer 2d.
 935. A song of joy ... John E. West 3d.
 917. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 3d.
 424. Ditto ... R. Dunstan 3d.
 805. Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann 4d.
 927. All go unto one place ... Wesley 3d.
 247. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 4d.
 113. All they that trust ... Hiller 8d.
 1033. All Thy works ... T. Adams 3d.
 475. Ditto ... J. Barnby 4d.
 503. Ditto ... G. H. Ely 4d.
 30. Ditto ... E. H. Thorne 3d.
 719. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
 9. All ye who weep ... Gounod 3d.
 592. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 3d.
 729. Alleluia! the Lord liveth C. Harris 3d.
 548. Almighty Father ... B. Steane 3d.
 937. Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 3d.
 261. And all the people saw J. Stainer 6d.
 699. And God shall wipe Greenish 3d.
 1055. And in that day F. R. Rickman 3d.
 229. And it was the third hour Elvey 4d.
 485. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 6d.
 658. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 4d.
 732. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 3d.
 675. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 3d.
 357. And the wall of the city Oliver King 3d.
 778. And there shall be signs Naylor 4d.
 402. And when the day ... C. W. Smith 3d.
 861. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 2d.
 642. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 3d.
 611. Angels from the realms Cowen 3d.
 749. Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher 3d.
 751. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 1017. Arise, shine ... T. Adams 3d.
 923. Ditto ... G. F. Cobb 4d.
 228. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 6d.
 948. As Christ was raised Wareing 3d.
 311. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 3d.
 333. As it began to dawn Ch. Vincent 3d.
 498. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 3d.
 643. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 4d.
 24. As the hart pants (s.s.r.b.) Gounod 3d.
 147. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 3d.
 109. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
 399. At the Lamb's High E. V. Hall 3d.
 456. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 4d.
 257. Author of Life Divine Button 2d.
 660. Awake, awake ... John E. West 3d.
 700. Awake, awake, put on Greenish 3d.
 56. Ditto ... J. Stainer 6d.
 759. Ditto ... Stephenson 3d.
 140. Ditto ... M. Wise 4d.
 955. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 3d.
 199. Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 6d.
 150. Awake up, my glory M. Wise 3d.
 744. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 3d.
 578. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.
 212. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 4d.
 989. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 3d.
 143. Be merciful ... H. Purcell 6d.
 257. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
 597. Be peace on earth ... Crotch 3d.
 597. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 3d.
 583. Be ye of all one mind A. E. Godfrey 3d.
 471. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 3d.
 440. Before the heavens H. W. Parker 4d.
 651. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 4d.
 598. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 4d.
 865. Behold, God is my John E. West 3d.
 636. Ditto ... F. C. Woods 3d.
 7035. Behold, how good J. Battishill 3d.
 349. Ditto ... (Male) Caldicott 3d.
 349. Ditto ... (S.A.T.B.) Caldicott 3d.
 419. Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke 4d.
 89. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 3d.
 548. Ditto ... J. Maude Crament 4d.
 296. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 810. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 2d.
 713. Behold, I have given you C. Harris 3d.
 544. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
 587. Behold My servant J. Z. Bridge 3d.
 65. Behold now, praise J. B. Calkin 3d.
 631. Ditto ... F. Iliffe 3d.
 912. Ditto ... John E. West 3d.
 315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 4d.
 524. Behold, the days come Woodward 4d.
 1045. Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 3d.
 652. Behold the Name ... Percy Pitt 4d.
 502. Behold, two blind men J. Stainer 3d.
 938. Bethlehem ... Ch. Gounod 1d.
 378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 4d.
 796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 3d.
 855. Bless the Lord thy God Roberts 3d.
 450. Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 4d.
 374. Ditto ... Oliver King 3d.
 693. Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 2d.
 667. Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 3d.
 390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 3d.
 616. Ditto ... H. Blair 3d.
 77. Ditto ... W. H. Monk 3d.
 112. Ditto ... Arthur Page 3d.
 15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 2d.
 756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 2d.
 570. Ditto ... J. F. Bridge 6d.
 895. Ditto ... O. Gibbons 2d.
 876. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 183. Ditto ... Heap 6d.
 770. Ditto ... Markham Lee 3d.
 331. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 4d.
 1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren 3d.
 724. Blessed be Thou E. C. Bairstow 4d.
 838. Ditto ... J. Kent 4d.
 400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 4d.
 284. Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 2d.
 262. Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
 292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
 206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfield 3d.
 64. Ditto ... John Goss 4d.
 769. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 3d.
 1004. Blessed is the soul (s.b.) Macfarren 3d.
 286. Blessed Jesu (Statut Mater) Dvorak 6d.
 943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 2d.
 5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 4d.
 950. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
 652. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 3d.
 97. Blow ye the trumpet Henry Leslie 3d.
 961. Born to-day ... J. P. Sweetnick 3d.
 118. Bow Thine ear ... W. Bird 3d.
 939. Bread of Heaven ... E. German 3d.
 1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 3d.
 774. Ditto ... H. E. Button 3d.
 415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
 798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 3d.
 92. Ditto ... R. Prentice 6d.
 491. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.
 323. Brightest and best ... E. V. Hall 4d.
 340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 3d.
 98. Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 4d.
 279. By Babylon's wave Gounod 2d.
 197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 4d.
 121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce 4d.
 644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
 511. Ditto ... H. Clarke 3d.
 853. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
 742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorak 3d.
 116. Call to remembrance J. Battishill 6d.
 952. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
 680. Calm on the list'ning ear Parker 3d.
 841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 3d.
 975. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
 497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 4d.
 454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken 3d.
 368. Ditto ... J. M. Crament 3d.
 666. Ditto ... W. Jordan 4d.
 533. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
 814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
 307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 3d.
 783. Christ the Lord is risen again ... 4d.
 370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day ... 3d.
 488. Christians, awake ... J. Barnby 3d.
 648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 4d.
 983. Christmas Day ... G. von Holst 4d.
 445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 3d.
 999. Come and let us ... A. Hollins 3d.
 52. Come, and let us return J. Goss 3d.
 95. Ditto ... W. Jackson 3d.
 805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 4d.
 283. Come, Holy Ghost G. Elvey 4d.
 201. Ditto ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
 829. Ditto ... Palestrina 2d.
 717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 2d.
 881. Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 3d.
 293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 4d.
 314. Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 4d.
 1. Come unto Him ... Gounod 2d.
 946. Ditto ... H. Leslie 3d.
 256. Come unto Me H. R. Coudrey 3d.
 635. Ditto ... G. J. Elvey 3d.
 103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 3d.
 922. Come with high and holy Blair 3d.
 1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren 3d.
 748. Come, ye children and J. Booth 3d.
 924. Ditto ... H. J. King 3d.
 334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain ... 3d.
 1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 3d.
 951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 2d.
 931. Come, ye thankful ... B. Steane 3d.
 914. Comes at times ... Woodward 3d.
 1008. Ditto ... H. Oakley 2d.
 994. Coronation Offertorium Elgar 2d.
 622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry 3d.
 688. Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby 3d.
 356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King 3d.
 449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge 3d.
 213. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart 6d.
 682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer 2d.
 252. Death and life ... Walter Parratt 3d.
 968. Death is swallowed up in Hollins 3d.
 849. Deliver us, O Lord Gibbons 3d.
 90. Distracted with care ... Haydn 4d.
 887. Do not I fill heaven ... H. Blair 3d.
 737. Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith 3d.
 703. Drop down, ye heavens Stainer 4d.
 277. Enter not into Judgment Clarke 2d.
 362. Eternal source ... F. Brandeis 2d.
 1008. Evening and Morning Oakley 2d.
 854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button 3d.
 764. Except the Lord build Edwards 3d.
 771. Ditto ... Eaton Fanning 4d.
 628. Ditto ... H. Gadsby 4d.
 470. Eye hath not seen (S.A.) Foster 3d.
 584. Ditto (S.A.T.B.) M. B. Foster 3d.
 625. Far be sorrow ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 672. Far from the world H. W. Parker 3d.
 329. Far from their home Woodward 3d.
 364. Father, hear the prayer ... Brandeis 2d.
 763. Father, now Thy grace W. Coenen 3d.
 46. Father of Heaven Walmisley 3d.
 384. Father of Life ... S. J. Gilbert 3d.
 768. Father of mercies ... E. V. Hall 3d.
 671. Ditto ... John E. West 3d.
 1050. Fear not, O land ... E. Elgar 3d.
 28. Ditto ... John Goss 3d.
 916. Ditto ... W. Jordan 3d.
 872. Fear Thou not, for I am J. Booth 1d.
 446. Free from evil ... W. J. Clarke 3d.
 553. For a small moment J. Stainer 2d.
 254. For ever blessed ... Mendelssohn 3d.
 198. For the mountains L. Samson 3d.
 901. For this mortal ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
 728. Forsake me not ... J. Goss 4d.
 273. From the deep I called ... Spohr 6d.
 727. Give ear, O Lord T. M. Pattison 2d.
 432. Give ear, O Shepherd A. Whiting 3d.
 88. Give ear, O ye heavens ... Armes 3d.
 956. Ditto ... W. G. Alcock 3d.
 741. Give thanks, O Israel Ouseley 4d.
 990. Give the King thy W. G. Alcock 6d.
 309. Give unto the Lord ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
 383. Glorious and powerful God Gibbons 4d.
 933. Glorious in Heaven ... Vittoria 3d.
 1099. Glorious in Heaven ... S. S. Wesley 2d.
 2. Glory be to God ... E. M. Lee 3d.
 779. Glory to God in the ... A. H. Mann 4d.
 341. God be merciful ... A. H. Mann 4d.

Dedicated to the Rev. F. M. HARGREAVES AND THE CHOIR OF ST. MARY'S, FARNHAM ROYAL, for whom it was composed.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD

HARVEST ANTHEM

Jeremiah v. 24; Psalm cxvii. 1, 2.

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR M. GOODHART.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

No. 1.*

*Poco sostenuto. ♩ = 96.
solenne.*

ORGAN.

mf Gt. (Diaps.) mf Sw. (closed.)
Man.

Allegro moderato.

mf mf mf mf

Let us now fear the Lord our God, that
Let us now fear the Lord our God, that
Let us now fear the Lord our God, that
Let us now fear the Lord our God, that

Allegro moderato. ♩ = about 120.

mf mf mf mf

Gt. mf Gt. (Sw. coupled.)
Ped. (Gt. coupled.)

* No. 1 (pages 2—6) may be sung as a separate Anthem if desired.

Copyright, 1918, by Novello and Company, Limited.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

The first system of the musical score features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are 'giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his'. The music is in G major and 4/4 time. The piano part provides a harmonic foundation with chords and moving lines.

1 sea - son, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that sea - son, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that sea - son, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that sea - son, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that

1 sea - son, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that

The second system begins with a first ending bracket. The lyrics are '1 sea - son, Let us now fear the Lord our God, that'. The music continues with the same vocal and piano parts. The piano part includes a first ending bracket corresponding to the vocal part. The system concludes with a 'cres.' (crescendo) marking.

giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

giv - eth rain, .. both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

giv - eth rain, .. both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his

The third system continues the musical score. The lyrics are 'giv - eth rain, both the for - mer and the lat - ter, in his'. The music features a 'f' (forte) dynamic marking. The piano part includes a first ending bracket. The system concludes with a 'cres.' (crescendo) marking.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

mf 2

sea son; He re - serv - eth un - to us the ap - sea son;

sea son;

sen son;

p Sw.

Man.

point - ed weeks of the har - vest, the ap - point - ed weeks of the har vest. . . Let us now fear the Lord our God, let us now

3

Let us now fear the Lord our God, let us now

Let us now fear the Lord our God, let us now

Let us now fear the Lord our God, let us now

Let us now fear the Lord our God, let us now

3

f Al.

Ped.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

First system of the musical score. It features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "fear the Lord our God, that giv - eth rain, giv - eth rain in his". Dynamics include mf (mezzo-forte) and f (forte). The piano part includes chords and moving lines in both hands.

Second system of the musical score. The lyrics are: "sea - son; He re - ser - veth un - to us, . . . He re -". Dynamics include mp (mezzo-piano) and p (piano). A four-measure rest is indicated with a "4" above the staff. The piano accompaniment continues with chords and moving lines.

Third system of the musical score. The lyrics are: "He re - ser - veth un - to us the ap -", "ser - veth un - to us, re - ser - veth the ap -", "ser - veth un - to us, . . . re - ser - veth the ap -", "ser - veth, re - ser - veth the ap". Dynamics include mf (mezzo-forte) and f (forte). The piano accompaniment includes chords and moving lines. Pedal points are indicated with "p Sw." and "Man." below the piano part.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

- point - ed weeks .. of the har - - - vest, Let us now
 - point - ed weeks of the har - - - vest. Let us now
 - point - ed weeks of the har - - - vest. Let us now
 - point - ed weeks of the har - - - vest. Let us now add Full Sw.
f marcato.

Musical score for the hymn "The Lord Our God". The score is arranged for four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are: "fear the Lord our God, let us now fear". The piano part includes dynamic markings such as mf (mezzo-forte) and Full Sw. (Full Swell). The score concludes with the instruction "Gt. to Ped. in." (Great to Pedal in).

the Lord our God, . . . the Lord our God. . . .

the Lord our God, . . . the Lord our God. . . .

the Lord our God, . . . the Lord our God. . . .

the Lord our God, . . . the Lord our God. . . .

Gt. mf

Gt. Sw. dim. mp

Gt. to Ped. (8) Gt. to Ped. in.

No. 2.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

Allegro energico.

O praise the Lord, all ye na-tions, praise Him,

O praise the Lord, all ye na-tions, praise Him,

O praise the Lord, all ye na-tions, praise Him,

O praise the Lord, all ye na-tions, praise Him,

Allegro energico. ♩ = 120.

mf Gt. (Sw. coupled.)

Ped.

all ye na-tions, all ye peo-ple. O

all ye na-tions, all ye peo-ple. O

all ye na-tions, all ye peo-ple. O

all ye na-tions, all ye peo-ple. O

all ye na-tions, all ye peo-ple. O

praise the Lord, O praise the Lord.

praise the Lord, O praise the Lord.

praise the Lord, O praise the Lord.

praise the Lord, O praise the Lord.

praise the Lord, O praise the Lord.

cres.

cres.

cres.

cres.

cres.

(7)

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

poco pomposo.

Praise Him, all ye na-tions, praise Him, all ye peo-ple.

poco pomposo.

mf Sw.

Gl. to Ped. in.

QUARTET OR SEMI-CHORUS.

Slower.

rit. For His mer-ci-ful kind-ness is great to-ward us, His

rit. QUARTET OR SEMI-CHORUS. For His mer-ci-ful kind-ness is great to-ward us, His

rit. For His mer-ci-ful kind-ness is great to-ward us, His

rit. QUARTET OR SEMI-CHORUS. For His kind-ness, His

For His kind-ness, His Slower. ♩ = 76.

dim. e rit.

(reduce Sw.)

p

Ped.

7

mf kind-ness is great to-ward us, cres. and the truth of the Lord enmf kind-ness is great, cres. and the truth of the Lord enmf dolce. kind-ness is great, cres. and the truth of the Lord enmf kind-ness is great, cres. and the truth of the Lord en-

cres.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

poco allargando.

- du - reth for ev - er, the truth of the Lord, the.. truth of the Lord en -

poco allargando.

- du - reth for ev - er, the truth of the Lord, the truth of the Lord en

poco allargando.

- du - - reth for ev - - er, of .. the Lord en

poco allargando.

- du - - reth for .. ev - - er, en

poco allargando.

CHORUS.
8 Allegro risoluto.

- du - reth for ev - - er. Praise the Lord, ...

CHORUS.
8 Allegro risoluto.

- du - reth for ev - - er. Praise the Lord, ...

CHORUS.
8 Allegro risoluto.

- du - reth for ev - - er. Praise the Lord, ...

f CHORUS.
8 Allegro risoluto. ♩ = 104.

- du - reth for ev - - er. Praise the Lord, ...

molto rit.

ritard.

R.H.

pp

Man.

f (Gt. (Full, Str. coupled.)

Ped. (Gt. coupled.)

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

piu f poco accel. poco allargando.

praise the Lord, . . . praise the Lord, O

piu f poco accel. poco allargando.

praise the Lord, . . . praise the Lord, O

piu f poco accel. poco allargando.

praise the Lord, . . . praise the Lord, O

piu f.. poco accel. poco allargando.

praise the Lord, . . . praise the Lord, O

cres. poco accel. poco allargando.

Ped.

9 a tempo (pomposo).

praise the Lord, all . . . ye na-tions, praise Him,

a tempo (pomposo).

praise the Lord, all . . . ye na-tions, praise Him,

a tempo (pomposo).

praise the Lord, all . . . ye na-tions, praise Him,

a tempo (pomposo).

praise the Lord, all . . . ye na-tions, praise Him,

9

all . . . ye na - - tions, all . . . ye peo - ple, O praise the sf 10

Lord, O praise the Lord, praise . . . Him, all ye na - tions,

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

The musical score consists of five systems. The first four systems are vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) with lyrics. Each system begins with a treble clef staff and includes tempo markings (allargando) and dynamic markings (f solenne, cres.). The fifth system is a piano accompaniment, starting with a grand staff (treble and bass clefs) and including tempo markings (allargando), a rehearsal mark (11), and dynamic markings (f solenne, cres., Ped.). The key signature has one sharp (F#). The time signature changes from 2/4 to 4/4.

allargando. 11 Come Ima. solenne. cres.

praise Him, all ye peo - - ple. Let us now fear the Lord our allargando. solenne. cres.

praise Him, all ye peo - - ple. Let us now fear the Lord our allargando. f solenne. cres.

praise Him, all ye peo - - ple. Let us now fear the Lord our > allargando. f solenne. cres.

praise Him, all ye peo - - ple. Let us now fear the Lord our allargando. 11 Come Ima. ♩ = 96.

f solenne. cres.

Ped.

[illegible]

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 918.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage.

AUGUST 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1919-1920.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES of GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARLYBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: SIR A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins Monday, September 22. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Thursday, September 18.

SCHOLARSHIPS for Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, Violoncello, Composition, and Organ will be offered for Competition in September. Particulars as to date of Entry, &c., will be forwarded on application.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens, Telephone—"1160, Western." London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

THE CHRISTMAS TERM commences on Monday, September 22nd. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Thursday, September 18th.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LANDON RONALD.

AUTUMN TERM COMMENCES MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22ND.

DRAMATIC STUDENTS' PERFORMANCE of "As you Like IT," in the Autumn Term. Production under the direction of Mr. IAN FORBES-ROBERTSON.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 15th, 1919.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., October-November, March-April, and June-July. Entries for the October-November Examinations close Wednesday, October 8th, 1919.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, for 1919 or for 1920, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary.

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa. London."

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.

Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications were again advanced on April 1, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

FOUNDED 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

Sept. 11th, 1919, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "The Ethics of Criticism," by
Dr. Churchill Sibley.

Chairman, J. Haworth Roberts, Esq., M.A. Cantab.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the Organ, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLERSKY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers'
Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-
playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered
Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists. Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A.

Invented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

COPY of TESTIMONIAL from AMBROSE COVIELLO, Esq., A.R.A.M., D.C.M. Professor and Examiner of the Pianoforte, R.A.M., and Principal of the Balham School of Music:—

"February, 1919. One of my most pressing 'reconstruction problems' was how to regain the hand flexibility that three years in the trenches had completely destroyed. I was advised to try 'The Techniquer,' and I am glad that I followed that advice, for I am sure that it has saved me hours of hard technical practice. A few minutes with it made an extraordinary difference to me, rendering my hand free and supple—the best possible condition for Pianoforte-playing. I shall strongly recommend this valuable invention, particularly in cases where small or closely-knit hands are the main impediments to fluent technique.

"AMBROSE COVIELLO."

Send for particulars and testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d.
The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin,
Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in DECEMBER (last day of entry, November 15th).

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate
(A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate; what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

Important to British Composers.PRIZE COMPETITION.

MESSRS. HAWKES & SON have the pleasure to announce a Competition for

FOUR CASH PRIZES

of £50, £30, £20, and £15 respectively, for the FOUR BEST MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS sent in by BRITISH COMPOSERS.

Full particulars of this Competition, giving qualification, together with rules and instructions, will be sent free by return post to all intending competitors.

The Competition closes on November 1, 1919. Send at once for prospectus.

HAWKES & SON,

DENMAN STREET, PICCADILLY CIRCUS, LONDON, W. 1.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL)

OFFICES: 19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

For the Fostering and Encouragement of British Music at Home and Abroad.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Secretaries for Foreign Correspondence:

MR. E. J. DENT. MR. FRANCIS TOYE.

Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

CAN YOU HELP

BY ARRANGING HOME MUSIC CIRCLES?—BY CONCERTS OR LECTURES?—BY OBTAINING NEW MEMBERS?—BY HELPING TO FOUND A BRANCH IN YOUR TOWN OR DISTRICT?—BY ASSISTING AT CENTRES (LONDON, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, ETC.) WITH LIBRARIES & CATALOGUES?

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Acting-Secretary, 19, BERNERS ST., W. 1.PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

A FESTIVAL "TE DEUM"

(FOR CONGREGATIONAL USE)

On SIX OLD HYMN TUNES. Specially written to commemorate

The Proclamation of Peace, 1919,

By CUTHBERT H. CRONK.

PRICE 6d. NET.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W. 1

MR. CHARLES TREE

Will give his RECITAL-LECTURE on the ART of EASE in SINGING, in London, Glasgow, Birmingham, Hull, Colne, Paisley, Ayr, Bury St. Edmunds, Oakham, Shrewsbury (repeat), &c.

"ELIJAH," at Wakefield; "MARTYR OF ANTIOCH," Huddersfield, ORCHESTRAL AND BALLAD CONCERTS at Blackpool, Buxton, New Brighton, Weymouth, Douglas, Bournemouth, Felixstowe, Leeds, Glasgow, Woolwich, Ayr, and Scotch Tour.

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE." Published by J. Williams.

Address, Concerts, &c., 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

CAPTAIN

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Ballad Concerts.

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Orchestral Concerts.

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Choral Concerts.

Address usual Agents, or

IBBS & TILLET, 19, HANOVER SQUARE, W. 1.

Temporary Private Address:

15, Grenville Street, Brunswick Square, W.C. 1.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 3 First Mus. Bac.

4 Final Mus. Bac. 2 Final Mus. Doc.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. N. SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),

48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

 The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

£1,000 SONG COMPETITION (late).—Sterling, robust Verses, written to Composers' Settings. Edward Oxenford, Haddenham, Bucks.

MATRIC. SUCCESSSES 41
JULY, 1919 8

A. MCALISTER, B.A., 209, Castle Boulevard, Nottingham.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COMPOSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Bros., Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence. Terms, &c. Radcliffe, Manchester.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (formerly Mangelsdorff), of the British Expeditionary Force, France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 362 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-end studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED and POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

CHILDREN OF HIS MAJESTY'S CHAPELS ROYAL.

A TRIAL OF VOICES will shortly be held to fill TWO VACANCIES in the Choir of His Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. James's. For forms of application apply, by letter only, to The Master of the Children, P. F. Davis, M.A., Derwent Mount, 15, High Road, Streatham, S.W. 16.

WANTED, early in September, a SOLO BOY, age 11 or 12, for Choir School in the country. Board, lodging, and education free. Evelyn Countess of Craven, Ashdown Park, Shrivernham.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.—There is a VACANCY for an ALTO LAY CLERK. Salary, £140, with pension. Applications should be sent, not later than September 15, to The Rev. The Sub-Dean, The Cathedral, Manchester.

CHAPEL ROYAL, ST. JAMES'S PALACE, S.W.

There is a VACANCY for a TENOR SINGER. Salary, £80. Candidates must be under 30 years of age, and confirmed members of the Church of England. Applications, with testimonials (copies), should be sent not later than August 30, to Dr. C. H. Lloyd, "Hillcrest," Windsor Road, Slough.

TENORS REQUIRED.—City Church; light duties. £12 Apply, Choirmaster, St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3.

ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.

TENOR and BASS WANTED in September, principally for Chorus work. £20 and deputy fees. Applications may be sent at once, to Vestry Clerk, 17, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W. 1.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—TENOR LAY VICAR REQUIRED. Salary, £115. Candidates should be under 30, and communicants. Good reader essential. Copies only of not more than three testimonials as to character and musical ability to be sent before August 9. For further particulars address, Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., The Close, Salisbury.

YORK MINSTER.—A TENOR and BASS are WANTED for the Choir. Salary, £90 per annum. Application forms, and full particulars of duties, to be obtained from the Chapter Clerk, Minster Gates, York.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, TENOR LAY CLERK. £110. Preference, and additional £50, if qualified to act as Assistant-Teacher in Choir-School. Communicant. Apply, with references and testimonials, before August 31, Precentor, Ely Cathedral.

LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.—There are Vacancies for an ALTO LAY CLERK and a TENOR LAY CLERK. Commencing salary, £118 15s., which includes war bonus. Testimonials should be sent in not later than August 23, to The Precentor, Lincoln.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL.—There is a VACANCY for a TENOR LAY CLERK. Forms, with full particulars, will be sent on application to The Precentor, St. Peter's Vicarage, Sumner Street, S.E. 1.

TENOR LAY VICAR WANTED.—Communicant, under 30. Apply, with copies of three recent testimonials, to The Chapter Clerk, The Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey, S.W. 1, before August 10. Preference given to Ex-Cathedral Choristers who have served in H.M. Forces abroad.

TENOR (YOUNG) DESIRES TO JOIN C. OF E. CHOIR (North London). Address, "F.W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL.—BASS SINGER REQUIRED, to act as Deputy for Vicar Choral. Apply, Rev. M. Hardey, Subchanter, The Close, Lichfield.

BASS WANTED for St. Paul's, South Hampstead, N.W. Good reader essential. £15. Write, R. Willoughby Jeffery, 3, Dewhurst Road, West Kensington, W. 14.

CHOIR LEADERS and SOLOISTS, S.A.T.B., REQUIRED for Manor Road Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, N. Salary, from £18 to £20. Applications, with testimonials, to be sent to Mr. J. C. Patrick, Convener.

ORGANIST & CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED, Congregational Church, Sutton. Sunday and one Week-night. Salary, £60 Apply, Secretary, Organ Committee, "Rothbury," Throwley Road, Sutton, Surrey.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. George's Presbyterian Church, Sunderland. Salary, £75. Apply, stating qualifications and experience, to S. Bruce, 8, The Westlands, Sunderland.

ORGANIST and Choirtrainer WANTED for a Westminster Church. £60. Apply to "S.," 9, Earl St., S.W.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for the Herne Bay Congregational Church. Salary £30, and proceeds of two Organ Recitals annually. Apply, Secretary, Crofton Villa, Beacon Road, Herne Bay. Letters endorsed "Organist."

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED for Purley Congregational Church, Surrey. Must be experienced in Choir-Training. Nonconformist preferred. Salary, £80 per annum. Apply, with testimonials, and stating when available, to Mr. W. A. Godfrey, 9, Hillcrest Road, Purley.

ORGANIST (not Choirmaster) WANTED, for St Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Shepherd's Bush. Two-manual organ. Salary, £25. Apply, with testimonials, to Andrew Goldie, 38, Greenend Road, Bedford Park, W. 4.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER, of noted West- End Church, SEEKS RE ENGAGEMENT. Present post five years. Excellent references. Would Deputise at Seaside for holidays. "X," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST (City of London Church) can DEPU- TISE, PART AUGUST. London or Suburbs. "Organist," 21, Stobart Mansions, Camberwell Green, S.E. 5.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER can DEPU- TISE during August and September, taking full charge of music. Any denomination. £4 weekly (if out of Town, with expenses). Address, "A. B. G. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST of City Church OPEN TO DEPU- TISE, August 10 to 31 inclusive. London District. Write, "W. B.," 54, Grove Park, Camberwell, S.E. 5.

VIOLONCELLO. PROFESSORSHIP VACANT.

Duties to commence September 20, 1919. Applications (in writing) immediately, stating qualifications, with copies of testimonials, to the undersigned, who will then send particulars of Appointment, &c., The Secretary, Royal Irish Academy of Music, 36, Westland Row, Dublin.

LADY (PIANIST) would be glad to meet a Lady who plays the VIOLIN well, for PRACTICE once a week. No salary. Apply, "M.C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

TEACHING.—Old-established Teaching Connection in North London for sale. £150. Apply, "J.S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED, an EXPERIENCED Piano and Player Piano SALESMAN. Write full particulars of experience and salary required, &c., to Cramer Wood & Co., Ltd., Dublin.

PIANO TUNERS WANTED, FOR INDIA.—Apply, by letter, to "S.C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGAN (PIPE) TUNER AND REPAIRER WANTED, FOR INDIA. Apply, by letter, to "S.C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

CHURCH ORGAN by ROBSON, about 1868. 2 Manuals, 8 Stops. Slightly out of order. £50, or near offer. May be viewed in London. Box 1477, Harrison's, 45, St. Martin's Lane, W.C. 2.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—"APOLLO" PEDAL ORGAN. Two Manuals, Eleven rows of Reeds, Twelve Stops, Four Couplers. In Oak Case. Built by Rushworth & Dreaper. 110 guineas, or nearest offer. "Phillips," Officers' Quarters, Enfield Lock.

FOR SALE, in North London, STEINWAY SMALL GRAND PIANO, in perfect condition. £220, or near offer. Apply, "E.," Smith's Library, Walm Lane, Willesden Green, N.W. 2.

FOR SALE.—"Malkin" Piano Pedal Attachment, Radiating and Concave. Nearly new. Complete with adjustable stool. Six guineas. Write, "Organist," 5, Holford Square, W.C. 1.

MUSIC, SONGS, ETC., DESIRED.—Best terms. Sto kwell, Publisher, 29, 1 udgate Hill, London, E.C. 4.

"LA VITA NUOVA." E. WOLF-FERRARI. REQUIRED IMMEDIATELY, Six or Eight New or Second-hand copies of this Cantata (performed by London Choral Society, under Mr. A. Fagge, April 29, 1913). Communications in regard to price, to Davis & Soper, Ltd., 54, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C. 3.

TE DEUM in F. MAGNIFICAT and NUNC DIMITTIS in F. 3d. each. By A. Toase. Novello & Co., Ltd.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy the Song: "Strengthen, my Love, this Castle of my Heart" (Oakley). Compass, B to D. WEEKES & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

PIANO PEDALS with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton. DEAR SIR:—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs. NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

NEW HARVEST ANTHEMS, ETC.

By CALEB SIMPER.

A Bounteous Harvest. Just Published 4d.

A fine Anthem for this Year of Peace. 4d.

Let every thing Praise the Lord. New 4d.

Five Chant Te Deums. For Victory and Peace. Complete .. 3d.

O Welcome Peace. Thanksgiving Services 4d.

A Specimen Copy of each for One Shilling, from

CALEB SIMPER, "KILBURNIE," BARNSTAPLE.

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE ARABESQUE

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE'SNEW WORKS.

JUST ISSUED.

CARY & Co.

Price
net.
£ s. d.

"EILEAN SHONA"—Organ 0 1 6

FOUR MEZZOTINTS—Violin and Piano, Clarinet and 0 3 0

Piano 0 5 0

STRING QUARTET (No. 4), Songs and Dances 0 5 0

RICORDI & Co.

VIOLIN CONCERTO (in the Press) 0 8 6

TEN PIANO ETUDES each 0 2 0

THREE VIOLIN AND PIANO "Mezzotints" each 0 2 6

STRING QUARTET (No. 5), 10 Folk-songs of Great Britain .. 0 6 0

SEXTET FOR PIANO AND STRINGS (Op. 20) 0 8 6

"ARRANGED FOR PIANO DUET 0 6 0

ENOCH & SONS.

THREE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 71), for Tenor Voice, ... 0 6 0

String Quartet, and Piano 0 6 0

CHESTER & Co.

"THE PICKWICK CLUB" (Humoresque), String Quartet 0 6 6

Score 0 2 0

BRONWEN'S SONG, Soprano and Tenor 0 2 0

CHAMBER WORKS (see full list).

NOVELLO & Co.

THREE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 69), for Tenor Voice 0 5 0

and Piano, with String Quartet Accompaniment 0 3 0

TALIESSIN'S SONG, for Soprano and Tenor 0 3 0

REELS AND STRATHSPEYS, for Strings and Wind 0 1 0

each 1 1 0

"BRONWEN" (Overture)—Full Score 0 3 0

PIANO SOLO 0 15 0

"THE CURSE OF MATH" (Orchestral Fantasia), Score 1 1 0

"DYLAN" (Drama)—Vocal Score 5 5 0

Full Score 1 1 0

"DÖN" (Drama)—Vocal Score 5 5 0

Full Score 0 8 0

"PIERROT" (Opérette) 0 1 6

"BYRON" (Orchestral and Choral Poem) 0 15 0

Full Score 0 3 0

SIX ROMANTIC SONGS (Op. 30) 0 15 0

JOHN COATES' RECITAL (QUEEN'S HALL), 1919.

"The Second Romantic Song of Holbrooke was repeated Three times—owing to prolonged encores."—Liverpool Post.

FIVE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 59) each, net 0 2 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

(Op. 30, No. 1.)

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

(Op. 30, No. 2.)

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY JOHN POINTER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.

January. Lullaby for the New Year.
February. (St. Valentine) Flirtations.
March. Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April. In Springtime.
May. Italian Serenade.
June. Birds.

BOOK 3.

July. Butterflies.
August. Mid-day Rêverie.
September. Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October. Autumn Evening Song.
November. Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
December. Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Fredrick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of the chatty, gossipy order. . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personages with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind, which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

MUSICAL HERALD.

So long in preparation, has been worth waiting for. One would not recommend a protracted reading at one sitting; the scenes change too rapidly. But that is just the charm of the book for a busy musician. Pick it up and read a few pages at random, and you will want to repeat such pleasure again and again.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wonder whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

Within its 349 pages he has packed an infinite variety of reminiscence, told with a raciness of style and a command of expression which impart great effect to the extremely interesting events of which the volume treats, and which all types of readers will find of absorbing interest.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

September 20th.—Michaelmas Term begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course—may be entered for. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys for Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

Students not older than 16 years are admitted to the JUNIOR SCHOOL at reduced fees.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Concert tickets, particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned,
C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1

PIANOFORTE ALBUMS

BY

EDITH ALFORD.

EACH ALBUM CONTAINS FIVE OR SIX EASY PIECES.

Price, each, 2s. 6d. net.

Alice in Wonderland. Little Fingers.

Fairy Tales. Once Upon a Time.

Happy Memories. Small Hands.

Six Sketches (From Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales).

A DAY IN THE WOODS. Six Piano Duets.

SOME RECENT PRESS NOTICES.

"MISS EDITH ALFORD clearly understands how to interest the youthful pianist. Teachers should make a note of these albums. They will be wildly welcomed in many a schoolroom and nursery."

"HANS ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES.—These little pieces but confirm the favourable impression we formed of this composer as a writer of educative material for the young. They should be favourites with the little ones."

"A DAY IN THE WOODS is a charming group of pianoforte duets."

ELKIN & CO, LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

NEW PIANOFORTE PIECES.

A. W. KETËLBEY ...	IN THE MOONLIGHT.
" ...	SOUVENIR DE TENDRESSE.
WILFRED ARNOLD ...	MISTRESS PENELOPE.
F. G. LARBALESTIER ...	MADRILENA ROMANCE.

Each Published also for Orchestra, Violin and Pianoforte, &c.

IN THE PRESS

SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIQUE

DOUGLAS TAYLER - - - 1s. 3d.

NEW ALBUMS FOR THE PIANO.

LEE WILLIAMS ...	...	SPRING IMPRESSIONS.
ARTHUR SOMERVELL ...	...	BY THE SEA.

Both these Albums are worthy the attention of every Professor and Amateur.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER's TUTOR. WARD's PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY's TUTOR. WICKINS's RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE's FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

JUST PUBLISHED.

QUARTET

FOR

STRINGS

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 83).

Score, Price 5s.; Parts, 8s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

AUGUST 1, 1919.

HANDS ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

The recent Czecho-Slovak Festival was an international amenity of a type that can hardly fail to produce good results, both musical and political. Before the war, exchanges of the kind were fairly frequent, and probably we shall see interesting developments in the near future. One thing seems certain—the old official attitude toward such visits is changing for the better. Governments are beginning to realise that art is a factor in both national and international affairs. The Czecho-Slovak festival was financed by the Republic, and no doubt the example will be followed by other states.

France, at all events, is about to do something of the kind. Through her Ministry of Fine Arts, she has invited the New York Symphony Society's Orchestra to visit Paris in the spring of next year, and the invitation has been accepted with enthusiasm. The Orchestra, whose conductor, Mr. Walter Damrosch, has many friends in England, will give concerts on May 4, 6, and 9, at the Opéra, which has been placed entirely at its disposal by the Government.

The Belgian Government has also invited the Orchestra to visit Brussels, King Albert, in a personal interview with Mr. Damrosch, giving assurance of the warmest welcome. The Orchestra will probably then proceed to Italy, playing at Marseilles and elsewhere on the way.

A visit to England has been suggested, and we have no doubt that both the musical public and Americans in England will unite in according band and conductor a reception not less hearty than they will receive elsewhere.

The first practical steps in the matter were taken at a meeting on July 7 at 160, Wardour Street, when a number of influential musicians and others, with Sir Ernest Palmer in the chair, met Mr. Damrosch and discussed the projected visit. Mr. Damrosch pointed out that the Continental tour would end in time for the Orchestra to be in London on July 21. If a series of concerts could be arranged for the ensuing week he would be delighted. He added that Mr. Harry Harkness Flagler, the generous President of the Society, had generously made himself responsible for the financial side of the tour.

The meeting assured Mr. Damrosch of its hearty support, formed itself into an Executive Committee, and discussed preliminaries.

The Committee as at present constituted is as follows: The Right Hon. The Earl Howe, Brigadier-General the Right Hon. The Earl of Shaftesbury, Prof. H. P. Allen, Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Edward Cooper, Sir Frederic Cowen, Sir Homewood Crawford, Sir Edward Elgar, Mr. Edward German, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Ernest Palmer (chairman), Mr. Landon Ronald, Sir Charles Stanford, and Sir Henry Wood.

A large General Committee will be formed, and the success of the Orchestra's visit seems to be assured.

The New York Symphony Orchestra is practically a successor of a Society founded in 1878 by Dr. Leopold Damrosch, father of the present conductor. For various reasons the Society's activities ceased from 1899 until 1907, when it sprang again to vigorous life. The Orchestra numbers ninety players, and the full complement will make the European tour.

Mr. Walter Damrosch has done good war service, especially in regard to music. With others, he founded the Society of American Friends of Musicians in France, and was elected its president. This Society collected over £10,000 for distribution among French musicians made destitute by the war. Mr. Damrosch sailed for France in June, 1918, and spent the greater part of three months in Paris. During that time he conducted a Symphony Concert for the French Red Cross, and at the request of General Pershing visited G.H.Q. at Chaumont. He subsequently examined over two hundred American bandmasters and reformed the entire band system of the Army in France by founding a School for bandmasters and musicians. For this purpose he collected a corps of instructors from among the foremost musicians of France. This School educated hundreds of eager musicians in the Army, and was in operation until April 30, 1919.

In March, through the Ministry of Fine Arts, he received the official thanks of the French Government for many kindnesses and courtesies shown to French artists in America.

Even more important than the thanks was the cordial invitation alluded to above. The proposed extension of the tour will give London music-lovers a welcome opportunity for extending a hearty greeting to their American friends.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

V.—JOHN IRELAND.

One of the most remarkable features in modern British music is that its creators do not group themselves into anything resembling a school or even a party-system. In Russia the dividing line between nationalists and eclectics is still discernible, though it has become less sharply defined. In France all music that is not purely academic, and much that is, can be referred back to the Franckist movement on the one side, or to the Impressionist movement on the other. Here in England it is only the composers who do not matter that can be grouped into a school. Take, for instance, the many musicians who have graduated at the Royal College of Music. Where is the common denominator between Vaughan Williams and Frank Bridge, or between Holst and John Ireland, or between Goossens and Herbert Howells? It is only among those whose timidity keeps them within the narrow path of Brahmsian virtue that one can find the elements of a school. The others can at best be classified by technical distinctions, such as, for example, the respect they do or do not pay to those great diatonic principles which continue their authority as robustly as ever, refusing to give place to modern chromaticism. But there is no real antagonism between parties thus divided, for each has a full right to independent existence which neither wishes to impugn. There is nowhere any sign of such exclusiveness as prevails, for example, at the Schola Cantorum in Paris, where even social intercourse with heretics was at one time discouraged. On the contrary, within recent years there has grown up among our composers a feeling of kinship that seems likely to put an end to the old reproach that the art of sweet concord was productive of more personal discord than any other practised by man. Nowadays, even critics agree to differ with mutual esteem and cordiality.

The foregoing remarks may seem irrelevant to the consideration of John Ireland as a composer, but in reality they indicate the background against which such individualities as his detach themselves with more or less rapidity and precision, according to their dominant traits. It is impossible to deal adequately with any of the composers of his generation, that is to say those born, roughly speaking, between 1870 and 1885, without bearing in mind that they belong to a phase of British music in which the stage was full, and perhaps even overcrowded. Such conditions are conducive to a kind of feverish activity constantly threatened with the dangers of over-production. Looking back from our present point of vantage, we are sometimes driven to the conclusion that the coming of age of those composers might have had even better results for us if the activity had been less, or if music paper had been rationed. But the end of our musical stagnation was so welcome to us, that we were only too ready to accept as achievements compositions showing no more than promise that has in some cases remained unfulfilled. Our attitude of friendly expectancy was almost bound to weaken the disciplinary self-criticism of the composers concerned. The fault was ours rather than theirs, and the best we can say for it is that it was a fault on the right side; but it is precisely this that places the personality of John Ireland in high relief, for, if he was long in attaining the eminence which commands the respect of his fellow-musicians, it was chiefly because in him the faculty of self-criticism was unusually robust. So far from there being any danger of his succumbing to the prevailing tendency towards too facile production, there was even a risk of his severe self-judgment making him almost inarticulate. It has often been stated that he now rejects as immature all that he wrote prior to 1908, but it would be more correct to date the rejection back, for he passed this verdict upon each work in turn almost as soon as it was written. Yet the only difference between these early compositions and the contemporary output of his peers is that he was conscious of the difficulties before him, whilst they, in many instances, came to realise them later.

To understand those difficulties it is necessary once more to touch upon contemporary musical evolution. Ireland had to solve the eternal equation between the old and the new, and he was retarded by an austere conscience that set him firmly against either compromise or self-delusion. He could not emulate the Tory undergraduate who proclaims himself a socialist and really believes he is one. Not only were the principles bequeathed from the 16th century sacred to him as such, but they were part of his very nature, and it was as difficult for him to disguise them with modern elaboration as it would have been to sin against them. But to breathe into them the spirit of the times, without resorting to artifice, is no easy matter. He was not content to erect a diatonic structure and surround it with a cloud of notes. The result would have been too flimsy for his rigid taste. In addition to this, the character of his melodic invention had a sturdiness that confirmed him in his rejection of mere expediency. There was thus at the outset an acute divergence between the texture and the pattern of his music, for his modern ear demanded a richness that seemed for a long time to be foreign to his musical thought. The contradiction was however only apparent, as he himself was well aware, and the task before him was in the main one of reconciliation without compromise. The measure of his present success is that he has completely reconciled matter with manner, and has not compromised with principle. How much is implied by that only the closest observers of modern music can tell.

The conscientiousness with which he engaged in this struggle towards a definite end is the key-note of his character as a musician. His probity is practically unrivalled. He remains as alert as ever for the detection of any hiatus in his style, and more than one manuscript is even now detained on suspicion. Such honesty as this, in the ordinary ways of life, is accompanied with a manner which leads to frequent association with the adjective 'rugged.' Its appositeness in the musical field is equally happy. There is in much of Ireland's writing a certain ruggedness, of thought rather than expression, that plays an important part in giving it its individual character, which is so pronounced that the mere statement of one of his themes would generally suffice to indicate the author. Almost invariably the dominant impression they leave is that whatever distinction they have is the reward, in the first place, of sincerity, to which mere proficiency is no more than incidental.

John Ireland was born August 13, 1879, at Inglewood, Bowdon, Cheshire. His father, whose family hailed from Fifeshire, was a writer, and for some time edited the Manchester Examiner and Times. He included among his friends many eminent authors of the day, notably Carlyle, Leigh Hunt, and Emerson. The composer's mother belonged to a Cumberland family, so that his heredity is Northern on both sides, which may perhaps account for some traits in his personality. He studied at the Royal College of Music, and was a pupil of Sir Charles Stanford for composition. His studentship came to an end in 1901, and from then to 1908, the date of his Fantasy Trio, he was forming his style by means of works which he no longer considers representative.

The more important of these early works will be found included in the list of John Ireland's compositions which will appear at the end of the second portion of this article. It is essential that they should be placed on record, lest anyone should be led to believe, for instance, that 'The Forgotten Rite' represents an isolated experiment in orchestral writing, or that the Violin Sonata in D minor, which now stands as No. 1, had no predecessors in this form. Mr. Ireland's judgment of all this music means neither more nor less than that he does not invite performances of it, because the incomplete impression they would give of his work as a whole might affect the prospects of those compositions to which he attaches importance. It does not mean that it contains no redeeming elements. Far from that being the case, I can speak with some knowledge of its excellence, for I saw a number of his manuscripts about fifteen years ago, and my recollection of them is, with certain reservations, entirely in their favour. What those reservations are may be deduced from what I have said concerning the special difficulties which the composer had to overcome before he could express himself with freedom. I use the word 'freedom' here advisedly, as conveying something radically different from fluency or facility, which John Ireland has never possessed and has no ambition to acquire. His whole temperament is imbued with suspicion of the facile, and it needs no great stretch of the imagination to picture him unjustly rejecting material to which he ascribed little value for no better reason than that it shaped itself too plausibly. There were also among those early works a few small things which owed their existence more or less to the difficult circumstances in which a rising composer is placed, especially in this country. Access to publishers is only too often purchased, in the first place, by conforming to certain of their commercial requirements, and there is probably no composer, however eminent, who has not some reason to sympathise with Elgar's feelings on becoming known through the medium of 'Salut d'Amour.' So far as I am aware, nothing that John Ireland considered at the time to be a pot-boiler has become famous, but if he did on occasion write such pieces, the main responsibility for them rests elsewhere. In any case they have no more relation to the serious works he wrote at this time, than they have to those by which he has since become known.

This early period came to an end in 1908 with the Fantasy in A minor for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello, which, in its revised form, may be regarded as the starting point of the new. Although not representative, there is much in the writing of it that is characteristic. The feeling is classical throughout, and unity is secured not so much by the derivation of the thematic material, which is a familiar device in cyclic works, as by a less obvious affinity of themes which maintain their independence. The use of themes which are homogeneous without being positively related often produces the better result, and the cohesion of this attractive trio is not the least of its many qualities.

From this point onwards the choice lies before us of dealing with John Ireland's works chronologically, or according to the usual subdivisions. He has written since then one orchestral work, 'The Forgotten Rite,' two Violin Sonatas, two Trios, a number of songs, and some pianoforte works.

It was in 1913 that he reverted to the pianoforte for which he had written several works in his immature period. In the meantime his style had passed through an important transformation, and when 'Three Decorations' made their appearance there were many who considered that he had joined the ranks of the Impressionists and even a few who charged him with a French allegiance. Both were wrong, and the collective title of these three pieces is a more reliable clue to their significance. Incidentally, it should be noted here that the separate titles—'The Island Spell,' 'Moon-Glade,' and 'The Scarlet Ceremonies'—as well as the quotations from Arthur Symonds and Arthur Machen which appear below them, were selected after the music was written, and are therefore to be considered as kindred suggestions and not as subjects to be illustrated musically. The first of the pieces has attained to a certain measure of popularity on account of its delicate, evanescent charm which calls for the utmost refinement in performance. 'Moon-Glade' is harmonically characteristic, and the third piece has at least one subject which is thematically so:

Ex. 1.

$\text{♩} = 100.$

mf cantato ed espress.
p uguale.

8va.

cres.

sf loco.

Ex. 2.

p dolce.

p p

&c.

All three seem to have an inherent relation to the literary movement of the later 'nineties, though it would be quite wrong to regard them as literary music.

The next pianoforte work was the Rhapsody, which dates from 1915. I quote the following from an article which I contributed to the American Musical Quarterly for April of this year:

The 'Rhapsody,' an uncompromising piece of work in which the 'rugged honesty' of John Ireland's lyricism is perhaps more completely expressed than elsewhere, has, perhaps for that very reason, had to wait out of its turn for full recognition. Austerity is a quality that does not meet with quick appreciation from recital audiences—or, indeed, from pianists—unless it happens to be signed with a magic name that begins with B. But 'airs and graces' would have been lamentably out of place in it. In fact they would sit ill upon most of John Ireland's work.

Appended are two characteristic examples from this work, the first comprising the opening bars and the second an important theme:

Allegro risoluto.

Ex. 2.

f marcato e deciso.

The next important work for pianoforte consists of 'Four Preludes,' written at various dates and collected in 1917. From the same article I quote concerning them, and the 'London Pieces' which appeared soon afterwards, as follows:

The first Prelude, which is dated January, 1914, is entitled 'The Undertone,' and consists of a two-bar phrase treated as an 'ostinato' with great harmonic variety, but consistently in one definite mood. In its way it is a miniature tour de force. The second, 'Obsession,' might have been suggested by Edgar Allan Poe, or by the counsels of a witch's familiar. The mood it expresses is an evil one which most people prefer to fight or to throw off. One way of getting rid of it is to express it, just as one can be rid of an unwelcome train of thought by committing it to paper. That is what Ireland has done with singular felicity, if the word may be used in this connection. The third, dated Christmas, 1913, bears for title 'The Holy Boy,' and is almost like a carol in its naive and simple charm, which is akin to that of some of the more direct songs, 'Sea-Fever' or 'Heart's Desire.' The fourth Prelude, 'Fire of Spring,' is a rhapsodical outburst the motive of which is sufficiently explained in the title. Then followed the two 'London Pieces,' labelled 'Chelsea Reach' and 'Ragamuffin.' These might be variously described as Cockney grave and gay, or excursions into the vernacular. The first is not a picture, but a reverie in which the sentimental side of the Londoner—the side that takes 'ballads' seriously—comes uppermost. This somewhat ingenuous sentiment being thoroughly honest in its unsophisticated way, deserves to be treated kindly and without irony, for the sake of its sincerity, and where the inevitable sugar seemed excessive the composer has used his harmonic skill to preserve the real flavour. It is a paradox in musical psychology, and an engrossing one. The 'Ragamuffin,' with his blatant animal spirits, is a welcome counter-irritant, and the two pieces should invariably be played together, lest the sentiment of the first should be taken too literally.

(To be continued.)

Interludes.

Although we English are rightly proud that our country produced Purcell, most of us know very little of his music. Few realise even the extent of his output. The following summary of his works will serve to show that he still remains a sealed book to the rank and file of musicians: Seventy anthems; six services; thirty sacred songs (mostly for solo voice); thirty odes, welcome songs, and other occasional choral works; incidental music to over fifty plays; more than two hundred small vocal pieces (songs, duets, trios, catches, &c.); fantasias for various instruments (in 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 parts); twelve three-part sonatas; ten four-part sonatas; violin sonata; various overtures; several organ pieces; eight suites, and some detached pieces for harpsichord.

Not many of these works were published in the composer's lifetime. The Purcell Society has put forth twenty-one volumes, and I believe more are on the way. This is good, so far as it goes, but guinea volumes are not likely to go far: they inevitably stop at the subscriber's library. We must begin, of course, with such authoritative collections, but they are of little use unless they are followed by cheap albums of the more practicable and attractive works. These albums will need courageous editors, who must not be afraid of filling-in the occasionally sketchy outlines, or of modifying the lay-out when necessary. Let the purist remember that Purcell was a hasty worker, and was often content with a mere sketch, leaving a good deal to the performer. Even the harmony is often a matter of doubt, owing to the scanty supply of figures to the bass.

Purcell is known to most people by a portion of his Church music (not the best examples, as a rule) and a handful of songs. There is surely no other composer of his rank who is so inadequately represented to the musical public. True, he wrote some fine Church music, but he unfortunately wrote a good deal of the other kind. This was to some extent inevitable, from the circumstances in which much of it was composed. Purcell was born at a time when Church music, in an even greater degree than other branches of the art, was at a parting of the ways. The polyphonic splendours of the Elizabethan School were under a cloud. With the Restoration and the reaction from the Puritan régime came a demand for light and pleasing strains. The interest formerly confined to the choral texture began to be shared—sometimes even monopolised—by the solo voice. Moreover, composers began to seek variety in form. The long-sustained single movement of the older school was discarded in favour of short sections. This breach from tradition resulted in a great advance in some respects, but, as usual, the change was not made without loss. Unfortunately, it had fatal effect on much of the work of three gifted men, Humfrey, Blow, and Purcell.

In Church music, as in other arts, the Court set the pace, and the pace was lively. Many of the anthems of the period pleased the restored Charles so much that they inevitably please nobody now. Too many of Purcell's anthems suffer from concessions to the taste of the period. Hardly have the voices got well under way—often with some fine material—when a ritornello of decidedly secular flavour intrudes. If we attempt to put things right by omitting these interludes the result is not satisfactory, because the vocal portions still remain snippets. We must be thankful for the anthems that are free from such blemishes, e.g., the moving 'Man that is born of woman,' 'Hear my prayer,' 'Thou knowest Lord,' the splendid 'Jehovah, quam multi sunt,' and about a dozen others.

But Purcell, above all, was a writer of tunes, and he is shown at his best in his songs. This being so, it is unfortunate that comparatively few of them are available. The number could be largely increased if the original words were modified, and, in some cases, superseded. Purcell often lavished his tunes on the most unworthy material, and the survival of certain of his songs seems to have been to some extent a matter of luck. A good song too often sank with the bad play to which it belonged. A search through his lesser-known works for the stage will show that Purcell's excellence as a song-writer is still far from being fully realised. Dr. Alan Gray, in a paper read before the Musical Association in February, 1917, drew attention to some fine specimens in 'The Indian Emperor,' 'The Wives' Excuse,' 'Cleomenes,' 'Œdipus,' 'Tyrannic Love,' and 'Abdelazer.' As an example of a vocal work that can never be used again without new words, Dr. Gray mentioned 'a remarkable trio, fully developed, with a fine climax.' The words in this latter part are, unfortunately, in the extraordinarily brutal style of the period:

Approach, ye fat fiends, that pampered each day on a garbage of souls,

Broil rashers of fools for a breakfast on coals.

Dr. Gray considers that, given new words, this trio will well bear revival. But even some beautiful songs that need little or no revision are practically unknown to-day. Purcell hardly ever did anything better than his 'Evening Hymn,' a most expressive and intimate song over a ground-bass. I quote the first two harmonizations:

Ex. 1.

The image shows a musical score for a vocal piece. It consists of three staves. The top staff is a vocal line in treble clef, with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 2/2 time signature. The lyrics 'Now, now that the sun hath' are written below the notes. The middle and bottom staves are accompaniment for a keyboard instrument, likely harpsichord or organ, in the same key and time. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, and bar lines.

veil'd . . his light, and bid . . the world . . good-

- night ; to the soft

How many singers know it? Another example of Purcell's Mozartean ability to move gracefully in self-imposed fetters, such as canon and ground-bass, is a section of an 'Elegy on the death of Mr. John Playford.' We may allow the rest of the Elegy to remain on the shelf, but this tender little song should be rescued at once. Here are the first seven of its twelve bars :

Ex. 2.

Mu-ses, bring your Ro-ses hither, Strew them gen-tly on his hearse, Mu-ses, bring your Ro-ses hither, Strew them gen-tly on his hearse, And when thos short-liv'd glo-ries wi-ther, Crown it with a last-ing verse,

Note the flexibility and rhythmical interest imparted by starting the bass at different parts of the bar—a decidedly modern device. This gem, with new words of an elegiac character, and lengthened into a two-verse song, should be sure of popularity. As an example of the emotional possibilities of a ground bass, it rivals the more poignant 'When I am laid in earth.'

There are some fine songs, too, among a batch of sacred airs and choruses evidently intended for private use. They are too difficult, and in some cases too lugubrious, for the general public, but the best of them, such as the bass solo, 'Awake, and with attention hear,' and the 'Morning Hymn' should be no longer neglected. Indeed, Dr. Ernest Walker considers that these religious solos and part-songs are the most striking of Purcell's sacred music.*

Anything like a worthy consideration of Purcell's music is impossible in the space of an article. I must be content with merely suggesting lines of investigation for the Purcellian enthusiast. We may pass over the harpsichord music, as it is by way of being fairly well-known. The organ music also needs no words, because, owing to the backward condition of the instrument in Purcell's day, he could hardly write for it anything of permanent value. The best of the dramatic works—'The Fairy Queen,' 'King Arthur,' 'Dido and Æneas,' and 'Dioclesian'—are available in cheap editions, and the bulk of the remainder are mere hunting-ground for occasional gems rather than works for presentation to-day. Even the four I have mentioned are hardly likely to be performed save by societies of an antiquarian or other special character, and that being so, all their finest numbers ought to be made accessible in separate form. The best of the Church music is safe (or should be) in the hands of our cathedral choirs.

There remains a branch of Purcell's work of great importance, and the least known of any—the pieces for strings. The Fantasias are, I believe, still in manuscript in the British Museum. The Sonatas have appeared in Volumes V. and VII. of the Purcell Society's publications. There are twenty-two of them, twelve in three parts and ten in four. Actually they are all for three strings—two violins and 'cello, with figured bass for harpsichord—and those in four parts differ from those in three merely in the fact that the harpsichord bass has an occasional independent feature. Dr. Walker suggests that in the four-part Sonatas the player was expected to supply something more than the mere harmony called for by the figures. This view was taken by the editor of the Purcell Society's edition—Sir Charles Stanford—and he has accordingly added a pianoforte part of great effect. As these string works were avowedly written on Italian models, they are inevitably less characteristic of Purcell than are the best of his other music. Against this is to be set the fact that the adoption of the form prevented him from falling into some of his besetting faults, such as a lack of homogeneity and a tendency to scrappiness. But even so, the Italian model could not hinder him from writing good swinging tunes and excellent vital counterpoint. His apologetic preface to the Sonatas is worth quotation (I retain the lavish use of commas):

* History of Music in England, p. 156.

... for its author, he has faithfully endeavour'd a just imitation of the most fam'd Italian Masters; principally, to bring the Seriousness and gravity of that Sort of Musick into vogue, and reputation among our Countrymen, whose humor, 'tis time now, should begin to loath the levity, and balladry of our neighbours: The attempt he confesses to be bold, and daring, there being Pens and Artists of more eminent abilities much better qualify'd for the employment than his, or himself, which he well hopes these his weak endeavours, will in due time provoke, and enflame to a more accurate undertaking. He is not asham'd to own his unskilfulness in the Italian Language; but that's the unhappiness of his Education, which cannot justly be accounted his fault, however he thinks he may warrantably affirm, that he is not mistaken in the power of the Italian Notes, or elegance of their Compositions, which he would recommend to the English Artists.

I have lately spent a good deal of time over both sets, and lay the volumes aside marvelling that we English should be at pains to do justice to the early instrumental writers of every country but our own.

Surely the publication of the Sonatas in separate numbers, with extra parts for the strings, should be worth while. Even if only the big teaching institutions made use of them, the venture could hardly be a failure. To such domestic circles as can boast a string trio and pianoforte many of the movements would be a delight. The Sonatas as a rule contain three or four movements, the first being sometimes preceded by a slow introduction. The quick movements are often fugal, in a free way. The slow movements do not show the expressive side of Purcell so much as might be expected, the harmony lacking his customary enterprise. It is not easy to choose passages for quotation, some of the best movements not lending themselves well to the process. Here are two brief extracts, first a few bars from the Largo of No. 6, of the three-part Sonatas—not a particularly good example, but I give it chiefly because it is a Purcellian suggestion of 'God save the King' that has been pointed out, but is not familiar:

Ex. 3.

Ex. 3. Musical notation for Violin 1 (VN. 1.), Violin 2 (VN. 2.), and Bass (BASS.) parts, showing a slow movement (Largo) from No. 6 of the three-part Sonatas.

Musical notation for Violin 1 (VN. 1.), Violin 2 (VN. 2.), and Bass (BASS.) parts, showing a slow movement (Largo) from No. 6 of the three-part Sonatas. The notation includes a repeat sign and a fermata.

To save space, I omit the harpsichord part, which is merely harmonic ballast. The other example is from No. 6 of the four-part set. This Sonata consists of one movement only, a really noble treatment of a five-bar ground-bass. It is one of the finest examples of its form. I quote two of the forty-two harmonizations of the ground, choosing a couple that show Stanford's free treatment of the keyboard part:—

Ex. 4.

Ex. 4. Musical notation for Violin 1 (VN. 1.), Violin 2 (VN. 2.), Bass (BASS.), and Piano (PIANO) parts, showing a slow movement (Largo) from No. 6 of the four-part set. The notation includes a repeat sign and a fermata.

Ex. 4b.

VN. 1.

VN. 2.

BASS.

PIANO

In the second extract we see Purcell, the harmonist, forgetting his Italian model with good results.

The following three excellent fugue subjects, chosen almost at random, speak for themselves :

Ex. 5. Allegro moderato.

Allegro.

Presto.

The preface to the Purcell Society volumes, after paying a tribute to Vincent Novello's work in publishing Purcell's Church music, says :

It is impossible to look back upon Novello's achievement without admiration for the research which made it possible, and without gratitude for the service rendered to English music. But justice was done only to one phase of Purcell's genius. Great though the master was as a composer for the Church, he was, perhaps, greater as a writer for the stage and of secular music generally. To prove this—to reveal the treasures which ever since his death have been lying hidden, to the detriment alike of his own fame and the repute of his country—is a manifest obligation, the time for the discharge of which has fully come.

The Society undertook this obligation, and its volumes are an honour to British scholarship and publishing. But I venture to hint that when the last volume appears the Society has by no means finished its task. It speaks of the works of Purcell as having lain hidden since his death. But many of the best are still hidden (and almost as effectually) in the publications of the Society. It is merely a change of hiding-place. I suggest that the Purcell Society do something to bring the choicest of Purcell's music to the great musical public. Purcell was a popular composer—the Sullivan of his day—because he was above all a writer of tunes. Musical fashions come and go, but a tune is always sure of a welcome. Because of this, Purcell will still appeal. His best melodies have a peculiar freshness, a kind of wholesome outdoor feeling that is rarely found in any other than folk-music. Moreover, when he was not deliberately following French and Italian models (and sometimes even then) his music is full of a quality that we feel is English. This is not mere fancy: so much of his work was in the vein of contemporary popular dance and song that it could hardly be other than strongly national in flavour. If ever there was a time ripe for a Purcell revival, it is the present. Such a revival could not come about more fitly than by the direct effort of the Society that has already done such splendid work.

By way of coda, I turn to the Sonata Preface quoted above. It ends thus :

The Author has no more to add, but his hearty wishes, that his book may fall into no other hands but theirs who carry Musical Souls about them; for he is willing to flatter himself into a belief, that with such his labours will seem neither unpleasant, nor unprofitable.—VALE.

Never was belief better founded. There are many thousands of us claiming to carry Musical Souls about us, who ask for the opportunity for greater familiarity with the best work of Purcell. So far we have had to be content with a mere handful, and have certainly found it 'neither unpleasant nor unprofitable.' When we get the bulk, we shall answer his VALE with an AVE.

P.S.—In the July Musical Times I suggested that Elgar's 'Carillon' should be adapted for performance as a purely orchestral piece. I am glad to hear from Messrs. Elkin & Co., who publish the work, that this has already been done. We may therefore reasonably expect frequent opportunities for renewing acquaintance with one of the most brilliant and attractive of modern orchestral works.

FESTE.

THE NEW DIRECTION IN SPANISH MUSIC.

BY LEIGH HENRY.

The recent successful production in London of a ballet by Manuel de Falla directs our attention to a composer whose work is of vital importance to all interested in contemporary musical development.

Historically, Spanish music has occupied no small place. The position held among classic masters by composers such as Cabezón, Santa María, Morales, and Vittoria is no mean one.

But the unpleasant impression left by that long period of stagnation when Spanish music, reflecting the national depression, came under the influence of an already vitiated Italian vogue—a period extending over the 18th century to the middle of the 19th—has detracted from the interest which the later development of Spanish music would otherwise indubitably have evoked, and which the product of that development well deserves.

Of this development and its genealogy but little is known or comprehended in England. The conception generally present among English musicians is that modern Spanish music is trivial, stereotyped, and very second-rate stuff. Yet Spanish music for several decades has evinced a steady growth of musical originality and expressive force, evolved side by side with a thoroughly modern development of technique.

As a result of this development Spain has come to possess not only a fine body of executive artists, such as Ricardo Viñes, María Cervantes, Arbós, the conductor of the Madrid Orchestra, and the types of the older generation, such as Teresa Carreño, Sarasate, and Pablo Casals, but also a group of young composers whose work is qualified to take place beside the most original products of musical art in other countries.

That a knowledge of their music is not widespread in this country is no fault of the music itself, but must be ascribed to the impression above alluded to, and also to our traditional musical conservatism and the love of the stereotyped which characterises the greater part of our artists, musical critics, and public. Notwithstanding the fact that serious efforts have been made to awaken interest—in the first critical studies I am aware of, written by Mrs. Franz Liebich and myself respectively in 1913 and 1914—a general apathy towards Spanish music still prevails.

Well in the forefront of this advance-guard of Spanish composers is Manuel de Falla, in whose ballet 'The Three-cornered Hat' (written to a scenario of Martínez Sierra) Spanish music attains the first adequate expression of that spirit of mingled fantasy, decorative grace, humour, and mental clarity which has been apparent in Spanish literature from the times of Cervantes and Calderón to the literary and dramatic writers—Benavente, Echegaray, Valera, and Farina Núñez—of Spain to-day.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE SPANISH SPIRIT IN ART.

The spirit referred to in connection with de Falla's latest work is no new thing in Spanish art. Its interest in the present instance lies not so much in its novelty as in the fact that with it Spanish music attains, not only a type of expression continually present in Spanish literature, but also a place in that mental movement which is evident in all cosmopolitan art to-day.

If one considers the racial elements which go to make up the Spanish nation, the existence of this spirit in Spanish art is not surprising. From the earliest historical times, the racial blends contributing successively to constitute what we now know as the Spaniard have rendered it inevitable. The inhabitants of that country 'beyond the pillars of Hercules' written of by Herodotus, were a branch of the Celtic or Gallic race from which later was derived the significant expression, 'Gallic wit.'

Later the country was occupied and organized by the Latin Romans, whose sense of satire and irony is clearly demonstrated in their literature.

After this followed the Gothic occupation, which probably laid the foundation of the ostentation and sentimentalism which later disfigured Spanish poetry in the 'Libres de Caballerías.'

But the greatest cultural influence in Spanish history was exerted by the Moorish or Arabic conquerors, who for centuries dominated almost the whole Spanish territory.

Throughout Arab literature a satiric spirit which is the extreme of comedy is powerfully manifest. Particularly is this the case with Arabic lyric poetry, the branch of verse most closely related to music. The writings of Hammud, Omayya, Abu-Halil-el-Asheri, Radhi, and Abu-l'Ala are permeated with it; and it is significant that the verse-forms of Arabic poetry originated in the rhymed prose of the 'hegas,' or mocking-songs.

Nor was the Moorish literary development confined to small cults or cliques. Throughout the period of European intellectual stagnation which commenced when Justinian closed the Byzantine Schools of Athens, down to the era of the Revival of Learning, the Moors were the protectors and developers of culture.

The Moorish schools of Cordova, Granada, Seville, and Toledo were amazingly numerous, and while in Christian Europe only a few of the ecclesiastics were literate, the Moors of these cities were generally proficient in reading, writing, and elementary mathematics.

With such interests it naturally follows that that liberty of expression so imperatively necessary to all creative development existed. Everywhere during the Moorish occupation a sane sense of proportion prevailed. Even the erotic verse of the period is distinguished by its sanely human and reflective quality; and this is striking when one compares it with the hyperbolical effusions in the romances, lays, and chansons of Christian Romance Europe. Chivalry existed in Moorish Spain, it is true, but it was the chivalry of a rational appreciation of, and courtesy to, women, far removed from the artificial sentiment of the Romance nations. Women, regarded neither as saints nor slaves, were admitted to equal terms with men, and many, such as the Princess Welladet, daughter of Mahomet III., and Hafsa-er-Rekunijet—two famous poetesses—openly cast off the restrictions of the hareem.

The Moorish spirit of scrutiny and satire, with its consequent tendency towards freedom and subtlety of expression, has remained a consistent feature of Spanish literature. The Moorish territorial empire ceased to exist with the fall of Granada (1491), but the spirit of Moorish culture remained dominant.

Moorish culture, adopted by Alfonso the Wise and transmitted through the college founded by Bishop Raymond at Toledo, became the basis of Spanish civilization, and served to raise Spain to a dominant place among the nations of Europe.

But the position of Champion of Christendom, won by Spain in her struggle against Islam, laid the foundation of a tyrannical dogmatic system. This, resulting in intellectual repression, reacted on the national spirit, introduced an element of sentimentality and pathos not inherent in the Spanish character, and led to the political degradation which culminated in the disastrous reverses of the reign of Phillip II.

Dejected, and deprived of her wealth and power, Spain sank into a lethargy of centuries, broken only by periods such as the reigns of the weak, though artistic, Phillip IV., Ferdinand IV., and Charles III., and maintained until the War of Independence.

Then at last the racial spirit awoke, and, expressing itself at first in deeds, has ever since been striving to shake itself free from degradation and to attain spiritual development.

But even in the most depressing periods of Spanish history there has been continual evidence of the persistent vitality of Spanish wit, satire, and acute mentality. In literature it is only necessary to point to Cervantes, with his irony and deep human comprehension; to Calderon, with his lucidity, precision, and clarity of writing; to Spinoza, with his cool, analytical scepticism; and in painting to the clear sense of form of Velasquez, the grotesque irony of Goya.

(To be continued.)

We hear of yet two more musical journals down for first appearances on September 1. The Chesterian will be a development of the very readable little circular of the same name which has for some time been issued by Messrs. Chester. In its new form it will appear eight times in the year. M. Jean-Aubry has been appointed editor. Judging from the list of writers, the Chesterian will be a journal of exceptional interest. The other new arrival will be the Scottish Musical Magazine, a monthly journal devoted chiefly to the interests of Scottish music, and music in Scotland. Messrs. Paterson, of Edinburgh, are the publishers, and the editing is in the hands of Mr. William Saunders. We wish both journals all success. The more the merrier—at least, we hope so.

Occasional Notes.

NOVELTIES AT THE 'PROMS.'

Twenty-seven novelties will be produced at the forthcoming season of Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, thirteen being by British and two by American composers. The British works are by Edgar Bainton, Arnold Bax, Lord Berners, the late Lieut. George Butterworth, Howard Carr, Eric Coates, H. Balfour Gardiner, Eugène Goossens, junr., J. R. Heath, D. Howell, Roger Quilter, Cecil J. Sharp, and Martin Shaw. The two Americans represented are Henry Hadley and David Stanley Smith, and the foreigners are Albeniz, Alfredo Casella, Debussy, F. d'Erlanger, Stan Golestan, Granados, Francesco Malipiero, Balilla Pratella, Florent Schmitt, Tcherpnin, and Widor.

ERRATUM. In a report, in the June Musical Times, of Mr. Ernest Harcourt's 'Messiah' concert at Norwich, we stated that the proceeds handed to charity were £14. We now learn that the amount was £84 10s. 6d., and gladly make the correction, with apology for the mistake. Mr. Harcourt's last three concerts have realised £156 for charity—a fine total.

At a recent meeting of the Music Publishers' Association, Mr. Augustus Littleton was elected Chairman.

We read in a London paper that, on the occasion of Marshal Foch attending Westminster Cathedral on Sunday, July 20, 'the setting of the music of the High Mass was by W. M. Boyd, an English composer of the 16th century.' We congratulate Dr. Terry on his unearthing yet another native polyphonic worthy. At the same time we hope that enthusiasm for the discovery will not result in neglect of a fine Mass by another 16th century composer, William Byrd.

The following extract from J. D. Beresford's novel 'God's Counterpoint,' 'NOVEL' shows that the choice of key is a far more important matter than even musicians imagine:

Philip's own prelude to the proposed sonata of his relations with this representative of her sex, was pitched in too high a key, and, after the first passage, the thing went dismally flat. The fault was not his after the initial mistake of choosing a key like F major fairly bristling with sharps; but Miss Lang established his error by an attempt to drag him at once into the comfortable leisure of E flat.

Apropos 'Feste's' comments on ancient libretti, in the July Musical Times, a correspondent writes:

All collections of gems from operatic translations appear to miss the following—one of the best—from 'Lucrezia Borgia':

There is a prior selection
To whom I owe affection.

'A prior selection' is offered as an equivalent for 'un più caro oggetto.'

The two following items of musical news are taken from leading London papers of July 7 and July 9 respectively:

Sir Henry J. Wood has accepted the musical direction of the Birmingham Fes-trict Council to borrow £8,450 for a recreation ground at Alexandra Park.

During the service Mr. Gervase Elwes sang 'If with all your hearts,' from Handel's 'Elijah.'

A NEW FORM OF CHORAL COMPOSITION.

BY S. ROYLE SHORE.

(Concluded from June number, page 282.)

In the first part of this article the writer sought to show how the cathedral model in service music, providing as it does for a choir only, is not an ideal form for the ordinary parish church, in which a congregation as well as a choir have to be taken into account. Unsatisfactory shifts and compromises were referred to. As against these he advocated a new form of composition in which due provision should be made for both the unison, or rather octaves, of the congregation singing in medium voices, with the harmony of the choir singing in the proper range of the respective voice-parts. He indicated two or three ways in which this could be done, and gave examples. It is now proposed to give some extracts from recent compositions which have been expressly written to encourage carrying into practice the principles advocated.

In an address before the House of Laymen for the Province of Canterbury on February 18, 1914, by the present writer—possibly the first time for about half a century since the subject of Church music was ever dealt with in the Assemblies of the Church, when Convocation, after a silence of three centuries, said something on the point and happily did nothing—he called attention to our inability, from lack of a suitable setting, to join in singing a Te Deum of thanksgiving, although Italian peasants were understood to be able to sing with fervour a simplified form of the theoretically well-known Ambrosian or authentic chant. This is doubtless identical with that edited by Dom Gregory Ould, O.S.B., as the 'Melody sung by the Roman people.'* After advocating an attempt to popularise the Ambrosian chant in its full form for general use and narrating the steps that he had taken in that direction,† he went on to say:

'It would be possible for this House, with the weight of the Convocations at our back, besides promoting the singing of this ancient music, to secure the composition by musicians who can do great things, of a standard Te Deum on modern lines with a broad melody for the people, responded to by the choir—this would be optional—in music of an exalted character on the antiphonal lines to which I have already made reference. . . . The ancient form is ready to hand through the labours of great English experts. The modern form has yet to be composed. If this House gives the backing required, I am prepared to approach some of our great musicians and negotiate matters. . . . The universal singing of these two settings, ancient and modern, would be merely a matter of organization, diocese by diocese, deanery by deanery, or parish by parish.'

Not content with obtaining a well-nigh unanimous resolution of approval to the proposals made, the writer made out a specification of what he thought was wanted on the modern side of things, and submitted it to three eminent musicians, cathedral organists. One was frankly hostile to the idea, another non-committal, but the third was interested. Instead, however, of the last-named composing a Te Deum himself on the lines indicated, he advised the present writer to do so. With regret and misgiving he took the matter in hand, and made a commencement a few weeks before the war broke out. On that dire event happening, he expanded the form of the work, wrote concurrently in Latin as well as English, made a prophetic provision for the variations in the American Prayer Book, and finished it in the first month of the war, as an initial war job, so that it might be available for thanksgiving purposes when the inevitable end came. The music of this pioneering experiment* takes the form of a composition for two choirs, one singing in harmony and the other in unison, or rather octaves, the latter leading a congregation. The choral part is optional and can be omitted, and the whole rendered without a skilled body of singers. On the other hand a congregation can be dispensed with, one side of the choir taking its place.

The first example is taken from a portion of the Te Deum which is admittedly capable of treatment in two directly opposite ways. Every composer of a Sanctus is familiar with it. The words 'continually do cry' and the context certainly suggest plenty of tone; but on the other hand the ascription of holiness to anyone is usually associated with devotional quietude. What is to be done? The writer was publicly rebuked at one of his recent lecture demonstrations for what he had done 'in the premises,' as exemplified below. He ventured to suggest that that was not the point of the lecture, and that moreover there were two recognised methods of treating the passage, and what was good enough for Sir Edward Elgar was good enough for him—adding that he would like to inquire whether the absence of Elgar's Hereford setting in F from so many cathedral lists was on account of its length and 'because of the Dean.' If so, somebody ought to go and do something. It is said that it is no answer to balance a long canticle with a short anthem. The Te Deum, in particular, must have a strict time limit. This would effectually rule out for all time such a masterpiece as Gibbons in D minor, when it becomes available. It is reported of Lord Palmerston that before advising the Crown on an appointment to a Bishopric, he put the following questions to the object of his favour: 'Can you suffer fools gladly?' 'Can you answer a letter by return of post?' Could not the Incorporated Society of Musicians, or the Royal College of Organists, suggest some suitable questions to be put to a prospective Dean, or Canon for that matter, by the Prime Minister of the day, to ensure that the nominee of the Crown had some fitness for the post, besides being mainly an exponent of or an experimenter in modernism, socialism, or pessimism?

As will be seen, the example contains specimens of contrasted and antiphonal treatment between the two choirs, and shows how the two can combine chorally, the unison singers doubling the alto part in octaves at 'Heaven and earth':

ROYLE SHORE, 1914.

CHOIR 1.
WITH PEOPLE.

Adagio e solennemente.

Ho - ly,

CHOIR 2.

Ho - ly,

Adagio e solennemente. ♩ = 54.

ORGAN.

* Novello.

† 'Diocesan Music,' No. 5; and 'Cathedral Series,' No. 8 (Novello).

♩ Novello.

Più mosso.
mf
Lord God of Sa -

T. 1. Ho ly,
T. 2.

Più mosso.
mf

- bá - oth;
f
Lord
f

f

ff Heav'n and
ff
God of Sa - bá - oth; Heav'n and ff

ff

Occasionally the choir and congregation combine in a broad unison passage.

At a lecture by the present writer before the South London Society of Organists on April 20, 1918, on 'Choir v. Congregation (Reconciliation or Rivalry),' at which examples were sung from the Widor Mass, quoted in the first part of this article, and his own Te Deum, the lecturer pleaded for the 'democratising of our choral music, and trusted that our great composers would seriously consider the possibilities of this form of composition, and apply it to music for the concert platform as well as church music. When we came to celebrate the Peace after the war, it would be a misfortune if Te Deums and the like followed conventional models, whatever their musical merit might be. They might well provide a part for a unison choir—a mighty one for a place like St. Paul's—with which trained contingents from our naval and military forces, and war workers, could be associated. The effect of the choir proper would be heightened, for there was nothing more impressive in music than the contrast between unison and harmony, and their occasional combination.'

The possibilities held forth certainly attracted some of those present, and there was an encouraging sequel to the lecture. Under the guidance of the chairman, Mr. Stanley Roper, sub-organist of Westminster Abbey, the committee of the Society offered substantial prizes for settings of the Te Deum and Canticles embodying the features advocated in the lecture. The writer is now permitted to give extracts from one of the prize compositions, that from the pen of Mr. B. Vine Westbrook, which, it is hoped, will soon find a publisher. The first extract shows the combination between the two choirs in an effective manner, the longer notes of the unison singers contrasting well with the quicker movement of the chorale's parts:

Allegro. B. VINE WESTBROOK, 1917.

CHOIR 1.
WITH PEOPLE.

Heav'n and earth are Heav'n and earth are

CHOIR 2.

Heav'n and
Heav'n and earth are

Heav'n and

ORGAN.

Allegro. $\text{♩} = 108.$

full of the ma-jes-ty of thy full of the ma-jes-ty ma-jes-ty of thy earth are full of the ma-jes-ty of thy full of the ma-jes-ty of thy earth are full of the ma-jes-ty of thy glo-ry. The glo-rious com-pa-ny glo-ry.

Sat.

mf

Gt.

of the A-pos-tles: praise thee.

Gt.

The following example is from the concluding portion of the great Hymn, and admirably illustrates an effective way of treating its antiphonal structure:

CHOIR 1.
WITH PEOPLE.

CHOIR 2.

ORGAN.

*Moderato. **

B. VINE WESTBROOK, 1918.

O Lord, save Thy people:

and p

Moderato.

p

Ped.

senza org. ad lib. Man.

bless Thine her-i-tage.

* Founded on the Sarum Epistle Tone.

In former days it is well remembered that St. Paul's Cathedral gave a very strong lead in the matter of Church music, and the action that it took—to give one instance only—in popularising the choral rendering of the Eucharist had remarkable results. Much that it then did, particularly in the treatment of Plain-chant, has however now to be reconsidered in deference to modern light. Until this leadership is 'restored again (which is much to be wished), it is very encouraging to note the inspiration which is coming from Westminster Abbey as a centre, under Mr. Nicholson's guidance. It is one of the hardest things in the world for a musician whose business in life it is to extract the uttermost musical farthing from a body of highly-trained singers, to interest himself seriously in parochial musical problems and the singing of the multitude, or even the semi-skilled. The late Dr. Sinclair was so sensitive on the point that he could not bear to hear the hymn-singing of a congregation in his cathedral, partly on account of its imperfections and partly on account of the bad choral balance that it set up. He had not realised the possibilities which it is the intention of these articles to make known generally, and how what he deprecated could be avoided if one got away from the normal cathedral model. As in hymn-singing, so with service music. Yet here is Mr. Nicholson, who probably, musically speaking, is quite as sensitive as our dead friend, going out of his way to combine choral and congregational principles in a *Te Deum of thanksgiving recently composed. This was produced at the Abbey on May 9, at the annual Festival of King's College, the students singing the part of a unison choir intended to lead a congregation. The following example gives some admirably contrasted writing between the two groups of singers:

SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON.

DESCANT FOR BOYS' VOICES.

CHOIR AND CONGREGATION IN UNISON.

ORGAN.

Majestic and not too fast.

The glo-rious com-pa-ny of th'A-

Majestic and not too fast.

praise

pos-tles: praise Thee

f

mf

The music is laid out for a choir singing in unison, or rather octaves, some of the treble singers adding an optional descant in two parts. This at once discloses an apparent variation in the form advocated, and suggests that, when the idea is generally taken up by composers of skill, many unthought-of possibilities may be brought to light. The unwillingness of amateur choirs to sing anything in unison will, however, have to be taken into account.

* The Faith Press.

At the end we have antiphonal treatment of the concluding Versicle and Response portion in Anglican chant form, freely treated to meet the character of the different verses. This shows also the possibility of an elastic form of modern chant for the Te Deum, a great need in view of the shortness of so many of the verses.

All interested in the reform of parochial music agree in deploring subservience to the cathedral model, but have nothing to suggest in its place, save, in the case of some, the use of Plain-chant, which can never be more than a partial substitute, and that only where the people have direct instruction in singing it. The Report of the Archbishops' Committee on the 'Worship of the Church' is no exception to this, and also takes no cognisance of Plain-chant save in the case of the Psalter, quite the most difficult and least attractive branch of the subject to handle in the interests of congregational singing, in the absence of properly marked psalters in the Prayer Book. The Report, on its musical side, if it is to be of any real service should be done nearly all over again, with the help of wider expert assistance, particularly after the way it has been dealt with by the Royal College of Organists. The remedy—so far as the Holy Communion, the Te Deum and Canticles in modern music are concerned—seems to lie in the proposals made in these articles. If there is any better suggestion to make, let it be heard. Composers should note the importance of considering the capabilities of a large body of unskilled singers, and not expect them to trip along too fast. The provision of handy books for the use of unison choir and congregation at a popular price will be almost a necessary feature. Both the present writer and Mr. Nicholson have kept this in view, the latter adding Tonic Sol-fa notation.

Of course music of this kind is not intended to be thrown at a congregation, expecting them to take part by merely hearing it frequently. The singing of the multitude is quite worth cultivating. Experience shows that something like 98 per cent. of people can sing a simple unison melody with a little help. What is really required is the organization in every congregation of a special body to form a subsidiary choir of unison singers to lead them. Half an hour before the Sunday evening service is an unoccupied time both socially and ecclesiastically. They could easily receive occasional instruction then, and sometimes unite with the rest of the congregation and the choir proper in a combined instruction at the close of the service, or in lieu of the sermon.

Mr. Ernest Newman has recently recorded in the Birmingham Daily Post his impressions of a great multitude singing, as follows:

'I was in Glasgow the week before last for the Competition Festival, and was greatly struck by two things—the knowledge of and love for the Scots folk-songs that the Scots people have, and the thrilling effect of what the Americans call community singing. I have rarely enjoyed anything so much in a concert hall as the singing of the splendid Hebridean tramping song ("The road to the Isles") by an audience that must have numbered well over three thousand people. . . . The thing is not so much the song as the singing—the unanalysable sense of uplift that one gets from being part of a crowd that is enjoying itself rationally. Provided the music be not actually banal, almost anything with the right swing will do, though of course the better the popular music is the more pleased the musicians in the crowd will be.'

Cannot our cathedral organists, no friends as a rule to the singing of the multitude, follow the example set by Westminster Abbey, and go outside their traditions? Diocesan choral associations, instead of occupying themselves with propagating a mild representation of the cathedral service, might very well take up the new suggested form, and encourage the co-operation of subsidiary choirs. If they did this, many fine compositions from our leading composers would soon become available, and command ready publishers. An article in The Times of July 13 on 'The People's Te Deum' should stimulate interest and inspire composers to experiment. Choral music, instead of being the property of the few, would become the possession of the many, while nearly all could develop into performers according to their lights and skill, and opportunities for being trained. Modern musical developments have not much of a message for the multitude. Perhaps the writer's proposals may do something to supply this deficiency. If their practicability is doubted, then, in the ecclesiastical domain, he would refer doubters to the resolution passed by the Canterbury House of Laymen on February 18, 1914, and suggest that they should try to act up to it. It runs as follows:

'That the demand for more and better congregational singing would best be met, as a branch of practical Church music reform, by standardising certain suitable music, ancient and modern, for use by the people, with or without the help of a choir, publishing it in a handy form, and organizing the singing of it diocese by diocese.'

If, instead of talk about Church music reform, this resolution of five years ago had been seriously regarded and universally acted upon, our recent Thanksgiving Services would have gained greatly in impressiveness.

The Musician's Bookshelf.

By 'FESTE.'

Probably the art of interpretation never had a greater exponent than Yvette Guilbert. It is difficult to understand a more complete contrast to the singers who capture the public ear mainly by a fine voice lavished on a safe and limited repertory. What is the secret of the wonderful Frenchwoman's success? While under her spell, we say at once 'personality,'—an obvious answer, which, however, is not complete. The rest of the secret is to be found in her book 'How to Sing a Song' (Macmillan), and may be summed up in two words—hard work. And yet no art is apparently so spontaneous as that of Yvette Guilbert.

Judged by ordinary canons, Guilbert has no remarkable singing voice. Apparently she regards a fine organ as a hindrance rather than a help to the singer of songs. She says:

If you want to make a real career as a singer of songs, the career of a chansonneur, you must have a long special voice-training. You must not be either a soprano or contralto, either a baritone, bass, or tenor, you must be a soprano and contralto, you must be a baritone, bass, and tenor, all in one. This will prevent you from singing a song as a 'uniform' work, like an operatic part. The singers who have what is called 'one register' normally placed, like operatic stars, are out of the question for the singing a song. Their voices can be as fine as possible: if they are not multiple they will not be able to render the song justly, they will deform it by too rich or too stiff a voice—always limited to their 'register.' . . . The minute the chansonneur is limited, he is not any more a singer of songs. Because to sing songs means possessing all possibilities to sing all songs. La Chanson is not one song. La Chanson is multiple, and you must have multiple powers, multiple colours, multiple voices.

She goes on to say that early in her career she discussed this subject with Gounod and Verdi. The former said:

'Mademoiselle Yvette, for God's sake, do not take singing lessons. Your professor will kill your power of expression by giving you a "pretty voice," which means a "flat" voice. And then you will be one of the thousands. You will be like Judic, whose voice is pretty, charming, and nothing else. We have had Judics before Judic, and we shall have Judics after Judic. You yourself have created your style; preserve it.'

This seems a little hard on Judic, but it is true. We have Judics galore in England, where the public demands first, a pretty voice; second, a pretty face; third, a pretty song; fourth, an encore. When they call for anything like the variety of a Guilbert, and refuse attractive substitutes, a good many shutters will go up.

Verdi said much the same as Gounod:

'If we had on the operatic stage singers of songs such as you are, we would write music appropriate to the words; but we have only more or less beautiful voices for arias, and we write music for arias, arias to make shine the soprano, arias for the contralto, arias for the tenor, &c.'

Here, again, the public is a factor. It pays the piper and calls the tune. The tune that 'makes shine' the singer makes busy the box-office.

So much of Guilbert's success is due to her extraordinary variety of tone-colour that we should have been disappointed had she not given the subject ample treatment in this book. This treatment takes the practical form of exemplification, some of her most successful songs being considered in detail. Here are some of her picturesque suggestions for the requirements of 'La Légende de Saint-Nicolas': 'Neutral voice; white voice; with a hard, brown voice; red voice, luminous, nobly-posed, grave register; humble voice, submissive to the saint; imperative voice, large, grave, severe, and accusing; voice exasperated by emotion in face of the accusation of the saint and his revelation of the crime.'

And here are the final lines of the song with directions as to voice:

Interpreter.

(Voice veiled by the emotion of the miracle which is going to be accomplished.)

Et le Saint étendit trois doigts,
Les petits se relèvent tous les trois!
Il était trois petits enfants
Qui s'en allaient glaner aux champs.

First Child.

(Voice of about ten years.)
Le premier dit . . . J'ai bien dormi!

Second Child.

(Voice of about seven years, high-pitched.)
Et moi! dit le second, aussi!

Third Child.

(Very high, like a baby.)
Je croyais être au paradis!

The interpolation and treatment of refrains is a fascinating section. Madame Guilbert tells us why she added the watchman's calling of the hours in Le voyage de Joseph et Marie à Bethléem. On paper it looks bald enough, but none of us who have heard her delivery of the legend are likely to forget the wonderful effect of

'Le crieur de nuit: il est 6 heures.'

How little the printed page can convey in this respect is shown in 'Coming thro' the rye.' On the face of it, we may object to the suggested interpolation of 'Why not?' at the end of most of the lines, but we know that such things, as done by Guilbert, became vital, whereas the ordinary singer or reciter would make them merely an irritating impertinence. Printed advice on interpretation is dangerous if taken too literally: it must be regarded as merely suggestive.

Having given this little taste of the contents of the book, I must be content with indicating the principal heads: How to create atmosphere; The expression of the different forms of tragedy; The comic spirit; The plastic art; The development of the faculty of observation; Musical rhythm; Tempo in declamation; Facial mimicry; Magnetism and charm. In leaving this engrossing book, I cannot do better than quote from Mr. Clayton Hamilton's Preface:

The author of 'How to Sing a Song' is not accustomed to write books, nor does she aspire to any literary laurels. Furthermore, in the present instance, she is writing in an unfamiliar language, less fitted than her own to express the many movements of a mind that is peculiarly and typically French. Yet, to me at least, this little volume reveals many of the most essential traits of literature. It is not so much a text-book as a personal expression of the ecstasy of a great artist in the propagation of her craft. Much of it, unconsciously, is autobiographical; and even when the author endeavours to be most strictly didactic, the perfume of her personality irradiates her writing.

It should be added that there are many admirable illustrations of gesture, facial expression, and costume, as well as music.

The volume containing the 'Proceedings of the Musical Association,' Forty-fourth Session, 1917-18, is now published (Novello & Co.). It contains papers on 'The Clock Jacks of England' (W. W. Starmer); 'A National Music-Drama: the Glastonbury Festival' (Rutland Boughton); 'Violins, old and new' (Towry Piper); 'Some Acoustical Properties of Wind Instruments' (Ralph Dunstan); 'Bach's Cantata Libretti' (C. Sanford Terry); 'Classicism and False Values' (G. H. Clutsam); 'Modern French Organ Music' (Harvey Grace); 'The Genevan Psalter of 1562' (G. R. Woodward); and 'Eurhythmics' (Emile Jaques-Dalcroze).

There are few palates that cannot find attractive fare here. For myself, I have taken special pleasure in Mr. Clutsam's outspoken paper on the fetish of classicism. His estimate of Beethoven's fifth Symphony will be generally endorsed in a few years' time.

In the June Bulletin of the British Musical Society appears a paper by Bernard Shaw, entitled 'Starved Arts mean Low Pleasures.' This is a truly Shavian utterance which deserves the widest publicity. We shall all find points of disagreement, of course. Some of our classic-worshippers, for example, will pooh-pooh the following:

How many people are aware of the fact that the British Isles can put into the field about forty living composers of serious music without counting those 19th-century composers whose names are well known to the public, such as Elgar, Stanford, Parry, Cowen, Bantock, Delius, and others? It is not only possible to find enthusiastic musical amateurs who do not know this, but positively difficult to find any who do know it.

What is the remedy? Mr. Shaw says, 'more performances, more publications, and more advertisement.' After girding at the lack of enterprise shown by concert-givers, he points out the importance of following up performance by publication in vocal score, in transcriptions for pianoforte solo and duet, and in pianola rolls, quoting Wagner's commonsensible remark that music is kept alive on the pianofortes of the amateurs, and not by commercial performances. Mr. Shaw thinks British music will never have a chance so long as we continue to be 'a people of low pleasures.'

We are a people of low pleasures because we are brought up to them: the British working man finds the public house and the football field offering themselves to him insistently at every turn; and the British gentleman is actually forced to spend his boyish leisure at cricket and football before he enters an adult society in which he cannot escape hunting, shooting, bridge, and billiards, though he can go through life as a complete gentleman without hearing a Beethoven Sonata in any other form than that of a disagreeable noise which he forbids his daughters to make in the schoolroom except during the hours when he is usually out of doors.

There is surely some over-statement here. Mr. Shaw evidently does not know of the large and increasing place music plays in our public schools. He would be astonished at the number of music lessons given, and at the excellent programmes performed at school concerts. The old days when school-boys were encouraged to regard musical proficiency as effeminate are gone, though the gain will not be apparent in adult circles for a few more years. Mr. Shaw will then be no longer able to say crushingly:

If you eliminate smoking and the element of gambling, you will be amazed to find that almost all the Englishman's pleasures can be, and mostly are, shared by his dog.

Happy dog, and, on the whole, not unhappy Englishman!

Altogether, a stimulating paper. I hope the British Music Society will keep the quality of their pamphlets up to that of the two already published. A set of them will be a valuable addition to the bookshelf, and I am carefully and confidently keeping my copies.

The literary results of the war are many and varied, but perhaps the most significant work was in the lyrical field. Nothing in the history of poetry has been more astonishing than the facility with which young soldiers who had never hitherto dealt in numbers, began to burst into song. In the ordinary way, such work would not call for consideration in these pages. I have, however, received three little books that have claims on musical grounds. I can spare space for no more than commendation to the reader of verse. They are 'Sandbag Ballads,' by Cecil Barber (Elkin Matthews); 'War's Embers,' by Ivor Gurney (Sidgwick & Jackson); and No. 5 of 'Voices' (Henderson, 66, Charing Cross Road). Mr. Barber is a musician who has contributed to this and other musical journals; Mr. Gurney is, or was, a student at the R.C.M.; 'Voices' is a lively little literary journal, chiefly devoted to poetry, and is edited by Thomas Mout, who is also not unknown in the musical world.

The twenty-second number of the Journal of the Folk-Song Society is even more interesting than usual. It concerns itself almost entirely with street cries, chiefly London, and very fascinating some of the examples are. They range from well-organized melodies, such as 'Toy lambs' and 'Rosemary and bags,' to the plain-song-like inflections of the chairmender's cry and 'Lettuces and shrimps.' The Journal contains also some interesting notes on fragments of tragic ballads and folk-tales preserved in children's games.

A SERVICE BAND CONDUCTOR.

In theory, Service bands exist for the entertainment of the Army and Navy, and if they played to nobody else, criticism would be out of place. In practice, however, they provide music for a very large section of the public, and as caterers for the multitude they incur a responsibility that seems to be imperfectly realised in some cases. Too many Service band programmes appear to be drawn up on the easy assumption that the public has little use for any music other than musical comedy selections and rag-time. Let it be said at once that the bandmasters are not entirely to blame. There are various reasons why they play so much trivial music. Neither they nor their bands like it, we believe, and numerous complaints from their hearers warrant the assumption that the public would prefer something better. The subject is so important that we hope to return to it shortly. Meanwhile we have recently had good proof that although bandmasters are very far from being free agents in their choice of music, a good deal may be done by the individual possessed of enthusiasm and courage.

During a recent stay at Portsmouth we heard so much of the excellence of the work of the Royal Marine Light Infantry Band (Portsmouth Division) that we paid an inquiring visit to Forton Barracks, Gosport. We arrived just as the band was in the final stages of a practice. Nevertheless the bandmaster, Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell, and his players followed up their courteous welcome by giving a brilliant little concert, leaving the selection of the programme to the visitor, who, being in the mood for something cheerful, chose Dvorák's 'Carnival' Overture, the Ballet music from 'Prince Igor,' German's Welsh Rhapsody, and Elgar's Imperial March. To these were added a picturesque pair of Irish Sketches by the conductor, and two dainty little pieces for strings by Band-Sergt. Ramsay, a L.R.A.M. who, when he is not composing, or playing the 'cello or the saxophone, is a local organist. With the handiness to be expected of Marines, the players performed both as military band and orchestra. The performances were excellent, especially in music of a brilliant and strongly-rhythmic character. Mr. O'Donnell's conducting was enthusiastic, alert, and flexible.

We had some talk with him afterwards, and inevitably the main topic was the repertory. Mr. O'Donnell believes in good programmes, in which the light music shall be worthy of the rest of the scheme. 'If we want a contrast to a serious symphonic item,' he said, 'we can surely obtain it without descending to rag-time or a revue selection, or some vapid waltz from a musical comedy.'

'But can you avoid the descent?' we asked. 'Aren't the entertainment managers at holiday resorts a difficulty?'

'As a rule, of course, they think that light music must be more or less drivelling,' he replied; 'but we manage to get our own way, though it means a stiff tussle at times. Here are two typical orchestral programmes, played recently at Pier concerts, and thoroughly appreciated':

1. Overture, 'Bartered Bride' Smetana
2. Scotch Rhapsody, No. 1 Mackenzie
3. Largo and Scherzo from the 'New World' Symphony Dvorák
4. Shepherd Fennel's Dance Balfour Gardiner
5. Capriccio Italien Tchaikovsky
6. Two Arabesques Debussy
7. Rhapsodic Dance, 'The Bamboula' .. Coleridge-Taylor
8. Norwegian Rhapsody Svendsen

1. Overture, 'Cockaigne' Elgar
2. Two Dances Brahms
3. 'Ride of the Valkyries' Wagner
4. Welsh Rhapsody E. German
5. Two Irish Tone Sketches B. Walton O'Donnell
6. Scènes Napolitaines Massenet
7. (a) Mock Morris
(b) Shepherd's Hey } Grainger
8. Marche Slave Tchaikovsky

'The band repertory contains practically all the standard Symphonies, Overtures, and Suites,' he went on. 'There is a long list of operatic extracts, chiefly drawn from Puccini, Ethel Smyth, Wagner, Wolf-Ferrari, Mackenzie, Bizet, Leoncavallo, Berlioz, &c. The miscellaneous items are a well-varied batch, with a good proportion of native works by Mackenzie, German, Stanford, Coleridge-Taylor, Balfour Gardiner, Elgar, Grainger, Corder, Sullivan, Dunhill, Cowen, Quilter, Eric Coates, Foulds, Ansell, and Landon Ronald. Apropos native music, we are always glad to help young British composers by playing new works, and giving the best of them a place in our repertory.'

We asked for particulars as to the strength of the band.

'The official complement is forty,' he replied. 'The demand of an orchestral as well as a military combination from this number calls for "double-handed" efficiency from the majority of the men, and is a severe tax on the time available for practice. We play as a military band chiefly in the summer. Here are two specimen military band programmes :

1. Imperial March Elgar
2. Caucasian Sketches Ippolitov-Ivanov
3. 'Entry of the Gods into Valhalla' Wagner
4. Ballet music to 'Prince Igor' Borodin
5. Solveig's Song (cornet solo) Grieg
6. Suite, 'Pantomime' Lacombe
7. Prelude to 'Nadeshda' Goring-Thomas
8. Rhapsody No. 1 Liszt

1. Overture, 'Macbeth' Sullivan
2. Two Slavonic Dances Dvorak
3. Selection from 'Manon Lescaut' Puccini
4. Bourrée et Gigue E. German
5. Theme and Variations B. Walton O'Donnell
6. Scena, 'Benediction des Poignards' Meyerbeer
7. Suite, 'The Pixies' Dunhill
8. Valse from 'La Belle au Bois dormant' Tchaikovsky

We asked Mr. O'Donnell as to the more recent activities of the band.

'In July last year,' he said, 'we were in frequent attendance at the Royal Pavilion during the King's visit to Aldershot, and I had the honour of being presented to His Majesty. A few months ago we made a tour in Belgium, and had splendid receptions, especially in the mining districts, where we found the people very keen musicians. The smallest of towns in the Borinage has an orchestra, a "military" combination, two or three choral societies—all with anything from sixty to a hundred and twenty performers—and a military "fanfare" or brass band. We found the best classical and modern music most highly appreciated in this district. Owing to the cost of railway travelling we have lately been forced to confine our work to towns on the South Coast, with occasional visits to such places as Cardiff, Leeds, and Birmingham. We look forward, however, to being able to give a London performance in the near future.'

We left the barracks after a most interesting morning, taking with us a lively impression of a fine band and an enthusiastic and cultured bandmaster. We obtained also a photograph of Mr. O'Donnell, and some details of his career. He is still a young man, but his musical past is fairly long and decidedly brilliant. Here is a compressed biography: Born

July 28, 1887, at Madras; began study of pianoforte at six, and 'cello at nine; at twelve won Coulson Scholarship for 'cello at Royal Irish Academy of Music, Dublin; two years later was awarded first of Ada Lewis scholarships for 'cello at R.A.M., London; spent ten years at R.A.M. as student and teacher; during the first three years received awards for 'cello, pianoforte, harmony, composition, &c., and made many appearances at orchestral and chamber concerts; was a glutton for prizes and scholarships, taking the orchestral scholarship for 'cello, 'Bonamy-Dobree' prize, Society of Fine Arts medal for 'cello, 'Hine' Gift and 'Charles Lucas' prize for composition, 'Charles Rube' prize for chamber music, 'Dove' prize for general excellence, and Triennial

MR. B. WALTON O'DONNELL.

Medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians for the most distinguished student; elected A.R.A.M. in 1908; met with much success as 'cello soloist in London and provinces. Attracted by possibilities of military band music (strong family leanings that way, two brothers, P. S. G. O'Donnell and R. P. O'Donnell, being conductors of Royal Marines, Plymouth, and 21st Lancers respectively), he joined the Army—21st Lancers—in 1911, going to Kneller Hall in 1912. Here he resumed prize-taking habits, receiving the medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians; was appointed to 7th Hussars in 1914 and proceeded to India; at the end of 1917 returned to England, and succeeded Major George Miller as Director of the R.M.L.I. Band; has done a good deal of composition (he was a pupil of Corder), including a Fantasy for 'Cello and Pianoforte commissioned by Mr. W. W. Cobbett.

With his all-round qualifications, Mr. O'Donnell might have become a successful soloist, orchestral conductor, composer, or teacher. For the sake of popular musical taste we are glad he has chosen the career of Service bandmaster. He has not been long in proving that such bands, like first-class civilian orchestras, need not be content with following public taste: they should at least keep abreast, and be prepared on occasion to lead the way.

DEBUSSY AS CRITIC.

M. CROCHE ON SUNDRY SUPERSTITIONS AND AN OPERA.

I had stayed until late one autumn evening in the country, irresistibly enthralled by the witchery of the ancient forests. From the yellow, fallen leaves, commemorating the glorious agony of the trees; from the tranquil Angelus, enjoining the fields to slumber, emanated a gentle, persuasive influence, lulling one's senses to complete repose. The sun was setting solitary, and not a single peasant thought of placing himself in a photographic attitude in the foreground. Men and beasts were returning peacefully homeward, having accomplished their unassuming tasks, which possess a special dignity, since they solicit neither approbation nor disapproval. Very remote seemed those discussions on art in which the names of celebrated men sound like 'high words.' The horrid little insidious 'first night' fevers were forgotten. I was alone, and feeling delightfully disinterested. Perhaps I never loved music so well as at this time when I was not hearing any talk about it. I could realise it in its complete beauty, no longer parcelled out in little meagre or redundant symphonic and lyric fragments. I thought now and again of M. Croche: he has a certain erect, phantasmal appearance, which one can adapt to any landscape without obscuring its lines. Nevertheless, I had to quit the happy tranquil scene and retrace my steps, urged by that obsession of the town which forces so many people to imagine it is better to be crushed out of existence than not to take part in the 'movement' of which they are, however, the rueful and unconscious instruments.

I was walking along the monotonously elegant Boulevard Malesherbes, when I beheld the neat silhouette of M. Croche. Availing myself of his unconventional ways, and without any formalities, I walked on by his side. A quick look of recognition assured me of his acceptance of my company. He soon began to talk in that remote-sounding, asthmatic tone of voice, which, accentuated by the raw atmosphere, lent a strange quality of sound to his least remark: 'Among the institutions which France holds in honour is there any, do you think, as absurd as that of the Prix de Rome? I know this has been often said and still more often written, and without any apparent result, since it continues to flourish with the deplorable obstinacy that is characteristic of ridiculous ideas.' I ventured to remark that in certain circles it had become a kind of superstition; whether one had or had not gained the Prix de Rome settled the question of possessing talent one way or another. The proceeding might be a somewhat uncertain one, but, anyhow, it was convenient, and the accounts prepared for public opinion were easy to keep up. M. Croche whistled under his breath; but quite to himself, I think. . . . 'Yes, you have had the Prix de Rome. Observe, Monsieur, that I most certainly admit that facilities are thereby given to young people to travel quietly in Italy, and even in Germany. But why limit them to these two countries? And, very especially, why give them that hapless diploma, identifying them with prize stock? Besides, the phlegmatic way with which these academic gentlemen designate from among these young people one who shall be considered an artist, struck me as being very ingenuous. What do they know about it? Are they quite certain they are artists themselves? From whom do they derive the right to direct a destiny so fraught with mystery? Really they would be better advised, in such cases, to revert to the old game of drawing lots with straws. Who knows! chance is sometimes very psychical. . . . But one must think of some other plan. . . . It is better not to adjudicate on works written to order and of a form which makes it impossible to tell exactly if these young people do know their métier as musicians. If it is absolutely necessary to give them something, let it be a high-grade certificate of studies, but not a fancy certificate, for that is foolishly grotesque! This formality fulfilled, let them travel over Europe, choose their own master, or, if they can, let them find a worthy man who would teach them that art is not necessarily confined to monumental institutions that are subsidised by the State!'

M. Croche broke off with a painful cough, blaming his cigar. . . . 'It is a struggle,' he said, and pointing to his cigar, which was extinct, he reproached me ironically for talking too much, warning me that he would end by burying me under the 'accumulations of cigar-ash.' 'You must admit it is a charming pantheistic funeral pile; it intimates very gently that one must not imagine oneself of any great account, and that one should look upon the shortness of life as the most efficacious lesson.' Then, turning hastily to me: 'I was at Lamoureux's concert the day your music was hissed. You should feel grateful to those people for having been sufficiently excited to endure the fatigue of blowing into keys, which are usually useless as hostile weapons; they are generally supposed to be domestic instruments. It is much better to whistle through the fingers, after the fashion of the young butcher boys. . . . [one never ceases to learn. . . .]. On this same occasion M. Chevillard was again remarkable for his marvellous and many-sided understanding of music. He seemed to be playing the Ninth Symphony for his own separate pleasure, so much vigour did he put into his individual way of conducting it: it was above and beyond all customary praise.'

I could but acquiesce, only adding that making music for no other consideration than to serve the art to the best of my ability, it stood to reason that I had to run the risk of displeasing those who cared for 'one kind of music' to the extent of remaining jealously faithful to it in spite of its wrinkles and its paint.

'The people of whom we were speaking,' he resumed, 'are not the culprits. You should blame the artists who perform the weary task of serving the public and keeping it in rueful apathy. To this wrongdoing one must add the fact that those artists did enter the strife for a while, just long enough to gain a place in the market; but as soon as the sale of their product was assured they quickly retreated, seeming to beg the public's pardon for the trouble it had had to traffic with them. They turn their backs resolutely on their own youth and stagnate in their success, incapable of working their way to the glory fortunately reserved for those whose lives, devoted to the quest of a myriad impressions and unceasingly diversified forms, have terminated in the blissful knowledge of having fulfilled their true vocation; these obtain what one might call the "rearguard" success, if the term "success" did not sound despicable when placed by the side of the word "glory."'

'Finally, to lay stress on a recent example, I find it difficult to conceive how it is possible to preserve one's respect for an artist who was once so full of enthusiasm and sought only for rightful fame. . . . I have a horror, Monsieur, of sentimentality! But I wish I could forget that his name is Camille Saint-Saëns.' I replied simply, 'Monsieur, I have heard "Les Barbares."' He rejoined, and with more feeling than I had suspected him capable of: 'How is it possible to go so far astray? How can he forget that he helped to make Liszt and his tumultuous genius known, and that he worshipped the good old Bach? Wherefore this unhealthy craving to write operas, lowering himself from Louis Gallet to Victorien Sardou? Why does he propagate the detestable fallacy that one must write "for the stage," which will never be equivalent to writing music?

I tried timidly to put forward one or two arguments, such as 'Are these "Barbares" worse than some other operas which you have not mentioned? Or ought we, on account of it, to forget all that Saint-Saëns was?' M. Croche interrupted me quickly: 'This opera is worse than others because it is by Saint-Saëns. He owed it to himself, and still more to his art, not to set that novel to music. It has been said that an archaic aroma pervades the whole of it, including the farandole; and that it is a faint echo of that "Street in Cairo" which was the one success of the Exposition of 1889. But its archaism is dubious. The whole of it shows a laboured striving for effect prompted by a libretto in which the "jokes" for the suburbs naturally make the music ridiculous. The acting of the singers, the staging (for all the world as if it was meant for a sardine-box), of which the opera-house sullenly keeps the tradition, destroy the whole spectacle and all hope of art. Some good friend should tell him that he has composed enough music, and that he would do better to revert to his old rôle of explorer.'

I offered M. Croche another cigar, hoping he would continue the conversation; he took it, saying, by way of farewell: 'Excuse me, Monsieur, but I would rather not spoil this one . . .'

As I had walked some distance past my house, I retraced my steps, ruminating on the querulous impartiality of M. Croche. On the whole I think it was tinged with that vexation of spirit that we get from people we have greatly loved in bygone days, from whom the slightest sign of change seems tantamount to treachery. I tried also to picture M. Saint-Saëns on the night of the first representation of 'Les Barbares,' remembering, amid the applause that greeted him, the sound of the hisses on the occasion of the first performance of the 'Danse Macabre,' and it pleased me to think that remembrance was not displeasing to him.

La Revue Blanche, November 15, 1901.

Translated by Mrs. F. Shirley Liebich (Copyright).

MUSIC IN ENGLAND DURING THE FIRST HALF OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

BY JEFFREY PULVER.

James Anthony Froude, in the first chapter of his 'Reign of Henry VIII.,' says:

We allow ourselves to think of Shakespeare or of Raphael or of Phidias, as having accomplished their work by the power of their own individual genius; but greatness like theirs is never more than the highest degree of an excellence which prevails widely round it, and forms the environment in which it grows. No single mind in single contact with the facts of nature could have created out of itself a Pallas, a Madonna, or a Lear; such vast conceptions are the growth of ages, the creation of a nation's spirit; and artist and poet, filled full with the power of that spirit, have but given them form, and nothing more than form. Nor would the form itself have been attainable by any isolated talent. No genius can dispense with experience; the aberrations of power, unguided or ill-guided, are ever in proportion to its intensity, and life is not long enough to recover from inevitable mistakes. Noble conceptions already existing, and a noble school of execution which will launch mind and hand at once upon their true courses, are indispensable to transcendent excellence; and Shakespeare's plays were as much the offspring of the long generations who had pioneered his road for him, as the discoveries of Newton were the offspring of those of Copernicus.

In no branch of English art is this statement more happily illustrated than in music. The 'transcendent excellence' of our Elizabethan musicians was the 'offspring' of the 'noble conceptions' of the school of the dawning 16th century. In the first half of that century England possessed a school of music that was able to stand alone and unaided. While all Europe was dependent upon the Low Countries for chapel-masters, instrumentalists, and composers, this island was able to supply its own musical requirements if needs were, and supply them efficiently. It would be idle to institute comparisons between the musicians of Henry the Eighth's reign and their contemporaries of the Netherlands; such a comparison would only resolve itself into an unprofitable counterbalancing of excellences and shortcomings. Though in greatness of conception and breadth of outlook the Englishmen of that reign were surpassed by the Flemings, yet our native composers could show harmony and rhythm, firmness of handling, and dignified and artistic workmanship that made the English school, as Ambros rightly and justly observes, the sister of that of the Netherlands. We find in the music of England, at that period, a directness of purpose, a serious and learned handling of an art in which its exponents—in thorough keeping with the trend of contemporary thought—endeavoured, and successfully, to adhere to strict science, even at the expense of suppressed fancy. 'Cold understanding,' as Ambros has it, seems to be the keynote of this music, rather than unbridled emotion; dignity rather than warmth; a deep, true, and honest feeling rather than a superficial passion. In the Netherlandish school this simple dignity only shines through an intricate tracery of rich counterpoint; the English school of the early 16th century is rather characterised by conscientious workmanship, clean-cut technic in the smallest details, and purity of phraseology. All this gave our music 'a solid dignity which secured for it a place in the front rank of true art-works' (Ambros). It proves the point when we remember that the musicians of England at that time were the only ones outside of the Netherlands who attained to anything like the high position held by the latter country. Compared with Josquin, Fayrfax, Cornish, and others may not achieve pride of place; but then no one else in Europe did that. In such a comparison Adam of Fulda and Henry Isaac would fare no better. Of course, the great influx of foreign musicians into England during the reign of Henry VIII. could not possibly have left our music uninfluenced; but although the products of their respective countries were assiduously practised here, they did not materially change the broad outline of our style, but rather only rounded off the rough corners bred of insularity. In small matters the Italians and Frenchmen brought a certain lightness and variety, and it is only in the matter of a dance-form that Diligence, in his address 'to the famous peopel' (in Sir David Lindsay's play, 1540), says: 'Menstral blaw up one Brawl [Branle] of France.' In instrumental music especially we progressed in the first half of the 16th century, and, as Henry Davey remarks, 'about 1530 the Flemings were equalled, and England was again the most musical of nations until Palestrina in 1561 began the 161 years of Italian supremacy.' Vocal music was revived earlier, and Burney says: 'I have not only seen Masses in four, five, and six parts, composed by the natives of England, which are equally ancient with those on the Continent, but secular songs, in our own language, of two and three parts and in good counterpoint, of the 15th and beginning of the 16th century.' The comparatively high grade of the music of early Tudor England formed the gauge for the excellent—nay, unequalled for its period—music of the Elizabethan era. It is a period that contains Hugh Aston, Cornysse, Fayrfax, White, Tallis, Taverner, and many others, and thus merits more than passing attention.

Of the musicianship of the King himself, of the music at his Court, and in his Chapel, I have treated at another place (Monthly Musical Record, February, 1913). To show how closely Henry VIII. followed in the footsteps of his predecessor I need only quote one or two entries in the Book of Privy Purse Expenses of Henry VII. In 1501 (May 21) we find the entry: 'For a Lute for my lady Margaret [the King's eldest daughter, then about twelve years old, afterwards Queen of Scots], 13s. 4d.' On December 4 of the same year £2 was paid 'To the Princesse stryng Mynstrels at Westminster.' In 1502 (January 7): 'To one that sett the Kings Cleyvecordes, 10s. 4d.'; and on February 4: 'To one Lewes for a Morris daunce, £1 13s. 4d.' In 1504 (March 6): 'For a pr. of Clavycordes, 13s.' and on the same date 'To John Sudborough for a songe, £1.' In 1505 (July 25): 'To the Gentylnen of the Kinges Chappell for a drinke with a bucke, £2' was paid; and on August 1 of that year 'For a lute for my lady Mary, 13s. 4d.' Besides these there are entries referring to payments of sums of money to 'Waytes' of different towns, to bagpipers, harpers, &c. Music was ingrained in the national character; nothing was done without it. Our chroniclers have left us a sufficiency of accounts of masques and plays acted at Court, in the palaces of the nobility, and for the people; and when the King (Henry VIII.) sent a couple of English noblemen to accompany the Venetian Embassy to Greenwich to witness the May-day celebrations (1515), the very woods hid organists, singers, lutes, and flautists.

The English youth of the period was required to take music in his curriculum while he was passing through his years of study; and thus were laid the foundations of the Elizabethan edifice. Richard Mulcaster, Edmund Spenser's headmaster at the Merchant Taylors' School, was 'an enlightened teacher . . . who urged the importance of instruction in music and singing' (Sir Sidney Lee), and it was teachers such as these who prepared the mind of the coming generation for the glorious music of England under Elizabeth. Sir Thomas Cromwell was likely to have been unusually careful in his children's training; and in a letter written by the tutor (Henry Dowes) of his son (Gregory Cromwell) we read that the youth studied well and that 'the residue of the day he doth spend upon the lute and virginals.'

To regard the music of Sir Thomas More from the point of view of intrinsic merit may not be worth our while, for, as far as we know, there is no evidence of his having attained to the degree of musical knowledge reached by his royal executioner. But as an example of a class—studious, learned, politically and economically-occupied—he may stand as a type. As he viewed music, many of his contemporaries in his position did also, and in treating of him in this aspect we learn of the status of music in many similar houses. Already early in life More would 'suddenly step in among the players and masquers who made merriment for the Archbishop [Cardinal Morton, in whose household young More was], and, never studying for the matter, would extemporise a part of his own presently among them.' Erasmus, who loved

More so well that he once wrote: 'My affection for the man is so great that if he bade me dance a horn-pipe, I should do at once what he bid me,' gives us some information of the music made in More's household. He taught his first wife, an utterly uneducated woman, something of books and music, and thus made of her a true companion. His second wife he made to learn the 'harp, cithern, guitar, and (it is said) the flute, and practise in his presence every day' (Lee). At dinner and supper he entertained his family with high moral purpose; he allowed them, for their recreation, to sing or to play on viols. Lee tells us further that More seldom missed attendance at the Chelsea Parish Church, and would sing in the choir, wearing a surplice. The musical establishment of Cardinal Wolsey was on a lavish scale. 'Of singing priests' he had 'ten, besides a Master of the Children.' In addition, 'The Seculars of the Chapell, being singing-men, twelve; singing children, ten, with one servant to waite upon them' ('Life of Wolsey,' by his Gentleman-Usher, Cavendish). In the matter of expenditure, if not of musical excellence, too, the Cardinal's music could not have been far behind that of the King.

(To be continued.)

THE ALHAMBRA SEASON.

Several more or less familiar ballets have been added to the répertoire of the Diaghileff Ballet at the Alhambra, but the interest in them has been overshadowed by the success of a brilliant new production, 'La Boutique Fantasque,' the first that these gifted people have actually 'created' in England. The music is taken from the slight but amusing pieces with which Rossini used occasionally to surprise the many friends who gathered round his luncheon table at Passy. This was after he had definitely abandoned his operatic career, leaving a projected 'Faust' unfinished. The pieces bear mostly humorous titles, and some of them contain sly musical references to his contemporaries. They are French rather than Italian in character, and at moments even foreshadow the coming of that other jovial musician, Emmanuel Chabrier. More frequently, however, they reveal an affinity with Offenbach, for whom Rossini had a warm admiration. In fact the number which serves for a Can-can is entitled 'Caprice Offenbachique.' It would be easy to belittle this amiable musical persiflage, but it is not unworthy of the best period of the opéra-bouffe, and consequently well in keeping with the period portrayed in the ballet, which is that of the Second Empire in France, or the Mid-Victorian in England. One need only place these two designations side by side to realise its paradoxical quality. It is at the same time naive and artificial, austere and frivolous. It is this paradox that has attracted both André Derain, who has designed the scenery and costumes, and Massine, who has planned the choreography. The former in some measure continues the paradox, for he is a classicist in colour and design and a neo-primitive in expression. Massine, on the other hand, concentrates upon reality as he sees it and feels it through the medium of the conventions of 1865. The result is a remarkably harmonious piece of merriment, in which the various elements dovetail with a completeness that suggests one controlling mind. Even Ottorino Respighi, who has scored Rossini's pieces, is influenced by it, for he has resisted all temptations to make orchestral effects which might be clever though incongruous, and has produced a score which has just the right lucidity.

The dancing is, of course, wonderful. The story, which takes place in a toy-shop, has by now been told and re-told. The separate numbers danced by the dolls are too numerous for detailed mention. Of them all it is the Can-can of Mlle. Lopokova and M. Massine which is the gem. The popular success of this fascinating production has been commensurate with its artistic value. All London flocked to see it.

The other ballets added to the list are 'Narcisse,' 'Cleopatra,' 'Thamar,' and 'Midnight Sun,' in the last of which Madame Zoia Rosovsky once more sang the two charming songs from Rimsky-Korsakoff's early opera 'The Snow-Maiden.' The music of 'Narcisse' is by Tcherepnin, who has used great skill but somehow contrived to fall between two styles.

The new ballet 'The Three-cornered Hat,' music by Manuel de Falla, was produced too late for inclusion in this notice.

The symphonic interludes remained a striking feature of the Alhambra programmes, and have included several novelties. Unfortunately, the habit of listening to music in a theatre has not yet gained the more fashionable part of the audience. To hear to advantage one must migrate to the upper regions, where democracy enforces respect alike for art and for other people's enjoyment. The unfamiliar Russian works included Liadoff's rustic scene 'Près de la Guinguette'; Glinka's Caprice Brilliant on the theme of the 'Jota Aragonesa'; Dargomizsky's Fantasy on Finnish themes, which is astonishingly modern considering its date; Moussorgsky's Intermezzo in modo classico (which, despite its title, is thoroughly Russian—the composer himself having afterwards revealed the source of its inspiration—and is fully described in Calvocoressi's book); the Scherzo from the Symphony in E flat which Stravinsky wrote when still a student at the Petrograd Conservatoire; and Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Chanson Russe,' which is an orchestral version of 'Doubinouchka,' a revolutionary song of Russian workmen which was strictly forbidden under the Tsarist regime, and which involved the composer, not for the first time, in some trouble with the authorities.

The French works added to the list include a charmingly scored dance, based on folk-tunes of the Languedoc, which forms an interlude in Deodat de Séverac's opera 'Le Cœur du Moulin'; a clever orchestral version by Ernest Ansermet, the conductor of the Ballet orchestra, of two of the Valses Romantiques which Chabrier wrote originally for two pianofortes; and an orchestral version of Ravel's 'Alborada del gracioso.' It is obviously impossible in the space at our disposal to consider so many works in detail. The mere enumeration of them is sufficient to show how interesting these interludes have been, and how attractive to musicians in these days when the prohibitive cost of rehearsals deters the standard orchestras from introducing many new works at their concerts.

We have reserved two English novelties for the end, one of which need receive little comment here, as it was reviewed in the July number of this journal. It is Eugène Goossens's 'Four Conceits,' of which he conducted the first performance, M. Ansermet taking charge of the subsequent repetitions. The other novelty consisted of three orchestral pieces by Lord Berners (Gerald Tyrwhitt), entitled respectively 'Chinoiserie,' 'Valse Sentimentale,' and 'Cossack Dance.' The composer is a friend and pupil of Stravinsky, but apart from certain matters of technical procedure there is little in these pieces to suggest 'undue influence.' There is in them a strong vein of humour which expresses itself rhythmically in the first and third, harmonically in the second, and instrumentally in all three. They met with a very cordial reception, which is the more gratifying as a mixed audience such as that which gathers at the Alhambra would have had some excuse for regarding them as 'caviare.' The 'Valse Sentimentale,' in particular, makes demands on the assimilative power of all but the most inured ear, but it proved by no means the least popular of the three. M. Diaghilev is to be commended for producing these two strikingly original works by British composers. Perhaps now we shall hear them in the concert-room.

Towards the end of the season an orchestral version of Arnold Bax's 'Gopak' was added to the repertoire.

E. E.

ENGLISH SONG.

Mr. John Coates, having spent the last few years abroad in his country's service, has, like many another we hope, come back to enjoy the best that country can offer. After all, what view in France or Italy or further East equals that of Southampton Water on a clear morning, and what country is so good as Hampshire and Surrey as the train hurries or loiters on its way to Waterloo Station? There are many thousands of men who know the only answer to these questions now, and Mr. John Coates when he faced his London audience at Queen's Hall on June 23 seemed merely to put the same questions in another form. He seemed to say, Who can make songs like our songs, the things which our poets and musicians have been making for the last four hundred years, just as the grass grows and the hawthorns blossom, without any one troubling about them? He took a handful of them more or less by chance, and sang them in a way to make everyone feel with him their freshness, their joy, and their innocent energy. He took enough care in picking his nosegay to see to it that the twenty-one songs represented the work of as many composers. He was not quite so particular about the number of the poets, for Shakespeare and Tennyson each appeared twice, but he was particular about what mattered much more, that every song should be the setting of a real English lyric. There was not a line of doggerel or of false sentiment on the poetic side of the scheme. If there was ever a jar it was due to the fact that some composers are not as English as they would like to be. Does Martin Shaw really think it characteristic of a farm labourer to shriek 'She shall bear my son' at the top of a high tenor voice? The ending of his 'Love Pagan' took us away from the countryside to the footlights of Covent Garden in spite of the talk of 'brown beer' and 'red grain.' Again, Julius Harrison's setting of Gwendolen has surely missed the point of Hands fold round about the sword

Now no more of Gwendolen;

a point in which William Morris comes near to Sir John Suckling's in 'Why so pale and wan, fond lover,' though in more refined language. Suckling's is a very English view of an apathetic mistress, and Parry revelled in setting it:

If of herself she will not love,

Nothing will make her—

The Devil take her!

Julius Harrison is still wandering 'Twixt the sunlight and the shade,' while his hero takes his sword and resolves, however fruitlessly, to forget the lady.

Nevertheless every song in this programme was an honest attempt to get close to the feeling and form of the poem chosen, and quite seventy-five per cent. of them were much more than attempts, while a large proportion were masterpieces. It is not necessary to speak particularly of such classics as Morley's 'It was a lover,' Purcell's 'I'll sail upon the dog star,' and Arne's 'When icicles hang by the wall.' Among the present-day composers Mackenzie's 'Love flew in at the window' has a delicacy which is a little surprising from one whom most people regard as generally displaying both the virtues and the limitations of solid commonsense. When Roger Quilter sets such a poem as Blake's 'Dream valley' one expects and gets some musical reflection of the lines :

And fish for fancies as they pass
Within the wat'ry glass, while Vaughan Williams's 'Linden Lee' has the folk-song quality that it might be by anybody and belongs to everybody. Several of the modern composers had chosen old English poems or poems written in the old English style, and risked the charge of affectation for the delight of tuning their notes to them. One of the most brilliantly successful of these copies was H. S. Ryan's 'Maulte's come down,' the words his own, which Mr. Coates sang with a delicious twinkle of fun, almost a wink at the audience.

When we come to speak of the singing we must at once add to it the pianoforte playing of Mr. Anthony Bernard, who was always at one with the singer, and whose setting of Campion's 'Follow your saint' was one of the many songs which had to be repeated. These repetitions were not exactly 'encores.' Mr. Coates just chose what was specially enjoyed and sang it a second time. And it was his own enjoyment of everything which made a large part of the audience's pleasure. We might differ from him about this and that, but scarcely to the extent of recording it a month later. Our main concern is to express the hope that this is the first of many such programmes, and that the glow of Mr. Coates's enthusiasm for English life and song will long survive the signing of the Peace Treaty.

H. C. C.

THE EIGHTEENTH AND THE EARLY NINETEENTH CENTURY IN ENGLISH MUSIC.

BY F. A. HADLAND.

(Concluded from July Number, p. 350.)

The period at which we now arrive, embracing the first half of the 19th century, although fruitful and showing important developments, is, in a sense, the most difficult to write about for the purpose for which this series of articles was attempted. It would be a work of supererogation to dwell in this journal on the subject of some of the most celebrated composers whose careers, although they began in the first half of the 19th century, have terminated in some cases within the memory of persons still living.

Before proceeding to notice a few of the English musicians of the period whose figures are receding further and further into the past, it may be well to recall the name of the elder Wesley, if only to note the fact that the motets and other similar compositions of that great man do not exhaust the legacy which he left us, for his pianoforte and chamber music is important, although it seems to have passed into oblivion. Its occasional inclusion in concert programmes would be a feature of interest.

Dr. Crotch composed a few Sonatas for pianoforte, but his ultra-conservatism, embodied in the maxim 'New music, but no new style,' has not served to carry his secular compositions down the stream of time, although much of his Church music has well maintained its place.

Ebdon, of Durham, appears at the present day to depend for his fame on his Service in C, but he was one of the latest composers for the harpsichord, a set of Sonatas by him for that instrument having been published about 1780. Unfortunately, it seems difficult to get access to his secular works.

C. E. Horsley studied in Germany, and was an intimate friend of Mendelssohn. He left some chamber music, and a 'Phantasy' for pianoforte possesses a good deal of originality. Among the MSS. at the British Museum are the score and parts of a Symphony by him dedicated to the Society of British Musicians, and dated 1844.

In the library of the Royal Academy of Music are the works of T. M. Mudie, half a century ago a leading light among English musicians. A Symphony in B flat is said to be a fine work, but no opportunity for hearing it has occurred for many years. Perhaps one of our leading amateur Societies might take it up. The fact is being slowly recognised that English instrumental music of the last century does not necessarily spell dullness.

Charles Neate, who died at the age of ninety-three in 1877, left much music for the pianoforte, but it is perhaps due rather to his friendship with Beethoven and to his having been the first to play the 'Emperor' Concerto in England than to any other circumstance that his name finds a place in musical biography.

Cipriani Potter's 'Enigma Variations' for pianoforte have not quite lost their interest at the present day, and they are available, but a Sonata for pianoforte and horn by him, which might be of value, seems to be difficult of access.

Violoncello players may find it worth their while to resuscitate one or two of the Sonatas for that instrument and pianoforte by Thomas Powell, who brought out a set by subscription in 1827. He resided at Dublin, and an Introduction and Fugue for the organ 'as performed at the Cathedrals of Christ Church and St. Patrick's,' dated 1825, is in existence. 'Powell seems to have passed out of notice at the present day.

The fame of a few of Charles K. Salaman's songs has eclipsed his attainments in instrumental music, but an hour spent among his works is not lost, and one piece at any rate, a Saltarello, is worthy attention.

John Ross, of Aberdeen, who died in 1837, left some chamber music, of which, however, I have not been able to see a specimen.

It would appear that nothing but foreign ascendancy could have banished from the affections of oratorio-lovers the fine setting by the early 19th century composer, Matthew Peter King, of words from 'Paradise Lost,' under the title of 'The Intercession,' produced at Covent Garden in 1817. In this work occurs the beautiful air called 'Eve's Lamentation,' which, for pure spontaneous melody, it would be difficult to match. Upwards of a dozen Pianoforte Sonatas and similar works which enjoyed considerable reputation in their day remain to attest King's musicianship.

The general level of musical criticism was not high in the days of our grandfathers and great-grandfathers, and it was not creditable to the prevailing taste that three of the most characteristic geniuses of the period—J. L. Ellerton, H. H. Pierson, and R. L. de Pearsall—found the musical atmosphere of the Continent more congenial than that of their native land.

John Lodge Ellerton, who died in 1873, was a prolific composer of glees, songs, and vocal duets. Six Symphonies, four Overtures, three Quintets, fifty-four Quartets, and three Trios, are known to be his, and probably this does not exhaust the list. He studied at Rome, and through his life spent much time abroad. An interesting fact is his early friendship with Richard Wagner, at a time when the latter was hardly known, even by name, in England. Ellerton was highly appreciated in Germany, and some of his ten operas were produced there. In the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik of May, 1850, his Opus 100, a String Quartet, is reviewed. The critics severely handled his opera 'Domenica,' produced in 1838. Some of the instrumental music has been given at the summer resorts at Baden and on the Rhine. Ellerton lived much at Rüdesheim, and for many years—perhaps not without good reason—he made Germany his home.

This series of notes on some almost forgotten English composers and their works of the 18th and first half of the 19th century may be fitly closed by a few remarks on one, the latter part of whose career extended considerably beyond the limit named, for Henry Hugo Pierson did not cease composing till 1872, when his opera 'Contarini' was produced at Hamburg. But he entered public life as early as 1843, when, on the retirement of Sir Henry Bishop, he was elected to the Reid Professorship at Edinburgh.

This post he vacated almost immediately on finding it impossible to get acceptance for his views on the subject of reforms which, viewed from a modern standpoint, appear to have been necessary. He had already completed his studies in Germany, after being with Corfe, Attwood, and Walmisley, and to Germany he returned, to make it thenceforth his home. He visited England in 1852 for the production of his Oratorio 'Jerusalem' at the Norwich Festival. It was performed with a cast which included Louisa Pyne, Dolby, Viardot-Garcia, Lockey, Formes, Sims Reeves, and Belletti; but the London critics assailed the work with a storm of criticism, or rather abuse, of a most virulent type. Two factions existed—the supporters of Bexfield and those of Pierson—pitted against each other like the rival partisans of Handel and Buononcini. Pierson again visited England in 1869, and his unfinished Oratorio 'Hezekiah' was then produced—also at the Norwich Festival. It appears to have made a great impression, but the lapse of seventeen years had not abated the hostility of his English critics. He died at Leipsic in 1873, and lies buried in the quiet churchyard of Sonning, Berkshire, where a memorial stained-glass window has been erected.

His incidental music to Goethe's 'Faust' is an important work which found immediate acceptance when produced at Hamburg. At the Crystal Palace Manns performed three of his orchestral works—two concert-overtures, 'Romeo and Juliet' and 'As you like it,' and a symphonic-poem, 'Macbeth.'

Pierson's early career synchronised with the almost exclusive Mendelssohn cult in England, and his original and independent genius was at that time unable to attract the attention which a later generation might give it.

Without hoping for a revival of the two oratorios in their entirety, there seems to be no reason why the 'Faust' music and the three orchestral works above mentioned should not be heard.

An exceptionally interesting musical recital took place at All Saints' Church, Southampton, on June 4. A string quartet (Miss Gotch, and Messrs. F. Trott, F. Long, and L. A. Ladbroke) played Glazounov's Introduction and Fugue in C, and the Lento from Dvorák's F major Quartet, the organist (Mr. L. A. Ladbroke) played Franck's Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, four Transcriptions from Stcherbatcher, and pieces by MacDowell, and the choir sang anthems by Walthew, Tchaikovsky, and Handel.

Church and Organ Music.

BANDS IN CHURCH: SOME PRACTICAL HINTS.

BY ULRIC DAUBENY.

The question of supplementing the organ with orchestral instruments in church services has of late been occupying many minds, both lay and clerical, and although the organ will always hold its own in popularity, yet there seems considerable likelihood of some return to the use of small bands and orchestras, such as supplied the melody in public worship prior to the advent of the American organ and harmonium.

Although in many churches the introduction of some kind of band would be nothing of an innovation, in others such procedure might be viewed with considerable concern. Several puzzling questions will arise—e.g., where the players should be seated, how they should behave, and where they should rehearse. In a roomy church, a side-chapel communicating with the choir might naturally be deemed most suitable; failing this, the orchestra would no doubt be seated in the central passage of the choir. Music-stands could be quietly moved aside when the clergy wished to pass. The musicians would behave, of course, as the choir behaved (but infinitely better, all being 'grown ups'). Like the choir, too, they would be surprised. As to rehearsals, why not a parish room, or the vestry? Or, for the practice of music to be performed in church, the choir itself is surely the most suitable place, rehearsals being held no doubt at night, to meet the convenience of both organist and performers.

The organist in nearly every instance would be master of the ceremonies, though the writer has known a prominent vicar, replete in Mus. Doc. hood and surplice, to conduct choir and orchestra through an oratorio, back turned towards the congregation and seated at the entrance to the choir. Certain of the more complicated works, especially those demanding the presence of a soloist, may require the baton, but not so the ordinary service, with anthem and concluding voluntary.

A word here as a hint to organists, who perhaps play no orchestral instrument themselves, and are inexperienced conductors, save for their efforts with the choir.

Wind instrumentalists, at some time or another, are certain to be called on for at least a minor solo, and as soloists deserve special consideration from the conductor. Situations demanding tact will no doubt arise, and if the solo is obviously beyond the capabilities of the performer the organist must good-naturedly promise to play the part on the organ, 'in case of accident.' This much is well and good, but the writer once witnessed an amazing instance of pig-headedness which should stand as a warning for all time. An oratorio was being performed at a fashionable provincial church, and a local professional, a flautist of more than usual skill, was engaged to complete the orchestra. One of the vocal solos was accompanied by an important obbligato for the flute, and this the 'professional' of course commenced to play, only to find, as he proceeded, that every note of the obbligato was being doubled on the organ! Naturally he ceased to play, and sat for the remainder of the solo with his instrument across his knees, while the fatuous organist played on, in an ecstasy.

As a rule, amateur musicians, or others prepared to give their services for the sake of practice and experience, are not so numerous that the would-be director of a church orchestra can afford too much to pick and choose. No performer should be admitted unless he is reasonably efficient, but the instruments will no doubt be mixed—perhaps with several lamentable gaps—until the enterprise gains appreciation and popularity, and then, in larger parishes, there should be every reason to hope for forward steps. Strings are always fairly plentiful, with the exception of the viola and the bass, and besides being easily accommodated so far as music is concerned, there is an additional advantage in the fact that violinists, and such like, need not be so skilled as performers on the 'wind.' But the unsupported melody of strings is apt to become monotonous, and for church purposes nothing can approach the rich sustaining power of the wind. Most organists can arrange simple 'parts,' or fill in upon the organ those gaps in the orchestral score which occur through lack of performers. In the wind department, any instrument well played is welcome, more particularly the flute and clarinet, the trumpet or cornet, and the trombone. A carefully arranged quartet of brass or wood-wind is particularly effective, and a mixed quartet of any kind, even a trio, should receive hearty welcome in a village church.

There arises also the most important question of suitable music. The number of works for organ, orchestra, and voices, or for organ and orchestra alone, are of course too numerous to catalogue, but for such as are unacquainted with the character and scope of the many works available for church use, a very brief list is appended. At the same time it must be borne in mind that such a list can be only suggestive, not representative, the material from which to choose being so profuse.

Among the cantatas, and other works for voices, orchestra, and organ, may be named 'A Harvest Song' (C. Lee Williams), and a short but particularly charming work for autumn festivals, 'Harvest Cantata' (Garrett), which is justly popular among many similar works. Services scored for orchestra and organ abound, particularly effective being the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in F (Tours), and Stanford's Service in A. 'Sing, O heavens' (Sullivan's Festival Anthem) is issued with orchestral parts, and a liberal choice of anthems is found among such works as 'The heavens are telling,' and 'Hear my prayer.'

For orchestra and organ alone, as voluntaries, there exists a wealth of classical music on which to draw, e.g., the Pastoral Symphony from 'Messiah,' and that from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' (particularly effective for organ and strings); also the Symphony from Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' the Minuet from 'Samson,' and other parts of Handel overtures; Benedictus (Mackenzie), 'Solemn Melody' (Walford Davies), Melody in F (Rubinstein), 'Chanson Triste' (Tchaikovsky), the latter being obtainable arranged for strings and harmonium.

Among the numerous Marches suitable for church use, with organ and orchestra, as the concluding voluntary, may be suggested 'Cornelius March' (Mendelssohn), March from 'Athalia,' 'Marche Romaine' (Gounod), the March from 'Eli' (Costa), and from 'Sigurd Jorsalfar' Suite (Grieg).

Inquiries of any music-publishing firm will greatly supplement the above suggestions.

Particulars of a prize competition organized by the Catterall Quartet for a String Quartet by British composers can be obtained from Mr. Gerald C. Forty, c/o Messrs. Dale, Forty, & Co., 80-83, New Street, Birmingham.

At the Masonic Peace Festival held in the Albert Hall on June 27, Colonel W. R. J. McLean, C.B.E., T.D., Assistant Adjutant-General, Past Grand Organist, who is a Mus. Bac., Dunelm., was promoted to the rank of Past-Deputy Grand Sword-Bearer.

DR. MACPHERSON'S THANKSGIVING TE DEUM.

This setting* of the Church's great hymn was composed for the Service of Thanksgiving held in St. Paul's Cathedral on July 6, when it was performed with brilliant and imposing effect by choir and orchestra under the composer's direction.

It opens with a stately diatonic phrase for brass:

Ex. 1. Andante maestoso.

ORGAN. f (Reeds.)

which dominates the whole work. In addition to its appearance under varying guises and in different keys between the various sections, it is from this phrase that the composer has largely developed his material, both vocal and instrumental. Rhythmically altered, it provides the instrumental figure which accompanies the first entry of the voices. A descending scale-passage in the bass is also made much use of, its appearance, either in the bass or in some other part, being very persistent in the opening and closing sections. In the latter it has a jubilant, bell-like effect. Exx. 2 and 3 illustrate different ways in which the composer utilises his opening theme:

Andante maestoso.

Ex. 2. ff

ly, Ho

Andante maestoso.

Lord. God, God of Sa -

ly. Lord. Lord God of Lord, . .

Here it appears in the accompaniment, changed not only rhythmically, but tonally. In Ex. 3 the organ part gives it in two forms:

ORGAN MUSIC OVERSEAS.

We receive frequent evidence of the good work done by organists in the more remote quarters of the world. From Sydney, N.S.W., comes a batch of programmes of recitals given by Miss Lilian Frost at Pitt Street Congregational Church. Miss Frost draws her items from many sources, and plays not only good organ music, but excellent transcriptions as well. Dr. A. E. Floyd has recently given a recital at St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne, playing amongst other good music Harwood's Dithyramb, two movements from Widor's fourth Symphony, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, and a Saint-Saëns Rhapsody. Miss Lorna Stirling and Mr. Gibson Young joined him in a couple of movements from Bach's Double Concerto in D minor. At St. Thomas's Cathedral, Bombay, Dr. E. Faulkner recently played Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue, Bonnet's Variations de Concert, Cresser's Andante Fughetta, and his own Melody in F. The recitals at Auckland Town Hall, by Mr. Maughan Barnett, the City organist, continue to be models of their kind—a mixture of fine, serious organ music with lighter strains and transcriptions. Excellent programme notes are a helpful feature. Mr. David Nicholson gave a recital at St. Andrew's Church, Campbellford, Ontario, on June 17, an attractive programme being drawn from Boëllmann, Stainer, Hollins, Purcell, J. Mansfield, Wolstenholme, Lemare, Bach, and Faulkes. A collection was made on behalf of 'The Musicians' Gift to the Forces.'

ORGAN RECITALS.

- Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson; Intermezzo, Hollins; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Fugue in G minor, Bach.
- Mr. Herbert Gisby, at St. Thomas's, Regent Street (four recitals)—'En forme d'Ouverture,' Smart; Andante in G, S. S. Wesley; Grand Chœur No. 2, Hollins; Cradle Song and March in B flat, Grieg; Scherzo, Parker; Allegro from Sonata No. 2, Borowski; Prelude and Idylle (Sonata No. 14), Rheinberger; March in A, Grieg.
- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Epithalame, Vienne; Toccata and Fugue in F, Bach; Final, Franck.
- Mr. F. G. Mitford Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holborn (two recitals)—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Fantasia in F, Best; Overture in C and Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; 'The Storm,' Lemmens; Grand Solemn March in E flat, Smart.
- Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, St. John the Evangelist's, Edinburgh (five recitals)—Solemn Melody, Walford Davies; Overture in C minor, Hollins; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; 'En Bateau,' Debussy; Choral No. 3, Franck; Pastorale and Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet; Sonata No. 2, Borowski; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant.
- Mr. Derek E. Kirkland, Holy Trinity, Margate (two recitals)—Introduction and Allegro (Sonata No. 1), Guilmant; Theme and Variations, Tchaikovsky; Fantasia, Dubois; Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Slow Movement from Sonata No. 4, Boyce.
- Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (four recitals)—Recessional March, Ellingford; Marche Pontificale, Widor; Introduction and Fugue in E flat, William Russell; 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' Ernest Austin; Three Impromptus, Coleridge-Taylor; Allegro, Molto Vivace (Irish Symphony), Stanford; Toccata in F, Bach; 'Holsworthy Church Bells,' S. S. Wesley; Sonata No. 12, Rheinberger.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Rhapsody in D, Saint-Saëns; Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford; Prelude, Variation, and Fugue, Franck; Carillon, Vienne; Legend, Dvork.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (five recitals)—Meditation and Grand Chœur, Klein; Prelude to 'The Dream of Gerontius,' Fugue in G minor, Trio in D minor, Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Prelude and Fugue in G, Mendelssohn; 'Finlandia,'
- Mr. Albert Orton, Walton Parish Church, Liverpool—Concerto in D minor, Handel; March in D, Silas; 'Pomp and Circumstance.'
- Mr. H. Percy Richardson, St. Chad's, Far Headingley—Cantabile and Choral, Franck; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guilmant; 'The Holy Boy,' Ireland; 'La fille aux cheveux de lin,' Debussy; 'Au berceau,' Grieg; Divertissement, Vienne; Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor.

Mr. Herbert Grant, Holy Trinity, Margate (two recitals)—Grand Chœur and Grand March, Hollins; Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Toccata, Boëllmann.

Mr. F. Gandy Bradford, St. Andrew's, Exmouth—Fantasia and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata in A minor (first movement), Borowski; Grand Chœur in D and Invocation, Guilmant.

Mr. Norman Collie, St. Martin's, Brasted—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Andantino (Symphony No. 4), Tchaikovsky; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Suite in F, Corelli.

Mr. W. Henry Maxfield, Besses Congregational Church—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Offertoire in E, Dubois; Andante in F, Smart.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Mary Abchurch (four recitals)—March, Perelli; Fugue in D, Guilmant; Finlandia; Concerto in G minor, Camidge. St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (two recitals)—Coronation March, Tchaikovsky; March on a Theme by Handel, Guilmant. Chigwell Church—Requiem, Harwood; Grand Chœur, Guilmant. Buckhurst Hill Wesleyan Methodist Church—Overture, 'Occasional' Oratorio; Serenade, Pierné; Allegro, Dupuis.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. Arnold Bagshaw, organist and choirmaster, Attercliffe Parish Church, Sheffield.

Mr. William Bell-Porter, organist and choirmaster, Holy Innocents, Hammersmith.

Mr. H. Hugh Fowler, organist and choirmaster, St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton.

The Rev. N. C. Woods, priest-organist at Biggleswade Parish Church.

Letters to the Editor.

'FAIR PLAY FOR THE PROFESSIONAL.'

SIR,—The letter of 'An unsuccessful candidate' in your July number reminds me of an experience. A few years ago I applied for a post in Canada which was advertised here in London, and in due course received a very kindly letter saying that 'my testimonials . . . were entirely satisfactory, &c., but that they felt it would be a great wrench for me to sever my connection with relatives and friends in England [a point surely for my consideration], and therefore had decided to elect an organist already in the place.' But how many other candidates in England applied, I wonder? Here is another matter which I had before thought of writing about. It would be interesting perhaps to know how many amateur gentlemen organists and choirmasters are holding appointments and receiving, in some cases, a fairly good salary, and at the same time are filling good positions in professions or businesses other than music? I am not questioning the musical ability of the amateur organist—but is this fair to the professional?—Yours, &c.,

55, Clapton Common, E. 5.

W. M. WAIT.

A CHANCE FOR NEW NATIVE WORKS.

SIR,—May I beg the courtesy of your columns to draw attention to a generous offer on the part of Mr. Vasco Akeroyd, the conductor of the well known Akeroyd Orchestra, Liverpool? He has come forward in a very sporting manner, and offered to perform a new British orchestral work, and also a new chamber work, at each of his concerts next season. So far he has received little response from composers, and probably the offer is not yet sufficiently widely known, but it is important that he should receive the scores as early as possible.

Will composers who are desirous of having their works performed kindly send their scores at once to Mr. William Rushworth, honorary local representative of the British Music Society, 11, Islington, Liverpool?

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL

(Hon. Director, British Music Society).

19, Berners Street, W.-1.

(Continued on page 422.)

Grant, we beseech Thee, merciful Lord.

ANTHEM FOR SOPRANO SOLO (AD LIB.) AND CHORUS (S.A.T.B.).

Collect for the 21st Sunday after Trinity.

Composed by HAROLD RHODES.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

SOPRANO SOLO (OR FULL).

Andante con moto.

p

Grant, we be - seech Thee, mer - ci - ful Lord, . . to Thy faith - ful

Andante con moto. ♩ = 100.

ORGAN. p

Man.

cres.

peo - ple par - don and peace, that they may be cleans - ed from all their

cres.

f

sins, and serve Thee . . with a qui - et mind.

f dim. Ped.

Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

FULL.
SOPRANO.

Grant, we be - seech Thee, mer - ci - ful Lord, . . to Thy faith - ful peo - ple

ALTO.

Grant, we be - seech Thee, mer - ci - ful Lord, . . to Thy faith - ful peo - ple

TENOR.

Grant, we be - seech Thee, mer - ci - ful Lord, . . to Thy faith - ful peo - ple

BASS.

Grant, we be - seech Thee, mer - ci - ful Lord, . . to Thy faith - ful peo - ple

p (Accompaniment ad lib.)cres.

par - don and peace, that they may be cleans - ed from all their

cres.

par - don and peace, that they may be cleans - ed from all their

cres.

par - don and peace, that they may be cleans - ed from all their

cres.

par - don and peace, that they may be cleans - ed from all their

cres.

sins, and serve Thee . . with a qui - et mind; . . . through Je - sus sins, and serve . . Thee . . with a qui - et mind; . . . through Je - sus sins, and.. serve Thee . . with a qui - et mind; . . . through Je - sus

sins, and serve Thee with a qui - et mind; . . . through Je - sus

Christ our Lord. A - - - - - men.

Christ . . . our Lord. A - - - - - men.

Christ . . . our . . . Lord. A - - - - - men.

Christ our Lord. A - - - - - men.

(Continued from page 418.)

'THE SPIRITUAL FOUNDATIONS OF RECONSTRUCTION.'

SIR,—Your reviewer (July) falls foul of the authors of the above work. They are 'amateurs.' We agree that we are. But in all walks of life it unfortunately happens that the professional has recurrently to be taught his duty and to be saved from his narrowness by the amateur. Of all professional men the musician is perhaps the narrowest. For him, science, pictorial and plastic art, literature, civics, frequently have no existence. This is exactly the case, to all appearance, with your reviewer.

He speaks of the excellence of school choirs, and apparently expects everyone in the nation to belong to them. (Where would the audiences be?) There is to be (by implication) no passionate devotion to science, or art, or anything else except music. Everybody is to be an executant, paying fees, of course, to the professional musician. The man in the street will not exist.

We, on the other hand, can discover only a limited value in school choirs or any choirs, for, as educationists, we are thinking of many arts and interests besides music. If your reviewer is capable of grasping the idea of realising that the world was not made for the musician, but the musician for the world; that time has to be found for astronomy, for history, for discussion of civic and political questions, and for a hundred other things, he will perhaps understand the meaning of our book. Or let him read an exactly similar plea to his own from some other narrow professional, say the scientist.

I have no doubt his criticisms of our celebrations are valid enough. We have ourselves asked musicians and other people to co-operate in devising better ones. But the best argument on behalf of our book is your reviewer's state of mind.—Yours, &c.,

F. H. HAYWARD
(Joint Author).

87, Beethol Road, N. 16.

['FESTE' writes:—I did not 'fall foul' of the authors of 'The Spiritual Foundations of Reconstruction' on the ground that they were amateurs, but because their suggestions in musical matters struck me as being retrograde. On reconsidering the matter I adhere to that opinion, for which I gave reasons. The authors can 'only discover a limited value in school choirs or any choirs.' The weight of educational opinion is against them here, if we may judge from the great and successful endeavours to cultivate choral singing in our schools and elsewhere. I should have thought that the physical and social benefits derived from such singing would have been too apparent to need pointing out.

Most musicians will discover 'only a very limited value' in listening to fragments of a Beethoven Symphony played on the school pianoforte, or 'portions of' various funeral marches. I confined my remarks to the musical side of the book because I was writing in a musical journal. I thought I had made that clear, but Dr. Hayward regards the fact as a proof of 'narrowness.' In sticking to the musical side of the question, I was also sticking to my last,—not a bad thing to do. Dr. Hayward has nothing to say in regard to my chief quarrel with the authors, which was on the score of their cold-shouldering native music of all kinds. But after all, as Dr. Hayward has no doubt that my criticisms of the celebration schemes are valid enough, and as he somehow or other discovers in my 'state of mind' the best argument in favour of the book, he must be much more pleased with me than appears from his letter.]

STRAVINSKY AND HIS CRITICS.

SIR,—Prejudiced people are incapable of analysing anything, even the writings of critics. The idée fixe is a pathological affliction which, while evoking pity, must be restrained.

Mr. Mortimer Cattley makes it plain that the obsolete clichés of academic theory are idées fixes in his case.

His description of Stravinsky's polytonic music as 'enharmonic' is absurd. He cannot think outside the time-worn platitudes of the text-books, which serve as glossaries for the time-server who cannot define things for himself.

Stravinsky has definitely repudiated the diatonic mode. The term 'enharmonic' has no sane significance in music except in relation to that mode and the harmonic system derived from it. That system does not constitute the basis of, or apply to, a large amount of modern music. It is also absurd to term Stravinsky's treatments of sound-combination (particularly the block-transpositions of combined tonal-planes) 'modulations.'

The use of old terms for new types would make others almost as confused as Mr. Cattley.

As Professor Granville Bantock recently remarked to me, academic terminology is outworn; the major part of first-class modern composition has no relationship to the accepted rules of musical theory, nor is there a text-book in English which conclusively and satisfactorily explains the basis of modern musical practice. This is true. How can the definitions derived from a system of harmony based on a scale of seven tones apply to practices based on a scale of twelve tones? The bulk of modern composition is against Mr. Cattley. If he disregards the facts of musical life, he should found a musical monastery, not dabble in that life. He assumes that I regard Stravinsky as 'a unique phenomenon, without ancestry or relation to his forerunners,' simply because I state that that composer's music 'marks a new direction in musical art.' Personally I have always regarded the term 'new' as relative to 'old.' Perhaps Mr. Cattley also indulges in new definitions. But it is difficult to comprehend how a 'new direction' can be given to something which has not been palpably existent, and moving in another direction before. I am afraid that Mr. Cattley is so busy nosing after classical footsteps on the path of musical evolution, that he knows nothing of the distances that path covers nor is aware when it has taken a new turning.

The phrase 'metaphysical significances' (misquoted in sense by Mr. Cattley) was occasioned by thought of the avowed theosophical 'programme' of Scriabin. I distinctly stated that Stravinsky is no musical philosopher.

Mr. Cattley, however, is covert. It is not so much my article he dislikes, as the music of Stravinsky, about which it is written. Had I used the most abstruse phraseology and terminology towards one of his favourites, it might have passed him by.

I admit that my language is at times involved. Like the burglar caught at the safe, 'things is against me.' I have unprecedented things to deal with in Stravinsky's music, and since I write of them and not about them, not apostolically but as a sincere student of his work, I cannot rest satisfied with any easy makeshift of academic theoretical stock definitions. Hence, tackling new quantities, I may be clumsy, but Mr. Cattley should be above being agitated by my struggles.

I might point out, in reference to Mr. Cattley's phrase 'literary disciples,' that I am a musician who has gone through a very complete academic training, and in so far as affects my personal taste and methods am my own master. Beyond a few poems, some exceedingly good and some exceedingly bad, I have never evinced any literary aspirations.—Yours, &c.,

LEIGH HENRY.

July 14, 1919.

SIR,—In writing to you on the subject of Stravinsky, I referred inadvertently to a certain work as 'Biroulki.' The correct title of these little pieces is 'Pribaoutki.'—Yours, &c.,
8, Warbeck Road, W.-12. MORTIMER CATTLEY.

July 13, 1919.

In addition to the twelve performances of British Music-Drama at Glastonbury Festival, August 18 to 30, a special feature will be made of concerts of British chamber music. On August 20 Miss Marie Hall will give a recital of early and modern British Violin Sonatas, including John Ireland in A minor. On Sundays, August 17 and 24, there will be two free quartet concerts led by Mr. Harold Batten, and on Wednesday, August 27, Dr. Edmund Fellowes will explain the work of the Elizabethan Madrigalians.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths :

JOHN WILLIAM TAYLOR, senior partner of the well-known firm of John & Denison Taylor, bell-founders, of Loughborough, died June 4, 1919. He was born May 23, 1853, and educated at Loughborough Grammar School. Justly proud of his calling, he was skilled in every detail of the bell-founder's art. Amongst other things he was a very clever amateur photographer, and a fine specimen of his work is the beautiful illustration of Malines Cathedral in the Musical Times of April, 1915. He was a most enthusiastic change-ringer, and rang no less than two hundred and twenty peals, ninety-eight of which he conducted. His greatest interest in recent years was in a much wider field dealing with the bell as a musical instrument, by bringing under control its harmonic tones. His successful experimental work in tuning these tones, the production of special machinery and appliances for tuning purposes, improvement in the design of the bell, and numerous things connected with bell-frame construction, will ever be honourably associated with his name. The many important works carried out by the firm during his lifetime were set forth at length in the Musical Times of February, 1918, and it is merely stating a fact to say that to John William Taylor we are principally indebted for the perfection of bell-founding and bell-tuning in this country. At the present time the best bells in the world are made in England, and by the modern methods of tuning a peal of bells should be in perfect tune to the exactness of a single vibration—a result never attained in the best tuned pianoforte or organ. For this we can be justly proud, never forgetting to whom we are indebted for such attainment. In private life he was amiable, genial, and generous, with a real appreciation of the funny side of things. His relation—to the writer of these lines—of certain circumstances and experiences would have made worthy contributions to the columns of Punch.

W. W. STARMER.

REGINALD CLARKE, in whose death the musical world sustains a very real loss. A New Zealander by birth, he made his début on the concert-platform at the age of eight, in Auckland, coming to this country some years later to study at the Royal College of Music. His sympathetic accompanying quickly won him a foremost place in that branch of music to which he chiefly applied himself, whilst he also became known as a solo pianist, teacher, and composer. His compositions include both pianoforte works and songs, one of the best known of the latter being 'The ladies of St. James's.'

From the beginning of the war, being medically unfit for active service, he devoted himself heart and soul to cheering wounded soldiers, visiting hospitals (especially the Second London General Hospital) practically daily, often playing in the wards for hours at a stretch when he should have been in bed on account of his own ill-health. Whenever there were any specially bad cases, both nurses and patients would beg of him the music in whose curative powers he himself had such faith.

His untiring efforts in this direction undoubtedly hastened his end. He died on May 25, at the age of forty-seven, just after the demobilisation of the hospital to which he had so long and so faithfully given himself.

His charming personality and great musical gifts will long be missed by those among his fellow artists who had the privilege of knowing him.

Sixty Years Ago.

WANTED. By a Gentleman, who has a powerful and rich TENOR VOICE, and who has taken the principal part in a Cathedral for many years, a Situation of a similar kind in a London Choir, with small salary. The highest testimonials can be given, both with regard to musical ability and moral character. Address, in first instance, E.F., care of Mr. Novello, 69, Dean-street, Soho, London.

We cannot inform our Correspondent 'who Eurynthe was.' One gentleman informs us he has read the story, but cannot tell where, nor what it is about; he adds that the libretto of the opera is the most rapid and worthless of its class. In a French notice of the life and works of Weber, the libretto is spoken of as cold and colourless—but such as it is, it may be obtained in German and in French of Schott & Co., in Regent Street, should our correspondent choose to pursue the enquiry. We suspect Eurynthe to be a member of the family of the celebrated Mrs. Harris.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—On Tuesday, the 19th, the annual performance, in the Handel Orchestra, of the Metropolitan Charity Schools took place, under the direction of Mr. Bates. Forty-two schools supplied the various quotas of children, and the whole vocal force amounted to above 4,000 voices. The programme differed little from that of last year, and comprised the Old Hundredth Psalm; Mendelssohn's 150th Hymn, 'From Greenland's Icy Mountains'; the 19th Psalm (Nottingham); Mendelssohn's Chorale, 'Sleepers, wake!'; Luther's Hymn; Haydn's 295th Hymn; and the National Anthem. The singing was very creditable to the young vocalists, and was highly gratifying to the audience, who included a great number of the relations and friends of the children. There were upwards of 20,000 persons present.

ORGANIST APPOINTMENT.—Mr. Henry Hiles has been appointed organist and teacher of music to the Blind Asylum, Manchester, and Organist of St. Thomas's, Old Trafford. There were 30 applicants.

FLY FROM THE WORLD, O BESSY! TO ME.
Poetry and Music by T. MOORE. New Edition, in A flat, with the Music carried out to each verse. Price 2s.

It is announced that the Queen's Hall subscription concerts of the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society are to be resumed. During the war the Society, under the enthusiastic guidance of Mr. Joseph Ivimey, has built up a splendid record of work for the entertainment of soldiers and sailors and for the benefit of war charities.

Sir Henry Wood has accepted the musical direction of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and will conduct its five choral concerts next season, commencing on November 5, 1919.

Last month Major Mackenzie Rogan announced his intention of retiring from the conductorship of the band of the Coldstream Guards.

THE MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. GIFT.

TO PROVIDE MUSICAL ACTIVITIES AMONG THE MEN Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Prof. H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.

Hon. Secretary.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac.

Organizing Secretary.—Madame Lily Henkel.

Office.—Y.M.C.A., Music Section, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.-1.

Total received	£	s.	d.
Total received since December 31, 1918	4,018	0	0
Receipts during the month June 11 to July 10, 1919	1,097	0	0
	33	0	0

(a) THE MONTH'S PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ENTERTAINMENTS.

St. Mary's College, Lancaster Gate, W.—Madame Bertha Moore, O.B.E., per Miss Powell	£	s.	d.
	43	5	6

(b) THE MONTH'S ORGAN RECITALS.

Malvern Priory Church—Dr. Louis A. Hamand ..	£	s.	d.
St. Mary Abchurch (additional).—Mr. Henry Riding	8	6	6
St. Andrew's Church, Campbellford, Ontario.—Mr. David Nicholson	0	10	0
	1	2	7
	£	s.	d.
	49	19	1

(c) THE MONTH'S COLLECTIONS AND DONATIONS.

Mrs. F. E. Hudson	£	s.	d.
Collection at Chanda, India, per Mrs. D. O. Witt ..	1	0	0
Collection at Musical Service, St. Martin-in-the-Fields, per Miss F. M. Warren	11	4	11
	2	9	11
	£	s.	d.
	14	14	10

The record for this month is rather disappointing. It would appear that an erroneous impression has been created, that, the Peace Treaty now having been signed, there is no further need for assistance. On the contrary, the need is, if possible, more imperative than ever. The troops have now more leisure, and it is most desirable that some of that leisure should be occupied in music.

Applications for assistance from this Fund are continually being received from new Centres which are being formed, as well as from those already in existence, and there are still many hundreds of men in hospitals and convalescent homes whose musical needs and aspirations have to be satisfied.

There are three ways in which help can be sent: First (and most important), money; secondly, disused instruments; thirdly, disused music and books on music.

Please help now; do not delay!

If intending to give a concert or entertainment for the Fund, apply for the authorisation to the above address.

The Glasgow Committee of the Y.M.C.A. Appeal was formed on October 11, 1918, the meetings, nine in all, having been held in the premises of Messrs. Paterson, Sons & Co., by kind permission of Mr. Murray. A report of its operations and a statement of account is subjoined.

Instruments given by the public and bought by the funds collected were as follow:

33 violins (bows and cases), 18 flutes, 7 piccolos, 7 cornets, 5 mandolines, 4 clarinets, 4 banjos, 4 guitars, 4 auto-harps, 3 melodeons, 2 gramophones and 12 records, 1 trombone, 1 phonograph (horn and records), 1 concertina, 1 accordion, 1 harmonium, 1 musical box, 1 tambourine, 1 zither. Many whistles, mouth-organs, harmonica-ocarinas, Jew's-harps, razors; several boxes of resin, bridges, &c.

These instruments were sent to France, through the agency of the London Receiving Depot, and a consignment sent to the Murman coast.

Many bundles of music of all sorts, including complete band parts, were also dispatched. The total amount collected was £167 1s. 10d. Purchase of instruments, music, and expenses, £136 2s. 2d., leaving a balance of £30 19s. 8d., which was left in hand for further appeal purposes.

On behalf of the Glasgow Committee,
 (Miss) AGNES MILLAR,
Hon. Secretary.

MUSICIANS' Y.M.C.A. APPEAL.

GLASGOW COMMITTEE.

SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Lady Weir	25	0	0
Mr. & Mrs. Nicholson	5	5	0
Bertie Heilbron, Esq.	5	5	0
Orpheus Choir (per Watson Dods, Esq.)	5	5	0
Mrs. James A. Allan	5	5	0
A. Murray, Esq.	4	0	0
Miss Agnes Millar	3	3	0
Andrew Harley, Esq.	3	3	0
J. R. Richmond, Esq.	3	3	0
Mrs. F. C. Gardner	3	0	0
Dr. & Mrs. Rothenburg	3	0	0
Anonymous	3	7	10
Devonbank School (per A. Black, Esq.)	2	5	0
George Barclay, Esq.	2	0	0
The Misses Blyth	2	0	0
Miss Dunlop	2	0	0
Mrs. Ewing	1	1	0
The Misses Melross	1	1	0
Dr. W. L. Reid	1	1	0
Messrs. Ewing & McIntosh	1	1	0
W. Nelson Gill, Esq.	1	0	0
G. F. McCallum, Esq.	1	0	0
Mrs. Mathieson	1	0	0
The Misses Steel	1	0	0
The Members of the Theatre Royal Orchestra ..	1	0	0
Miss Mary Sclanders	0	15	0
Miss Winifred Small	0	15	0
Rev. J. & Mrs. Fairley Daly	0	10	0
Mrs. W. S. Workman	0	10	0
Howard Croft, Esq.	0	5	0
Mrs. Rowley Orr	0	5	0
Mlle. Knight Souberain	0	5	0
Miss Campbell	0	2	6
The Girls of the Park School (per Miss Young) ..	15	0	0
The Pupils of Miss Agnes Millar	0	8	6

£171 1 10

CHORAL MUSIC AT THE PEACE CELEBRATIONS.

The Peace festivities in London on July 19 were notable for the great quantity and excellent quality of the 'choral music. Bands have always borne a prominent part on such occasions, but this was probably the first time choirs have figured largely. We regret that the event occurred too late in the month for full treatment in our pages. The first choral performance of the day took place near the Cenotaph in Whitehall, when the combined choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and the Temple Church sang Croft's sentences from the Burial Service, Goss's 'O Lord God, Thou strength,' Parry's 'There is an old Belief,' Walmisley's 'From all that dwell,' Byrd's 'Justorum animæ,' Charles Wood's 'True love's the gift,' and the hymns 'Rejoice, O land' (Knapp's 'Wareham'), 'Jesus, Lover of my soul' (Dykes's 'Hollingside'), 'For all the saints' (Vaughan Williams's 'Sine Nomine'), and 'Throughout the whole earth' (from 'Laud Deo'). Dr. Walford Davies conducted. During the procession a Welsh choir of about four hundred sang on the steps of the Duke of York's statue, their programme being drawn mainly from their native music.

During the afternoon choirs organized by the League of Arts sang in Regent's Park, Hyde Park, St. James's Park, Green Park, and at various suburban centres. At seven o'clock about five hundred singers from these choirs proceeded to Downing Street, where they gave a brief concert outside Mr. Lloyd George's house. They then proceeded to the Cenotaph, laid wreaths, and sang Shakespeare's 'Fear no more the heat of the sun,' to a plainsong melody, and 'O God, our help.'

In the evening the Imperial Choir defied the rain and repeated the programme they gave on Empire Day, plus the national anthems of the Allies, the hymn 'Rejoice to-day with one accord,' and an unofficial extra in 'Keep the home fires burning.' The singing was even better than at the former concert, and Dr. Harriss and his huge choir were warmly praised for so successfully rising superior to circumstances.

Everywhere throughout the day huge crowds showed in no half-hearted fashion their delight in a form of music that, so far as London is concerned, is generally kept indoors. The other entertainments, such as dancing and Shakespearean performances, were no less successful. The only complaint seemed to be that thousands who wished to enjoy them were prevented by the thousands in possession. That all these pleasant happenings (not forgetting fireworks, bonfires, and animal processions at the Zoo) should have been carried out with not merely the sanction, but also with the active co-operation of the Government, is a welcome sign of official recognition of art and amusement as factors in the social scheme. With the Ministry of Food also playing up with well-equipped refreshment marquees, everything was done to make London's open-air festivities as jolly and democratic as possible. The result was one on which the host of enthusiastic workers and organizers are to be heartily congratulated. Choral music has so fully proved its value as an adjunct to open-air festivities, that steps will probably be taken to develop the idea in various ways. We hope to deal with this subject in our September issue.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL VICTORY CELEBRATIONS.

On the afternoon of June 25 the Royal Albert Hall was the scene of a unique spectacle. The London County Council had organized a gigantic Victory Celebration for the children of its schools, and no fewer than ten thousand were joined together in song. As may be imagined, there was little room for an audience to participate in the ceremony; but those who were there to appreciate the wonderful effect will not easily forget it. Among many striking impressions we recall most vividly the interpretations of Handel's 'O lovely peace' by a sectional choir of over a thousand voices, and of 'A ballad of the ranks' by Sir A. Conan Doyle and Sir C. V. Stanford. Dr. John E. Borland conducted, and Mr. H. L. Balfour was at the organ. A companion ceremony was held at the Royal Albert Hall on June 28, when a choir of two thousand students of the L.C.C. Evening Institutes sang under Dr. Borland's direction. Their programme included Stanford's Te Deum in B flat, Bridge's 'The Flag of England,' W. P. Rivers's arrangement of 'Rule, Britannia,' and the 'Hallelujah Chorus.' On July 16 some twenty thousand L.C.C. school children attended Thanksgiving Services at St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, Westminster Cathedral, the Great Synagogue, and other prominent places of worship in London.

ROYAL OPERA SEASON.

MASCAGNI'S 'IRIS.'

If there has been little that is new at the Royal Opera during the month, there can be no cause for complaint. There is plenty to be done to make the répertoire representative without touching any of the more recent works. It was a desire to catch up with things operatic that no doubt induced the Syndicate to put Mascagni's 'Iris' before its subscribers, for it is not a new work. As a matter of fact it comes of age this year, since it was first produced in 1898. It should have been heard before, and had that been the case it would have been better for the composer's reputation, which as it is has become a settled thing so far as this country is concerned, for 'Iris' will do nothing to affect it and nothing to augment it. One and twenty years ago we should have said that Mascagni was wisely developing his operatic style on the accepted model, namely, Wagner. To-day, when the Wagnerian principle is in general use, its particular application bears date detrimentally. Operatic music has long passed the stage of the 'Lohengrinning' process. It would have been better to let us hear what Mascagni can do to-day. There was genuine promise in both 'L'Amico Fritz' and 'I Rantzau,' whose fulfilment is not found in this endeavour to graft the popular Italian idiom on to a Wagnerian stem. The story is not well suited to the composer's mentality. It is all of symbols and mystics, with the arrival of the Sun at the end to translate the poor little Japanese soul to immortality. The sordid nature of the story is not relieved or mitigated by the introduction of a hidden chorus representing the Sun, or by the weird interjections of the librettist in his endeavour to explain the psychological situation. In the presentation Miss Margaret Sheridan distinguished herself in the trying part of Iris, and Madame Couzino, Capuzzo, and Huberdeau gave effective help. Signor Mugnone conducted, and did infinite service to his fellow-countryman.

A second new production, Mr. Isidore de Lara's 'Nail,' offered more complete novelty in more senses than one. The work was new, it was sung in English, and the principals were British. Detailed discussion of it must be left for next month.

The remainder of the record is made up of the familiar. Naturally after all these years without their representation on the foreign standard the public does not tire of 'Aida,' 'La Bohème,' 'La Tosca,' and all the others. Gounod's 'Roméo et Juliette' has been restored to the répertoire, with Madame Melba and M. Ansean, and Wolf-Ferrari's charming little opera 'Il Segreto de Susanna' has been revived, in which Mlle. Borghi-Zerni made a decided mark and Signor Sammarco as the husband was as amusing as ever. The ever-green 'Il Barbiere di Siviglia' has reappeared, and for the first time for many years has attracted without the aid of any one particular star. The performance was uncommonly good all round, with Mlle. Borghi-Zerni, Sammarco, Cotreuil, Malatesta, and in turn Messrs. Burke and Dolci as the Count. The latter tenor is a new recruit who has been heard in 'Aida,' 'La Tosca,' and 'Madame Butterfly.' He has a genuine tenor voice and good vocal notions, applied somewhat spasmodically. Madame Pauline Donald has made her reappearance with success, and Miss Miriam Licette and Miss Mignon Nevada have also been heard. Madame Amerighi, a soprano new to London, appeared in 'Aida,' displaying a voice of good staying power and a dramatic style. Other features have been the performance of 'Un Ballo in Maschera,' with Destinova, Dinh Gilly, and Martinelli. Mr. Albert Coates has joined the company at the conductor's desk, and although rather inclined to give more attention to orchestra than to stage, has done well. The audiences have been of enormous dimensions, leaving no question as to the superiority of the standard of representation at the Royal Opera.

FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

'THE DAUGHTER OF MADAME ANGOT.'

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE, JULY 2.

Within a few days of its canonization—if the term be allowed—by a revival at the Opéra-Comique, in Paris, Lécocq's most familiar opera was produced at Drury Lane on a truly lavish scale and with every sign of success. A long run in this case will mean more than the popularity of one work; it will signify the revival of a better class of light entertainment than that which has made the judicious grieve for so many years past. If this is happily so, everybody will rejoice except the gentlemen who make fortunes by thumping out cheap tunes with one finger, while the musicians who score them obtain a wage which would instantly cause a national strike of miners. Sir Thomas Beecham has more than once told us that in this country we know nothing at all about the vast masses of charming music, the work of real musicians, which lies between the 'Meistersingers' and the ineffable banality of revue music.

He has set himself to remedy that defect, and has launched his ambitious scheme in conjunction with Sir Arthur Collins, of Drury Lane. The book of 'La Fille de Madame Angot' has been adapted by Dion Clayton Calthrop, the lyrics have been revised by George Marsden (who, incidentally, is a Fellow of All Souls), and Donald Calthrop is the producer. Hugo Rumbold has designed the costumes and the delightful scenes. Eugène Goossens conducts the orchestra, and his singers are among those who have helped to establish English Opera in the last few years. Nothing, therefore, was wanting to raise the whole to the highest possible artistic level.

As one listened to the music he felt inclined to say, like the man who heard 'Hamlet,' 'Beautiful, but why so many quotations?' It is remarkable how many of the tunes are still alive and well known. 'Très jolie, peu polie,' the conspirators' chorus, the waltz, the quarrelling duet—these are but a few of our old friends whom we gladly welcome. (I cannot give the new English words, as they were not printed when I heard the opera.) It was all delightfully exhilarating and joyous. It was like a breath of fresh air. Yet many learned and estimable people—among them not a few Frenchmen—have been preaching for some time past that the music of Offenbach, Halévy, Lécocq, and their followers, was typical of the degeneracy of the Second Empire and among the causes of its decay. What should be said, then, of the so-called lighter music of this Georgian England?

While it is folly to bar all cheerful music, and to deny it any good quality, there is quite as much danger in the theory, very popular just now in certain quarters, that all music of serious aim is inherently dull. That, I think, is the lesson which can be drawn from this revival by those—not necessarily pedants or superior persons—who go to a performance like this seeking something more than just a couple of hours' entertainment—in other words, by what may be assumed to be the majority of readers of a journal like the Musical Times.

It was a bold stroke of policy to entrust the principal parts to singers who have made a name in Grand Opera, but it was equally bold to transfer to Grand Opera from the concert-platform artists who had been trained for oratorio and song. The success in the first case is a good augury for the second experiment, and the adaptability shown by the singers was remarkable. They were a little heavy, it is true, on the first night, but they have gained in lightness of touch ever since. Special praise is due to Miss Gladys Ancrem as Mlle. Lange, Miss Ellinger as Clairette, Mr. Webster Millar as Ange Pitou, Mr. Herbert Langley as Pomponnet, Mr. Arthur Wynne as Larivaudière, while the light comedy of Mr. Aubrey Fitzgerald in the small part of Trenitz was admirable. There is nothing but praise for the chorus, for the scenery, and for the drama, which in the second Act are splendid in inverse ratio to their extent.

ALFRED KALISCH.

ERIK SATIE'S 'PARADE.'

BY NORMAN PETERKIN.

In view of the promised production of 'Parade' by the Russian Ballet at the Alhambra,* a few notes and particulars of it may be of interest.

'Parade' was originally planned before the war by Jean Cocteau, a French modernist poet, Paulet Thevenaz the artist, and Stravinsky the composer of 'The Firebird' and 'Petroushka.' For some reason or other the ballet never materialised and the plan was dropped. Later Cocteau took up the idea again and collaborated with Pablo Picasso, generally regarded as the leader of the cubist painters in Europe, and Erik Satie, perhaps one of the least known and most curious figures in modern music. The result of the collaboration, 'Parade, Ballet Réalist,' was produced at the Châtelet Theatre in Paris in May, 1917, the cast including Lopokova and Leonide Massine, the latter being responsible for the choreography. The production caused a veritable tumult, and there was almost a riot in the theatre. In the end, however, enthusiastic applause silenced the hisses and cat-calls of the objecting faction. I do not know if the London production is to be identical with the original: if so it is fairly safe to prophesy that Londoners have a unique thrill in store. Whether they will like it is another matter.

The characters in 'Parade' are a Chinese Juggler, two Acrobats, a Little American girl, and the three Managers, the action taking place in a Paris street, outside a music-hall, and on a Sunday. In order to entice the public to come to the show there has been a parade of some of the artists, similar to the way in which, as we all can remember, Barnum's and other circuses went in procession through the town before a performance. The managers of the troupe are outside the theatre indulging in tall talk and bombast about the merits of their performers, and endeavouring to induce the public to 'walk up.' The audience, mistaking the preliminary parade for a sample of the show inside, is not impressed and does not respond to their blandishments. Seeing the non-success of their managers the performers come out of the empty hall, and themselves try to persuade the public to patronise the performance, but without any success.

Quite a natural and simple story this, but it was the treatment of it that aroused such violent antagonism in Paris. Cocteau, the writer of the scenario, compares it to a Punch and Judy show and is at pains to tell us that there is no hidden symbolism in it. Referring to the sub-title, 'Ballet Réalist,' he writes, 'I wanted to give true realism its place in the ballet. What has been known till now as realistic theatrical art is a kind of absurdity, as that sort of realism consists in putting on the stage real articles which lose their reality as soon as they are introduced into artificial environments. The theatre is the art of illusion and should always remain so'—a pronouncement that most of us will not quarrel with, I think. He goes on to say with regard to the work of Picasso, who designed the scenery and costumes, 'In all his work there is true realism, that is to say, the world is weighed, measured, verified and felt, with a love and respect for its volumes, its material aspects, its movements, its shadows. He often declares that he goes along the street armed with a foot rule measuring objects before putting them on canvas.'

Whether the general public, uneducated in cubist esthetics, will find much that it can regard as true realism in the work of Picasso for 'Parade' is to be doubted. They will probably prefer the theory to the practice. Most of the derision that the production met with in Paris seems to have been vented on the costumes (though of course this does not necessarily mean they were bad), the like of which had probably not been seen on the European stage before. In their strangeness and remoteness from convention, the designs used in the Javanese Puppet and Shadow plays seem, however, to bear an affinity with the cubist costumes of 'Parade.'

The Paris critics did not like the dresses, and said so in unambiguous terms. Their ire was greatly roused by the horse that appears in the ballet, and which, truth to tell, in Picasso's version of it resembles nothing so much as those animals we were accustomed to see in the pantomimes of our youth, animals in which the front portion is operated by one person and the rear by another.

The dresses of the Managers also excited great hilarity. They were enormous, and gave the effect of marionettes of unnatural size. The 'Manager from New York' had a costume with suggestions of sky-scrapers and other modern works in it, while the 'Manager in Dress Clothes' was totally unlike anything ever turned out by our best tailors. The curtain and scenery for the production do not appear to have aroused such violent feelings as the costumes did, the Paris public probably being inured by Picasso's pictures exhibited there from time to time.

As regards Massine's choreography we are told that there was no attempt to achieve decorative effects as in the older ballets, but 'a desire to amplify the real, to introduce the detail of daily truths and rhythms into the vocabulary of dancing; for truth can always arouse the highest emotions.'

For musicians, the most interesting part of the ballet would be Satie's music. As I have said, he is one of the least known figures in modern music, yet undoubtedly one of the most intriguing, though quite a number of authorities regard him as nothing but an eccentric poseur and charlatan. This I think is a hasty and superficial estimate on the part of those who, failing to penetrate beyond the surface of his music, have missed the irony of it, and have been repelled by the extraordinary titles and indications in his scores.

This is not the moment for a dissertation on Satie's aims and achievements, but it might be mentioned that the more widely known Debussy, in the formation of his unique idiom, owed far more to Satie than he did to the Russians, a fact generally ignored. Both Debussy and Ravel saw the importance of his work, and it was mainly through their efforts that he at length emerged from the obscurity in which he dwelt for so many years.

Satie has been termed a cubist composer, though what the term exactly signifies in this connection I am unable to say. If it means that his music is mordantly witty, perverse, and unlike anything else, then by all means let him be cubist. In any case it is said that he is the preferred composer of the cubists. He cannot be classed with any other writer of the day, but he might be defined as the incarnation of the comic spirit in music, comic here bearing the significance that George Meredith gave to it. Obviously he was the destined collaborator for Picasso and Cocteau, and his music for the ballet hardly met with less hostility than their share of it.

Convention and Satie are leagues apart, and so it will be understood that his music has nothing in common with what we understand by ballet music. We are saved from trying to formulate its basis by his own comments on it :

* As we go to press we learn that the production will not take place during the present season.—ED., M.T.

'I composed only a background to throw into relief the noises which the playwright considers indispensable to the surrounding of each character with its own atmosphere. These, imitating noises of waves, revolvers, typewriters, sirens, or aeroplanes, are in music of the same character as the bits of newspapers, painted wood-grain, and other everyday objects that the cubist painters employ frequently in their pictures in order to localise objects and masses in nature.

This is a sane and luminous attitude, and might have helped the critics, one is tempted to think, to keep in correct perspective and to treat as details only the very things that have usurped all their attention, to the detriment of their judgment of the music as a whole.

Satie's score opens with a 'Prelude du Rideau Rouge,' which is in the form of a fugue, wholly orthodox and quite charming. On the entrance of the first Manager, the music changes in character and becomes more sprightly, being cleverly evolved from what has gone before. Then the Chinese Juggler performs to music that is delightfully bizarre and illustrative, besides being of suitable Oriental flavour. As this ends the second Manager comes on, and one hears the music for the Little American Girl, quite typical Satie with suggestions of syncopated melody and rhythm emerging to the surface now and again in a whimsical manner.

In turn this is succeeded by a 'Ragtime du Paque-bot,' which Satie marks Triste. The opening section of this would enormously tickle the ears of our ragtime-lovers, and they would no doubt imagine they were in for a good thing by Irving Berlin or Nat D. Ayer !

The second section, I am afraid, would soon disillusion them and speedily make them think that something had gone wrong with the orchestra ! Then comes 'Acrobates,' written in valse-time with the quips and quirks of the performers cleverly suggested in music that is quite simple. The concluding numbers are 'Suprême effort et chute des managers,' built out of previously-heard material, and 'Suite au Préluide du Rideau Rouge,' also developed from the opening fugue.

Scattered throughout the score are such indications as A mi-corps, Prendre un air faux, Vertueux, Tremble comme une feuille (In the ragtime), Gluant, and others equally lucid.

Over their significance we need not ponder, for Satie long ago decided that to become famous one must be eccentric, and these are but part of the surface mannerisms that have procured for him the name of a charlatan and made him more famous as a humorist than as a composer. One wonders why this music so infuriated the critics. It is simple, quite melodious in parts, not particularly dissonant, delightfully witty, impertinent, and ironical, and very French. It fulfils its functions in the ballet in a most admirable manner, exactly carrying out what Satie claims for it.

In this particular score there are but few of those disconnected, vague, and sonorous harmonies that one meets with in a great deal of Satie's other work, and which pointed the way for Debussy and others who followed.

There is no doubt that 'Parade,' taken as a whole, is a step in a direction that has infinite possibilities—possibilities that the Russian ballet would do well not to ignore. That it has already exerted influence is evidenced in the productions of the Balli Plastici at Rome last year. These were the joint enterprise of the Swiss poet Gilbert Clavel, the Italian futurist painter Fortune Depero, and a group of young musicians including Casella, Malipiero, Bartok, and Lord Berners. It differed from 'Parade' inasmuch as the performances were not by human actors but by marionettes, which Depero designed, and which show the influence of 'Parade.' The music of Casella and Lord Berners also betrayed the influence of Satie's ironical spirit, but used a more advanced and pungent idiom—an idiom that seemed a little heavy-handed for the purpose and not so finely poised as the work of Satie in 'Parade.'

The French composer's work is not well known in England, and one looks forward with keen anticipation to the production of the ballet. Will the occasion prove to be a repetition of what occurred when the music of Schönberg and Ornstein was first heard here ?

SIR W. H. HADOW ON SIR HUBERT PARRY.

A crowded audience at the Musical Association meeting on June 17, with Sir Frederick Bridge in the chair, had the privilege of listening to a finely worded appreciation of the late Sir Hubert Parry, delivered by Sir W. H. Hadow, which was illustrated by some choruses from the deceased musician's works, admirably sung by students of the Royal College of Music under the direction of Prof. H. P. Allen. The lecturer began by remarking that our musical history contained a lamentable number of what Bacon called the deserts and waste-places of time. Of all our dark periods the blackest was the third decade of the 19th century, of which the records of our provincial Festivals gave sufficient evidence. At the nadir of our fortunes, when we had entirely ceased to count among the musical nations of Europe, there appeared at the Gloucester Festival of 1880 a cantata entitled 'Scenes from Shelley : Prometheus Unbound.' The audience was frankly bewildered by the new idiom, the critics filled the air with their customary complaints of obscurity, extravagance, and an undue straining of resources. No one seemed to have had any idea that on that evening English music had after many years come again to its own, and that it had come with a masterpiece in its hand. Sir Charles Stanford's generous appreciation of Parry's music was the first authoritative pronouncement in its favour.

The year 1894, when he succeeded Sir George Grove as director of the Royal College, saw a notable turning-point in Parry's career. The oratorio form, which he had always used with considerable freedom, had ceased to be a fit vehicle for his thought. For the rest of his life his chief choral compositions were, with a few exceptions, either settings of the Latin Liturgy, or the cantata and symphonia sacrae, —close-woven, concentrated, simple almost to austerity, in which he found expression for some of the deepest thoughts that have ever penetrated the heart of man. It was worth noting how the form grew under his hand, resolutely discarding all that was non-essential, turning aside from every external appeal, intent on one thing and one alone, to interpret the very centre of the vision, and gaining in power and intensity as the years wore on. Yet it would be wholly wrong to conclude that even in these later days he took an ascetic view of art. No man touched life at more points than he, and music to him, as Dr. Vaughan Williams has well said, was a part of his life. To the end of his days he had a boy's high spirits and a boy's sense of enjoyment, but as he himself has told us, 'every great artist is serious at heart,' and though his laughter was irresistible, yet he never forgot that 'if fun is good, truth is better, and love best of all.'

His music might be conveniently divided into the customary three periods : pupilage, adventure, and discovery. The gift of composition does not issue at full growth like Athena from the head of Zeus ; it is the reward of long training and steady endeavour. During his early years Parry had already begun to show some of the qualities which he was afterwards to turn to such account : dignity and sincerity of theme, firm intellectual grasp of design and texture, purity of line, beauty of concerted sound. It needed only that all this equipment should find its due occasion for use ; that it should be vitalised by an inspiration which should lift it from the heights of perfected craftsmanship to those Olympian peaks where dwell alone the immortals. Such an inspiration he found in Shelley's 'Prometheus.' With it he entered beyond cavil or question into the company of the great creative artists. In 'Blest Pair of Sirens' he began to show his power for building up great epic masses of sound. In all his works of this period there were moments of that sheer divine inspiration which are possible only to the highest genius, and which the highest genius does not often attain.

Goethe in a fine simile compared poems to the stained-glass windows of a cathedral : if you stand outside they are dark and unmeaning ; if you enter the portal the master's design is made manifest by the light of heaven shining through it. This truth lay at the heart and centre of Parry's later cantatas. We should wholly misunderstand them unless we realised that their essential purpose was to lead us within the gates, to show us the true meaning of the words which they interpreted. Their astonishing technical skill was so entirely subordinated to this end that we were in danger of overlooking it, as indeed he would have been quite willing that it should be overlooked. Open a choral page at random; it seemed but a simple diatonic texture with little inherent quality or character. Look closer, and you would see that every voice was so placed and every entry so regulated as to bring out the full significance of the text. Hear it, and you would find that poet, prophet, and evangelist had spoken to you as they had never spoken before. You had passed from the glare and turmoil of the street into the quiet sanctuary, and you listened with bowed head and heart attuned to worship.

Among Parry's smaller works a special word should be said about the songs. All his life through he was a song writer, and his works in this form contained much of his most characteristic melody. They were entirely free from extravagance and sensationalism, but they could appear insipid only to critics who mistook sensationalism for eloquence and extravagance for energy. Parry's music always spoke without gesture, and its speech was the weightier for that reason. This reserve power was one of the characteristics which made him so essentially a spokesman and representative of English music. He represented in music the essential sanity of the English genius: its mixture of strength and tenderness, its breadth, its humour, its entire freedom from vanity and affectation. It was idle to compare his gifts with those of the great Continental composers—'great in their way, not ours nor meant for ours': one might as well compare the serenity of an English landscape with the glow of sunset on the Apennines or the Ægean.

Parry lived through one of the most interesting periods of musical history, perhaps the most interesting except the change from the 16th to the 17th centuries. By temperament, by predilection, by training, he was on the conservative side; he revered above all things nobility of thought, cleanness of line, thoroughness of workmanship; he distrusted rhetoric and emotionalism, the over-wrought feeling and the over-charged palette. But no man was ever less of a pedant: his sympathy was unbounded even with forms of art most alien from his own; and he was stern only to imposture and insincerity, the work of the mountebank and the conscious imitator. It was this combination of breadth and staunchness, of loyalty to his ideal and tolerance of the ideals of others, which set his critical judgment on a basis that stood four-square; he brought to his task a mind enriched with wide knowledge both of music and of literature, a keen logical faculty, a memory which was never at fault, and a style which clothed his thought in the fittest and most flexible of garments.

As was the man, so had been his influence. There was no side of our musical life in England which was not the better and the nobler because he had lived. Through him we had learned to speak in our own tongue, to deliver our own message, to bind once more the broken thread, to recall the forgotten tradition. From those of his own time he has won the fullest tribute of veneration and love; by those who come after, his name would be enrolled among the heroes.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

An event of more than ordinary interest took place in the Duke's Hall on Friday afternoon, June 27, when a portrait of the late Stanley Hawley was presented to the Royal Academy of Music, in the presence of a large number of his relatives, friends, and others representing the Royal Philharmonic Society, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the British Society of Composers. The presentation was made on behalf of the relatives by Mr. Mewburn Levien, who referred to the deep attachment which the late Stanley Hawley always had for the Royal Academy and for the professors under whom he studied. In accepting the portrait on behalf of the Academy, Sir Alexander Mackenzie said:

I confess that I avail myself of the privilege which falls to me with considerable diffidence: because it is always difficult to speak thus publicly of a dear, good friend calmly, and to express oneself adequately and at the same time briefly, on an occasion such as this, when old memories and touching recollections are revived and the deeply sincere regrets at his loss are renewed. My own acquaintance with Stanley Hawley extended over a long period of years: in fact precisely as long as the principalship which I am still permitted to hold—for he was among the very first students introduced to me—and I am happy to know that that pleasant contact ripened into a friendship which lasted until his untimely removal from our midst. His great attachment to the Academy will be remembered here as long as the school stands. And there is very good reason for this. Always 'of us,' always 'with us,' its interests, growth and reputation were ever as his own. And he has left indisputable proof of that fact. Other institutions too—such as the Royal Philharmonic Society and the Incorporated Society of Musicians—will ever be grateful to the memory of one who was undoubtedly and above all else a rare and fervent enthusiast in his art. Never weary in its service, he possessed the gift of communicating that breezy, boy-like enthusiasm to others in a most remarkable degree. In that, and in another respect, our late friend was indeed unique. Persistently spending his energies as he did—perhaps too generously for his own well-being—on the particular artistic cause he had at heart, which of us has ever known him to pursue any personal motive, or seek the slightest benefit on his own behalf? Regarding that exceptionally rare trait in his character, I may testify from my own experience of him here and elsewhere. A fine musician, who has left his mark as a composer in a field which he made peculiarly his own and with which his name will continue to be identified, the Academy is proud to have numbered him among its distinguished students. Whatever may have been done for him here in those his early days, has been more than amply repaid by the devotion and love he bore the school in which he was trained. In accepting officially this most life-like portrait—a powerfully painted work by Mr. Frank Mura—in the name of the Governing Bodies, I have to express their very sincere and grateful thanks to the relatives and trustees, not only for this generosity, but for the kind thought which prompted them to part with a naturally prized and cherished memento. That kindness is cordially and thoroughly appreciated by us all; and we receive it with equally affectionate feelings towards our late friend.

The annual distribution of prizes took place on Friday afternoon, July 18, at the Central Hall, Westminster, when Lady Dewar was present and distributed the awards. The following musical items were included in the programme of this very interesting function: Minuet (on the 'Londonderry Air'), Eric Coates; Irish Reel, 'Molly on the Shore,' Percy Grainger, played by the string orchestra, conducted by Mr. Spencer Dyke; Intermezzo for four horns and two harps, 'Peace' (composed for the recent Thanksgiving Service at St. Paul's Cathedral), by F. Corder; and Part-songs, 'Fly, singing bird' (Elgar), 'Come, sisters, come' (Mackenzie), and 'Jerusalem' (Parry), sung by the choir under the direction of Mr. Henry Beauchamp, the solo in the last named being taken by Miss Bessie Brown Kerr.

The R.A.M. Club held its Annual Dinner (which has been in abeyance during the war) at the Holborn Restaurant, on Monday evening, July 21. The chair was taken by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and there was a large gathering of members and friends.

An important development in the teaching activities of the Academy will take place in September, when the Academy re-opens after the holidays. A scheme for the training of music-teachers has been drawn up which fulfils the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council. The scheme is of an eminently practical character, and will meet the requirements both of those who deal with private pupils and also those engaged in class teaching. A complete Syllabus may be had on application to the secretary of the R.A.M.

The following awards have been made this month: The Charles Lucas Prize, for the composition of an Overture to Shakespeare's 'As you like it,' to Richard Newton; the Cuthbert Nunn Prize, for the composition of three contralto songs, to Russell E. Chester; the Julia Leney Prize, for harp, to Florence V. Edgcombe; the Frederick Westlake Prize, for pianoforte, to Egerton Tidmarsh; the Walter Macfarren gold medals, for pianoforte, to Hilda Dederich and Leo Livens; the Swansea Eisteddfod biennial prize, for singing, to Edith Rogers; the Parepa-Rosa gold medal, for singing, to Heartsease Marley; and the Gilbert R. Betjemann gold medal, for operatic singing, to Leonard F. Hubbard.

The Academy will re-open for the Michaelmas Term on Monday, September 22. The entrance examination will take place on Thursday, September 18.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC COMMEMORATION CONCERTS.

On February 28, 1882, thirty-seven years ago, the Royal College of Music was founded at a meeting in St. James's Palace; on May 7, 1883, King Edward, then Prince of Wales, opened it in the old building; about a fortnight later, on May 3, it was incorporated. On July 8, 1890, the foundation stone of the new building was laid. It was opened by the Prince of Wales on May 2, 1894.

To commemorate the opening, three concerts were held last month in the concert hall, which was opened—to complete the list of leading dates—on June 13, 1901. All the music played or sung was by composers who had been taught or have taught in the new building.

The two orchestral concerts included sixteen items, and the chamber concert nine, and twenty-four composers were represented. The concerts were full of interest, but it is obviously impossible to discuss each piece in detail. It is possible only to give general impressions, but for purposes of record the programmes are given in full.

FIRST CONCERT.—July 1.

Ode, for Soprano Solo, Chorus and Orchestra—
'Music' Charles Wood
(Written for the State Opening of the College Buildings, 1894.)

Songs—(a) 'In Flanders,' (b) 'By a birch-side' Ivor Gurney
Scherzo for Orchestra Stanley Wilson
Song—'Cap and Bells' Edgar Bainton
Symphonic Variations in E minor Hubert Parry
Song—'Blow out, you bugles' Frank Bridge
Idyll for Orchestra—'The banks of green willow' G. Butterworth
Songs of Travel R. Vaughan Williams
Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra, No. 2, in C minor C. V. Stanford

Conductors—Sir CHARLES STANFORD, ADRIAN C. BOULT, and COMPOSERS.

SECOND CONCERT.—July 2.

Suite for String Quartet—'Lady Audrey's Suite' Herbert Howells
Songs—(a) 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' Nicholas Gatty
(b) 'Away, away'
Celtic Suite for Violin and Pianoforte Ernest Farrar
Songs—(a) 'The Lamb' Harold Darke
(b) 'Break, break, break' Henry G. Ley
Suite for Flute, Violin, and Harp Eugène Goossens, Jun.
Pianoforte Solos—(a) 'Island Spell'
(b) 'Ragamuffin' John Ireland
Miniature Song-Cycle—Baby Ballads W. Y. Hurlstone
Five Little Pieces for Violoncello and Pianoforte F. Purcell Warren
Four Elizabethan Pastorals for Vocal Quartet H. Walford Davies
(With String Quartet and Pianoforte accompaniment.)

THIRD CONCERT.—JULY 4.

Three Orchestral Pieces Gustav Holst
Song—'A Vignette' Cyril Rootham
Variations for Pianoforte and Orchestra—'Normandy'
'A Song of Agincourt.' For Orchestra Arthur Somervell
Two Songs, for Contralto C. V. Stanford
a. 'The cloths of heaven' T. F. Dunhill
b. 'The fiddler of Dooney'
Ballad for Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra—
'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' S. Coleridge-Taylor
Song (Chorus and Orchestra)—'Jerusalem' Hubert Parry
(And did those feet in ancient time.)

Conductors—Sir CHARLES STANFORD, DR. H. P. ALLEN, and COMPOSERS.

A specially interesting incident of the last concert was the visit of the Prince of Wales, who was in khaki. It was his first appearance at the College since he had accepted the Presidency, in which office he has succeeded his father and his grandfather. He made a very charming and appropriate little speech.

By a happy thought a bust of Sir Hubert Parry had been placed in front of the orchestra—an outward and visible sign of the inward spirit which had moulded the Royal College so long, inspiring much deep regret that he should not have lived long enough to preside over these functions which were so eloquent a tribute to the work he had done.

Formally and outwardly his name and that of Sir Charles Stanford appeared in the programmes twice—they were the only ones thus distinguished—but in a deeper and truer sense they were represented in all. It is good in these days, when everything more than a year or two old is apt to be claimed by some hotheads as antediluvian, to be reminded of what they have done.

There is one criticism to be made about the programmes. It is a pity that the dates of the various pieces were not given. Thus, for instance, Sir Charles Stanford is a much older man than Mr. Holst, but the ink was scarcely dry on the revised score of the former's 'Song of Agincourt,' and Mr. Holst's picturesque three orchestral pieces are about fifteen years old. They show the Parry-Stanford influence very strongly. His 'Planets' Suite, the latest of his works we have heard, has got far away from the earlier pieces. The same may be said of Mr. Rootham's later compositions as compared with his 'Vignette.'

It was fitting that some of 'Hiawatha' should have been included, for no work that has emanated from the Royal College has had a wider vogue. The inclusion of Dr. Charles Wood's 'Ode' was interesting, because it showed how far we have moved since the time when it formed part of the programme on the day of the opening. Dr. Somervell's workmanlike 'Normandy' variations for pianoforte speak the idiom of the same day. Frank Bridge's 'Blow, ye bugles,' Herbert Howells' 'Lady Audrey's' Suite for string quartet, and the Suite for flute, violin, and harp of Eugène Goossens, show what ex-students of the R.C.M. can do in the way of modernity.

A pathetic interest attached to the works of Hurlstone, F. Purcell Warren, Ernest Farrar, and George Butterworth, all taken from us at the outset of promising careers. The three last-named have given their lives for their country. Butterworth's 'Idyll,' 'The banks of green willow,' indeed made perhaps the strongest individual appeal of any of the works of the younger men. It has an individual charm, and rare delicacy and certainty of touch, making great effect without mere 'effects,' and with singular economy of means. I am glad to see that it is to be included in the programme of one of the forthcoming Promenade Concerts. It should find a permanent place in the repertoire.

Comparisons are to be deprecated, but are none the less interesting. On a wet afternoon during the holidays a lover of contemporary British music would find much intellectual diversion in drawing up three similar programmes from the works of men who have not been trained in Prince Consort Road, or who have taught on the other side of Hyde Park or in the provinces.

The concerts were brought to a fitting and impressive close by the performance of Parry's beautiful 'Jerusalem,' which was sung also at the composer's funeral in St. Paul's Cathedral.

A. KALISCH.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music was held at the Royal Academy of Music, York Gate, Marylebone Road, on July 17. Mr. Ernest Mathews took the chair.

Amongst those present were Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, Sir Walter Parratt, Dr. Hugh P. Allen, Dr. Charles H. Lloyd, Dr. Eaton Fanning, and Messrs. Oscar Beringer, H. Wessely, Arthur Hinton, Edward Iles, A. P. Alderson, Frank Arnold, Spencer Dyke, G. H. Mackern, Henry Beauchamp, Brunel White (Carmarthen), Herbert A. Marshall (Leicester), Charles J. Soltan (Slough), Mrs. T. P. Lockwood (Sheffield), and Miss Ethel M. Barlow (Gravesend).

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, the secretary read the report, which expressed the gratification of the Board at being able to announce that H.R.H. The Prince of Wales had graciously consented to become its President. A tribute was paid to the memory of the late Sir Hubert Parry, expressing the profound regret of the Board at the loss of 'a wise counsellor and a staunch friend.' The number of candidates in the United Kingdom was 5,006 in the Local Centre examinations, and 34,040 in the School examinations. Exhibitions were awarded last year in the United Kingdom to Mabel Le Fèvre, Bournemouth Centre, violin; William Stuart Jones, Cardiff Centre, violin; Eileen N. Sharp, Brighton Centre, singing; Irene V. Hyman, London Centre, pianoforte; Lina S. Collins, London Centre, pianoforte; and Eleanor L. Andrews, London Centre, violin. In Australia, Ruby Waldon, Parramatta Centre, N.S.W., violin; and Gladys Cunliffe, Perth Centre, W.A., pianoforte. In New Zealand, A. N. Caverhill, pianoforte. In Canada, Marion O'Neill, Winnipeg Centre, violin. In Jamaica, Doris Livingstone, violin, and Sarah V. Young, pianoforte. In Malta, Carmen Hare, pianoforte. Eight Exhibitions previously gained have been renewed for a further period of one year.

The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said:

It was particularly gratifying to them that His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales had seen his way to accept the position of President of this Board. In doing so, he was only carrying on the work of his father and grandfather before him. Owing to the enormous amount of work the Prince of Wales had undertaken, it was impossible for him to be present at this meeting, but he had kindly expressed a hope that he would be able to be present at future meetings. With regard to the death of Sir Hubert Parry, he (the chairman) spoke of his personal friendship with him, extending from the time, fifty-three years ago, when he first met him as an undergraduate at Oxford. He also wished, on behalf of the Board, to say how greatly he appreciated the presence of Dr. Hugh P. Allen, whose influence was already proving of great value to the Board. With regard to the growth of the work, in this its thirtieth year it was interesting to note that during the first year the Board examined about 1,100 candidates; in its tenth year, 12,000; in its twentieth year, 35,000; and in the past year, a little less than 60,000.

Sir Walter Parratt second the motion, and the report and balance sheet were unanimously adopted.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Ernest Mathews for presiding, proposed by Sir Alexander Mackenzie and seconded by Dr. H. P. Allen, terminated the proceedings.

METROPOLITAN ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Competitions for two Scholarships and fourteen Exhibitions have just been held at the Metropolitan Academy of Music, Earlham Hall, Forest Gate. The two Scholarships and two of the Exhibitions are provided for out of the proceeds of the concert given annually by the professors in memory of the late Mr. Harding Bonner, founder and first Principal of the Academy, and are known as the Harding Bonner Memorial Scholarships and Exhibitions. They are open to advanced students at any branch of the Academy. The other Exhibitions are open to students gaining the highest marks in certain grades at the half-yearly examination. The adjudicators were: Mr. Ivor Foster and Mr. Dan Richards, Mr. Herbert Fryer, Mr. Edwin Quaife, and Mr. Frederick Hudson. The names of the winners are as follows: Harding Bonner Scholarships: Pianoforte—Miss Ruth Dowling. Singing—Miss Ethel Archer. Harding Bonner Exhibitions: Violin—Miss L. Josephine Hurd. Elocution—Miss Betty Gilbert. Examination Exhibitions: Pianoforte—Miss Ethel G. Tuck, Miss Doris E. Hudson, Miss Grace Rapkin, Master Edward Mason. Singing—Miss Petronella Tresfon, Miss Ida Bullivant, Miss Dorothy A. Hathaway, Miss Phyllis Dawkins. Violin—Mr. Gilbert C. Cave, Miss Florence Alliston. Elocution—Miss Rosie L. Noakes, Miss Margery Houghton.

AN OXFORD DEGREE.

The Encænica at Oxford was naturally and rightly devoted to honouring the heroes of the war, but at the Degree Day next before it, on June 19, music—and what is more, our own music—had its celebration. Dr. Ralph Vaughan Williams was presented for the degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, and having received his degree in the morning, attended at a remarkable performance of his greatest choral work, 'A Sea Symphony,' conducted by Prof. H. P. Allen in the Sheldonian Theatre in the afternoon.

The last honorary degree of Doctor of Music was given just five years ago to Dr. Richard Strauss, and while Oxford takes no shame for her past actions, generous on the eve of war, it was significant that her first act of peace was to seek out one of the foremost of our native composers, and not only present him with her Doctorate but take pride in singing and playing his music.

'Behold the sea itself!'

The words rang out with a splendour which eclipsed the trumpet call, supported on a bass of vigorous undergraduate voices—not the school-boy voices of pre-war days, but the voices of men who know what the sea means, having gone across it and returned. The whole performance throbbed with the new life which has come to the old University. Not only all the choir, but the greater part of the orchestra was composed of local musicians, and the intricate music was so thoroughly known that in the middle of a final rehearsal Dr. Allen was able to order 'all books closed,' whereat the choir sang to the end of the work from memory.

The occasion was a double commemoration, for this year the Sheldonian completes two hundred and fifty years of University life. It was opened in 1669, and the fact was recalled by the revival of the Motet, 'O bone Jesu,' which Dr. William Child wrote for the opening 'Act.' This was sung from photographed facsimiles of the original parts by a small choir before the 'Sea Symphony,' and afterwards the proceedings ended with an inspired performance of Sir Hubert Parry's Ode, 'Blest Pair of Sirens.'

We were given, therefore, three ages of English choral music, which showed its continuity of thought and its variety of expression. All concerned deserved congratulations on the result, including the two solo singers, Miss Ethel McLelland and Mr. Topliss Green, whose voices had admirable effect in combination with the choir in the 'Sea Symphony.' But it would be hard to say whether Oxford is most to be congratulated on her new graduate, whose work carries so strong a message for this moment, or on her new musical Professor, who has proved his power to stimulate the musical activities of the University and town to a point of fervour and efficiency which the Sheldonian in all its two hundred and fifty years has never before known.

H. C. C.

OLD ITALIAN MUSIC.

A very remarkable series of concerts of old Italian music concluded at the beginning of the month at Wigmore Hall. The programmes consisted entirely of music of the 17th and 18th centuries, which critical posterity has overlooked. It has been suggested that the revival of the old music was the result of that recrudescence of nationalism which goes hand in hand with war. As a matter of fact, it began before the war, and was due to the profound knowledge and enthusiastic research of a poet keen on all that belongs to the artistic history of his country. But for the leadership of D'Annunzio—which can be traced distinctly in the opening pages of 'Il Fuoco'—it is probable that this whole epoch of Italian composition would have been known to us only through the two or three ill-chosen examples issued mostly by musicians whose strong point was not scholarship. In fact, most of the composers represented were to the majority of us mere names met in history books or in the pages of that fine connoisseur of Italian art, Robert Browning. But who would have supposed that Baldassare Galuppi would have anything to say to an audience versed in Strauss and Stravinsky?

The undoubted success of the concerts and the appeal they obviously had both for the learned and the simple offers the best possible evidence that Galuppi, Porpora, Veracini, Marcello, Zupoli and 'the others' are far from being the 'petits maitres' they were supposed to be. Had this been the case the modern audiences coming so long after the fashion had set would find them meaningless and dull. Only those who have tried the experiment know how unutterably dull composers can be who repeat the tricks of a dead season. The examples heard at Wigmore Hall proved beyond doubt that in any age men of real worth can express themselves in forms of beauty so striking and individual as to be independent of time and custom. But they must be allowed to tell their own tale in their own way, and careful editorship is a primal necessity.

Not only has music been performed at these concerts which we had never heard before, but there have also been notable performances of works which had come down to us in garbled versions. Corelli's 'La Follia,' for instance, is mostly known through the version of M. Leonard, which curtails the noble chaconne to about half its size and adds a cadenza which is totally uncalled for. There is little doubt that most of the music of that epoch which has been preserved needs re-editing. Leonard and Helmesberger were decidedly not ideal men for such a task, although their work has passed unchallenged.

Of the newly-discovered Veracini Sonatas, the pianoforte pieces, and the great songs Madame Fino-Savio sang for us, the most surprising thing is how little they show the effect of time. One felt, not that they were old, but that they employed a different medium. It was as if one who had always known oil-paintings should suddenly have chanced upon an etching. We have heard a good deal of the conventionality that bound music in those days; yet it is a fact that the conventionality was more in the choice of texts than in composition. Recitative is nowadays out of fashion, but until one had heard the recitativi of some songs of Marcello, one would never have known to what heights of dignified dramatic expression they could aspire. So far from conventionality, there was hardly one of the pianoforte pieces played by Signor Benvenuto which did not contain the stimulus of the fruitful seed of new forms.

This notice cannot close without a word of sincere praise for the performers, and perhaps one ought to name first Signor Benvenuto, who not only played many pianoforte pieces with great skill and inborn sympathy, but also accompanied the pianist and the violinist and made us feel throughout that he was heart and soul in the movement. Of the singer, Madame Fino-Savio, who was perhaps even more heartily applauded than her companions, much could be said. She is one of the few Italian women singers who still retain the polish and the purity of the great age of singing which was not the age of the virtuoso but of the artist, and which flourished not when roudales and exceptionally high notes made singers into popular heroes, but long before.

Certainly there was not a phrase which did not get its full need of expression from the performer. The violinist, Madame Mazzuchelli, also has in her playing, and in her very poise, something reminiscent of old times, that disappeared from the concert-platform when a more tense passion became the dominant note both of the music and of the performance. The older school demanded above all things purity of tone, and this is exactly the strong point in the playing of Madame Mazzuchelli.

F. B.

London Concerts.

The Alexandra Palace Choral Society, still hampered by the closing of its Northern home, carries on its unbroken work under the indefatigable Mr. Allen Gill, and, in spite of all difficulties, upholds its old reputation. At Queen's Hall, on June 21, the Society gave a Thanksgiving Festival, and aptly chose for the purpose Elgar's 'Spirit of England' and Stanford's 'Te Deum,' a work of high quality that in many passages has the nobility due to its theme. These works, needless to say, received adequate performance—fine in tone, eloquent, displaying all the musical quality and expressive meaning that come from earnest and enlightened preparation. The programme contained also Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and the Triumphal March and Chorus from Elgar's 'Caractacus.' Mr. Gill conducted throughout with the commanding power that is always stimulating to both choir and audience, and the work of the Society had a worthy counterpart in the solo-singing of Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Phyllis Lett, and Mr. John Coates, and in the organ-playing of Mr. G. D. Cunningham.

M. Georges Pitsch, a Belgian violoncellist of deservedly high reputation, gave a recital at Wigmore Hall on June 19 and again earned much admiration for his expressive powers, his beautiful tone, and his clean technique. He introduced two works new to London—a Pièce by Chausson and a Poème by Vreuls—that provided interesting moments. In the 'Rhapsody' of Eugène Goossens he was accompanied by the composer.

In company with M. Moiseiwitsch, Miss Daisy Kennedy gave a farewell recital at Wigmore Hall on June 19, preparatory to her departure for Australia. While fully appreciating the prowess of so admirable a native artist, one felt that it should have been put to the service of some native music.

Mr. George Fergusson sang pleasantly at Æolian Hall on June 19, his programme including 'Isobel' by Frank Bridge, 'Night in a garden' by V. Thomas, 'The bells of St. Marie' by John Ireland, 'When childer plays' by Walford Davies, 'The cloths of heaven' by T. Dunhill, and 'Come away, death' and 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind' by Roger Quilter.

Mr. T. P. Fielden, though long known as a pianist of quality, has made a definite 'arrival' during this season. His playing at Wigmore Hall on June 20 firmly established his reputation as an artist of individuality and high proficiency.

Mr. Harold Samuel's pianoforte programme at Wigmore Hall on June 21 was devoted entirely to the works of J. S. Bach. His playing thoroughly justified such a choice, and the presence of a large audience gave further commendation.

One of the best achievements to the credit of the London String Quartet is their production of Dr. Walford Davies's Suite, 'Peter Pan,' at Æolian Hall on June 21. It is a work of irresistible charm, fully characteristic of the composer, especially in his distinctive use of an idiom that speaks of things British. It is sufficient praise to ascribe to the music the same subtle and genial fancy that illuminates Barrie's 'Peter Pan.'

Miss Gladys Moger's programme at Æolian Hall on June 23 was conspicuous among the many recital programmes that have recently done honour to British music. Her songs were by Cyril Rootham and John Ireland, and by employing the assistance of the Allied String Quartet each composer was also represented by a chamber work—Mr. Rootham by his Quartet in C flat and Mr. Ireland by his second Trio.

Songs by Frank Bridge, Cyril Scott, John Ireland, and Granville Bantock were included by Miss Foster Salmond in her programme at Steinway Hall on June 24, and all received sympathetic interpretation.

At Steinway Hall on June 24 Miss Emma Barnett brought memories of a fragrant and delicate past by playing a number of pianoforte pieces by John Francis Barnett, her brother.

An orchestral concert given with the assistance of the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall on June 24, served to introduce to London Mr. Appleby Matthews, who has earned considerable reputation in the Birmingham district as an orchestral conductor. He showed his capacity in Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Pianoforte Concerto—with Mr. Frederic Lamond as soloist—the 'Figaro' and 'Bartered Bride' Overtures, Bantock's 'Dante and Beatrice,' and in a newly-heard work by J. D. Davis. This was the Prelude to a one-Act opera, 'The Cossacks,' a musically work of considerable interest.

The native music brought forward by Mr. de Lara at Steinway Hall on June 25, consisted of a Sonata for flute and pianoforte by Francis Toye, a new String Quartet by Edgar Bainton, a set of Fancies for pianoforte and strings by Joseph Speaight, and a new Arabesque for flute by Norman O'Neill.

A concert of Mr. Landon Ronald's songs, given at Æolian Hall on June 25, brought to notice many pleasant examples of his inventiveness and instinct for style. 'Electra' and 'Love's philosophy,' 'Light, my light' and 'Bring her again,' were among the most characteristic and distinctive. With Miss Rosina Buckman and Mr. Walter Hyde as interpreters, and the composer as accompanist, the songs received full justice. Some pianoforte solos were given by Miss Irene Scharrer.

In aid of the St. Dunstan's 'After-Care' Fund the Shapiro Orchestra gave a concert at Queen's Hall on June 27. Under Mr. Shapiro's direction adequate performances were given of Brahms's C minor Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini,' and, with M. Melsa as soloist, Saint-Saëns's B minor Violin Concerto.

A Pianoforte Concerto by Harry Farjeon was played at Queen's Hall on June 27 by Miss Jessie Munro, with accompaniment by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood. Although an early work of the composer, who wrote it in 1900, it has the musicianship of maturity, and much inventiveness.

Mr. Cedric Sharpe, one of the ablest British violoncellists, played the Rhapsody of Eugène Goossens at Wigmore Hall on June 27, accompanied by Mr. William Murdoch, who also showed his exceptional powers in four pieces by the Spanish composer Manuel de Falla.

A pleasant string Quartet by J. D. Davis, chiefly characterised by simplicity and melodiousness, was performed by the London String Quartet at Æolian Hall on June 28.

Miss Lilius Mackinnon's Scriabin recital at Wigmore Hall on July 1 was interesting and instructive. It showed Scriabin's development from a clever disciple of Chopin to a composer of individuality and power. Some 'Preludes' contained the beginning of his emancipation, and 'Vers la flamme'—a pianoforte tone-poem that can be measured with the 'Poème de l'extase'—showed its completion. Miss Mackinnon had a thorough grasp of the music, which she interpreted with poetry and skill.

Miss May Mukle's violoncello recital at Æolian Hall on July 4 produced some interesting music, amongst which chief place must go to five short pieces by Purcell Warren, who lost his life in the war. They contain well-conceived musical ideas in an unpretentious form, and show that the composer had gifts of great promise. A 'Hebrew Serenade' by Ernest Bloch was more ambitious and sophisticated and, although individual, not more effective. Two 'Fancies' of her own were also in Miss Mukle's programme.

Mr. Ivan Philippowsky gave a recital at Wigmore Hall on July 7 and in a programme containing a Glazounov Sonata, portions of York Bowen's second Suite, and pieces by Bach and Chopin, proved himself to be a very fine player, with a technical command and a variety of resource far above the average.

Mr. Isidore de Lara brought his series of all-British concerts at Steinway Hall to a close on July 16 with a programme that included Elgar's Violin Sonata, two settings of lyrics from the Chinese by Julius Harrison, and a Valse Arabesque by Frederick Laurence, to which Miss Hilda Bewicke danced.

The Quintet by Cyril Scott inadvertently described in our last issue (p. 372) as a Pianoforte Quintet is written for two violins, viola, and two violoncellos.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Messrs. Chappell & Co., Ltd., announce that the twenty-fifth season of Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall, under the conductorship of Sir Henry Wood and the management of Mr. Robert Newman, will commence on Saturday evening, August 16, and be continued nightly for ten weeks until October 25. The concerts will commence at eight o'clock each evening and terminate about half-past ten. Eighty-seven soloists will appear during the season, including Hilda Blake, Rosina Buckman, Louise Dale, Ethel Dyer, Amy Evans, Dora Gibson, Dora Labbette, Alice Lilley, Annie Rees, Adah Rogalsky, Phyllis Smith, Lillian Stanford, Stralia, Anne Thursfield, Carrie Tubb, and Doris Vane, sopranos; Evelyn Arden, Margaret Balfour, Emilia Conti, Phyllis Evennett, Irene Flanders, Olga Haley, Carmen Hill, Doris Manuelle, and Ethel Peake, contraltos; John Booth, Ben Davies, Hubert Eisdell, Gervase Elwes, Walter Glynn, Dan Jones, Lenghi-Cellini, Ben Morgan, Sidney Pointer, Herbert Teale, Spencer Thomas, and Yves Tinayre, tenors; George Baker, Herbert Brown, Murray Davey, Edward Dykes, Kenneth Ellis, Darrell Fancourt, Fraser Gange, Herbert Heyner, John Huntington, Charles Knowles, Norman Notley, Frederick Ranaflow, Walter Saul, Horace Stevens, Sidney Stoddard, Arnold Stoker, and Charles Tree, basses. The instrumentalists include Edith Barnett, Cecil Baumer, Berthe Bernard, York Bowen, Christian Carpenter, Fanny Davies, Arthur de Greef, Helen Guest, Elsie Hall, Myra Hess, Elsie Horne, Evelyn Howard-Jones, William G. James, Auriol Jones, Lilia Kanevskaya, Vivian Langrish, Benno Moiseiwitsch, Rachel Owen, Winifred Purnell, Harold Samuel, and Egerton Tidmarsh, pianists; Arthur Beckwith, Sybil Eaton, Margaret Fairless, Katie Goldsmith, Marjorie Hayward, Daniel Melsa, and Ernest Whitfield, violinists; Thelma Bentwich, Felix Salmond, and C. Warwick-Evans, cellists; Frederick B. Kiddle and Stanley Marchant, organists.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company's three weeks' operatic season, from June 16 to July 5, was crowned with success, and no doubt the summer operatic season will in future be an established yearly function. It was in the nature of an experiment, and the Prince of Wales Theatre Syndicate has decided that a summer operatic season is far more attractive than a run of dramas or even light comic operas. The two novelties produced were Alfred de Keyser's 'Stella Maris' and Reginald Somerville's 'Antoine,' but the public did not take kindly to them—although the performances were quite excellent—probably owing to the rather gloomy character of the plots. The compositions were not free from reminiscences of Puccini, Wagner, Mascagni, and other composers, in some instances palpably so, but of the two Somerville's 'Antoine' shows the best musicianship.

Very excellent performances were given of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Mignon,' 'Madame Butterfly,' 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' 'Carmen,' and 'La Bohème.' In Henriquez de la Fuente the Company has a conductor of ability and temperament, and the second conductor, Mr. Herbert Ferrars, is also a reliable and experienced orchestral director. The artistic personnel was the same that recently appeared in London.

The local concert season is practically ended, and the only interesting concerts are those given in our Public Parks by the best regimental bands, as is usual at this time of the year.

A most interesting and successful concert was given in the large Lecture Theatre of the Midland Institute on June 28 by the members of the chamber music class in connection with the Midland Institute School of Music. The very creditable performance of Tanéïev's Pianoforte Quartet in E, Op. 20, two movements of Glazounov's String Quartet in G, Op. 26, and Howell's scholarly Pianoforte Quartet in A minor, Op. 21, reflected the utmost credit on the School and its teachers. An unrehearsed incident occurred in the last movement of the Tanéïev Quartet, the lid of the grand pianoforte, which was raised, suddenly coming down with a crash, so that the player had to stop. The sangfroid with which the artists continued the movement was worthy of all praise.

In connection with the ninth British Music Convention, held at Birmingham, a special concert was given at the Grosvenor Rooms, Grand Hotel, on June 21, for which a highly attractive and artistic programme was supplied by Birmingham artists:—Madame Parkes Darby, Miss Mary Foster, Dr. Tom Goodey, and Mr. Aubrey Millward (vocalists), Mr. Paul Beard (violin), Miss Rosemary Savage (pianoforte), and Messrs. Richard Wassell and Michael Mullinar (accompanists).

The Birmingham Festival Choral Society is to be congratulated on having secured Sir Henry Wood as conductor of our premier choral Society. He is certainly the right man in the right place, who on many an occasion has shown a master hand as a Festival conductor of choral works; and he has directed with unquestionable success our Triennial Musical Festival of 1912. Sir Henry was also conductor of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society in 1897, of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society in 1900, of the Sheffield Festival in 1902, and of the Norwich Festival in 1908. The appointment has given great satisfaction to all concerned in the welfare of the Festival Choral Society.

Mr. Clarence Raybould, one of our best local musicians, has since his return from military service severed his connection with Birmingham and left the Midlands to join the Beecham Opera Company as one of its conductors. He made his début at the Alhambra Theatre, Bradford, on July 4, conducting with success Verdi's 'Falstaff.' Mr. Clarence Raybould is an excellent pianist and organist, and previous to the war was organist of the Church of the Messiah.

One fully expected that the much-heralded establishment of the new City of Birmingham Permanent Orchestra would by now be in working order. But that is very far from being the case, judging by the results emanating from the conference just held at the Council House under the presidency of the Lord Mayor (Alderman Sir David Brooks). At that meeting there were present representatives of the various musical Societies and Associations in the city, with the object of endeavouring to arrive at a mutual arrangement with respect to the bookings of the Town Hall in future, and the engagements of the new Orchestra by the Societies in connection with their own concerts. The matter was fully discussed, and a general desire was expressed that a working basis should be arrived at. For that purpose it was agreed that a committee representing the musical Societies should confer with representatives of the Orchestra with the object of formulating a scheme which would be ultimately satisfactory. It was hoped that the new Orchestra would be able to arrange for a series of concerts at the Town Hall during next autumn and winter; but this has been found impracticable without affecting the interests of those who had already made arrangements for the coming season. Consequently it was decided to postpone the inauguration of the concerts by the new Orchestra until next year.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The paucity of concerts, on the one hand, and the enforced absence of the writer on the other, from two out of the few music-makings that call for remark, necessarily limit this month's record to one of small proportions. July is always Bournemouth's featureless month from the musical point of view, as it is then that Mr. Dan Godfrey and the members of the Municipal Orchestra indulge in their annual holiday. Our esteemed Director of Music was the first to shake the dust of Bournemouth from his feet, leaving Mr. W. M. Pearce, his deputy-conductor, to direct the Symphony Concert on July 2, at which Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' Symphony was the central feature. Before Mr. Godfrey's departure, however, we had (on June 25) a similar concert, the programme being made up of Mozart's Symphony No. 42, in F, a wholly unrepresentative and decidedly ingenuous example of that master's art, Schubert's mildly attractive though very little known 'Alfonso and Estrella' Overture, Balfour Gardiner's sparkling 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance,' and—far outweighing all the aforementioned compositions—César Franck's tenderly beautiful and fascinatingly intimate Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra. This performance had been in the nature of a pleasure deferred, for Miss Craigie Ross, who played the solo music, was originally announced to appear in the winter during the last series of Symphony Concerts, but through illness was compelled to postpone her appearance until the summer season. Bournemouth, of which Miss Ross is one of the chief musical ornaments, owes her, with respect to her various artistic capacities, a deep debt of gratitude, and the reverent and resourceful way in which she revealed the restrained but none the less soulful outpourings of the Variations prompted a desire that her unquestioned talents could be placed more frequently at the disposal of the Winter Gardens audiences. The concert on June 19 was one of those which the writer, as already mentioned, was unable to attend.

We gather that one of the first musical events on a large scale after the reassembling of the Municipal Orchestra is to be a 'Peace' concert—which, although taking place after the official celebration, will, it is hoped, be an appropriate and dignified occasion. As for the actual 'Peace Day' itself, musical Bournemouth seems to have resigned all claims to a worthy place in the day's proceedings, which is hardly creditable to the town's reputation. Surely, in the absence of Mr. Godfrey and the Orchestra, something could have been devised through the choir organizations in the town?

It is anticipated that Rutland Boughton's striking setting of Fiona Macleod's 'Immortal Hour' will be revived here early in September. This is good news for those who have unbounded faith in the efficacy of Mr. Boughton's artistic schemes.

Eleven hundred season tickets have already been sold for admittance to the performances by the Southport Corporation Military Band. This is some hundreds in excess of previous years.

BRISTOL.

The feature of the month of June was the great Bristol Eisteddfod. First promoted seventeen years ago by the indefatigable Mr. W. E. Fowler, it has grown to a thousand entries, and Victoria Rooms are the centre of the thoughts and hopes of young musicians in a wide area round Bristol and even in remote places. The adjudicators included Madame Mary Davies, Mr. Daniel Price, Mr. Monk Gould, Mr. Charlton Keith, Mr. Arthur Bent, and Mrs. Tobias Matthey. The competitions included pianoforte playing of all grades; solo singers, male and female, and children; children's choirs; recitations, &c. Gold and silver medals and other prizes were offered, and the contests lasted for four days, winding up with two concerts at Victoria Rooms, with the Lord Mayor presiding and the Lady Mayoress distributing the prizes.

Mr. Plunket Greene, attending the Guthrie Commemoration of his old school, Clifton College, on June 27, gave a vocal recital in which the famous baritone interpreted a generous programme of old and new ballads from the 17th century to the 20th, with his customary attention to subtle shades of meaning and inflection. Mr. S. Liddle was at the pianoforte.

Other musical events of the month have been few indeed, although mention may be made of open-air band performances and one or two organ recitals. Dr. Alcock, of Salisbury Cathedral, contributed one of the latter at St. Mary Redcliffe Church.

CAMBRIDGE.

The University Musical Society gave a most successful May Week concert in the Guildhall on Friday, June 6, to a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Harold Samuel played Beethoven's 'Emperor' Concerto with the orchestra, and Bach's 'Partita' in C minor, the double-chorus sang Bach's Motet, 'Sing ye to the Lord,' and the orchestra played 'L'après-midi d'un faune,' by Debussy, and Vaughan Williams's 'Wasps' music, conducted by the composer. Most of the Colleges held concerts in May Week for the first time since the war, and organ recitals were given in the King's Chapel by Dr. Lloyd, Dr. Bairstow, Mr. Ley, and Mr. Ponsonby, and in Trinity Chapel by Dr. Gray. At the open concert of the Musical Club in Caius Hall, on June 3, Mr. Gervase Elwes gave a song recital, with Mr. Roger Quilter at the pianoforte and Messrs. Inwards, Gilson, T. H. Marshall, and Aston played Chausson's Quartet in A major for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello.

During the term Dr. C. B. Rootham, Fellow and Organist of St. John's, was elected to a lectureship in music at his College.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

Dr. Weekes's Choral Society has resumed practice under the conductorship of Mr. Walter Weekes, with Dr. Weekes as sub-conductor, and will give a concert next season. The 'Isca' Glee Party at Exeter has been reorganized, and has sung semi-privately before appearing publicly at the end of July. Mr. Cotton's Male Choir has also been re-formed. Exeter Amateur Operatic Society has put 'Tom Jones' in rehearsal for performance in February next, under Mr. Allan Allen.

A new series of summer entertainments was opened in Northernhay, Exeter, on July 16, and will be continued for charitable purposes.

In Crediton Wesleyan Church, on July 9, a new organ was opened with a recital by Mr. Douglas H. Reed (Exeter). He selected pieces by Sanderson, Lemare, and Guilman, and the choir sang selections from oratorios. Mr. Brewer gave an organ recital at St. Mary's Church, Newton Abbot, on July 11, with Mr. Chapple as vocalist.

A chamber music concert given at Exeter by Mr. Otto Milani (violinist), his pupils and friends, was an event of interest on July 10. Mozart's String Quartet, No. 14, was played by three ladies from Bideford and Mr. Milani; Miss Ackland, a gifted cellist, played delightfully on a beautiful instrument a 'Rondo' by Boccherini; while Miss Phyllis Smith, Miss Blanche Pariby, Miss Joan Ackland, and Miss Cicely Smith added interest to the programme by their playing of music by Saint-Saëns, H. A. Ceseck, Godard, and Elgar. Mrs. Hall Parly and Mr. Milani played a duet for violins by Handel. Songs were sung by Mr. Walter Belgrove.

CORNWALL.

The committee of the West of England Bandsmen's Festival has decided to revive its annual Festival, established in 1912, and on September 6 will hold a two-section selection contest. The Prince of Wales has presented a trophy, and Sir Edward Nicholl, M.P., has given a twenty-guinea challenge cup. Cash prizes and other trophies will also be offered.

Folk-dancing was demonstrated at Falmouth by members of the Women's Institute on July 10, and on the same date the choir, trained by Miss Edith Blight, sang part-songs attractively. Folk-dancing was also displayed at Camborne on July 16 by Camborne County School Old Girls' Guild.

Falmouth Junior Operatic Society performed 'May-day in Well-a-day' on July 12.

DUBLIN.

At a special conferring of degrees at Trinity College, Dublin University, on July 4, the following students graduated in Music: Mr. G. H. FitzSimons (nondum graduatus in artibus), Mus.D.; Mr. R. H. P. Coleman, and Miss Cecilia G. Wood (nondum graduati in artibus), Mus.B.

The music trade in Dublin is seriously affected at present, and the following notice has appeared in all the Dublin dailies from July 1 to July 12: 'Owing to the action of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union in withdrawing certain members of our staffs, business will be suspended for the present by the following firms: Pigott & Co., Ltd.; Cramer Wood & Co., Ltd; Crane & Sons, Ltd.'

A very handsome volume of nearly a hundred traditional Connacht songs, with their respective melodies, collected by Mrs. Costello, of Tuam, has recently been issued by the Candle Press, 44, Dawson Street, Dublin, and by the Irish Folk-song Society, London.

LIVERPOOL.

The University of Liverpool has established a Lectureship in Music, which Dr. A. W. Pollitt has been invited to accept. The Senate recommended that the appointment be for three years, as from October 1, 1919, at a salary of £250 per annum. It is matter for congratulation that the authorities have not had to go out of Liverpool to find a highly-accomplished musician and executant who will fill the post with distinction.

The Allington-Charsley Opera Company, of which Mr. Harrison Frewin is conductor-in-chief, has added to its Liverpool laurels by the generally meritorious performances given during its recent season in the Shakespeare Theatre. The Company possesses reliable vocal principals, and with an enlarged orchestra the revival of 'Les Huguenots' was well within its means. Even more justifiable and successful was the revival of Balfe's 'Satanella,' a work which suffers from an absurd 'plot.' Written fifteen years after the unshakably popular 'Bohemian Girl,' 'Satanella' shows an advance in the composer's outlook in the adoption, if not the invention, of a leading theme, in a haunting melody which recurs from time to time. The performance was most creditable, especially to Mr. Frank Novara, who took Count Rupert's part at short notice, and to Miss Celia Leyke, an attractive Satanella. Mr. Harrison Frewin himself provided a triple bill in three short works—'Pan and the Wood Nymph,' 'Red Mask,' and 'The Gay Lothario,' a one-Act operetta. The first of these is a dramatic pastoral occupying fifteen minutes, while in 'Red Mask' the central dramatic idea is chiefly sustained by orchestra and ballet. Mr. Frewin's music is very tuneful and skilfully scored, and the dances were delightfully done.

An interesting instrumental concert was recently given in Crane Hall, by past and present holders of music studentships awarded by the Education Committee, which during the past twenty-five years have reached a total of a hundred and seventy. The bulk of these have been gained by boys and girls of the Elementary Schools of the city, who have followed up their initial success by devoting themselves to music as a profession, especially as orchestral instrumentalists. In this direction the outlook is most hopeful, judging by the performance of the orchestra, which was conducted by Mr. Alfred Ross.

Liverpool was one of the first cities to take up the cult of folk-dancing in 1907, and at a recent meeting here of the English Folk-Dance Society, held in Rushworth Hall, Mr. Cecil Sharp in advocating the revival of old English dances referred in disparaging terms to the dances of to-day as being ugly and indecorous. He had studied the dancing in well-known drawing rooms and the best clubs, and was reminded only of the swayings and motions of West African negroes. Mr. Sharp is probably right in regarding the old dances as the purest form of the art, and from this point of view may well be encouraged in his crusade.

The local Association of Organists and Choirmasters is losing a gifted and popular member in Mr. Albert Orton, who is leaving Liverpool to take up his new appointment as organist of Newport Parish Church, Isle of Wight. Well-known as organist of Walton Parish Church, assistant-organist at Liverpool Cathedral, and conductor of the Walton Philharmonic Society, Mr. Orton's versatile powers as an executant both on the pianoforte and organ were shown at his recitals at Walton on June 21, when in the church he played the Reubke Organ Sonata and afterwards in the Parish Hall gave an interesting pianoforte recital of works by Bach, Beethoven, and Chopin. Members from the Southport and Manchester Associations joined the Liverpool members on this interesting occasion, and a silver cigarette-case was presented to Mr. Orton as a friendly souvenir.

At his pianoforte recital in Crane Hall on June 18, Mr. Joseph Greene introduced three remarkable 'Eastern Pieces' by Norman Peterkin, a young local composer who has musically illustrated subjects from Lord Dunsany's 'Dreamer's Tales' with extraordinary suggestiveness. The music is saturated with Eastern rhythms and weird melodies. These appear to have an attraction approaching to an obsession of which the composer might well beware. At least his atmospheric harmonies are novel and cleverly contrived, especially in one instance which depicts 'little gardens at the desert's edge where men beat the tambag and the titibuk, and blew melodiously the zootibar, while here and there one played upon the kalipac.'

The Crane Hall Wednesday afternoon recitals came to a distinguished close on June 25, when Mr. Josef Hölbrooke played his own characteristic 'Javanese Pepper Dance' and a Valse Fantaisie by J. R. Heath. Three groups of well-contrasted songs, including Mr. Hölbrooke's delightful 'Annabel Lee,' were finely sung by Mr. John Goss, accompanied by Mr. Sandberg Lee.

The Liverpool Church Choir Association has received a bequest of £100 under the will of the late Mr. Walter L. Gladstone, of Court Hey, Broadgreen (a nephew of W. E. Gladstone). This unexpected windfall will be a further encouragement to the Association to persevere in its good work, which has far-reaching and beneficial influences. The last annual Festival was held in 1913.

Building operations have been resumed at the new Liverpool Cathedral, and it is hoped that within three years the first part of the main building, including the Nave and Choir, will be consecrated and opened. Something like £130,000 will be needed for this work, owing to the increased estimates, and about half that sum is in hand. The Bishop claims that the new Cathedral has already brought increased reverence into Church services, which have taken pattern by the services held daily in the Lady Chapel. Musically, credit is due to Mr. H. Goss-Custard and the well-trained choir.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

In music, as in nature, we have had a long drought with very occasional showers of refreshment. The outdoor Peace Festival on June 21, with the monster choir and a crowd approaching pre-war football dimensions, was a complete success. A listener's opinion of it depended upon his good or ill-luck in position—the voices ought to float down-wind to him, but they did not always do so. There was, however, no getting away from 'Land of Hope and Glory,' and the effect was comparable to the mighty roar of tone when on the Royal Exchange some eight thousand men sang the National Anthem when George V. was proclaimed King. There was a repeat performance of the Peace music in the Free Trade Hall on July 20, but with the choir naturally reduced in scale to the building. Mr. R. H. Wilson conducted on both occasions, and on June 21 had assistance from the Manchester Amateur Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Gordon Cockerill) and the Pendleton Prize Band, who accompanied Goss's noble anthem, 'Ogive thanks.'

In the week following the Peace Festival, Dr. Henry Coward conducted a choir of forty Sheffield singers at the Manchester Palace of Varieties in a selection of part-song music, accompanied and unaccompanied. This choir was making a tour of the six largest industrial centres of the North and Midlands. At Manchester its choice of music left much to be desired, and the indulgence in ad captandum effects would have called down Dr. Coward's sternest condemnation from the adjudicatory bench twenty years ago. There is quite a plentiful supply of witty choral music without resort to an 'Italian Salad' by Mr. Génée. Eaton Fanning's 'Moonlight' was announced as 'an idealised vision of the superlative enchantment of Luna's beams,' which perhaps accounts for the limelight men being summoned to our aid. How our impoverished imaginations are made to suffer at the hands of these realists! May it be suggested (apropos Macfarren's 'You stole my love' and Cooke's 'Strike the lyre') that there is no virtue in speed quid speed. One may admit the technique, but in these two instances it was not the handmaiden to interpretation. If ever Dr. Coward and his singers again visit us on one of these circular tours of 'missionary enterprise in the cause of choral music' (his description, not mine), might one beg him to remember that even music-hall audiences at Manchester are not exactly backwoodsmen in musical development generally? Many have quite a high standard of taste in the choice of choral music; to such his ministrations were scarcely profitable.

Taking a long view, I think most observers of the work of the Royal Manchester College of Music would agree that its main contribution to the advancement of general musical appreciation here has been in the domain of instrumental rather than of vocal music, and in an ensemble and orchestral sense rather than in a solo sense. It is possible to set too much store on an institution turning out what the public regard as 'crack' soloists, either vocal or instrumental, and those who work for a teacher's rather than a performer's diploma are often contributing more to the musical uplift of their particular area of influence than the soloist can ever do—always provided that the genuine teaching instinct is there. One is led to reflections along these lines by the conjunction of the summer examination test-concerts which are open to the public, and a singularly fatuous outburst at a Manchester Rotary Club lunch by Mr. Cecil Bateson, resident at Nelson, and an ardent advocate of the British Music Society. He is reported as saying: 'The Royal Manchester College of Music is living in the good old German pre-war days. The College contained an element which has taken away the real Manchester man's pride in his city's music—the pro-foreign element. Would it be too much to ask the general committee to purge the Council of its anti-British element?' These and other equally preposterous inaccuracies were reported—a condensed report, probably. When will folk see that in order to secure a cultured taste in any branch of art a study of the best in all schools of thought is the first essential? When will they learn that it is quality that counts and not country of origin? Generations of Manchester music-lovers have digested and assimilated all that was best of Hallé, Cowen, Richter, Nikisch, Balling, Wood, Beecham, Ronald, Goossens, Hamilton Harty, and the rest, and as a consequence their standard of excellence in orchestral work is relatively higher than in other communities not so favoured. Those who would apply to-day to the musical culture of the future the 'bar it for ever' attitude towards German music can hardly have thought out the consequences of their claim. A few minutes' reflection would reveal its utter futility.

The concert of the Manchester School of Music in Houldsworth Hall on July 5 provided the first performance at Manchester of Edward German's most recent orchestral work, 'Theme and six diversions,' and of Percy Pitt's Serenade, Op. 39.

The prospectus of the Co-operative Wholesale Society's Male-Voice Choir is something of a portent. No other organization at Manchester has engaged a higher class of solo artist; its prices to-day are 1s 6d. and 2s.; its choir is a good one—if not actually quite first-class; its choice of choral music will bear comparison with the best anywhere. It has within itself a large and, potentially, a yet larger public to which it can appeal—one not drawn on by other bodies, at any rate to any great extent—so its welcome can be cordial both on the grounds of intrinsic value and of powerful assistance to the cause of musical progress.

OXFORD.

On June 4 the Professor of Music, Dr. H. P. Allen, instead of the usual formal lecture gave a most interesting account of the 'Sheldonian Theatre and its connection with Music.' The building of it, said the Professor, began in 1662, but it was not completed till 1669, so this year was its two hundred and fiftieth anniversary. At the opening ceremony, according to Evelyn, there was much splendour, much formality, and much music. The music was noisy, and the speeches learned and long, yet they entertained a large company which, with the ladies, must have numbered nearly two thousand. A 'Music Act' composed by Benjamin Rogers was also given. Some time afterwards it was ordained that there should be an annual celebration of this 'Act of Commemoration,' and in the Schedule it is found that 'Lectures on Music' had a place, while in an old University Register a list of some twelve lecturers on music is given. As time went on, however, the attendances at these lectures became more and more scanty, the lecturers themselves, indeed, being profoundly dissatisfied with the result of their work, so that they begged 'the powers that then were' to allow the lectures to be discontinued on the ground 'that it was a waste of time' which might be better utilised if they were given up. However, later on, when Heather founded the Chair of Music, he at once restored the lectureships, which have been continued ever since. Through Heather's exertions things improved rapidly, the names of Dean Aldrich, Rogers, Hayes, Locke, and others being found as composers for the yearly Commemoration, or Encænna, as it is now the fashion to call it. In passing, the Professor said there were five 'setts of music' in the Bodleian Library which were the actual parts used in the first performance at the opening of the Theatre, and on the cover is written, 'These are all the parts for the Act Music, July 9, 1669.'

When the Oxford Holywell Music Room was opened in 1748, being such an excellent place for sound it naturally diverted some of the musical activities from the Sheldonian, and for several years practically all the music at Oxford was given there, except the annual Commemoration concert, which mostly took place in the Sheldonian. Speaking of Handel's visits to Oxford, the Professor said there was no doubt he dominated not only Oxford, but the whole country, and he added that he thought the policy of going head over ears in admiration for his music was a mistake. In the early days of the Holywell Room, from 1750 to 1780, out of ninety-eight large works performed, eighty-one were by Handel. 'Messiah' was amazingly popular; indeed, the late Dr. Mee, in his charming book on the 'Music Room,' says: 'The feeling of the age is plainly shown by the description of the "Messiah" as "the sacred Oratorio."' This was considered an ample advertisement in 1762.

Want of space unfortunately forbids us to say more than that this interesting recital of musical reminiscences by the Professor was greatly enjoyed by an appreciative audience.

An interesting Festal Evensong was held at Woodham Church, Woking, on July 11, the occasion being a Dedication Festival. The music was chosen to illustrate the Church compositions of Mr. John E. West, who officiated as conductor. It included his new anthem, 'I will extol my God,' Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in B flat, and organ voluntary, 'Festal Commemoration.' There was a good congregation, and the excellent choir did full justice to the music.

Great success attended the pianoforte and vocal recital given by pupils of Miss Pavier at Temperance Hall, Birmingham, recently. The proceeds, totalling £26, were divided between the Lord Mayor's Fund for the Disabled and St. Dunstan's Hostel for the Blind.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

ROME.

THE BASILICA CHOIRS.

When the word 'choir' is mentioned in connection with the Eternal City, the mind of the foreigner immediately prefixes the adjective 'Sistine.' It is, however, far from the truth to suppose that the famous Sistine Choir is the only one to be heard at Rome, or that it is to be heard on any and every of the numerous occasions which the great ecclesiastical functions of Rome present for the worthy execution of classical music. To begin with, the Sistine Choir is never heard except in unaccompanied music; further, it is by no means a numerous body, and would needs be gifted with an ubiquity and marvellous toughness were it responsible for all the choral functions of Rome. There are a number of large churches at Rome in which festival music is a feature, besides the three great patriarchal basilicas of St. Peter, St. John Lateran, and St. Mary Major. These great basilicas each had their choir-school once upon a time, but unfortunately this is no longer the case. It is to be hoped that these 'scuole' may be restored, but in the meantime, the principal schola cantorum of Rome (excepting always the Sistine) is that known as the School of St. Salvatore in Lauro. This institution, entrusted to the care of the 'Christian Brothers,' was established in 1869, and, whilst destined principally as a subsidiary for the choirs of the three greater basilicas, namely, the Cappella Giulia (St. Peter's), the Cappella Pia (St. John Lateran), and the Cappella Liberiana (St. Mary Major), is continually in requisition for festival occasions in various other Roman basilicas and churches. This School is therefore amongst the best-known at Rome, and certainly one of the most valuable, and it was natural therefore that its fiftieth anniversary should be celebrated in a specially memorable fashion. Besides the domestic celebrations in the Institute of St. Salvatore, and the publication of an appropriate brochure, the general public was invited, on June 16, to participate in a commemorative concert in the vast Church of St. Ignatius, when the following programme was presented:

Preludio Religioso	Renzi
(Conducted by the composer, organist of St. Peter's.)
A Sera. For choir, solo, and orchestra ..	Settaccioli
(Conducted by the composer, professor of the Accademia di St. Cecilia, some time student at the Scuola.)
Factum est silentium. Motet for four voices..	Anerio
Finale from the Oratorio 'The Woman of Cana' }	Refice
(Conducted by the composer, maestro of the Cappella Liberiana.)
Badia Solitaria. For orchestra	Somma
Cantate Domino	Venturini
Christe Redemptor. Hymn for voices only	Palestrina
(Conducted by Don Casimiri, director of the Cappella Pia.)
Prologue to Part 2 of the Oratorio 'Il Natale' }	Perosi
(The composer—the famous Maestro of the Cappella Sistina—was unexpectedly prevented from conducting)
Hallelujah Chorus	Handel

The orchestra was entirely composed of ex-members of the Schola St. Salvatore.

Under the auspices of the American Society of St. Gregory, and under the direction of Don Casimiri, Maestro di Cappella of St. John Lateran, a company of some fifty singers, drawn from the various cappelle of Rome, is about to undertake a tour in America. Their aim is primarily the illustration of the classical polyphonic music of the 16th century, but modern compositions are not entirely excluded from their repertory. As I have before mentioned in this column, Don Casimiri has specialised in the interpretation of Palestrina. The singers will arrive at New York at the beginning of August.

An interesting concert was given on June 21 in the Teatro Manzoni, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and for charitable purposes, when a lengthy and attractive programme was presented, consisting chiefly of operatic selections.

On the evening of June 19, Signor M. Enrico Bossi, the renowned director of the Accademia di St. Cecilia, gave an organ recital in the basilica of St. Paul-outside-the-Walls, on the occasion of the re-opening of the great organ, recently restored. Maestro Bossi was assisted by the young Roman violinist, Mario Corti, and the programme was as follows:

Fantasy and Fugue in G minor	Bach
Air Variata. For Organ	Martini
Air. For Violin and Organ	Pizzetti
1st and second Movements of the } Sonata No. 2	F. Capocci
Toccata	M. E. Bossi
Choral. For Violin and Organ	Bach
(Arranged by M. E. Bossi.)
Cantabile	C. Franck
Spring Chorus, arranged for Organ by M. E. Bossi ..	Haydn
'Vision.' For Violin and Organ	Bossi

CHICAGO.

Verdi's 'Manzoni Requiem' opened the eleventh annual Festival of the Chicago North Shore Festival Association at Evanston on Decoration Day, May 30, under the leadership of Dean Peter Christian Lutkin. It was magnificently sung by the choir of six hundred voices, and the solo parts were interpreted by Florence Hinkle, Rose Lutiger Gannon, Arthur Hackett, and Herbert Witherspoon. A 'Song of Victory,' by Percy E. Fletcher, was the prelude to the performance of the greater work. The a cappella choir of North-Western University School of Music sang several of the semi-choruses and acquitted themselves, as they always do, in a fine and efficient manner. The soloists showed more than the usual degree of excellence in the concerted work.

Saturday afternoon, May 31, was Young People's Concert, given by fifteen hundred school children of Evanston and the North Shore, under the leadership of Osbourne McConathy. Mabel Garrison was the soloist. The children sang with fine effect a number of patriotic songs.

Monday night, June 2, was artists' night, John McCormack being the leading attraction, with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra.

Wednesday night, June 4, the choir sang Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.' The soloists were John McCormack, Reinold Werrenrath, and Cyrena Van Gordon. This concert eclipsed any previous performance of the choir.

Thursday evening, June 5, the choir gave the initial performance of 'A Hymn of Thanksgiving,' by Dean Lutkin. In this composition they sang with added interest, in consequence of the authorship, although thoroughness and attention to detail is at all times a characteristic of Dean Lutkin's work. The new work is highly original and effective. The concert closed with the 'Hallelujah Chorus.'

CONSTANTINOPLE.

Under Y.M.C.A. auspices a musical competition festival was held on June 7, with Capt. Vowles as adjudicator. From June 9 to June 14 six concerts, with the same programme, were given at the Théâtre Petit-Champs by the massed choirs, orchestras, and winning soloists of the competitions, the organizer and conductor of this festival being Mr. G. T. Holst. Here is a selection from the programme:

Round ..	'Sumer is icumen in' ..
Motets ..	{ 'Lord, have mercy upon us' }	Byrd
	{ 'Blessed is he that cometh' }
Madrigal ..	'Love learns by laughing' ..	Morley
Air ..	'The captive lover' ..	Laves
Part-song ..	'The jolly ploughboy' ..	Vaughan Williams
Folk-songs ..	{ 'Dashing away with the smoothing iron' }
	{ 'Spanish ladies' }
Song for chorus and orchestra: 'A chime for the home-coming'
Old Welsh Melody

The orchestral items were a Suite by Purcell, two of German's 'Henry VIII.' dances, and Percy Grainger's 'Mock Morris.'

'GREAT COLLECTION OF ITALIAN MUSIC.*

The above was the welcome announcement made in one of the leading Italian newspapers a short while ago, while it further stated that the enterprise would be under the direction of no less a literary genius than Italy's greatest living poet—Gabriele d'Annunzio. The notice will, we are sure, be as welcome in other countries as in Italy, the revival of interest in the music of her grand old masters, to whom we owe so much, being looked forward to in the land of song with enthusiasm. We should remember that those who created and established the principal forms in musical composition, and gave life to the vocal and instrumental technique of modern music, were Italians. Witness Palestrina, Venosa, Marenzio, Vecchi—veritable princes of sacred and secular vocal inspiration. Italians were Frescobaldi, Antegnati, Merulo, and Cavazzoni, founders of the art of organ-playing. Domenico Scarlatti, Galuppi, Platti, Graglioli, and Rutini, in whose works are to be found determined and developed those essential characteristics of classic form of which in vain certain critics of other countries refuse the credit to the true originators, hailed likewise from Italy. Sammartini was the creator of the Symphony, while on a level with him were Torelli, Vitali, Veracini, Tartini, Corelli, Porpora, Bassani, Dall' Abaco, Gemignani, and how many other names immortal in the lists of those who have shed the light of their genius on vocal music and Musica da Camera? Zarlino is spoken of as 'the father of harmony.' Who were the creators of Opera? Italians: Peri, Caccini, Del Cavaliere, and the great Claudio Monteverdi; while later we find following in their footsteps and developing their ideas, Scarlatti (Alessandro), Stradella, Pergolesi, Jomelli, Paisiello, Spontini, Cherubini, Cimarosa, not to mention Bellini, Donizetti, Rossini, and the 'grand old man' of Italian Opera—Giuseppe Verdi. Passing in review a few of the principal names of great manufacturers of instruments, we come across those of Stradivari, Guadagni, Gaspare da Salò, Amati, Guarneri, Gagliano, Bongozzi, makers of violins of world-wide renown; then Bartolomeo de Cristoforis, inventor of the pianoforte; the celebrated organ-builders, Colonna Sercessi, Della Ciaia, Antegnati, Portulupi, &c. Neither in the lengthy history of music must the name of Petrucci be omitted, the founder of the art of music-printing, or that of Andrea, who applied his system of wood-engraving to music. Verovio was the first to engrave on copper. Among others who excelled in the art may be mentioned Gardano, Scotto, Amadino, Vincenti, Borboni, Dorico, Zanetti, and Tradate, to name only some of the splendid array of music-printers whose methods were established so far afield as in the establishments of Artaria at Vienna and Novello in London.

Musical Italy found imitators and followers in other nations, and while she herself, after a long period of prosperity, began to show signs of decline, some who had learned from her superseded her, producing composers whose genius it would be idle and puerile to deny. It has been urged for some time past that a revival of old Italian music was long overdue. With this revival as an inspiration, the 'great collection of Italian music' will be launched under the auspices of the famous writer already mentioned, who will be aided in the enterprise by some of the most gifted of Italy's musicians. CLAUDE TREVOR.

OPERA IN ENGLAND AND ON THE CONTINENT: A COMPARISON, BY AN OVERSEAS MAN.

Until the present influx of opera in London and its environs, many of us Overseas men were at a loss to understand the infrequent opportunities for witnessing performances of grand opera in England. The amusement columns of the newspapers in the Empire's Metropolis were eagerly scanned for operatic announcements; but, alas! in vain. True, we had had the fleeting visits of Sir Thomas Beecham's Company and the Carl Rosa Company, and now the two months' season at Covent Garden; but for anything of a permanent nature in the world of opera—there was nothing.

Not so across the Channel. Over there it was the boast of many of us who had leave to visit Paris that on certain sectors we could leave the trenches shortly before dawn and attend the Opéra that evening. There music is regarded as an educational factor, and the Opéra and the Opéra-Comique are active throughout the artistic year—usually from September to June.

The war has doubtless accounted for the craving after lighter forms of musical entertainment, but the record for London in the matter of opera was even lower prior to the fateful August 4 than since. Why is this? Is it due to a temperamental deficiency in the English-speaking peoples? Surely not! After witnessing the frequent outbursts of emotion of the London public during the past few months, it cannot be said that the inhabitants of the British Isles are not endowed with a more than ordinary share of temperament. Given an incentive, its expression knows no bounds.

In England there is now a mighty wave of enthusiasm for opera in the mother tongue. To us born in the New World it is utterly inconceivable how the British Isles, with their forty millions of people, have never felt the need, the impulse, the overwhelming necessity, to express themselves, their history, their epics, in opera. Boadicea, Magna Charta, the Wars of the Roses, the thrilling tale of the Spanish Armada and the Virgin Queen, Flora MacDonald, Irish lore, Scots mysticism, Welsh tradition—where are they rendered immortal? Not in the ballads of the rose, the shamrock, or the thistle type, surely; neither in sentimental ditties that go no further than their own shores. To live side by side with this particular form of musical expression—namely, opera—for centuries, a stone's throw distance, as it were, and not to feel the desire to go forth and do likewise, to express in song the nobility of one's brothers for their national satisfaction and outlet of feeling, as well as for the admiration of the whole world, is entirely incomprehensible.

In Paris, before the armistice—that is, during the war—the Opéra, the Opéra-Comique, and the Gaieté were playing, and always to overflowing houses. One made no fuss about these things. They were not anomalies. They were matters of course. As in Italy the people demand their 'Traviata' and 'Lucia,' and will always go, year in year out, to hear again the well-beloved strains, so in Paris the Parisians crowd to shed their tears over the tragedy of the lives of Manon and Louise. It's such a 'nothingness,' a waste of good human intellect, to sit night after night through the inanity of empty revues. Taken now and again they may act as an antidote, but on the whole they seem rather a disgrace both to music and poetry, and call more for a feeling of indignation than anything else.

Throughout not only the British Isles but the British Empire we cannot point to even one continuous opera season. Do you realise this? At home across the seas we always have Covent Garden in our mind's eye as a sort of outer peak of Paradise. In reality the Covent Garden season opens in May and runs till the end of June or the middle of July—something like ten weeks! Then it is not an institution as the Paris Grand Opéra, but a season of foreign singers—albeit the Empire and its outposts were well represented this present spring with Melba and Stralía (Australia), Edvina (Canada), Buckman (New Zealand), and Burke (England). Since the war Sir Thomas Beecham has done prodigious work to foster the idea of an established opera in English, and it was indeed good news during the dark days of last year in France to read of Sir Thomas's enterprise. The last season at Drury Lane was remarkably successful, and there are whisperings that London at last is to have its permanent opera. If so, it will be one really tangible first fruits of our great victory.

Country and Colonial News.

BLACKHEATH.—An interesting concert was given on June 24 by the Blackheath Branch of the British Music Society, of which Mr. George Mackern is president and Miss Ethel Waddington (42, Vanbrugh Park), secretary. The programme included songs by Cecil Hazelhurst, Arnold Bax, Laurence Collingwood, Harry Farjeon, Frank Bridge, and Colin Taylor.

* For a report of recent London performances of some of the works alluded to by Mr. Trevor, see pp. 430-31. —(ED., M. T.)

BUXTON.—Splendid progressive work is being done by the Pavilion Orchestra under the direction of Mr. George Cathie, who is bent on raising the standard of both programme and performance to the highest level that conditions will permit. Weekly symphony concerts have recently brought to hearing Dvořák's 'New World' Symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique,' Mendelssohn's 'Italian,' Schubert's 'Unfinished,' and several of Beethoven; while Mr. Cathie's plans, moreover, are not neglectful of British music. Public support of his enterprise has been encouraging.

DUNEDIN (N.Z.).—On April 25 the Dunedin Choral Society performed Elgar's 'The Spirit of England' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'A Tale of Old Japan,' with full orchestral accompaniment, under the direction of Mr. Sidney Wolf. Solo parts were taken by Mrs. J. Fraser, Mrs. Astley Black, Mrs. Wilfred R. Andrews, Mr. Ernest Drake, and Mr. H. P. Desmoulins.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—The English Folk-Dance Society announced a Vacation School of Folk-Song and Dance to be held from July 26 to August 23. The scheme includes classes in folk-singing, children's singing games, morris dances, country dances, and sword dances; private and public demonstrations; examination for certificates; and Shakespearean performances at the Memorial Theatre. Courses are weekly. Mr. Cecil J. Sharp is hon. director, and Miss E. W. Austin, 73, Avenue Chambers, Bloomsbury, London, is secretary.

STIRLING.—On the resignation of Mr. Wilfrid E. Senior, through pressure of work, the conductorship of the Stirling Choral Society has passed to Mr. Warren T. Clemens, one of the leaders of music at Aberdeen, who is also conductor of the Glasgow Choral Union. The Stirling Choral Society has a fine record, dating from 1866, and there is no doubt that Mr. Clemens's experience and ability will still further strengthen its position.

WHITWELL (DERBYSHIRE).—The Whitwell Ladies' Choral Society finished the season with a concert on June 25, at which the following choral pieces were performed: 'The Shepherds' (Walford Davies), 'Twelve by the clock' (C. H. Lloyd), 'Annie Laurie' (arr. Macpherson), 'Dream pedlary' (Colin Taylor), 'Encinctured with a twine of leaves' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'Fly, singing bird' (Elgar), and 'Spring song' (Myles B. Foster). Mr. Harry Minchin conducted.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SONATA

FOR

VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Op. 82.

Price Six Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES FOR THE VOICE.

WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

BY

GEORGE HENSCHEL.

IN TWO PARTS.

PART 1.	High Voice	..	..	..	..	s.	d.
"	Medium Voice	..	..	..	..	2	6
"	Low Voice..	..	..	..	..	2	6
PART 2.	High Voice	..	..	..	..	2	6
"	Medium Voice	..	..	..	..	2	6
"	Low Voice..	..	..	..	..	2	6

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Hands across the Atlantic	393
Modern British Composers—V. John Ireland. By Edwin Evans	394
Interludes	397
The New Direction in Spanish Music. By Leigh Henry	401
Occasional Notes	402
A New Form of Choral Composition (concluded). By S. Royle Shore	403
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	406
A Service Band Conductor (with Portrait)	408
Debussy as Critic	410
Music in England during the first half of the Sixteenth Century. By Jeffrey Pulver	411
The Alhambra Season	412
English Song: Mr. John Coates' Recital	413
The Eighteenth and the Early Nineteenth Century in English Music (concluded). By F. A. Hadland	414
Church and Organ Music	415
Bands in Church: Some Practical Hints. By Ulric Daubeny	415
Dr. Macpherson's Thanksgiving Te Deum	416
Letters to the Editor	418
Obituary (with Portrait)	423
Sixty Years Ago	423
The Musicians' Y. M. C. A. Gift	424
Choral Music at the Peace Celebrations	424
London County Council Victory Celebrations	425
Royal Opera Season: Mascagni's 'Iris'	425
'The Daughter of Madame Angot,' at Drury Lane	425
Eric Satie's 'Parade'	426
Sir W. H. Hadow on Sir Hubert Parry	427
The Royal Academy of Music	428
Royal College of Music Commemoration Concerts	429
The Associated Board	429
Metropolitan Academy of Music	430
An Oxford Degree	430
Old Italian Music	430
London Concerts	431
Music in the Provinces	432
Musical Notes from Abroad	436
'Great Collection of Italian Music'	437
Opera in England and on the Continent: A Comparison, by an Overseas Man	437
Country and Colonial News	437

MUSIC:

"Grant, we beseech Thee, merciful Lord." Anthem for Soprano Solo (ad lib.) and Chorus (S.A.T.B.). By HAROLD RHODES

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—
Te Deum laudamus. Set to the Quadruple chant in F. By H. S. Oakeley.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BOYCE, ETHEL.—Four Pictures:
No. 1. "The Dainty Lady" (No. 184, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female Voices) 2d.
No. 2. "The Waltz" (No. 185, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female Voices) 3d.
No. 3. "The Day Dream" (No. 186, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female Voices) 2d.
No. 4. "Ursula Dancing" (No. 187, Novello's Two-part Songs for Female Voices) 2d.

DALE, B. J.—Two Songs from Shakespeare. No. 1, "O Mistress Mine," in D. No. 2, "Come away, Death," in D flat 2s. each.

GUISE, HENRY.—"Close to my heart." Song. For Contralto. 2s.

HUTCHISON, THROSBY.—"Beautiful lie the dead." Song. For Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone. 1s. 6d.

MACPHERSON, CHARLES.—A Solemn Te Deum. For the Service of Thanksgiving to Almighty God in St. Paul's Cathedral on Sunday, July 6, 1919. 1s. 6d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

- MUNTZ, B. M.—Hymn-Tune to Hymn No. 312, "A. & M." 1d.
- OAKELEY, H. S.—Te Deum laudamus. Set to the Quadruple chant in F. Both Notations. (No. 964, Novello's Parish Choir Book). 1½d.
- RHODES, HAROLD.—"Grant, we beseech Thee." Short Anthem. (No. 918, The Musical Times). 1½d.
- RICHARDS, BRINLEY.—"God bless the Prince of Wales." Arranged for Mixed Voices by John E. West. (No. 1335, Novello's Part-song Book) 1½d.
- SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 326) contains the following music in both notations:—"Throned high in Heaven." Duet for Treble Voices. Composed by Handel (arranged by R. T. White). "The Rustic." Unison Song (arranged by Thomas F. Dunhill). 1½d.
- SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo.) B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.
- No. 261—"Ballads." Collected and arranged by CECIL J. SHARP 9d. —
- No. 262.—"Pulling Chanteys." Collected and arranged by CECIL J. SHARP 9d. —
- No. 263.—"Capstan Chanteys." Collected and arranged by CECIL J. SHARP 9d. —
- WEBB, G. W.—Te Deum laudamus. Set to music in the key of B flat for unison singing. 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

- BACH, C. PH. E.—Menuett. Transcribed for Organ. (50 cents) 2s. 6d.
- BULL, JOHN.—"The King's Hunt." For Organ. (50 cents) 2s. 6d.
- BULLIS, CARLETON H.—Novelette. For Organ. (50 cents) 2s. 6d.
- BUSCH, CARL.—"Ode to France." 3s.
- FAIRCLOUGH, G. H.—"Eventide." For Organ. (50 cents) 2s. 6d.
- GAUL, HARVEY B.—Chant for dead Heroes. For Organ. (50 cents) 2s. 6d.
- GRETCHANINOFF, A.—The Nicene Creed. (15 cents) 6d.
- HANDEL.—"Bourrée." Arranged for Organ. (50 cents) 2s. 6d.
- MATTHEWS, J. S.—"Shepherd, with Thy tenderest love." A Vesper Hymn and Anthem. (15 cents) 6d.
- "There's a wideness in God's mercy." Anthem. (15 cents) 6d.
- MONTANI, NICOLA A.—"The white silence." For Four-part Women's Chorus. Pianoforte and Harp (25 cents) 1s.
- SMETANA, B.—"Tabor." Symphonic Poem for Organ. (60 cents) 3s.
- "Blanik." Symphonic Poem for Organ. (60 cents) 3s.
- WEBBE, W. J.—"Indian Lullaby." Arranged for Two-part Chorus. (12 cents) 6d.
- WESTERFIELD, G. W.—Benedicite, omnia opera. (10 cents) 3d.
- WYATT, E. W.—"God of our fathers." Hymn of the American Nation. (15 cents) 6d.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address
67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham Surrey.

LANCASTER PARISH CHURCH.—WANTED, ORGANIST, by September 28. Must be experienced Choir-trainer Cathedral type of Service. £80, and a Sunday's collections. Apply, Vicar of Lancaster.

WANTED, by Lady Pianist, POST AS ACCOMPANIST IN ORCHESTRA (Ladies' preferred); or to assist and act as Accompanist, if needed, in business where practice-rooms are let on hire. Apply, "B," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

BENEDICITE (Shortened form).—Specimen for stamp. Austen, "Bryngolen," Esplanade, Carmarthen.

CYRIL SCOTT
NEW SONGS.

Price, net. s. d.

- SEA FRET. C (D to D sharp) and E flat ... 2 0
- SONGS OF A STROLLING MINSTREL:—
1. ORACLE. E flat (D to E flat) and F ... 2 0
2. OLD LOVES. G (G to E) and A ... 2 0
- SUNSHINE AND DUSK. Two Keys ... 2 0
- TIME O' DAY. Two Keys... ... 2 0

CYRIL SCOTT
NEW PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

Price, net. s. d.

- A LITTLE RUSSIAN SUITE. Complete ... 3 6
1. RUSSIAN AIR. 2. SIBERIAN WALTZ
3. DANCE ... Each 2 0
- FIRST BAGATELLE ... 2 0
- CAPRICE CHINOIS ... 2 0
- Played by MARK HAMBOURG.
- TWO PASTORALS:—
1. ALLEGRETTO ... 2 0
2. CON DELICATESSA ... 2 0
- RONDEAU DE CONCERT ... 4 0
- Played by MOISEIWITSCH.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

New and Attractive Compositions.

ORGAN MUSIC.

NET. s. d.

- SONATA in D major. By Edwin L. Morik ... 3 0
- Book 10. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN (Eight short and easy pieces). By H. W. Chuter ... 1 6
- Book 1. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN—includes PRELUDE (Wetton), MEDITATION (Bairstow), &c. 1 6
- Book 6. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN—includes PRELUDE by Alfred Hollins, &c. ... 1 6

THREE GOOD SACRED SONGS.

- "OUR BLEST REDEEMER." By Charlwood Dunkley.
- "HAVEN OF REST." By Noel Johnson.
- "GRANT US THY PEACE." By Sydney H. Wéalé.
- In Keys for All Voices, 2s. net.

- "AT THE MERMAID TAVERN." An Album of Songs.
By Joseph C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.
3s. 6d. net cash.

- "THE MASTER KNOT." Song-Cycle from Rubaiyát of Omar Khayyám. Set to music by Denis Ashleigh.
3s. net cash.

COLLARD MOUTRIE,

52, SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C. 1.

ORCHESTRAS. SUITABLE FOR CINEMAS, &c.

Oboi.	Clarineti.	Fagotti.	Corni 1 & 2.	Corni 3 & 4.	Trombe.	Cornetti.	Tromboni 1 & 2.	Trombone 3.	Euphonium.	Tuba.	Timpani.	Cassa.	Piatti.	Side Drum.	Triangle.	Tambourine.	Harp.	Solo-Cornet.	Organ.	Harp or Piano.	Bells.
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	A	...	6d.	...	3d.	...	...
1/-	1/6	1/-	1/-	...	1/-	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	A	A	A	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	B	B	3d.	B	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
†6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	6d.	A	6d.	B	A	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	C
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	2/-	1/-	1/-	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	A	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/-	†1/-	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	A	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	A	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	A	A	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	3d.
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...
...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	A	...	...	6d.	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
A	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	B	3d.	C	C	...	C	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	3d.	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	3d.	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	3d.	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	6d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	3d.	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	A	...	...	A	6d.	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

ther. † Oboe has the Melody.
mpet Part

X Flute has the Melody.

* For Solo part, see Pianoforte and Bassoon Copy, 2/6.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, 10s. per 100; String Parts, price 9s.; Wind Parts, 14s. 6d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 5s. per 100. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

GEORGE GARRETT.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 5s. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

THE GLEANER'S HARVEST

FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY

C. H. LLOYD.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. M. VON WEBER.

Price One Shilling.

Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 8s.; Wind Parts, 7s.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 5s. per 100.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, MS.

HYMNS, Etc.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.

Price One Penny.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNBY.

Price One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.

Price Three-Halfpence. Words only, 1s. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNBY.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH AND SEA

By J. BARNBY.

On Card, Price One Penny.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNBY.

Price One Penny each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

By A. M. GOODHART.

Price Threepence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

By HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

FEAR NOT, O LAND

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LORD OF THE HARVEST

COMPOSED BY
R. REDHEAD,EDITED BY ALFRED REDHEAD.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

COMPOSED BY

H. A. CHAMBERS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

COMPOSED BY

E. W. NAYLOR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

AND GOD SAID

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Threepence.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

COMPOSED BY

OLIVER KING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

COMPOSED BY

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

Price Threepence.

THE ETERNAL GOD IS THY REFUGE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

(From the 100th Psalm.)

COMPOSED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THOU, O GOD, ART PRAISED IN SION

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

COMPOSED BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE VINEYARD OF THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN GOD

(FROM "SEEDTIME AND HARVEST")

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

COMPOSED BY

BRUCE STEANE.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

COMPOSED BY

MYLES B. FOSTER.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

W. WOLSTENHOLME.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR STRENGTH

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

COMPOSED BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O HOW GREAT IS THY GOODNESS
(FROM "THE RAINBOW OF PEACE")

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPOSITIONS BY CYRIL JENKINS.

CANTATA.

3563. LLEWELYN. S.C.T.B. Cantata dealing with the treachery of Mortimer and the death of Llewelyn. Staff, 1s. 6d. ; Sol-fa, 9d.

FANTASIA FOR STRINGS.

90709. WELSH FANTASIA. A clever piece of writing on Welsh Airs. Great skill is shown in the production of effects. Score, 3s. ; Miniature, 1s. ; Parts, 6d. each.

MIXED VOICES.

Curwen Edition.									Price
									Staff.	Sol-fa.
61066. Autumn	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	1½d.
61051. Carol of Death (S.S.C.C.T.T.B.B.)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	2d.
61014. Dawn	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	2d.
61068. Echo's lament	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	2d.
61009. Hymn to the Soul (S.S.C.T.Bar.B.)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	1½d.
80490. O how blest are ye whose toils (S.S.C.C.T.T.B.B.)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	2d.
61050. O little snowflake	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	2d.
61035. Out of the silence (S.S.C.T.B.B.)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	2d.
61064. Spring	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	1½d.
61049. Storm's triumph	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	2d.
61065. Summer	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	1½.
61067. Winter	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	2d.

MEN'S VOICES.

50514. Assyrian came down, The (Words by Lord Byron)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	1½d.
50532. Battle of Ivry	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	3d.
50474. Deep Jordan's banks I tread (English and Welsh words)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	1½d.
50551. Excelsior	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	2d.
50492. Fallen Heroes	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	2d.
50529. Lament for Prince Llewelyn (English and Welsh words)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	3d.
50547. Lee Shore	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	2d.

EQUAL VOICES.

71459. Butterfly, The	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	S.S.C.	3d.	1½d.
71453. How God made the daisies...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	S.C.	3d.	1½d.
71448. Night in the Desert...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	S.M.C.	3d.	1½d.
71478. Shepherd Lullaby	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	S.C.	3d.	1½d.
71454. Snowflakes	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	S.S.C.	3d.	1½d.
71447. Storm Song	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	S.M.C.	3d.	2d.

ANTHEMS.

80548. Blessed are the dead (English and Welsh words)	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	2d.
80557. Fierce raged the tempest	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4d.	2d.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

HARVEST ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest	3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth	3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA.
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY
F. W. FABER.THE MUSIC BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AFTER TUMULT, REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST FESTIVALS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES AND ANTHEMS.

Venite setting in A (Chant Form)	2d.
Te Deum laudamus in A (for Festivals)	3d.
Benedictus and Jubilate in E	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A	4d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	1½d.
Harvest Anthem: Blessed be Thou	3d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	1½d.
Short Anthem: Thine, O Lord	2d.
Anthem: O clap your hands	4d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	2d.
Harvest Festival Hymn: Sing to the Lord	1d.
Festival Anthem: I was glad	3d.
Ditto, Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa	2d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EDWYN A. CLARE'S
VERY POPULAR HARVEST ANTHEMS.

*All Thy works shall praise Thee.. .. .	5th 1,000	4d.
*The blessings of Peace	5th 1,000	4d.
The above are two very attractive Anthems.
*Thou Crownest the Year	28th 1,000	4d.
*Sing unto God with Thanksgiving	32nd 1,000	6d.
*How great is His Goodness	23rd 1,000	4d.
*The Fruit of Thy Works	20th 1,000	6d.
*He gives us Fruitful Seasons	11th 1,000	6d.
*The Eyes of all Wait upon Thee	63rd 1,000	4d.
Sung at a Festival of 1,500 at Newcastle-on-Tyne.
Fear not, O Land	9th 1,000	4d.
*Sing Praises to His Name	14th 1,000	4d.
O Lord, how manifold are Thy Works	9th 1,000	6d.
Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem	44th 1,000	4d.
Sung at Choral Festivals, Wem and Downpatrick Cathedral.
Favourite Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D	28th 1,000	6d.
Full of flowing melody and effect. Sung at a Choir Festival.

Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.
New York: THE H. W. GRAY Co., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

THE LATIN ORGANIST

EDITED BY

SAMUEL GREGORY OULD.

BOOK I.

No.
1.	Prelude on "Veni, Creator Spiritus"	J. S. Bach
2.	Prelude on "Angelus ad Virginem"	Alfred Hollins
3.	Voluntary on "Orbis Factor"	S. G. Ould
4.	Eight Verses in the Church Modes (1st Set)	S. G. Ould
5.	Eight Verses in the Church Modes (2nd Set)	S. G. Ould
6.	Prelude on "Asperges me"	William Sewell
7.	Prelude on "Asperges me"	William Sewell
8.	Postlude on "Cum júbilo"	William Sewell

BOOK II.

No.
1.	Prelude on "Tonus Peregrinus"	J. S. Bach
2.	Prelude on "Et in terra pax"	Georg Böhm
3.	Meditation on "Pange lingua"	F. E. Gladstone
4.	Solemn Fughetta on "Credo in unum Deum"	C. W. Pearce
5.	Processional Verses on "Pange lingua":—
	(a) Molto Moderato	William Sewell
	(b) Andante piacevole	William Sewell
	(c) Allegro ma non troppo	William Sewell
	(d) Larghetto	William Sewell
	(e) Pomposo e non troppo allegro	William Sewell

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each Book.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOLK-SONG AIRS

COLLECTED IN

SOMERSET

ARRANGED FOR THE PIANOFORTE BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE NET EACH BOOK.

BOOK I.

William Taylor.
The crystal spring.
O Sally, my dear.
Come, all you worthy Christian men.
The foggy Dew.
The false Bride.
The little Cobbler.

BOOK II.

Tarry Trowsers.
Death and the Lady.
The seeds of love.
Robin Hood and the Tanner.
Geordie.
High Germany.
Jolly Jack Tars.
The sweet priméroses.

BOOK III.

A Farmer's Son so sweet.
The little Turtle Dove.
Midsummer Fair.
The Keys of Canterbury.
The Watchet Sailor.
Sweet Europe.

Erin's Lovely Home.
Mowing the Barley.
Blow away the Morning Dew.
Hares on the Mountains.
As I walked through the meadows.
The Cuckoo.

Admiral Benbow.

FOLK-DANCE AIRS

COLLECTED IN

OXFORDSHIRE, GLOUCESTERSHIRE, DEVONSHIRE,
SOMERSET AND DERBYSHIRE

ARRANGED FOR THE PIANOFORTE BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

CONTENTS :

Constant Billy (Morris dance).
Green Sleeves (Morris Bacca-pipe Jig).
The Marriage Vow (Morris dance).
The triumph, or Follow your Lovers (Country dance).
Radstock Jig.
Jockie to the fair (Morris Jig).
Princess Royal (Morris dance).

Old Heddon of Fawsley (Morris dance).
Hunting the Squirrel (Morris dance).
Derbyshire Morris Reel.
Sherborne Jig.
London Pride (Morris dance).
Derbyshire Morris Dance.
Maid o' the Mill (Morris dance).
My Grandmother's Jig.

FOUR FOLK-AIRS

COLLECTED IN

SOMERSET

AND ARRANGED FOR THE VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS NET.

CONTENTS :

Jenny on the Moor.
Mary in the Silvery Tide.

The Lark in the Morn.
The green Wedding.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

The Musical Times

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT.

August 1, 1919.

No. 964.

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK.

Price ~~1½d~~ 2d.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS

SET TO THE
QUADRUPLE CHANT IN F

BY

H. S. OAKELEY.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.
NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

MADE IN ENGLAND.

Te Deum

Doh is F.

m :—	r : d	f :—		m :—	m : r	d : r	m :—		m :—	m : r	d :—	d :—	d : t,	t, l,	s, :—
d :—	t, : d	d :—	d :—	l, : l,	s, : t,	d :—	t, :—	l, : m,	l, :—	l, :—	l, : s,	s, : fe,	s, :— s :—	f : m	l :—	s :—	s : f	m : r, s	s :—	se :—	l : t	m :—	m :—	r : r	r :—	d : t, d :—	d : d	d :—	d :—	f, : f,	s, : s,	d, :—	m, :—	b : se,	l, :—	l, :—	s, : fe,	s, : r,	r, : s,

F. f WE praise | thee O | God : we acknowlodge | thee to | be the |
Lord.

F. 2 All the éarth doth | worship | thee : thé | Father | ever- | -lasting.

3 To thee all A'ngels | cry a- | -loud : the Héavens, and | all the | Powers there- | -in.

4 To thee Chérubin and | Seraph- | -in : cón- | -tinual- | -ly do | cry,

5 Hóly | Holy | Holy : Lórd | God of | Saba- | -oth ;

6 Heaven and earth are fíll of the | Majes- | -ty : óf | thy | Glo- | -ry.

7 The glorious cómpany | of . the A- | -postles : práise | — | — | thee.

8 The goodly féllowship | of the | Prophets : práise | — | — | thee.

9 The nóble | army . of | Martyrs : práise | — | — | thee.

10 The holy Chúrch throughout | all the | world : dóth ac- | know- | ledge | thee.

11 Thé | Fa- | -ther : óf an | infinite | Majes- | -ty ;

12, 13 Thine honourable trúe and | only | Son : also the Holy Ghóst, the |
Com- | -fort- | -er.

14 Thóu art the | King of | Glory : O' | — | — | Christ.

15 Thou art the éver- | -lasting | Son : óf | — the | Fa- | -ther.

mf 16 When thou tookest upón thee to de- | liver | man : thou dídst not ab- |
-hor the | Virgin's | womb.

17 When thou hadst overcóme the | sharpness . of | death : thou dídst open the Kíngdom of | Heaven to | all be- | -lievers.

18 Thou sittest at the right | hand of | God : in the | Glory | of the | Father.

19 We belíeve that | thou shalt | come : tó | be | our | Judge.

20 We therefore pray thee | help thy | servants : whom thou hast redéemed |
with thy | precious | blood.

21 Make them to be númered | with thy | Saints : in | glory | ever- | -lasting.

22 O Lórd | save thy | people : ánd | bless thine | herit- | -age.

23 Góv- | — -ern | them : ánd | lift them | up for | ever.

F. f 24 Dáy | by | day : wé | magni- | -fy | thee.

F. 25 A'nd we | worship . thy | Name : éver | world with- | -out | end.

mf 26 Vóuch- | -safe O | Lord : to kéept us this | day with- | -out | sin.

27 O Lórd have | mercy . up- | -on us : háve | mer- | -cy up- | on us.

28 O Lord let thy mércy | lighten . up- | -on us : ás our | trust | is in | thee.

29 O Lord in thée | have I | trusted : lét me | never | be con- | -founded.

s : f m : m : l : s f : m f : f : s : r m : d : d : f m : r d :
d : r s : d : ta, l : r r : de r : r : r : t, d : s : ta, l : d d : t, d :
f m : r d : s : f : ta l : l l : l : s : s s : s : f : l s : f m :
l : t, d : d : f : s l : l, r : r : d t, s, d : m : f : r s : s, d :

F. f WE praise | thee O | God : we acknowledge | thee to | be the |
Lord.

F. f 2 All the earth doth | worship | thee : the | Father | ever- | lasting.
3 To thee all Angels | cry a- | loud : the Heavens and | all the |
Powers . there- | in.
4 To thee Cherubin and | Seraph- | in : con- | tinu- al- | ly do | cry,

p 5 Holy | Holy | Holy : Lord | God of | Saba- | oth ;

mf 6 Heaven and earth are full of the | Majes- | ty : of | thy | Glo- | ry.

f 7 The glorious company | of . the A- | postles : praise | — | — | thee.

8 The goodly fellowship | of the | Prophets : praise | — | — | thee.

9 The noble | army . of | Martyrs : praise | — | — | thee.

mf 10 The holy Church throughout | all the | world : doth ac- | know- |
ledge | thee ;

11 The | Fa- | ther : of an | infin-ite | Majes- | ty ;

12, 13 Thine honourable true and | only | Son : also the Holy Ghost the |
Com- | fort- | er.

F. f 14 Thou art the | King of | Glory : O | — | — | Christ.

F. f 15 Thou art the ever- | lasting | Son : of | — the | Fa- | ther.

mf 16 When thou tookest upon thee to de- | liver | man : thou didst not ab- | hor the | Virgin's | womb.

17 When thou hadst overcome the | sharpness . of | death : thou didst
open the Kingdom of | Heaven . to | all be- | lievers.

f 18 Thou sittest at the right | hand of | God : in the | Glory | of the | Father.

mf 19 We believe that | thou shalt | come : to | be | our | Judge.

p 20 We therefore pray thee | help thy | servants : whom thou hast redeem- ed | with thy | precious | blood.

21 Make them to be number- ed | with thy | Saints : in | glory ever- | lasting.

mf 22 O Lord | save thy | people : and | bless thine | herit- | age.

23 Gov- | — ern | them : and | lift them | up for | ever.

F. f 24 Day | by | day : we | magni- | fy | thee ;

25 And we | worship . thy | Name : ever | world with- | out | end.

p 26 Vouch- | safe O | Lord : to keep us this | day with- | out | sin.

27 O Lord have | mercy . up- | on us : have | mer- | cy up- | on us.

28 O Lord let thy mercy | lighten . up- | on us : as our | trust | is in | thee.

F. mf 29 O Lord in thee | have I | trusted : let me | never | be con- | founded.

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK.

Te Deum Laudamus.

(For Chant, Unison, and Gregorian Settings, see separate sections.)

288. ADLAM, FRANK, in E flat 4d.	248. *GOSS, JOHN, in F 3d.	25. NUNN, J. H., in F 1½d.
652. §ALCOCK, W. G., in B flat 4d.	274. *GOSS, JOHN, in A 3d.	11. OUSELEY, F., in F 3d.
5. ALLEN, G., in D 3d.	340. §GOSS, JOHN, in D (Thanksgiving) 6d.	119. *OUSELEY, F., in D 3d.
14. ARMES, PHILIP, in G 3d.	729. GRAY, ALAN, in G 4d.	728. POINTER, JOHN, in B flat 3d.
16. ARNOLD, G. B., in C 3d.	70. HAKING, R., in C 1½d.	778. PULLEIN, JOHN, in B flat 3d.
877. ARNOTT, A. D., in F 8d.	504. HALL, E. VINE, in D 3d.	722. READ, F. J., in D 3d.
411. ATTWATER, J. P., in B flat 4d.	693. HALL, E. V., in G (Congregational) 3d.	33. REAY, S., in F 3d.
163. BAKER, A. S., in C 4d.	693B. Do. Melody only 1d.	882. RIDSDALE (Festal) 6d.
35. BARRETT, E. R., in E flat 3d.	572. HOPKINS, E. J., in A 6d.	834. ROSS, W. G., in A 3d.
743. BENNETT, GEORGE, J., in E flat 3d.	15. *HOPKINS, J. L., in G 3d.	627. SELBY, B. L., in G 4d.
18. BEST, W. T., in C 3d.	378. HUNTLEY, G. F., in E flat 4d.	906. SELBY, B. L., in G minor 3d.
546. §BLAIR, HUGH, in D (Festival) .. 6d.	449. HUTCHINSON, T., in E flat 1½d.	409. SHAW, J., in G 3d.
786. BLAIR, HUGH, in E flat 3d.	750. IRELAND, JOHN, in F 3d.	32. §SMART, HENRY, in F 3d.
724. BOOTH, JOSIAH, in D 4d.	29. IRONS, H. S., in G 3d.	375. SMITH, BOYTON, in E flat 4d.
346. §BREWSTER, A. H., in B flat 3d.	726. KEETON, HAYDN, in B flat 3d.	955. SMITH, B., in D (with Jubilate) .. 3d.
588. §BREWSTER, A. H., in E flat 4d.	647. KEMPTON, THOMAS, in B flat 4d.	956. SMITH, BOYTON, in G (No. 5) .. 3d.
145. BROWN, A. H., in A 3d.	680. KING, CHARLES, in C 4d.	388. SOMEVELL, A., in F 3d.
842. §BULLIVANT, G., in E flat (Festival) 4d.	552. KING, OLIVER, in D (with Jubilate) 6d.	19. *STAINER, J., in C 3d.
754. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT, in E flat .. 3d.	131. LANE, E. BURRITT, in F 3d.	136. STAINER, J., in G (Congregational) 3d.
9. CALKIN, J. B., in D 3d.	684. LEE, E. MARKHAM, in C 3d.	273. STANE, BRUCE, in F 3d.
798. CAMBRIDGE, F., in B flat 3d.	447. LEMARE, E. H., in F 4d.	1. STEGGALL, C., in A 3d.
12. CLARKE, J. HAMILTON, in F 1½d.	449. §LEMAIRE, E. H., in E flat 6d.	266. STEGGALL, C., in F (Congregational) 2d.
730. COBB, G. F., in G 3d.	27. LITTLETON, ALFRED H., in E flat 1½d.	24. STEPHENS, C. E., in C 3d.
416. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S., in F 4d.	151. LUTKIN, P. C., in C 4d.	21. STEWART, R. P., in G 3d.
860. COULDREY, H. R., in D 3d.	17. MACFARREN, WALTER, in C 3d.	2. SULLIVAN, ARTHUR, in D 1½d.
751. CUMMINGS, W. H., in D 3d.	228. MACPHERSON, CHARLES, in F 4d.	474. THORNE, E. H., in G (with Jubilate) 6d.
679. DAWRE, R., in F (Festal form) .. 4d.	758. MACPHERSON, CHARLES, in E flat 4d.	23. TILLARD, J., in F 1½d.
26. *DYKES, J. B., in F 1½d.	153. MACPHERSON, STEWART, in E flat 4d.	73. TILLARD, J., in G (Festival) .. 1½d.
31. ELLIOTT, J. W., in F 3d.	83. *MARCHANT, ARTHUR W., in E flat 3d.	66. TOOP, AUG., in D 4d.
49. ELLIOTT, J. W., in D 3d.	362. §MARTIN, GEORGE C., in A 6d.	144. TOZER, FERRIS, in D 3d.
672. FARRANT, R., in G minor 4d.	659. MARTIN, GEORGE C., in C 8d.	617. TOZER, FERRIS, in F 2d.
40. FISHER, ARTHUR E., in D 3d.	578. MATTHEWS, T. R., in G 1½d.	805. TOZER, FERRIS, in E flat 3d.
63. FISHER, ARTHUR E., in A 4d.	579. MATTHEWS, T. R., in E 1½d.	41. TRIMNELL, T. T., in D (Festival) 3d.
472. FORD, E., in F 3d.	39. MILLER, C. E., in D 3d.	109. WALMSLEY, T. F., in C 3d.
392. FOSTER, MYLES B., in C 4d.	262. MONK, M. J., in G 4d.	708. WAREING, HERBERT W., in G .. 4d.
36. GADSBY, H., in E flat 3d.	13. MONK, W. H., in A 3d.	589. WARREN, R. H., in E flat 4d.
207. GALE, C. R., in F 4d.	34. MORLEY, T., in F 3d.	45. §WESTBURY, G. H., in A 3d.
6. *GARRETT, G. M., in F 3d.	807. MOSENTHAL, J., (with Jubilate) in E 6d.	43. WEST, JOHN E., in B flat 3d.
439. GERMAN, J. E., in F 6d.	614. NAYLOR, E. W., in A 4d.	912. WEST, JOHN E., in F 4d.
		70. §WEST, JOHN E., in G 3d.
		558. WILLIAMS, C. LEE, in A 6d.
		780. WOLSTENHOLME, W., in A flat .. 3d.
		37. *WOODWARD, H. H., in E flat .. 3d.

Te Deum Laudamus (CHANT SETTINGS).

523. BARNBY, J. (with other Canticles) 4d.	693. HALL, E. VINE, in G (Congregational) 3d.	819. ROBERTS, J. V., in A 1½d.
443. BARTHOLOMEW (nine Chants) .. 1½d.	693B. Do. Melody only 1d.	820. ROBERTS, J. V., in B flat 1½d.
644. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT 1½d.	147. HAMILTON-GELL, in G 1½d.	821. ROBERTS, J. V., in E flat 1½d.
38. CARNALL, ARTHUR 3d.	22. HERBERT, E., in D 3d.	104. ROBERTS, J. V., in F 1½d.
308. CHIPP, E. T., in D 3d.	158. HOPKINS, E. J., in F 3d.	106. ROBERTS, J. V., in C 1½d.
311. CHIPP, E. T., in E flat 3d.	29. IRONS, H. S., in G 3d.	107. ROBERTS, J. V., in G 1½d.
312. CHIPP, E. T., in C 3d.	456. LITTLETON, A. H., in D 3d.	105. ROBERTS, J. V., in D 1½d.
880. DEANE, J. H., in E 2d.	17. MACFARREN, W., in C 3d.	88. SMITH, BOYTON, in F 1½d.
881. DEANE, J. H., in G 2d.	164. MACPHERSON, G., in E flat 1½d.	954. SMITH, B., in G (No. 3, with Jubilate) 3d.
371. EYRE, A. J., in D (Quadruple) .. 2d.	11. OUSELEY, F., in F 3d.	188. SMITH, BOYTON, in E flat 3d.
408. FIELD, J. T., in A 4d.	119. *OUSELEY, F., in D 3d.	136. STAINER, J., in G (Congregational) 3d.
516. GAUNTLETT, H. J., in G 3d.	231. PETTMAN, EDGAR, No. 1 1½d.	413. STAINER, J., in A flat 3d.
246. *GOSS, JOHN, in C 2d.	238. PETTMAN, EDGAR, No. 2 1½d.	86. SUMNER, in Eb (Soprano voices) .. 3d.
249. GOSS, JOHN, in D 3d.	42. PRATTEN, W., in E 3d.	20. THORNE, E. H., in C 3d.
10. HAKING, R., in C 1½d.	822. ROBERTS, J. V., in E 1½d.	294. TURLE, JAMES, in E flat 1½d.
		51. VINCENT, C., in D 3d.
		914. WEST, JOHN E., in G 1½d.

Te Deum Laudamus (UNISON SETTINGS).

5. ALLEN, G., in D 3d.	765. HOPKINS, E. J., in B flat 3d.	28. REDHEAD, R., in D (Congregational) 3d.
3. *BARNBY, J., in D 3d.	8. MACFARREN, G. A., in G 3d.	497. SELBY, B. L., in D 3d.
4. *BARNBY, J., in B flat 3d.	579. MATTHEWS, T. R., in E 1½d.	136. STAINER, J., in G (Congregational) 3d.
9. CALKIN, J. B., in D 3d.	7. MONK, E. G., in A 3d.	1. STEGGALL, C., in A 3d.
30. CHIPP, E. T., in D 3d.	437. NAYLOR, E. W., in E flat 3d.	696. STEGGALL, C., in F (Congregational) 2d.
267. GOSS, JOHN, in A 2d.	119. *OUSELEY, F., in D 3d.	24. STEPHENS, C. E., in C 3d.
10. HAKING, R., in C 1½d.	11. OUSELEY, F., in F 3d.

Te Deum Laudamus (GREGORIAN TONES).

230. AMBROSIAN MELODY 3d.	380. JORDAN, W. (5th Tone) 1½d.	300. STAINER, J. (2nd Series) 3d.
893. AMBROSIAN MELODY 3d.	953. SMITH, B., in B flat (Plain Song) 1½d.	282. STAINER, J. (3rd Series) 3d.
905. Do. (Ed. by J. F. Bridge) 3d.	237. STAINER, J. (1st Series) 2d.	255. STAINER, J. (14th Series) 3d.

§ Orchestral Parts may be had. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

MORRIS DANCE TUNES

COLLECTED FROM TRADITIONAL SOURCES

AND ARRANGED

FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

CECIL J. SHARP, HERBERT C. MACILWAINE, AND GEORGE BUTTERWORTH.

TEN SETS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH NET.

SET I.

1. BEAN SETTING (Stick Dance).
2. LAUDNUM BUNCHES (Corner Dance).
3. COUNTRY GARDENS (Handkerchief Dance).
4. CONSTANT BILLY (Stick Dance).
5. TRUNKLES (Corner Dance).
6. MORRIS OFF.

SET II.

1. RIGS O' MARLOW (Stick Dance).
2. BLUFF KING HAL (Handkerchief Dance).
3. HOW D'YE DO (Corner Dance).
4. SHEPHERDS' HEY (Stick or Hand-clapping Dance).
5. BLUE-EYED STRANGER (Handkerchief Dance).
6. MORRIS OFF.

SET III.

1. MORRIS ON, OR HEY DIDDLE DIS.
2. HUNTING THE SQUIRREL (Stick Dance).
3. GETTING UPSTAIRS (Handkerchief Dance).
4. DOUBLE SET BACK (Handkerchief Dance).
5. HASTE TO THE WEDDING (Handkerchief Dance).
6. RODNEY (Stick Dance).
7. PROCESSIONAL MORRIS.

SET IV.

1. MORRIS ON, OR HEY DIDDLE DIS.
2. JOCKIE TO THE FAIR.
3. OLD MOTHER OXFORD.
4. OLD WOMAN TOSSED UP IN A BLANKET.
5. BACCA PIPES JIG.
6. PROCESSIONAL MORRIS.

SET V.

1. FLOWERS OF EDINBURGH (Handkerchief Dance).
2. THE MAID OF THE MILL (Handkerchief Dance).
3. THE MAID OF THE MILL (Handkerchief Dance).
4. BOBBING JOE (Handkerchief Dance). [Alternative Version.
5. SHEPHERDS' HEY (Handkerchief Dance). 2nd Version.
6. GLORISHEARS (Handkerchief Dance).
7. THE GALLANT HUSSAR (Handkerchief Dance).
8. LEAP-FROG (Handkerchief Dance).

SET VI.

1. SHOOTING (Stick Dance).
2. BRIGHTON CAMP (Handkerchief Dance).
3. GREEN GARTERS (Handkerchief Dance).
4. PRINCESS ROYAL (Jig).
5. LUMPS OF PLUM PUDDING (Jig).
6. THE FOOL'S DANCE (Jig).
7. DERBYSHIRE MORRIS DANCE (Handkerchief Dance).
8. DERBYSHIRE MORRIS REEL (Handkerchief Dance).

SET VII.

1. THE OLD WOMAN TOSSED UP IN A BLANKET (Handkerchief Dance).
2. THE CUCKOO'S NEST (Handkerchief Dance).
3. THE MONKS' MARCH (Heel-and-Toe Dance).
4. LADS A-BUNCHUN (Corner Dance).
5. LONGBOROUGH MORRIS, OR HEY-DIDDLE-DIS (Handkerchief Dance).
6. LONDON PRIDE (Handkerchief Dance).
7. SWAGGERING BONEY (Corner Dance).
8. YOUNG COLLINS (Handkerchief Dance).
9. THE ROSE (Handkerchief Dance).
10. FIELD TOWN MORRIS (Handkerchief Dance).

SET VIII.

1. HEEL-AND-TOE (Handkerchief Dance).
2. BOBBY AND JOAN (Stick Dance).
3. BANKS OF THE DEE (Handkerchief Dance).
4. DEAREST DICKY (Corner Dance).
5. STEP BACK (Handkerchief Dance).
6. I'LL GO AND ENLIST FOR A SAILOR (Jig).
7. SHERBORNE JIG (Jig).
8. PRINCESS ROYAL (Jig). 2nd Version.
9. NONE SO PRETTY (Jig).

SET IX.

1. OLD BLACK JOE (Handkerchief Dance).
2. THE BEAUX OF LONDON CITY (Stick Dance).
3. THE GALLANT HUSSAR (Handkerchief Dance).
4. TRUNKLES (Corner Dance) and version.
5. WILLIAM AND NANCY (Handkerchief Dance).
6. LEAP-FROG (Handkerchief Dance).
7. LUMPS OF PLUM PUDDING (Jig). 2nd version.
8. LADIES' PLEASURE (Jig).
9. HELSTON FURRY DANCE (Processional).

SET X.

1. BONNY GREEN (Handkerchief Dance).
2. ROOM FOR THE CUCKOO (Hand-clapping Dance).
3. QUEEN'S DELIGHT (Corner Dance).
4. SATURDAY NIGHT (Progressive Dance).
5. BONNETS SO BLUE (Jig).
6. CONSTANT BILLY (Handkerchief Dance). 2nd version.
7. SHEPHERDS' HEY (Handkerchief Dance). 4th version.
8. LEAP-FROG (Handkerchief Dance). 2nd version.
9. WYRESDALE GREENSLEEVES DANCE (Three-men Dance).
10. CASTLETON GARLAND DANCE (Processional).

ARRANGEMENT FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA:—

Set 1. String Parts, 4s. ; Flute and Clarinet, 1s. each.

Set 2. String Parts, 2s. 6d. ; Flute and Clarinet, 6d. each.

THE MORRIS BOOK

A HISTORY OF MORRIS DANCING WITH A DESCRIPTION OF DANCES

AS PERFORMED BY THE MORRIS-MEN OF ENGLAND

BY

CECIL J. SHARP, HERBERT C. MACILWAINE, AND GEORGE BUTTERWORTH.

PART I.—Containing a description, &c., of the Dances in Sets I. and II.

PART II.—Containing a description, &c., of the Dances in Sets III. and IV.

PART III.—Containing a description, &c., of the Dances in Sets V. and VI.

PART IV.—Containing a description, &c., of the Dances in Sets VII. and VIII.

PART V.—Containing a description, &c., of the Dances in Sets IX. and X.

PRICE, PAPER COVERS, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH PART.

CLOTH, THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH PART.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CHAPPELL & CO'S STANDARD OPERATIC AND CHORAL WORKS.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., beg to draw the attention of Choral Societies, &c., to the undermentioned Standard Works, which are now in great demand with the resumption of performances by Choral and Dramatic Societies:—

CONCERT VERSION

OF MERRIE ENGLAND

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

SCOTTISH RHAPSODY.

THE WEDDING OF SHON MACLEAN

FOR CHORUS, SOLI, AND ORCHESTRA

By HUBERT BATH.

FAUST

By CH. GOUNOD.

CONCERT VERSION

OF TOM JONES

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

CONCERT SELECTION

OF A PRINCESS OF KENSINGTON

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

LOOK AT THE CLOCK

By HUBERT BATH.

THE MARTYR OF ANTIOCH

By ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

VOCAL SCORE, CHORUSES AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS.

FULL PARTICULARS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION TO—

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte complete	3s. od.	Full Score (Full Orchestra)	5s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte separately, each	1s. 6d.	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ...	6s. od.	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra... ..	7s. od.	Strings, each Number	2s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra... ..	12s. od.	Separate String Parts, 6d. each.
		Military Band Arrangement	15s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 919—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

(Season 1919-1920.)

There are now VACANCIES in the CHOIR for SOPRANOS, CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES. Applicants should have STRONG VOICES of GOOD QUALITY, and should be prepared to pass an examination in SIGHT-READING. Address, The Secretary, Royal Choral Society, Royal Albert Hall, S.W. 7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS TERM begins Monday, September 22.
ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Thursday, September 18.

SCHOLARSHIPS for Singing, Pianoforte, Violin, Violoncello, Composition, and Organ will be offered for Competition in September. Particulars as to date of Entry, &c., will be forwarded on application.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens, Telephone—"1160, Western," London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The CHRISTMAS TERM commences on Monday, September 22nd.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Thursday, September 18th.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LANDON RONALD.

AUTUMN TERM COMMENCES MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22ND.

DRAMATIC STUDENTS' PERFORMANCE of "AS YOU LIKE IT" in the Autumn Term. Production under the direction of Mr. IAN FORBES-ROBERTSON.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects, STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c. may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BRUMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER.

(FACULTY OF MUSIC.)

The Prospectus, containing information as to the Courses of Study for the Mus. B. and Mus. D. Degrees, will be forwarded on application to the Registrar. Under the regulations, graduates of other approved Universities who fulfil the requirements of the syllabus may qualify for the Degree of Mus. D.

The Hargreaves Scholarship, of the value of £30 per annum, and tenable for two years, is awarded on the results of the first Mus. B. Examination.

The Session commences on October 8.

SINGERS with GOOD VOICES are invited to join THE PHILHARMONIC CHOIR.

(Hon. Conductor: CHARLES KENNEDY SCOTT.)

Among the works immediately to be undertaken are the following:—

BACH: DOUBLE MOTET. "SING YE TO THE LORD."

BEETHOVEN: NINTH SYMPHONY.

DELIUS: "THE SONG OF THE HIGH HILLS" (New).

BALFOUR GARDINER: "NEWS FROM WHYDAH."

GRAINGER: PART-SONG. "MORNING SONG IN THE JUNGLE"

AND "FATHER AND DAUGHTER."

HOLST: "THE HYMN OF JESUS" (New).

For full particulars send stamped addressed envelope to the Secretary, Granville Humphreys, 145, Elms Road, Clapham Park, S.W. 4.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications were again advanced on April 1, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras,
Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

Sept. 11th, 1910, 3.30 p.m.—Lecture, "The Ethics of Criticism," by
Dr. Churchill Sibley.

Chairman, J. Haworth Roberts, Esq., M.A. Cantab.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

Organists (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden,
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC,
LONDON

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers'
Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-
Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered
Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists. Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A.

Invented by MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

COPY OF TESTIMONIAL from HERBERT FRYER, Esq., Professor and Examiner of the Pianoforte, R.C.M.:

"I have much pleasure in recommending Mr. R. J. Pitcher's clever invention, 'The Techniquer.' I consider it a very helpful means of stretching and opening out the hands, thus making many passages, perhaps more especially in chord playing, feel far more comfortable and more 'within' the hand than formerly. It is a splendid thing for warming the hands in this cold, damp climate of ours, and I consider that ten minutes' use of it before daily practice saves much time formerly lost in getting into form.

"HERBERT FRYER."

Send for particulars and testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin,
Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in DECEMBER (last day of entry, November 15th).

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate
(A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July,
and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus.
L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship
(F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING

TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE CITY TEMPLE CHORAL SOCIETY.

President: RALPH DUNSTAN, Esq., Mus. D. Cantab.

Conductor: MR. ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O. (Season 1919-1920.)

An Oratorio will be rendered on the SECOND Saturday in each month, at 3 p.m., commencing October 11 with Mendelssohn's "Elijah."
Rehearsals, first and third Wednesdays, at 7.45, commencing September

There are Vacancies for all Voices, especially Tenors and Basses.

Particulars of membership may be obtained from the Hon. Sec.,
MR. C. J. LE BEAU, The City Temple, Plum Tree Court, E.C. 4.

THE INCORPORATED

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and

117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers.
Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. Spang Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES
STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY
OF MUSIC, 22, Princes Street, Cavendish Square, W. 1. DR.
YORKE TROTTER'S RHYTHMIC METHOD OF MUSIC TEACH-
ING. Holiday Course for Teachers, September 9 to 13.

MR. WATKIN MILLS

Has returned to England, and will be available for ORATORIO AND CONCERT ENGAGEMENTS DURING THE COMING SEASON.

It is also his intention to give a series of RECITALS

with the assistance of

MISS ELSIE G. CANTELL

(MRS. WATKIN MILLS)

SOPRANO AND ACCOMPANIST.

Address all communications to the Lionel Powell Musical Agency, 44, Regent Street, London, W. 1.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL)

OFFICES: 19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

*For the Fostering and Encouragement of British
Music at Home and Abroad.*

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Secretaries for Foreign Correspondence:

MR. E. J. DENT. MR. FRANCIS TOYE.

Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

CAN YOU HELP

BY ARRANGING HOME MUSIC CIRCLES?—BY CONCERTS OR LECTURES?—BY OBTAINING NEW MEMBERS?—BY HELPING
TO FOUND A BRANCH IN YOUR TOWN OR DISTRICT?—BY ASSISTING AT CENTRES (LONDON, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, ETC.) WITH LIBRARIES & CATALOGUES?

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Acting-Secretary, 19, BERNERS ST., W. 1.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery and wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing,"
will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System.
When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

£100 SINGING; £50 Piano Scholarships,
Souvenir Cup, Cash Prizes, and Medals. Mr.
Clifton Cooke's OPERA COMPETITION, November 1 and 8.
Prospectus, Secretary, 25M, Guilford Street, W.C. 1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.BERNARD WESTON (BARITONE).

Concerts, Oratorios, &c.

14, College Road, Kensal Rise, N.W. 10.

MR. ARTHUR KELLET

TENOR

(St. Paul's Cathedral).

(Late Captain Oxf. and Bucks Light Infantry). Now demobilised and open for engagements for

ORATORIO, BALLADS, RECITALS, ETC.

Address, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1; or St. Paul's Cathedral.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now
demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore
Street, W. 1.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 3 First Mus. Bac.

4 Final Mus. Bac. 2 Final Mus. Doc.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. N. SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MATRIC. SUCCESSES 41

JULY, 1919 8

A. MCALISTER, B.A., 209, Castle Boulevard, Nottingham.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

* * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR,
O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post,
to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COM-
POSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Bros., Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence.
Terms, &c. Radcliffe, Manchester.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(formerly Mangelsdorff), of the British Expeditionary Force,
France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-INATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 369 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1.

THE SOUTH-WESTERN COLLEGE OF MUSIC, 298, High Road, Balham, London, S.W. 17. Principal: ALLAN BROWN, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L.Mus. T.C.L. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. SEPT. EXAMINATIONS for Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Pianoforte Accompaniment, Organ, &c. SINGLE LESSONS by SPECIALISTS. Correspondence Lessons also given. MANY RECENT SUCCESSSES. Address, The Secretary.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL CHORISTERS' SCHOOL—There will be VACANCIES for CHORISTERS (Fees, £15 per annum) for next Term. Also VACANCIES for PROBATIONERS (Fees, £35 per annum). Probationers become Choristers as vacancies occur, when the Fees are £15 per annum. Good education preparatory for the Public Schools. EXHIBITIONS are AWARDED on leaving the School. Excellent playing fields. Very good School Library. Trial of Voices, Tuesday, September 16, 1919. For prospectus and full particulars, apply, Rev. A. G. Robertson, 57, The Close, Salisbury.

KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL, CAMBRIDGE.

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL for the Public Schools and Royal Navy. CHOIR SCHOOL for King's College Chapel.

Inclusive fees, 70 guineas, reduced to £20 for CHORISTERS who follow the regular curriculum.

A TRIAL OF VOICES to fill vacancies in the Choir School will be held on Tuesday, October 7.

Candidates must have a good ear and good voice, and should be between 9 and 12 years of age.

For particulars apply to The Dean.

Names to be sent in not later than September 29.

SOLO BOY WANTED, for London Presbyterian Church. Light duties; good salary; many privileges. Apply, with photo, "Clef," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL—There is a VACANCY for an ALTO LAY CLERK. Salary, £140, with pension. Applications should be sent, not later than September 15, to The Rev. The Sub-Dean, The Cathedral, Manchester.

ST. ANDREW'S, WELLS STREET, W.—MALE ALTO WANTED, to commence duties in September. First-class reader absolutely essential. Stipend, £30. Apply, by letter, to Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Andrew's Vestry.

WANTED.—ALTOS; Communicants. Croydon district. Full Choral Services. Salary by arrangement. Apply, "R. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ARMAGH CATHEDRAL—TENOR WANTED. Salary, £100. Candidates under 30 years of age. Applications and testimonials (copies) to be sent without delay to the Chapter Clerk, Cathedral Close, Armagh.

TENOR SOLOIST REQUIRED, for Essex Church (Unitarian), The Mall, Notting Hill Gate, W. £20. Must read well. Surplised Choir; interesting Services. Apply, Alfred R. Stock, F.R.C.O., 21, Sutherland Place, Bayswater, W. 2.

RIPON CATHEDRAL—There is a VACANCY for a TENOR LAY CLERK. Candidates must be Communicant members of the Church of England. Salary, £100 per annum. Applications, with recent testimonials, should be sent to The Precentor, before September 15.

ORGANIST WANTED, for the Acton Congregational Church (not Choirmaster). The duties are two Services on Sundays, one week-night practice, and occasional Special Services. Salary, £50 per annum. Applications, with testimonials and experience, to be sent in not later than September 10, to Rev. R. G. Davies, 51, Twyford Avenue, Acton, W. 3.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Highgate Presbyterian Church. Salary, £70. Apply by letter, with copies of two testimonials, to D. W. Macdonald, "Highcroft," Shepherd's Hill, Highgate, N. 6.

WANTED.—An ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, for St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Ealing, W. Good musical Service. Address, "M. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WIGAN PARISH CHURCH—The post of ORGANIST will shortly be VACANT. Applications from Communicant members of Ch. of E. may be sent to Rector, Wigan. Salary, £100, rising to £130 per annum.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST (Voluntary) or Pupil-Assistant WANTED. St. Andrew's, Whitehall Park, Highgate. Good 3-Manual organ. H. C. R. Galer, 7, Gainsborough Road, N. 12.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST, for North London Church. Services in return for Lessons and Practice. Apply, Organist, 26, Friern Barnet Road, New Southgate, N. 11.

ORGANIST (experienced) can DEPUTISE after Sept. 14, or can take Choir Practices. West London preferred. W. L. Outwin, 15, Hartwood Road, Shepherd's Bush, W. 12.

PROFESSIONAL VIOLINIST (Soloist).—Young Lady would join first-class concert party for TOUR. Expenses only. Distinguished references and Press notices. Audition, London, Sept.-Oct. Please state full particulars, length of tour, other artists, &c. Reply, "Violinist," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

CONDUCTOR.—A Small Choral Society in a S.W. Suburb, about 18 miles from London, is about to recommence its work, and is requiring the services of a Conductor by September 15. Further particulars may be obtained on application to "E. J. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ROYAL MARINES BAND (Portsmouth Division). VACANCIES for the following Instrumentalists:—OBOE, EUPHONIUM, BASSES (STRING AND BRASS), VIOLONCELLO, HARP, DOUBLE DRUMS. EXPERIENCED PERFORMERS ONLY. Double-handed proficiency desirable. Apply, Bandmaster, Royal Marines, Gosport.

RESIDENT PIANOFORTE-MISTRESS REQUIRED, in Girls' Boarding School, near London. Good qualifications and experience essential. Initial salary, £100 a year. Send full particulars and copies of testimonials. "M. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

EASTBOURNE.—Boys' Preparatory School. VACANCIES for TWO BOARDERS, September. Special musical facilities (organ, piano, &c.). Prospectus on application to Headmaster (F.R.C.O.), "Downsmeade," Victoria Drive, Eastbourne.

PIANO TUNERS WANTED, FOR INDIA.—Apply, by letter, to "S. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGAN (PIPE) TUNER AND REPAIRER WANTED, FOR INDIA. Apply, by letter, to "S. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed.
Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-
MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—TWO-MANUAL ("Doherty")
REED ORGAN. Pedals; 26 stops and pipes; hand-blown.
Carved Oak. Perfect condition. Suitable for small church. £90 net.
Jarvis, 15, Wells Road, Ilkley, Yorkshire.

CHAMBER ORGAN FOR SALE.—"Dominion."
Double-Manual Reed Organ, with pedals and pipe top, and fitted with "Melvin" engine. Illustration and full particulars on application to John Murray, 19, Castle Street, Dumfries.

AMERICAN ORGAN WANTED.—Two Manuals
and Pedals preferred. Lowest cash price to M. T. Moore, 54, City Road, London, E.C. 1.

CLAVIERS FOR SALE.—In good condition.
Apply, Secretary, Ackworth School, near Pontefract.

ORGAN PEDALS FOR PIANO; Radiating and Concave, R.C.O. Compass, CCC to F, 30 notes. As new. Action perfect. "W.A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

FOR SALE.—RARE MUSIC from the Library of the late W. F. Trimmell, including: GEO. BICKHAM, JUNR.,
"The Musical Entertainer," an old and valuable Book of Music, beautifully illustrated title and fine engravings (whole morocco, gilt); FETIS,
"Traité de l'Harmonie" (Paris, 1875, half-calf); ditto, "Biographie des Musiciens" (10 vols., Paris, 1873, half-calf); COUPERIN'S WORKS, by Johanns Brahm; BERANGER, 9 vols., Paris, 1875; MUSICAL ANTIQUARIAN, 4 vols., 1599 and 1592; HANDEL, 10 vols., 1737, half-calf. Various other works, Oratorios, MSS., and letters, including Merkel, Abt, Oakley, Hopkins, and T. Tallis Trimmell. May be inspected by arrangement. Apply, "T. A. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

BASS VOCALISTS should buy Descriptive Song,
"THE VOICE OF THE DEEP" (Oakley). Compass, G (or low E flat) to E flat. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.
DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
Works—Hanley, Staffs. NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the Partnership heretofore subsisting between us, the undersigned, Louis Bernard Vereycken, William Joseph Potts, and Phillibert Vanrykel, carrying on business as Musical Publishers at Flat Number 15, Number 132, Charing Cross Road, in the County of London, under the Style or Firm of "The London and Continental Music Publishing Company (Incorporating Edition Musicale, Belge)," has been dissolved by mutual consent as from the Twenty-second day of July, 1919.

All debts due and owing to or by the said late Firm will be received or paid by the said Louis Bernard Vereycken and William Joseph Potts.
And such business will be carried on in the future by the said Louis Bernard Vereycken and William Joseph Potts.

AS WITNESS our hands this 22nd day of July, 1919.

SIGNED by the said Louis L. B. VEREYCKEN.
Bernard Vereycken, William W. J. POTTS.
Joseph Potts, and Phillibert PH. VANRYKEL.
Vanrykel,

In the presence of H. S. A. FOY,
4, Walbrook, London, E.C.,
Solicitor.

JOHN IRELAND

TWO NEW SONGS. ON POEMS BY ARTHUR SYMONS.

"THE ADORATION" "THE RAT"

For Medium Voice.

PRICE 2s. EACH (No Discount).

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W. 1

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO
(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY
PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE ARABESQUE

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU

FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

String Parts, 9s. ; Full Score and Wind Parts, in the Press.

READY SHORTLY.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo	...	3s. 6d.
" " Pianoforte Duet	...	5s. 0d.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed.
The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Despatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Divisions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BLOCK CITY. SONG.

The Words by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The Music by TEMPLE P. M. BEVAN.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REVISION OF PRICES.

WEBSTER'S GROUNDWORK OF MUSIC.
WEBSTER'S CHILD'S PRIMER OF THE THEORY
OF MUSIC. London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Fredrick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of the chatty, gossipy order. . . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personalities with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

MUSICAL HERALD.

So long in preparation, has been worth waiting for. One would not recommend a protracted reading at one sitting; the scenes change too rapidly. But that is just the charm of the book for a busy musician. Pick it up and read a few pages at random, and you will want to repeat such pleasure again and again.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wonder whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

Within its 349 pages he has packed an infinite variety of reminiscence, told with a raciness of style and a command of expression which impart great effect to the extremely interesting events of which the volume treats, and which all types of readers will find of absorbing interest.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

No. 76, NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

MANUAL OF HARMONY FOR SCHOOLS

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

CONTENTS.

Introduction—Common Chords in the Major Mode—Common Chords in the Minor Mode—The Common Chord upon the Mediant of a Major Scale—Chords of the Sixth in the Major Mode—Chords of the Sixth in the Minor Mode—The Chord of the Sixth and Fourth—The Chord of the Dominant Seventh—The Inversions of the Chord of the Dominant Seventh—Other Diatonic Chords of the Seventh, and the Chord of the Added Sixth—Tonal Sequences—Unfigured Basses—Suspensions—The Dominant Major Ninth, and the Chord of the Leading Seventh—The Dominant Minor Ninth, and the Chord of the Diminished Seventh upon the Leading Note—Modulation to Related Keys—Cadences—The Chords of the Dominant Minor and Major Thirteenth—The Harmonization of Simple Melodies—Chromatic Triads—Some Chromatic Discords—Special Supertonic Discords—The French, German, and Italian Sixths—Tonic Discords—Prohibited and Permissible Fifths—Modulating Sequences—The Pedal Point, or Point d'Orgue—Exceptional Resolutions of Diatonic Discords—Chromatic Modulation—Compound Modulation—Enharmonic Modulation—Passing Notes, Auxiliary Notes, and the Appoggiatura—The Harmonization of Florid Melodies.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Key to the Manual, price 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, MUS. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, MUS. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL at the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and certain Centres in July and last:

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Thomas Eastop, F.R.C.O. (Erith), Thomas E. T. Griffiths, F.R.C.O. (Belfast).

PIANOFORTE.—Ethel Abrams (Runcorn), William J. Ball (Leigh, Lancs.), Edna M. Barnett (Stoke-on-Trent), Elsie I. Barr (Chulmleigh), George S. A. Bone (Luton), Ena K. Browne (London), Adelaide S. Collins (Eltham), Rose M. Dunkley (Oxton), Sarah A. Griffiths (Haverfordwest), Marion Hall (Barnoldswick), Dorothy H. Heap (Nottingham), Irene A. Hewett (Wellington, Som.), Florence L. Hinton (Newhaven), Olive R. V. Jones (Holt), Ruth V. Laing (London), Elizabeth Lightfoot (Runcorn), Winifred M. Linington (London), Eileen F. Loverick (Winchester), Althea G. Matthew (Nottingham), Sarah S. Mellows (Nottingham), Ethel Myers (London), Edith K. Ostler (Bristol), Doris E. Owen (Dover), Mary Smithies (Southampton), Dorothy Spaven (Nottingham), Lucy K. Stevens (Nottingham), Phyllis M. Taylor (Stockport), Freda I. Webb (London), Katherine A. White (Nottingham), Robert G. Woolcott (London).

ORGAN.—Thomas E. T. Griffiths, F.R.C.O. (Belfast), Henry E. C. Sharnan F.R.C.O. (Deal), Sybil M. Wilkinson (Ramsgate).

SINGING.—Minnie E. Bartlett (London), Rev. Samuel Kibel (Edinburgh).

VIOLIN.—Maud Knowles (Nottingham).

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(Continued.)

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Lucy Bagnal (Driffield), Eunice L. Baughan (Atherton), Samuel H. Baker, A.R.C.O. (Hove), Eveline Davy (London), Thomas P. Fletcher (Blackpool), William J. Hill (London), Elizabeth Pimblett (Eccles), Muriel Young (Horsham).

PIANOFORTE.—*Harold J. Andrews (Brentwood), Elsie Barnes (Liverpool), Annie M. Basham (Newport, Mon.), Ada Booth (Tipton), Constance Bristol (Birmingham), Annie W. R. Calder (Manchester), Ethel R. Calver (King's Lynn), Sylvia R. Cleaver (Luton), Dorothy M. Cooper (Uxbridge), Violet W. M. Crook (Southampton), Edith M. Dean (Newcastle, Staffs), Clara F. Eady (Strood), Audrey Ellis (Penzance), Florence H. Elston (Mapperton), Trevor Evans (Wrexham), Wilhelmina Fairbairn (Duns), Jessie J. Fiedler (Bristol), Elizabeth Gawan (Bootle), Beatrice Hale (Bristol), Mabel E. Hall (North Walsham), Elizabeth M. R. Halliday (Swindon), Marjory J. Hardwick (Hove), Gwyneth D. Harris (Dunstable), Mrs. Bathia Howard (Letchworth), Gladys I. Jerram (Derby), Jennie Jones (Liverpool), Elizabeth I. Keith (Newburgh), Mrs. E. F. Kidney (St. Leonards), Hilda D. V. Lewis (Southampton), Ruth G. E. Lezemore (Sheerness), James Lockett (Chesterton), Victoria A. Mowland (Bristol), Hannah L. Muir (Gillingham), Julia B. Needham (Meols), Ruby Nobbs (Ashford), Emma M. Nott (Clifton Down), Archibald Oliver (Meols), Ada Parry (Liverpool), Mrs. W. G. Phillips (Leigh-on-Sea), Florence E. Pitches (Newmarket), Marion I. Russell (Thornton Heath), Gladys I. Spindler (Grimsby), Emily W. Stanley (London), May Swainson (Farnworth), Isabella R. Thomas (London), Grace E. Thomas (Bristol), Martha Thornton (Nelson), Leslie E. Veale (Brixham), Eva Walton (Morecambe), Annice H. Wardle (Calstock), Jessie Webb (London), George Williams (Wrexham), Helen Wilson (Kewick), Coralie B. Winter (Newmarket).

* Also passed in General Principles of Scientific Teaching.

ORGAN.—Herbert J. Liddington (London), Albert E. Pembry (Canterbury).

SINGING.—Lena B. Fentiman (Devonport), Beatrice S. Halliday (Folkestone).

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY and PRACTICE of COMPOSITION.—Helen S. Phillips (Hastings).

PIANOFORTE.—Mabel Beevers (Harrogate), Gertrude S. P. Burrows (Leeds), Lilian I. Davies (Gowerton), Lenora E. Drake (Brislington), William D. Leshen (Ammanford), Phyllis M. Thomas (Keynsham) (Honours), Ethel G. Worrall (Dursley).

VIOLIN.—Florence M. G. Hubbard (Walsall).

The following Scholarships tenable at the College for one year with possible renewal, were awarded in July:—James W. Borders (Pianoforte), Olive McInnes (Pianoforte and Singing), Cyril A. Marks (Organ), Dorothy I. Rice (Elocution and Pianoforte), Vida L. W. Slocombe (Singing), Grace D. Stevens (Singing), Muriel W. Stopes (Pianoforte), Gilbert V. Sutton (Pianoforte); also (probationary for three months) Edith J. M. White (Violin and Singing).

The following SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES were examined in the Dominions and India in 1918-19:

PIANOFORTE.—Emma C. Anthony, Martha H. G. Anthony, Elizabeth R. Arbuckle, Muriel M. Armstrong, Ada D. Ashby, Mary Baker, Beryl A. H. Barclay, Agnes M. Barrett, Lilian N. Bartlett, Oliver G. Beavan, Mary Bell, Harriet Bothwell, Winifred C. Bourne, Dorothy E. Brown, Clarence G. Chadwick, Jessie H. C. Christie, Maggie Clancy, Stella Clarke, Ursula Crocker, Veronica Cryan, Mary M. Das, Florence M. Davey, Emse Dawson, Katherine M. Donovan, Agnes Doyle, Christina Duggan, Margaret E. Edie, Edith M. Elliott, Helen B. Ellis, Margaret C. Fardon, Nana B. Field, Ethel E. Fitzmaurice, Laura H. Fyfe, Lena M. Geddes, Grace H. Gilbert, Lewis R. Hall, Ellen Hanrahan, Eva E. Harris, Maggie T. Hewitson, Pauline A. Judge, Evaline G. Ireland, Mabel L. James, Sidney Jennings, Laura A. Johns, Jean M. Johnston, Mary Cecilia Johnston, Jessie N. Jones, Edna Keane, Nellie Kellcher, Shelagh Kelly, Irene Kent, Constance Kerlin, Dorothy M. Kindler, Nora M. Knell, Myrtle M. Knight, Nora E. Krääl, Grace S. Lane, Eileen D. Leech, Violet E. Leunig, Ettie Lewin, Nellie Littleton, Eunice Lording, Kathleen V. McConville, Kathleen P. McIntosh, Elsie McMahon, Florence Matches, Jeanie N. Mathew, Jennie S. Melvin, May Mikkelsen, Emily M. Mitchell, Kathleen L. Mitchell, Frederic Morris, Mary E. Mulcahy, Henrietta Nefdt, Helen Oates, Daisy O'Keefe, Lillian O'Shea, Molly O'Shea, Hilda Pafsell, Doris Percy, Aimée Philcox, Kathleen M. Power, Hildred M. Purnell, Freda Rabinowitz, Norah R. Rolfe, Susan N. Scobbie, Irene M. Seymour, Daisy E. Shaw, Kathleen Sheil, Rose Shepherd, Charlotte A. Smith, Eileen R. Smith, Ella Smith, Mary Sokolich, Hetty Steyn, Marjorie G. Stoneham, Alicia A. Streeter, Eileen M. Strong, Daisy Tempest, Ethel Thal, Winifred Thom, Gladys C. Tiernan, Dolores T. Tresai, Peggy Troy, Cornelia A. Van der Lingen, Lorna A. Vickery, Rose A. Voigt, Vivienne Wallace, Alma Ward, Elizabeth B. Wardlow, Eli Weikhardt, Helen H. Weir, Linda I. White, Polly H. Wood, Evelyn Wright, Gertrude Yull.

ORGAN.—Gwen A. Jones, George A. Thornton.

SINGING.—Ivy E. Barclay, Mithoo S. H. Bathiwal, Ronald P. Bridger, Lorena M. Collier, Agnes Cunningham, Myrtle L. Jones, Emma M. D. Kugelberg, Rosalind Leonard, Margaret Murdoch, May O'Donnell.

VIOLIN.—Herewarda Peeters, Rock Á Viegas.

(Continued on page 456.)

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(Continued from page 455.)

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Constance R. Albion, Gordon H. Algate, Barbara Allen, Annie M. Anderson, Fanny Arenson, Kathleen Atkinson, Ivy A. M. Bailey, Alice M. Barnes, Sybil M. Beaty, Gwendolyn Bennet, Arthur Bernoth, Doris M. Bettesworth, Janet Black, Jean Boyne, Ita P. Brewer, Henry L. Budge, Annie Esther Burgess, Gertrude I. Burman, Phyllis M. Butcher, Mavis Caddy, Kathleen M. M. Cassidy, Winifred Chamarette, Grace Clemeni, Lily Cohen, Adeline M. Colledge, Imelda C. Collins, Gertrude Concannon, Christina Cooper, Iris Crawford, Leah R. Crean, Jessie Cribb, Margaret M. Curran, Leila Davies, Oliver Diver, Alice B. Dorney, Margaret Dunn, Jessie P. S. Dunstone, Winifred D. Edwards, Eva Escott, Una Etheridge, Violet E. Fear, Clarissa A. Foster, Eva Friedman, Maud Gabriel, Maria L. Garcia, Angela S. Gill, Enid S. Gillson, Blanche H. Gralow, Nellie Gray, Ivy C. Grenness, Eileen Grogan, Maruja Durán Guani, Eveline Guy, Dorothy Hamilton, Althea A. Harper, Hazel F. Highett, Winifred P. Hill, Natalie C. C. Hinson, Ida R. Hinton, Marie C. Hobbs, Dorothy Hodgen, Dorothy M. Hodgson, Maisie Hodgson, Eileen Hooper, Doris E. Howard, Cecile Huth, Julie Iles, Sylvia Inder, Violet Inder, Evelyn Jeffery, John C. Jeffery, Florence Joelsson, Edna E. Johnston, Edna M. José, Alma I. Kennedy, Margers Kernahan, Essie M. Lawson, Margaret V. Leary, Rachel Lewis, Gertrude Little, Ruth Lovegrove, Marie V. Lucas, Elizabeth M. Lyle, Margaret Lynch, Lucy E. McGahan, Mary McKendry, Mabel Mackenzie, Lilian I. Malyon, Essie J. Mandall, Eileen Mansfield, Mary L. Marlor, Norah Marryatt, Dorothy M. Meares, Minnie Melchisside, Sydney T. Morley, Eva Mullan, Grace G. Mumford, Kathleen M. Murphy, Grace Noach, Martha Noonan, Ethel Norris, Indira Nundy, Maurice B. Parrot, Jean Paul, May H. Peckham, Beryl Poulton, Mona Power, Hester A. Pretorius, Doris Prichard, Vera M. Pryce, Elsie K. Ramsay, Annie C. Rankin, Alice M. Reid, Ada M. Rowan, Helen K. Rutter, Doris M. Sanday, Ester Schalowitz, Margaret Schoen, Thelma M. Shambler, Florence M. Shaw, Thelma Shaw, Mavis Shield, Daisy A. Smith, Lilian Smith, Hannah Spiro, Kate M. Spittle, Irene V. Stapleton, Olive Steans, Ethel I. Story, Annie E. Sutton, Amy L. W. Symonds, Lilian G. Thatcher, Kathleen M. Thomas, Edna M. Thompson, Annie Treloar, Alma M. Urquhart, Mary L. Vandeau, Phyllis J. A. Vanrennan, Clasia A. J. Van Welle, Dulcie M. Virgo, Matilde Walder, Nancy M. Walsh, Louisa M. Waugh, Violet M. Wayne, Cicely M. Webb, Ivy V. Wekworth, Dorothy White, Freda Whitelaw, Thelma F. Whitelaw, Bessie Williams, Grace B. Williams, Emma E. C. Wolf, Nellie M. Wood, Madeline A. Wright.

ORGAN.—Rosie H. Girdwood, Edna F. Robinson.

SINGING.—Edith M. Brosnan, Beatrice Taylor-Brown.

VIOLIN.—Mary P. Davies, Doris E. Halsall, Kathleen M. Hemming, Gladys Hornby, Dorothy W. Johnston, Eileen Mannix, William Stratford, Ina G. Sutherland.

CERTIFICATES.

PIANOFORTE.—Ngahene Astbury, Beatrice L. Barber, Mary A. Bitscher, Sylvia Bourne, Lilian M. Bradman, Merite Broad, Tessie Byrne, Delia Carmody, Gwendoline Cartland, May V. Clark, Alice M. Cobbleck, Myrtle W. Collins, Edith Cooper, Marjory A. Curtis, Kathleen Dineen, Brenda M. Eales, Elsie Enright, Nancy Fair, Rita M. Ferrow, Eola Forman, Eileen M. Foursaith, Frieda Frietag, Irene Gassner, Lillian G. Gaze, Daisy Green, Jean J. Grieve, Nonie Griffin, Olive M. Griffin, Lewis R. Hall, Elizabeth J. Heintz, Shirley T. Henzell, Dorothea A. Hoare, Eileen N. Houghting, Lavina A. Humphreys, Doris E. Hunnybun, Sibyll Kaw, Sheelah Kelly, Delia C. Kildery, Jennie Lambert, Catherine C. Leach, Marguerite Leech, Doris V. Lunn, Cecilia McDowell, Margaret L. McDowell, Frances McGettigan, Margaret McNicol, Ettie McNiff, Irene Massey, May Montrion, Alberta J. Muir, Mary C. Murison, Mona Neale, Dorothy Neylan, Blanche M. Norton, Constance M. Nulsen, Maureen O'Connor, Veronica C. O'Halloran, Violet A. O'Keefe, Ruby O'Shea, Ella Pearce, Mary W. Perrin, Phyllis M. Prins, Vera M. Pryce, Phyllis Quinn, Doris B. Ramsay, Barbara Robbie, Vera Rogers, Dorothy Ryan, Eileen Sattler, Mozelle Saul, Doris B. Savage, Margie Shanley, Annie E. Speak, Ina I. Tandy, Kathleen M. Thomas, Mona Thurlow, Eva B. Vaughan, Mona E. Wallis, Wilfreda Ward, Eileen Wearne, Madeline E. Weston, Blanche M. Wood, Olive M. Woodard, Gwtha Young.

SINGING.—Mary O'Donoghue.

VIOLIN.—Hephzibah Bailey, Vera A. Foster, James Maunch, May F. E. Oberhauser, Vera D. Peterson.

GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF SCIENTIFIC TEACHING.—Eleanor Deane.

EXAMINERS.—Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., Joseph C. Bridge, Mus. D., Percy C. Buck, Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Sir Frederic Cowen, Dawson Freer, Edward d'Evry, H. A. Harding, Mus. D., Miss Morden Grey, E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Charlton Keith, E. Burritt Lane, Mus. B., L. Lebell, C. Egerton Lowe, A. Mallinson, A. Mistowski, Mus. B., S. Myerscough, Mus. B., C. W. Pearce, Mus. D., L. Pecsikai, Alec Rowley, Charles Schilsky, C. Vincent, Mus. D., G. F. Vincent, J. Warriner, Mus. D.

The next Examinations for Diplomas and Certificates will take place in January, 1920, at the College in London, and at certain Centres; last day of entry, December 6, 1919.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

The Secret of Successful Practice
(SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIC)

DOUGLAS TAYLER - - 1s. 3d.

"I have read it carefully, and find it full of wise hints put in an interesting way."—WM. TOWNSEND, Author of "Balance of Arm."

FAIRIES OF THE STREAM
KETÉLBÉY.

This is a Valse Brillante of the Durand type. It is melodious, sparkling, and makes a brilliant show piece for any Pianist of moderate attainment. A British product, it should easily take the place of the imported article, and be given its chance on all School programmes and syllabuses.

NEW ALBUMS FOR THE PIANO.

LEE WILLIAMS SPRING IMPRESSIONS.

ARTHUR SOMERVELL ... BY THE SEA.

Both these Albums are worthy the attention of every Professor and Amateur.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

READY EARLY IN SEPTEMBER.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR

PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 84).

PRICE 16s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

SEPTEMBER 1, 1919.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

V.—JOHN IRELAND.

(Continued from August number, page 396.)

It is natural, in dealing with John Ireland, to pass direct from his pianoforte works to his chamber music, as—except two string Quartets and a Sextet for strings, clarinet, and horn belonging to his immature period—all his chamber music is associated with the pianoforte. It is difficult to believe that the possibilities of the string quartet can have lost their attraction for a composer so staunch to the tradition in which it is an element. We must therefore conclude that the processes of the change that has taken place in his method found in the pianoforte a more favourable 'culture-medium,' and that, these processes having run their course, his return to that form will not be long delayed. It is certainly not claiming too much to say that no news would arouse more interest amongst the devotees of chamber music at this moment than the announcement of a new string quartet from the pen of John Ireland. There is something about his present method that points to his finding in it a mode of expression at least as fertile as any he has attempted in the past ten years, and probably more so. When a composer combines elaborate imaginings with an austere simplicity of structure, the string quartet offers a prospect of virtue rewarded.

I have already referred to the Phantasy Trio in A minor which ushers in the later manner of John Ireland's writing. It dates from 1908, and was followed a year later by the Sonata in D minor which now ranks as No. 1, although it had two predecessors, both since discarded. It is in three movements—an Allegro in conventional form, a Romance, and a Rondo. The quality of the music is intimate and unassertive, little calculated to make an immediate sensation, as did its better-known successor. This is by no means a disadvantage, as it has caused the work to maintain its freshness unimpaired, whilst gradually extending its circle of friends. In course of time a second edition became necessary, and the composer took advantage of the opportunity for a revision which has enhanced its effectiveness. A desire to revise is, in fact, characteristic of him; for although, as I have said elsewhere, he is a deliberate worker who takes elaborate pains to give every bar the character of finality, that very trait constantly lures him to dream of further improvement. Many of his works have been subjected to this kind of revision, and none who have followed his development will be surprised if every subsequent reprint continues to show divergences from the original edition. The Sonata in D minor, however, does seem at present to have reached its final form. The idiom in which it is written is not that in which John Ireland writes to-day, and the temptation to 'bring it up to date' is not one to which he is at all likely to succumb. It could only end in failure, and the work is an attractive one as it stands. I could well understand some musicians—not necessarily of conservative hue—even preferring it to its more exciting successor. It is not old-fashioned to take musical pleasure quietly.

Between 1909 and 1913 there occurred a break in the composer's output for which no explanation is forthcoming. A holiday spent in Jersey in 1912 seems to have supplied the incentive to at least two of the works that appeared in the latter year: the 'Decorations,' for pianoforte (see previous article), and an orchestral Prelude, 'The Forgotten Rite,' and it is unlikely that the new impetus spent its force in one year, though what one may term its topographical form disappeared almost as quickly as it came. There is no 'Island Spell' about the Trio in E minor, in three movements, which made its appearance in 1914, but has remained unpublished. This work, which is not to be confused with the later Trio in the same key but in one movement, has a somewhat transitional character, not unlike that of the Phantasy trio, but representing a later stage of transition. It seems to face both ways, 'for it has phases that might serve as connecting-links with his period of struggle for freedom in self-expression, and others which predict the complete emancipation of the later Sonata. Through its three movements runs a vein of connected inspiration which seems to reach its loftiest point in the introduction to the Finale.'* This work maintains a strong hold upon the composer's affection, possibly because of memories which correspond to its transitional character, for in the case of John Ireland a transition in style is never merely technical. It invariably represents the passage to a new point of view, and, in a mind so scrupulous, such passages are apt to be stormy. The American who wrote 'God will look you over for scars, not for medals,' cannot have been concerned solely with ethics. The struggle of a creative artist towards expression is no less strenuous than the struggle for life.

Soon afterwards another struggle—a world struggle—was to fill the minds of all thinking men. Already in 1915 a small group of songs, consisting chiefly of the two which are bracketed under one title, 'The Cost,' had made their appearance as an outward indication—or rather an indication prompted from without—that the events of these stirring times were clamouring for musical expression, not indeed in their external aspect, but through the channel of those deeper, as yet scarcely avowed emotions which they have aroused in the more sentient of our people. Is it going too far to look upon the Violin Sonata in A minor as an expression of these emotions? That is as it may be, but it is at this date the most consummate work John Ireland has given us, and if the much maligned British public rose to the occasion, as it did beyond all question, it is at least permissible to believe that the music struck some latent chord of sentiment that had been waiting for the sympathetic voice to make it articulate. Never in the recent annals of British chamber-music has success been so immediate. The press was practically unanimous, and within a short time violinists, who as a rule do not fly to new works, found that this Sonata, for their credit's sake, must be included in their répertoire. One feature of this success must be mentioned: a British work was actually included in our programmes not as a make-weight or as a duty-task, but as the chief attraction from the box-office point of view, a position hitherto reserved for standard classics. It is indeed an excellent omen for the future. The Sonata is in three movements which one might term respectively dramatic, lyrical, and a relaxation of the prevailing tension. The first section, with its rugged vigour, strikes a serious note, but its gravity is strikingly free from elements of questioning or of even momentary despondency, and if one quality more than others accounts for the spontaneously receptive attitude of the musical public from the first note, it is—confidence. It is the music of a man who feels deeply but who is sustained by confidence, not necessarily in the outward shapings of destiny, but in that ultimate faithfulness of events which is the creed of men of good understanding. The slow movement, which maintains the same high level of sane idealism, is concerned with lyrical solace. 'Even the humour of the last section gathers a flavour of the heroic from the context, much as the fun of our soldiers gathers it from their hardships.* The Sonata is, in short, a worthy expression of the times that gave it birth, and one of the few great works of art hitherto resulting from the underlying impulses of to-day.'

* The quotations are from the paper I contributed to the American Musical Quarterly for April of this year. Where I still feel that I have earnestly expressed my attitude towards a certain work, I do not consider it necessary to paraphrase what I have once written.—E. E.

The first movement is a rugged Allegro, the formal freedom of which is more apparent than real, for its sternness admits of no laxity. Its character is fully expressed in the opening phrase entrusted to the pianoforte. Some contrast is afforded by the first subsidiary, which makes an unusually early appearance:

EX. 1.

Allegro.

mf leggiadro.

mf leggiadro.

cres.

cres.

f

The Lento is entirely lyrical. After a page of introductory matter, the theme of which recurs during the movement, we have a suave melody of classic purity. It is repeated in dialogue and followed by a brief reference to the opening theme leading to:

EX. 2.

p dim.

pp

pp

* Pall Mall Gazette, March 7, 1917.

An episode in 12-8 time forms the middle section of the movement.

The Finale is almost entirely based upon a boisterous theme of unaffectedly popular type.

'Another almost equally important contribution to recent chamber-music is the one-movement Trio in E minor for pianoforte, violin and 'cello, not to be confused with the earlier, more extended work in the same key. It was written in the spring of 1917, and bears the impress of the grim contrast between the season and the wastage of war at the very springtime of life. Here the atmosphere is more martial, and one might suspect a glorification of the "panache" did not a touch of bitter emphasis remind one of the tragic futility that has overtaken the glitter of the armies of the past. One feels an element of rancour in the psychology of the work, yet it is not the morbid resentment of the weak, but the angry impatience that every one must feel who has not despaired of civilization. It is a poem of mixed emotions inspired by an attitude more critical than that of the Sonata and expressing itself with more directness, though in terms into which one may read a note of sarcasm if one likes. The form is simple: a strain of thematic material progressively metamorphosed in the manner of free variations.'

As examples we quote the opening bars:

Ex. 3. Poco lento.

Violoncello. pp

Piano. Poco lento.

Violin. rit.

pp

pp rit.

pp

Ped.

pp

pp

and a characteristic passage from the Andante section :

Ex. 4. Andante.

Violin. f

espress. e sonore.

Violoncello. f

espress. e sonore.

Andante.

Piano. mf cres.

John Ireland's contributions to the art of song are scarcely second in importance to his chamber music, and, in one respect at least, they offer a key to some apparent contradictions in his larger works. In the latter the two strands which run through his musical texture are inevitably interwoven. In the songs he may place his trust in one or the other according to the poetic intention, but there is seldom scope for both. It thus becomes possible to study them separately. I wrote 'two strands' advisedly. Although I am well aware that among his songs are to be found some intermediate types, it is significant that none of these attain to the high artistic value of 'Sea-Fever' or 'Earth's Call,' which are definitely characteristic of the two contrasted styles.

To describe them is more difficult than it would appear from the current generalisation of 'art-song' and 'folk-song.' The designation 'art-song' is in any case a hateful one, and it has the additional drawback of being meaningless, for any good song is surely a work of art, and certainly not less so if it can be traced to a man of the people, as is claimed by folk-song enthusiasts. It is also misleading to lay stress on the melodic character of one style and the harmonic character of the other, for there is often quite as much harmonic richness in his treatment of a simple tune as in the more elaborate method, and quite as much melodic interest in the latter as in the most tuneful of his less sophisticated songs.

Perhaps the true solution lies not so much in the divergence of the two types as in their one common denominator, which is a close communion with nature. This has been evident in some of the works we have passed in review, such as the 'Island Spell' and 'Moonglade,' and it is still more prominent in the orchestral prelude 'The Forgotten Rite.' It is so strong that on one winter's day the composer assured me he would be unable to set a certain poem until the summer brought the right mood for it. If we now examine the two songs I selected as typical, we find that in 'Sea-Fever' the human interest is placed in relief against a natural background, in this case a seascape, whilst in 'Earth's Call' it is Nature herself who provides the chief interest, the human element being merely incidental. In the same way 'The Heart's Desire,' which is a setting of the 'March' poem in A. E. Housman's 'A Shropshire Lad,' has the human interest which attaches to the whole of that wonderful collection of lyrics. This may partake of a mere coincidence, and I do not put it forward as an explanation, especially as it would ill fit 'Marigold,' but I venture to suggest that it affords a clue to the two different attitudes the composer assumes alternately towards the musical treatment of a lyric poem, the direct approach by means of a metrical melody, and the enveloping movement of a method that is often symphonic. The subject of 'Earth's Call' plainly called for symphonic treatment.

The songs of John Ireland's mature period open in 1910 with a cycle, 'Songs of a Wayfarer,' which is of unequal merit, but deserves to survive if only for the sake of one song. The year 1913 established the differentiation described above, on the one hand, with the setting of John Masefield's 'Sea-Fever,' which continues to be the most frequently heard of John Ireland's compositions, and, on the other, with the song-cycle, 'Marigold,' which belongs to the rich vein leading to 'Earth's Call.' It comprises three songs: two settings of Rossetti, 'Youth's Spring Tribute' and 'Penumbra,' and one of Ernest Dowson's translations of Verlaine's 'Spleen.' The last is woven round a phrase so characteristic that, but for its unusually disturbed tonality, it might almost serve as a motto to Ireland's collected works:

Ex. 5.
Moderato.

The musical notation for Example 5 is presented in two systems. The first system features a treble clef staff with a melody line and a bass clef staff with an accompaniment line. The melody begins with a half note, followed by quarter notes and eighth notes. The accompaniment consists of a steady eighth-note pattern. The second system continues the melody and accompaniment, with the melody ending on a half note. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, and dynamic markings like 'mf' and 'Ped.'

As a whole, the cycle is one of his most remarkable works, though it may perhaps be slower to attain to general acceptance than the songs whose appeal is more primitive.'

In 1915 the war-songs referred to in the course of this article commenced to make their appearance with a version of Rupert Brooke's famous sonnet, 'The Soldier,' in which he has not overcome the special difficulties inseparable from the shape of the poem. 'He relies upon the intensity of meaning, expressed in the simplest of terms, rather than upon the actual form of the sonnet, deeming the soldier-poet's message of greater importance than the literary rôle of the sestet, for which he is content to draw upon the musical phrases of the octave. A setting that adhered more faithfully to the form might have missed the substance.' Then followed two songs from Eric Cooper's 'Soliloquies of a Subaltern.' 'In the first of these, "Blind," the composer has reached a degree of poignancy that is almost painful. One has to go back to Moussorgsky to find anything equally magnetic. In "Savichna" and in some songs dealing with the peasant, the Russian composer, though hampered by technical shortcomings, attained to a tragic grandeur that has rightly been regarded as his loftiest vein. Here we have its English counterpart. Truthful, unadorned, and thus the more touching, is this simple, irresistibly appealing version of Eric Cooper's poem. In comparison the second song, with an unavoidable note of melodrama, is almost an anti-climax—but one not unneeded to relieve the emotional tension.'

Of the songs which follow the most important are, in the direct vein, that exquisite lyric 'The Heart's Desire,' a setting of John Masefield's 'The Bells of San Marie,' and a very charming excursion into the folk-song idiom, 'I have twelve oxen.' An intermediate position might be allotted to the 'Mother and Child' cycle, consisting of nursery rhymes from Christina Rossetti's 'Sing-Song,' in a happy musical garb. The other method reaches its fullest development in 'Earth's Call,' a sylvan rhapsody for contralto and pianoforte 'which is too ambitious in design to be adequately described as a song, although its text, like that of many of John Ireland's songs, is a sonnet, this time of Harold Monro. It is in the composer's naturalistic mood, directly assertive, and demands great powers of interpretation on behalf of the singer, for it is music writ large, but although not easy of access the reward is correspondingly great. There is a dearth in the repertoire of compositions ranging in length and calibre between the ordinary song and the dramatic scena. Apart from its great merits, here is another reason for welcoming it.' Of less ample dimensions, but too important to be overlooked, is another recent song 'The Sacred Flame,' and no survey would be complete that omitted the setting of Rupert Brooke's 'Blow out, you bugles,' which is far superior to that of 'The Soldier,' and has the special merit that the composer has succeeded in the difficult task of preserving his mystic fanfare from the perils of fussy realism.

The one orchestral work which calls for notice is the prelude 'The Forgotten Rite,' to which more than one reference has been made in the course of this article. It dates from 1913, the year following the Jersey holiday, and in it he first reveals the naturalistic tendency which is 'far removed from the realism of composers who wax lyrical over the coming of spring. It is the message of a man who feels nature too deeply to "make a song of it," and yet sings in a subtle idiom that is, as it were, esoterically lyrical.' It is the mood that returns in 'Earth's Call.' We quote a fragment from the arrangement for pianoforte, four hands:

Ex. 6. Poco più lento.

Ex. 6. Poco più lento. Oboe. mf espress.

Str. pp

The musical score for Ex. 6 is for a piece titled 'Poco più lento.' It features two staves: the top staff is for Oboe, marked mf espress., and the bottom staff is for Strings, marked pp. The key signature has one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 3/4. The music is in a slow, expressive tempo. The Oboe part begins with a series of eighth notes, while the Strings provide a rhythmic accompaniment with eighth notes.

The musical score for John Ireland's 'Earth's Call' is for a piece in 7/4 time. It features four staves: the top staff is for Flute (Fl.), the second for Oboe (Ob.), the third for Violin (V.), and the fourth for Cello/Double Bass (C.). The Flute part begins with a series of eighth notes, while the Oboe, Violin, and Cello parts provide a rhythmic accompaniment. The Flute part is marked f and the Oboe part is marked cres.. The Violin and Cello parts are marked poco cres.. The Flute part is marked f and the Oboe part is marked cres.. The Violin and Cello parts are marked cres..

Thus ends our survey of the output of John Ireland's maturity. 'It should be noted that although the importance of the compositions has varied, their honesty of purpose has not, for there is not one in this comprehensive list that is not the outcome of the need of the artist to express himself—not one that is either a concession to a taste less cultivated than his own, or an attempt to set commercial before artistic considerations. The probity of musicians and their sense of responsibility towards the art they serve has seldom been so completely proof against temptation to 'make an effect,' or to secure an easy material benefit. This probity is associated in John Ireland with a genial sincerity and love of artistic truth that will tolerate no meretricious blandishments, and a scrupulousness that rejects anything that is arbitrary or fortuitous. Thoroughly English in his outlook and in the directness of his method, he has one point of contact with the French, and one only, in the meticulous care which he devotes to detail. His is no feverish productivity. He never will be, as many composers have been, the victim of a fatal facility.

He is content to spend days on a single passage so that he gives it the one-ultimate form which afterwards proves to be the inevitable form it should take. Yet this constant preoccupation with precision in detail has nowhere resulted in laboured writing. His harmonic texture may be complex or simple, suave or acid, smooth, or, as it is more often, rugged or sharply defined, but it is constantly adjusted to the needs of the composition, and, although he is not given to finicalities, his taste in these matters is no less acute than that of those who trade in them—over all of which, rightly understood, it is in the end one quality that predominates: sincerity.

LIST OF COMPOSITIONS.

Unpublished.

FULL ORCHESTRA.

Midsummer. (Overture.)
Tritons. (Symphonic Prelude.)
Orchestral Poem, in A minor.
Pelléas et Mélisande. (Overture.)

CHORAL.

Mass in the Dorian Mode, for four voices.
'Vexilla Regis,' for chorus, soli, brass instruments, and organ.
Psalm 42, for chorus, soli, and orchestra.

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Quartet, for strings, in D minor.
Quartet, for strings, in C minor.
Sextet, for strings, clarinet, and horn.
Trio, for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello, in D minor.
Trio, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, in E minor.
Sonata, for violin and pianoforte, in C minor.
Sonata, in one movement, for violin and pianoforte, in G minor.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Sonata, in C minor.
Sea Idyll. (Three movements.)
Rhapsody, in C♯ minor.
Three Pieces.

(Also shorter pieces and songs.)

Published.

FULL ORCHESTRA.

The Forgotten Rite. Prelude. (Augener.)

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Phantasie, in A minor, for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte. (Augener.)
Trio No. 2, in one movement, for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte. (Augener.)
Sonata No. 1, in D minor, for violin and pianoforte. (Augener.)
Sonata No. 2, in A minor, for violin and pianoforte. (Winthrop Rogers.)

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Decorations. (1. The Island Spell; 2. Moonglade; 3. The Scarlet Ceremonies.) (Augener.)
Rhapsody. (Winthrop Rogers.)
Preludes. (The Undertone; Obsession; The Holy Boy; Fire of Spring.) (Winthrop Rogers.)
London Pieces—I. Chelsea Reach.
II. Ragamuffin. (Augener.)
The Towing-Path (in the Press.) (Augener.)
Leaves from a Child's Sketch Book. (Winthrop Rogers.)

SONGS.

Sea Fever. (Augener.)
The Bells of San Marie. (Augener.)
Hope, the Hornblower. (Boosey.)
Songs of a Wayfarer. (Boosey.)
Marigold. Impression for voice and pianoforte. (1. Youth's Spring Tribute; 2. Penumbra; 3. Spleen.) (Winthrop Rogers.)

I was not sorrowful. (Boosey.)
The Cost. (1. Blind; 2. The Cost.) (Winthrop Rogers.)
The Soldier. (Winthrop Rogers.)
Blow out, you bugles. (Winthrop Rogers.)
The Heart's Desire. (Winthrop Rogers.)
Earth's Call. (Rhapsody for voice and pianoforte.) (Winthrop Rogers.)
Spring Sorrow. (Winthrop Rogers.)
I have twelve oxen. (Winthrop Rogers.)
The Sacred Flame. (Winthrop Rogers.)
Bed in Summer. (Curwen.)
The Rat
The Adoration } (in the Press.) (Chester.)
There were three Ravens (folk-song setting). (Winthrop Rogers.)

VARIOUS.

Bagatelle, for violin and pianoforte. (Novello.)
Elegiac Romance, for organ. (Novello.)
Sursum Corda, and Alla Marcia, for organ. (Novello.)
Morning, Communion and Evening Service. (Novello.)
Greater Love hath no man. Anthem. (Stainer & Bell.)

TWO-PART SONGS.

There is a garden. (Novello.)
Full fathom five. (Novello.)
Aubade. (Novello.)
Evening Song. (Novello.)
The echoing green. (Curwen.)
May Flowers. (Arnold.)

THE THIRD PERIOD OF CÉSAR FRANCK.

BY SYDNEY GREW.

The works of Franck's last period (1872-90) are not only representative in the mass of every type and form of music,* but they assume in sequence a curiously complete and consistent shape—a shape to which the term symphonic may be applied without fancifulness. They prove that with Franck, as with Bach, Handel, Gluck, and in different measure with Beethoven and Brahms—also (as it now begins to appear) with our English Elgar—creative interest grows by what it feeds upon, and that works produced in great periods of the composer's life group themselves into closely related sections, which latter are steadily formative of grandly balanced and 'cyclically' responsive movements. In the particular case of Franck, the dominant progression is first toward the Symphony in D minor, and the continuance of that progression is diversely toward 'Psyche' and some smaller works of kindred spirit, toward the quartet, and toward the late organ pieces. This progression begins at the latest with 'Les Djinns,' but possibly with 'Le Chasseur maudit.' It thus carries with it the entire mass of the pianoforte works, which themselves form a section of the utmost consistency and compactness. Except for 'Les Éolides,' the 'Three Pieces for Organ,' 'Rebecca,' the operas, and some of the songs and part-songs, every work of the thirty forms part of the grand cyclic wave of this final period of Franck's life. 'Les Béatitudes' being what it is in the total scheme of his whole life, we might consider that this wonderfully single, unified progression which fills Franck's

* 'At this moment . . . he does not intend to be a stranger to any form of his art, symphony, vocal music, chamber music, even lyric drama—he attacks them all in turn; there is not one realm in the universe of music that he fails to explore.'—(d'Indy.)

last eighteen years (and which, regarded otherwise, summarises the characteristics, and synthesises the results, of musical activity all through the 19th century) takes its rise out of 'Les Béatitudes.'

I wish to place before students an 'abstract' representation of the thirty works of this period of Franck's life. Such an abstract is helpful in the respect that it enables one to perceive the fundamental unity of these works and to determine the function and purpose of any individual work in the grand design of the whole. But I give first of all a chronological list of the thirty works, these not yet being fully familiar to English students—either actually familiar through performance or relatively familiar as simple historical facts.

The list that follows is based on Vincent d'Indy's, but it differs from that authoritative list in several important details. For instance, it places 'Psyche' after the Symphony instead of before it, and enumerates 'Psyche' as No. 17 in the list and the Symphony as No. 16, whereas in d'Indy these two works are respectively No. 16 ('Psyche') and No. 23 (Symphony). The reason for these differences represents the object of this brief article. Without referring to form, style, character, or arrangement of works, and without discussion of their spiritual nature or subject, my object is to show how Franck's mind followed a straight and consistent course from start to finish, without casual attention to side concerns and without diminution of intensity of interest. In d'Indy's list, the order of which is determined by the year when a particular work was entirely completed and ready for performance, this inner continuity is not immediately apparent. The 1888 Symphony (1886-88) is preceded by six small works and by one large 1887-88 work ('Psyche'). Strictly speaking, I suppose the right place for the Symphony is where d'Indy puts it, for Franck was at work on it until after those 1888 works were done with. But the actual composition of the Symphony was over before 'Psyche' and the rest were begun. Its conception was anterior to their conception, but so was the matter of the full realisation and expression of that conception. The Symphony was completely finished before January 9, 1887; that is to say, the work as a representative outcome of Franck's artistico-spiritual progression was a fait accompli before the 1888 works were contemplated, such further attention as the orchestration being—if not, relatively speaking, merely mechanical—at the most no more than mental: certainly not at all spiritual in the way the conception and the composition of a work are spiritual. I think that we may say that as soon as a work is fully drafted, with all intervening gaps filled (such as the gaps Beethoven so often left for a happy moment of inspiration to fill, and also at times—as in the Quartet—this wonderful Belgian), that work has ceased to be a present factor in the spiritual progression of the composer. Our knowledge is not complete of the genesis of many of Franck's compositions. Fuller knowledge (which this article might be looked upon as seeking for) might compel a rearrangement of certain of the items in the list. But I do not imagine that it would necessitate any important modification: the character of Franck's genius, from his fiftieth year to his last year, tells very clearly that the main 'symphonic' movement of his creative activity during this period was as the following sequential ordering of his thirty compositions:

1. 1869-79 'Les Béatitudes'—Oratorio.
2. 1876 'Les Eolides'—Symphonic-poem.
3. 1878 'Trois pièces pour l'orgue.'
4. 1878-79 Pianoforte Quintet.
5. 1879 Song, 'Le vase brisé.'
6. 1881 'Rebecca'—Scena, for soli, chorus, and orchestra.
7. 1882-85 'Hulda'—Opera, four Acts and Epilogue.
8. 1882 'Le Chasseur maudit'—Symphonic-poem.
9. 1884 Song, 'Nocturne.'
10. 1884 'Les Djinn's'—Symphonic-poem for pianoforte and orchestra.
11. 1884 Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue—Pianoforte.
12. 1885 Symphonic Variations—Pianoforte and orchestra.
13. 1885 'Danse lente'—Pianoforte.
14. 1886 Sonata in A—Pianoforte and violin.
15. 1886-87 Prelude, Aria, and Finale—Pianoforte.
16. 1886-88 Symphony in D minor (completed before January 9, 1887).
17. 1887-88 'Psyche'—Symphonic-poem for orchestra, with chorus.
- 18-22. 1888 Five separate choral works (including Psalm 150).
- 23-24. 1888 Songs—(a) 'La Procession,' (b) 'Les cloches du soir.'
25. 1888-89 'Ghisèle'—Lyric drama in four Acts.
26. 1889 String Quartet in D.
27. 1889 Andantino in G minor for organ.
28. 1889 Preludes and Prayers (Charles V. Alkan) (arr. for organ).
29. 1889-90 'L'Organiste' (fifty-nine pieces—Versicles to the Magnificat)—Harmonium.
30. 1890 Three Chorales—Organ.

Before presenting my abstract, I must make a few remarks about certain of the above works. 'Les Béatitudes' is more than a work of the third period. It is the work of Franck's lifetime. The subject occupied him in his first period (1841-52), when he wrote two works upon it. It possibly occupied him all through his second period (1852-74),* that strange stretch of time when, musing continuously at the organ, he made what men of his religion call a 'retreat.' The operas stand outside of Franck's most characteristic work. They are works for his own pleasure, undertakings to satisfy his superb ambition. Each occurs at a period when some mighty task had just been completed. Franck gave ten definite years to 'Les Béatitudes'; he worked leisurely upon 'Hulda.' 'Ghisèle' he carried through quickly, composing the last two Acts in his eight-weeks' vacation during the summer of 1889, at the same time writing the Quartet. The chamber music belongs to phases of climax, the Quintet to the climax of 'Les Béatitudes,' the Sonata to that of the pianoforte music, and the Quartet to that of the Symphony. 'Les Eolides' is a relief-piece to

* Periods overlap. The concluding work of the second period, 'The Redemption,' was finished in 1874; but Franck's final spiritual state was begun before that year. We may put it as definitely apparent when he was fifty (1872). Has anyone yet considered the quickening effect on Franck of the war, 1870-71? The story of the composition of the 'Ode to Paris' (song, 1870, but published only recently) is very significant.

'Les Béatitudes.' 'Le Chasseur maudit' is something of the same. The 1878 organ works are 'occasional'—Franck wrote them for the special purpose of displaying the qualities of a new organ. The spiritual energy of all the years from 'Les Djinns' to the Symphony ramified into the Quartet, into 'Psyche,' and its companions (Psalm 150, 'La Procession,' and the rest), and into the final organ works, of which the beautiful first number, the Andantino, is a fitting introduction, but the beauty and power are not to be perceived except by aid of such study as that that has gone to the making of this article. The songs are as several sudden lyric flashes in the blazing spiritual grandeur of the whole. The later organ works are Franck's leisured entry into eternity. He completed the chorales on his death-bed. He did not complete the 'Magnificat' versicles. 'I shall go on with them as soon as I get better—or else,' he added in a lower tone, 'perhaps God will let me finish them in His eternity to come.'

I. 1869-79. Period of The Beatitudes and four other works (the last period of Franck's life as composer of sacred music):

(1876)		'B E A T I T U D E S'		'SONG'
				(1879)
Eolides		Trois		Quintet
				Pieces

II. 1880. Rest year; no works produced.

III. 1881-85. Period of Hulda and three other works (a quasi-recreative period):

				'SONG'
'REBECCA'		'H U L D A'
(1881)				(1885)
				Chasseur

IV. 1884-90. Period of the Symphony, and of twenty-one other works, symphonic and otherwise. (The final seven years of Franck's life.) No works left unfinished except the scoring of last two Acts of Ghisèle and the completion of the intended full hundred of the Magnificat versicles; and of this, the instrumentation of the opera was sketched out and sixty-three of the versicles written (fifty-nine published):

Djinns		Sym. Var.		Symphony		'SONGS'
(1884)						(1890)
		Sonata		'P S Y C H E'		Quartet
Prelude, Chorale, & Fugue.		Danse Lente		Prelude, Aria, & Finale		Organ 27-29
						Chorales
						'G H I S E L E'

PROGRAMME MUSIC:

ITS LIMITATIONS AND ABUSE.

By ARTHUR L. SALMON.

There are many persons who like to have their music labelled for them; they expect to be told what it represents. They can better enjoy the first movement of Beethoven's C sharp minor Sonata because the name 'Moonlight' has been tagged on to it. 'There! that is the moon breaking through the clouds,' said my music-master to me once; and, being a boy, I was duly impressed. It is this demand on the part of a defective taste that has given us so-called 'programme' music—that is to say, music which in some degree is surrendering its proper vocation, and trying to intrude on the province of other arts. Educationally, as a step towards something higher, this kind of thing may have its excuse and its proper place; it will do for children and for those whose taste is as a child's. But the child should be weaned from it, gradually but firmly, if he is to enter the holy places of pure and unadulterated music, of music that is not descriptive or imitative or pictorial, but indefinitely and immeasurably suggestive. It is not given to music at its highest to depict or to delineate or even to translate ideas into sound; it is given to it to express emotion that can find no articulate utterance, passion that passes beyond words, longing that transcends all verbal prayer, sorrow that can be condensed in no verbal phrases. We might as well speak of musical painting as of pictorial music; the two spheres are entirely different. That music or painting or poetry may be prompted by the same emotion, may endeavour to express the same sentiment and desire, is true enough; but the expression is sought in totally different ways, and those ways are not to be confounded. If they are, there is sure to be artistic loss. We may borrow or interchange the phraseology—for instance, when we speak of a graceful soaring minster as a 'lyric in stone'; but it is the prompting inspiring sentiment that we thus term lyrical, not the stonework. If we speak of a picture in music, we may rightly mean that the music suggests the same sentiment as may be suggested by pictures; but the means of suggestion remain individual and are not pictorial. Music cannot describe; it cannot convey outlines, it cannot express definite thought; it can only convey feeling. And surely that is enough for it. Music is the suggestion of visions, but it does not define them—we have to do our own seeing; it is the utterance of dreams, but it does not relate them—we have to do our own dreaming.

All musical persons agree in ignoring the freaks that are the delight of popular uncritical audiences who demand the most vulgarly explicit and concrete—such freaks as the representation of a farmyard, giving the lowing of the cattle, the grunt of the pig, the turkey's gobble; or the presentation of a menagerie, giving the different wild-beast cries; or the imitation of a clock-store, giving the various sounds of winding, the whizzing alarms, the different-toned striking. To unrefined ears this is a marvellous triumph of musical realism; we may be all pardoned if it simply amuses us. This may be styled programme-music at its lowest. It appeals to the taste that likes to see grossly material angels on a mourning-card, and that takes crude melodrama to be profoundest tragedy. But in programme music there are many steps, many degrees. Some form of label is not always reprehensible, even if superfluous; we can forgive a composer who definitely tells us that his sonata or symphony is 'Pathetic' or his movement is a 'Valse Triste,' though we may think the labelling is entirely unnecessary. If the music is successful it sufficiently conveys the pathos and the sadness. In a still different sense some title may be pardonable where a definite local colour is sought, though local colour hardly belongs to music at its highest; it is still obvious that the title in the last resort is unnecessary for the success of the music. Take away its title and would Sibelius's 'Finlandia' suggest Finland? At most, the music may possibly suggest the kind of emotion that Finnish scenery inspires, and that would be inspired by any similar scenery anywhere. Take away its title, and would Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' suggest those islands? Or, turning to a more recent and a more abstract instance: Dr. Walford Davies has published a work which he names a 'Wordsworth Suite.' If the intention is to do honour to the great poet, that intention is most highly commendable; but remove the title, and would the music suggest Wordsworth? Would it recall the Tintern Abbey verses, or the 'Immortality,' or the 'Ode to Duty'? The most it can do is to suggest the emotion, the sentiment, that we find in Wordsworth's poetry; and we may rightly assert that the beauty in the composer's music will appeal quite as strongly to a hearer who has never read Wordsworth as to one who has. If this were not the case Dr. Davies has taken upon himself a limitation; true lovers of Wordsworth are few. We will admit that a title adds to some listeners' interest in music; but ought it to do so? Surely not in music at its purest. In the domain of the pleasing and justifiable second-rate, programme-titles are wholly defensible; they have their right place, they attract some who might not be attracted else, they give a definite and acceptable idea to those whose own imagination is deficient. Some of us prefer to do our own imagining, and whatever the title may be we drift away from it. It may become almost an impertinence. The composer of a pleasantly melodious piece may tell me that it represents a cornfield, or perhaps girls making hay.

I accept the information with politeness; but I exercise my right to think of what I please, or what I must, during the performance; and very probably I think of something quite different from the title. Others, with a use of plentiful fifths to represent the tom-tom, may tell me that their music is describing an Eastern scene; but I do not necessarily think of India during the performance. If the music moves me at all, it is probably to some human emotion which is essentially human and not local. Cannot composers realise that a title, a label, is of necessity a limitation? True, music admits of no such limiting. The side on which music is limited is just that on which the unwary seek to enrich it by borrowing from the other arts. They seek to make it describe and define, to convey pictures, to express thoughts; but these things are not music's province. Music is the spiritual and undefinable, the nameless emotion, the implicit and measureless passion; it is at once the awakening and the speech of imagination. We must not deny their gratification to the imperfectly imaginative, those who want to be told what they must conceive or feel or dream about; we must not deny that programme-music has its rightful place and its proper mission; but we may at least be allowed to assert that music in the sheer essence soars above and beyond it, to a region where titles and labels actually fail of any meaning. A true hearer of music has the right to find whatever he can in the music to which he listens; and he will find this whatever title may be affixed. It is not transcendental to insist that no two hearers hear the same; it is a literal truth. We hear what we are capable of hearing, and not what the composer chooses. It is the same even with poetry, which deals with the definite word; how much more so in the divinely inarticulate suggestiveness that should be music's!

THE NEW DIRECTION IN SPANISH MUSIC.

BY LEIGH HENRY.

(Concluded from August number, page 402.)

THE DEVELOPMENT OF SPANISH MUSIC.

As is natural with the attainment of such a high poetic feeling, music was greatly cultivated under the Moorish sovereigns. Many theoretical works were written in the reign of Abd-er-Rahman, and Ziryab, a Persian singer, founded a technical school, and introduced many innovations in rhythm and ornamentation. From these, together with the mathematical and philosophical musical systems of the Greeks, which were closely investigated and developed, were evolved most of the Modal and rhythmic characteristics which have remained constant in Spanish folk-music and dances. Side by side with the development of the strict Moorish verse-forms and metrical codes came experiments in rhythmical prose and impromptu verse, such as the ghazel and cassida, which vied with the classical forms in their popularity. And with the theoretical and formal development of musical technique went the free development of lyrical music and impromptu song-narrative, such as is perpetuated in the improvised or traditional dramatic chant of the popular Malaguena of Spain to-day.

This parallel between the stages of development attained by the poetic and musical arts of Spain, so indicative of the real expressive interest, as apart from mere artifice, underlying both, and so reflective of their close relationship to Spanish evolution as a whole, is consistently maintained throughout their history.

The compositions of the Spanish classics—Cabezón, Santa-Maria, Pérez, Vittoria, Morales, and Quencro—all have their literary parallels in the poetry of their respective periods, with its successive phases of underlying religious fervour, of decorative grace, of pensive asceticism and austerity, and of patriotic ardour.

The romantic verse of Espronceda, Zorrilla, Nuñez d'Arce, and Campoamor, though the first coherent expression of the resuscitated racial pride and effort, was over-permeated with emotionalism, and, by reason of its unreal, idealistic romanticism, failed to incorporate any real human expression of the true Spanish character. The music of Pedrell (born 1841) partakes of the same characteristics, being—as is particularly evinced in his operatic trilogy, 'Patria,' 'Amor,' and 'Fede'—an incongruous mixture of Spanish folk-song, church polyphony, and German romanticism.

In a similar way the folk-feeling, derived from strong national sentiment, which dominates the writings of Fernán Caballero and the compositions of Federico Olmeda, though nearer to human sources, and without the exaggerated sentiment of the romantics, strangled the personal development of both artists, and led to the cult of an imitative perpetuation of a folk-tradition, with its consequent Modal and rhythmic inhibitions. Their work is another example of creative expression rendered abortive by being subordinated to the formulæ of 'nationalistic' propaganda.

With the poems of José-Maria de Hérédia (mainly written in French), the novels of Jaun Valera, and the dramas of Echegaray, the Spanish spirit shook itself free of the imitative, 'nationalistic' folk-cult, attained a new subtlety, and came into touch with cosmopolitan development.

Full of human sympathy, of reflective thought, and rich symbolic imagery, they have their musical counterpart in the compositions of Isaac Albéniz (1861-1909), a genius of rare intuitive musical perception, who, despite the fact that his teachers accuse him of never having attained the (to them) necessary academic technique, created work of an intrinsic beauty, subtlety, and spiritual significance never before incorporated into music by any Spanish composer.

Albéniz was the herald of a new expressive era in Spanish music, and may be said to have done for that music what Debussy and the Impressionists did for French music. Both spiritually and technically, he and the Frenchmen present many common characteristics.

Commencing with works of a rather trivial kind, such as the pleasant dallying with folk-forms and modes exemplified in the 'Zorte Zico,' 'Serenade Espagnole,' and 'Zambra Granadina,' Albéniz gradually developed a spiritually expressive force which, evolving through works such as the 'España' and 'Alhambra' Suites, and the opera, 'Pepita Jiménez' (adapted from the novel by Jaun Valera), which evinces a certain power of mood-analysis and exposition, culminated in the 'Iberia' Suite. This work is a cycle of extraordinarily intimate impressions, named after Spanish towns, and the numbers (Evocation, El Puerto, Fede Dieu a Seville, Rondena, Almería, Triana, El Albaisín, El Polo, Labapies, Malaga, Jerez, Evitana) form a pageant of brilliant and highly-wrought images, beautiful individually, but gaining by juxtaposition.

The new expressive phase inaugurated by Albéniz, in whose work the introspective subtlety and contemplative penetration of the Spanish character was reflected, has been mainly developed by three younger composers, the late Enrique Granados, Joaquín Turina, and Manuel de Falla.

Granados, whose opera 'Goyescas,' dramatised from the earlier suite of pianoforte pieces, attracted so much attention in America in 1915, and whose untimely death on the 'Sussex' was so deeply regretted, is the best known of this trio.

Granados was mainly a literary, or pictorial, musician, and stands in relation to Albéniz in the revival of Spanish music much as Charpentier stands to Debussy in that of French music.

Of his pictorial, or descriptive, work the best example is furnished by the Suite of pianoforte pieces above referred to, the 'Goyescas,' the content of which is based on paintings by Goya. The various numbers—'Requiebos,' 'Coloquid en la Reja,' 'El Fandango de Candil,' 'Quejas, ó la Maja y el Ruiseñor'—have a brilliancy of tonal colour seldom met with outside Russian music, and the second and third numbers—'Conversation at the Lattice,' and 'Questions, or the Girl and the Nightingale'—are full of the delicate comedy in which the Spanish excel.

The greater part of Granados' work, however, was devoted to an exploitation of the expressive qualities of Spanish dance-rhythms and popular songs. The well-known 'Danzas Españolas' for pianoforte, the 'Jacara,' and the 'Rapsodia Aragonesa' belong to this type.

The 'Tonadillas,' for voice and pianoforte, occupy in vocal music a place similar to that which these pieces occupy in instrumental music.

Only once did Granados diverge from the direct source of Spanish inspiration—in his symphonic poem 'Dante.'

He may be said to represent in modern Spanish music that dramatic element which finds fluid expression in the melodic flow and poetic themes of the Malaguenas, and in the rhythmic nuances and movements of the popular Spanish dances.

In so treating Spanish characteristics, however, Granados was objective, and concerned with tonal and rhythmic-dynamic effects, not subjective, as the folk-cult 'nationalists' are.

Joaquín Turina is a musical impressionist of fine sensibility, both spiritually and musically. His work, however, differs in constructive methods from those generally termed impressionists. He tends towards the rather literary type of poetic expression exemplified in Albeniz's 'Iberia' Suite, or in the 'Images' of Debussy, but his treatment of sound and rhythm is more objective in the strictly aural sense, and more full of a feeling for pure musical design than that of the elder Spaniard. Viewed as a whole, however, the general character of his work is subjective and impressionistic, and has a certain flavour of romanticism. Nevertheless, it is remarkably free from the sentimentality, exaggerated pathos, and musical rhetoric which are the ordinary marks of romanticism. He writes concisely, and without musical ostentation, and his work reveals a fine sense of tone-colour.

The compositions of Turina include a Romantic Sonata on a Spanish theme, a String Quartet, three Andalusian Dances for Pianoforte, a 'Scène Andalous' for violin, pianoforte, and string quartet, and two highly-original Suites for pianoforte.

In these latter—'Sevilla: Suite pittoresque pour piano' ('Sous les Orangers,' 'La Jeudi-Saint a Minuit,' 'La Feria'), and 'Coins de Sevilla: Suite pour piano' ('Soir d'été sur la terrasse,' 'Rondes des enfants,' 'Danses des "Seises" dans la Cathédrale,' 'A los Toros')—the personal creative attitude of Turina is presented more directly than in his other work, and reveals a spirit akin to that of composers such as de Severac. Musical statements of moods derived from external impressions, they are full of the colour and rhythmic movement of the composer's environment, combined in a synthetic design of musical images in which formal development is subordinated to emotional expression.

The works of Albeniz, Granados, and Turina present a new expressive development of Spanish music which embodies the dramatic force, intensity, emotional subtlety, grace of form, and sense of colour familiar in Spanish literature and painting.

It has remained for the third-mentioned of the younger group, Manuel de Falla, to incorporate in extensive musical form—in his ballet, 'The Three-cornered Hat'—that sense of comedy which is so essentially a part of the Spanish temperament, and which forms so strong an element in the other arts of Spain.

The published work of de Falla is comparatively small, but it is the most consistently modern in type of all the product of the younger group. De Falla is conversant with the methods of both the impressionists and empirics abroad: he utilises both but never to the extent of an obsession or mannerism. In this utilisation, moreover, he always gives to such devices a personal inflection so original as to make patent the fact that he is no imitator or follower of a vogue. (The music of de Falla is characterised by a greater harmonic subtlety and a rarity and delicacy of mood seldom encountered in such pronounced form in his compatriots. While his music is less tinged with sentiment, and, in the emotional sense, less expansive, it is yet more personal and intimate than even the later phase of Albeniz's work, from which, much more than from that of the composer's master, Pedrell, it seems to derive.

The compositions of de Falla include pianoforte pieces, songs, nocturnes for pianoforte and orchestra, and a two-Act lyric-drama in four tableaux, 'La Vida Breve,' to the libretto of Carlos Fernandez Shaw, which was awarded the Grand Prize of the Madrid Society of Fine Arts in 1905, and was first produced at the Casino Municipal, Nice, in 1913. In the major part of these works, although the music reveals a particularly subtle sensibility, and is built up with the freedom, certitude, and objective discrimination characteristic of the most advanced technical methods, the psychological content follows the ordinary line of poetic emotion, and despite the use of new media, does not differ from the most sensitive work of Albeniz more than the 'Miroirs' of Ravel differ spiritually from the 'Images' of Debussy. But here and there, as in the 'Trois Mélodies pour voix et piano' ('Les Colombes,' 'Chinoiserie,' 'Séguidille'), one obtains glimpses of a dry humour akin to that manifest in the work of the French Fantaisistes, which invests the music with an atmosphere of delicate fantasy and whimsical gaiety that never descends to mere blague or musical triviality, being informed with a keen sense of spiritual and tonal nuance. This type of expression, at once so individual and so characteristic of the Spanish temperament, renders de Falla unique among contemporary Spanish composers. In the comedy-theme of 'The Three-cornered Hat,' which is based on the piquantly-humorous 18th century Spanish story of the amorous Corregidor fooled by the pretty miller's wife, this characteristic has wider scope.

The dramatic theme of the 'Three-cornered Hat,' like most plots of the 18th century intrigue comedies, is so detailed that it has been impossible for either de Falla or Massine, the designer of the choreographic action, to avoid something occasionally in the nature of musical pantomime. One immediate result of this is that the music at times seems purely imitative, as in the curt, harsh, squeaking passages of the altercation scene in which the ballet-action opens, the rasping passages which accompany the drawing of water from the well, the rhapsodic gruntings and gurgles of the Corregidor when paying court to the miller's wife, &c. These effects; however, unlike the mere reproductive 'realism' of Strauss and others, are informed throughout by a keen psychological insight, and are, in a manner, an intrinsic part of the musical scheme. They occupy somewhat the same place as the onomatopoeia of certain parts of Marinetti's 'Zang-tuum-tuum' and the choric poems of H. M. Barzun occupy in poetry. They are not so much descriptive or 'literary' as imagistic and sensory, and both help to create an atmosphere and to inform, by a juxtaposition of impressions, the moods and emotions of the characters, even as the fragmentary portions of bottles, faces, garters, mirrors, and other external objects, aid in the conveyance of mood-complexes in the paintings of Boccioni, Severini, Carrà, Soffici, Picasso, Wadsworth, and others. Only in one instance does de Falla verge on the obvious—namely, in his use of the 'Fate knocking at the door' phrase from the Beethoven C minor Symphony, at the entrance of the Corregidor's minions. Otherwise the music is governed by a rare sense of dramatic values and art-unity, from the impressive and stimulating opening movement with its rhythmic beating of feet and plaintive, Malaguena-like chant behind the curtain, through the charming love-music and flirtation scenes, with their delicately-handled undercurrent of feminine caprice and sensuousness, the old-world artificiality of the Corregidor's dances, and the poignant scene after the miller has been arrested, to the full, spontaneous vitality of the close. Much of the score is sheerly lovely, regarded solely as music; but its beauty has nothing sentimental about it. Its grace is informed throughout by psychological insight, and by that keen humour which is the dominant characteristic of the work as a whole.

Combined with de Falla's keen sense of tonal colour and atmospheric effect, as already evinced in the first scene of 'La Vida Breva'—where the pathos of the dramatic theme is immediately defined by the sad-hued songs and hammer-strokes from the smithy, the close of the first Act, with its exquisite atmospheric painting, and the vibrant gaiety of the betrothal scene of the second Act—this theme gives the composer the basis for a work embodying not only the sense of burlesque apparent in works like 'Don Quixote,' but also that rare modern Spanish blend of poetry, fantasy, and comedy presented in 'Comedia de Polichinelas' of the 'Teatro Fantastico' of Jacinto Benavente. Indeed, there is no one better qualified to give musical setting to comedies such as 'Los Intereses Creados' than is de Falla.

The diversity of talent which comprises the sense of dramatic values exhibited in 'La Vida Breva' with the whimsical delicacy of a song like 'Chinoiserie,' centres interest on the 'The Three-cornered Hat' not only as an individual product, but also as the embodiment of potent essentials in the Spanish character which brings modern Spanish musical expression directly into the main current of contemporary thought and art development.

We print elsewhere a letter from Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, announcing a series for performances of oratorio and other sacred music in Westminster Abbey by a specially organized choir of about two hundred voices. The opportunity for hearing masterpieces in such ideal surroundings as the Abbey will, we are sure, be widely appreciated. We are particularly glad to see that the scheme includes a selection of a cappella music. We hope to give further details in our next issue.

Interludes.

We have lately heard so much about humour in music that we are in some danger of forgetting that, strictly speaking, the amount of really humorous music is so small as to be almost negligible. By really humorous music I mean that which is funny, not merely through its association with an amusing text or situation, but in itself. This is, of course, another form of the programme-music question. Detach even the most vivid programme-music from its title, and it may take on a dozen different meanings with equal success. Dissociate the music of the most successful humorous song from its text, and who will laugh at it? Left to itself, it becomes mere music, often of an uninteresting type. Those who deny the limitations of music in this respect are faced with an awkward fact. The test of verbal wit and humour is its power of causing laughter. How often do we find a Humoreske, Burlesca, or Scherzo provoking even so much as a smile? Has anybody ever heard more than a ripple of laughter at an orchestral concert, save when the double-bassoonist has been playing variations on 'Lucy Long?' It is fashionable just now to describe the orchestration of some very spicy modern works as 'witty.' But wit is entirely a verbal quality. A picture may be humorous, because it can show us incident. It cannot be witty, because wit is the discovery of unexpected relations between two dissimilar ideas, and this discovery can be expressed only in words. Take a Max Beerbohm cartoon, for example. The picture alone is merely funny: the finer quality of wit appears only when the few words of text are added. Where pictorial art fails, music can hardly be expected to succeed. An orchestral score can no more be witty than it can be wise. The chief grounds on which the term is used seem to be the element of capriciousness and unexpectedness. Now, although surprise is the essence of wit, all that surprises is not witty. Otherwise a man who, waiving the customary sportive preliminaries, clumps me over the head would be the most brilliant of jesters. The only way in which music may approximate to verbal wit is in some of its uses of enharmonic change. The taking of a chord in one relation and leaving it in another is a kind of pun, and therefore a form of wit. So far as it is a sudden showing of an unsuspected connection between two unrelated keys it has much in common with real wit. Such enharmonic surprises are not necessarily amusing, of course. They may be serious or dramatic in effect, just as a similar surprise in literature may be beautiful or affecting. At all events, this is the only sense in which music may be said to be witty, and with the gradual exhaustion of harmonic resources, and therefore of surprise, this sense will become more and more restricted.

But if music cannot be humorous or witty, it can be comic, because comicality is a quality independent of words or ideas. A grimace, a ludicrous gesture, a droll, inarticulate sound—all these may cause roars of laughter. Similarly, orchestration may be comic by means of droll or uncouth effects. We hear a great deal about the humour in Beethoven's music, but it is not easy to find examples. High animal spirits are there in abundance, and high spirits may produce music vigorous or good-humoured, but not necessarily amusing. A really comic effect is the famous entry of the drums in the Scherzo of the ninth Symphony. That this is so was proved to me one day at Queen's Hall, when my neighbour laughed at it, and immediately apologised, saying that the drums were the cause, though he couldn't explain how. He had never heard the Symphony before, and was relieved and interested on my telling him that he had laughed in the right place. The uncouth gambolling of the double-basses in the Trio of the Scherzo of No. 5 is another comic effect that never fails to amuse, though we have heard it too often and are too well-behaved to laugh aloud at it. (I seem to have read somewhere that Dragonetti used to play this as a solo in order that the notes might be quite clear!) But the best of all the amusing passages in Beethoven is surely in the Scherzo of the Pastoral Symphony, where the:

of the second bassoon so funnily hits off the rustic musician of the type we all know well—the player who in the difficult passages is busy adjusting his copy or his glasses, or tuning his instrument, but is ready to enter with gusto on a bit of tonic and dominant if the pace be not too hot. This seems to me to be one of the few really humorous passages in pure music. It is comedy, which is higher than comicality because it gives us a touch of real life. Even without the title of the movement to help us, the emphatic futility of the passage would amuse us almost as much. And is it too fanciful to suppose that the violas and 'cellos mock the bassoonist four bars after the last appearance of the figure quoted above?

All the signs point to the composers of the next few years giving us music of a lighter character than formerly. This may be a natural result of the relief felt at the end of the war, or it may be a revolt against patheticism; most probably it is an expression of the materialism which is one of the legacies of the recent upheaval. The limitations of music are proved by the fact that composers who wish to be humorous are generally either (a) allusive, (b) imitative, or (c) bizarre. Allusiveness is not often a satisfactory form of musical humour. The allusion rarely hits the happy mean between the obvious and the over-subtle. Here are a couple of examples from recent works. In both 'The Boatswain's Mate' and 'The Three-cornered Hat' we have used to represent a knocking at the door. No doubt this very obvious jest has often been made. Mr. Glover, for example, is hardly likely to have overlooked it in compiling his amusing Drury Lane pantomime scores, where, indeed, it would be more in keeping than in the two other cases. Moreover, I venture to suggest that the composer of 'The Three-cornered Hat' spoils such joke as there is by giving the theme to a muted trumpet. Introduced as a quotation, and played exactly as the symphony, it would have been funnier. The muted trumpet has long since ceased to amuse us, and its use in this case made the jest seem laboured. As an example of the over-subtle, take Stanford's allusion to the 'Die Walküre' fire music in his song 'Daddy Longlegs.' Now the success of an allusion of this kind depends upon its immediate detection by the listeners. Like any other joke, it fizzles out on being explained. How many of us know our 'Die Walküre' sufficiently to spot a little quotation of this kind? But Stanford has scored heavily by his allusions elsewhere. 'The Critic' fairly bristles with them. There they are well in the picture, and (with the exception, perhaps, of the Minuet from 'Ariadne') are of a type that may be detected by any average musician who has his ears open.

How often have standard funeral marches been dragged in with intent to amuse? Parry quotes Chopin's in 'The Pied Piper,' and Bridge's part-song 'The Goslings' has a stave of the Dead March from 'Saul.' But I fancy that few of us feel quite happy about humour of this kind. Every audience contains a proportion of people who have recently been bereaved, and a hundred smiles are dearly bought by the stirring of one painful memory. The Mendelssohn 'Wedding March' is much fairer game, and has been made the most of on many occasions. On the whole, however, it cannot be said that allusiveness is a particularly successful form of musical humour.

A much more promising field is that of imitation. The imitation may be that of sounds ludicrous in themselves, or it may be a burlesque of serious effects. An excellent example of the former kind is No. 3 of Eugène Goossens's 'Kaleidoscope,' which gives us a droll and realistic imitation of a hurdy-gurdy suffering from serious internal trouble. I choose it for special mention because it is one of the very few pieces of the kind in which the imitation is so good that the title is hardly necessary. It has also the power (rare in pianoforte music) of making most people laugh aloud. It must be played through at its proper speed in order to give the joke a chance, but a few bars' quotation may be of interest:

Here the out-of-tune G's, the way in which the faulty mechanism insists on striking C♯ as well as B, and the hiccup of the missing E at the end, are not merely clever imitations, but capital fun as well.

The burlesquing of serious effects is less easy than it appears to be. Stanford did some good things in his 'Ode to Discord,' and only failed here and there because some of the originals were too grotesque to be parodied satisfactorily. If the 'Ode' were performed to-day as a serious orchestral work, I believe it would deceive the crowd, especially if it were announced as being by . . . I cannot decide which of four names to suggest. Berlioz was so much more humorous as a writer than as a musician that we need not be surprised at his failure in attempting to burlesque the oratorio fugue. His 'Amen' chorus in the 'Damnation de Faust' is duller than the thing at which it pokes fun—a fatal ending to what in some hands would have been a good joke. On the other hand, Sullivan's use of conventional recitative formulæ is among the funniest things in the Savoy operas. On the whole, instrumental music is most successfully humorous when it aims at creating amusement by bizarrierie in scoring or harmony. Such humour is not of the type to set the house in a roar, but it keeps us on tip-toe, and has a good deal of the quality of surprise that belongs to wit. Plenty of examples will occur to the reader, and probably many more are on the way. I doubt if the fashion will be a lasting one, however. It will serve its purpose in lightening our concert programmes, and it will do a good deal in the direction of enlarging technique and means of expression, even though for its own part it has nothing very important to express. The pendulum will soon have swung as far as possible from emotion and will begin its return journey. We shall then find that cacophonous representations of the woes and amours of puppets, gold-fish, and tin soldiers are not necessarily a sign of modernism. Perhaps some of the old composers did wear their heart on their sleeve overmuch. The newest certainly have their tongue too constantly in their cheek, and their hand too often outspread, with thumb to nose.

The one humorous direction in which music will always be a success is in heightening the effect of an already amusing text or situation. What it can do in the latter respect we have seen lately in the work of the Russian Ballet. On the whole, however, its greatest scope will always be in connection with words, because of the facility of performance. A good comic song or vocal quartet can score heavily with the minimum of cost. Why do our best singers so rarely sing anything amusing? And when they do, why should they choose (say) a buffo song from Rossini rather than a good native example, the joke of which is not only up-to-date but in a language we can all understand? Are there no good British patter songs? Sullivan wrote a few. Perhaps some day our baritones will forsake the well-worn Italian examples and show their skill in 'The Sorcerer's Song,' or 'A Nightmare,' or 'From Rock to Rock.' At the same time they might well leave off wooing that snowflake for a month or two. And why do not our choral societies unbend more frequently? The 'Oriana' singers have no scruples about switching off from Elizabethan polyphony and making us laugh with 'What shall we do with a drunken sailor?' or other droll ditties of a folk-song type. I wish they would go still further in this direction and do something to encourage the composers of really good humorous part-songs. And I am sure that the inclusion of such things in the syllabuses of choral competitions would not only be welcome to the audience (and adjudicators!) but would do the choirs a power of good. Our singers, whether solo or choral, are not in need of sobering: some comic relief (with really good, well-written music) would help them towards that freedom of style which most of them lack. A friend who was at the Welsh Eisteddfod tells me that the choral tests were all far too serious. The two pieces for the eighteen male-voice choirs were, first, a song about the loved one being in her grave, and second, one which harped on the words, 'My head is bloody.' I refrain from quoting my friend's irreverent but natural comment after hearing the latter eighteen times.

So much modern music is decidedly suggestive of irony that it is worth while trying to see how this quality is expressed. Generally speaking, such astringent tones as those of the oboe, bassoon, cor anglais, and muted trumpet, with the less expressive register of the flute, are largely responsible. Such dry and brittle sounds as that of the xylophone are also helpful. Harmonically, a modal flavour often gives the right bleak effect. It is odd to find the ecclesiastic and the satirist joining hands here, but I think it is not far-fetched to suggest that the aloofness and other-worldliness of the modes, which made them ideal for the best impersonal kinds of Church music, fit them also for use when the composer wishes to get as far off as possible from emotion. I have not space to develop this theory. A familiar example is found in Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' where the sardonic flavour of the theme usually associated with Mephistopheles is due to its modal character. The modern French School will provide many other examples. We find something of the kind even in 'Israel in Egypt.' When Handel 'conveyed' a canzona of Kerl's for 'Egypt was glad when they departed,' did he feel at the back of his mind that the wry-mouthed joy of the spoiled Egyptians was best expressed by a severe fugue in the Phrygian mode? If not, he builded better than he knew.

FESTE.

Occasional Notes.

Mr. Josef Holbrooke announces a series of five recitals of modern music at the French Institute, Marble Arch House, W., at 8.30, on the Fridays in October. On the instrumental side, the works will be drawn entirely from Mr. Holbrooke's own compositions—not a wise plan, we think, even with relief in the shape of songs by Bantock, Elgar, Ireland, Bridge, Vaughan Williams, Scott, Ravel, Debussy, &c., sung by Miss Astra Desmond, Miss Gene Dell, Mr. George Paulo, and Mr. Frank Mullings.

When writing prospectuses, Mr. Holbrooke invariably takes us into his confidence. On this occasion he explains why London has for so long been bereft of his presence:

'As I have found during sixteen years' travail in London town that "deadheads" abound for native music, I have, during the last four years, concentrated my attention on the provincial towns with a more marked result for enthusiasm, financial results, and artistic receptivity! This is as it should be.'

He adds, with true Joseffian inconsequence:

'The hall now selected being of a modest size and quite charming for chamber music, the "public" are not invited in their masses!'

We hope the crowd (including 'deadheads') that usually besieges chamber-concerts will accept this, the only intimation.

Mr. Holbrooke ends his prospectus with a further light touch:

'These concerts are given really for the amusement of the composer concerned, and they are semi-private; but those fortunate enough to attend will find that smoking and drinking (of a mild character) will be indulged in, and allowed!'

As a five shilling ticket will ensure admittance, we should have described these concerts as public. But Mr. Holbrooke says they are 'semi-private' (whatever that may be), and he ought to know. With all his hard words for Londoners, however, he is not without confidence in their generosity. What other composer would expect them to pay 5s. a time (or £1 1s. for the lot) for the privilege of seeing him amusing himself, even semi-privately, even with the additional lure of mild dissipation?

The personal note appears in a more attractive form in an analytical programme of some pianoforte recitals given a few months ago at St. Dominic's Priory, North Adelaide, by Mr. Paul Howard. The programmes contained a fine batch of unfamiliar works, such as the 'Twenty-four Walzermasken' of Godowsky, Dohnányi's Introduction and Fugue, Scherzo in C sharp minor, Capriccio, 'Dies Iræ' Rhapsody, and Valse Impromptu, and Balakirev's Oriental Fantasy and Idylle Etude. Mr. Howard's comments are full of interest and information, with here and there a free and easy note that is as refreshing as it is unusual in such a connection. Speaking of Balakirev's 'Islamy' he says:

This Eastern piece of fanaticism, crazy hysteria, and smouldering Oriental passions, certainly is a tyrant, but it is mostly only the madness of the pace that kills, and this can be met by direct action. Responding to the red-rag challenge of its impregnability I made a wild onslaught, got it down and tried it off on visitors without copy within three weeks, although somewhat convulsed myself afterwards by its delirium.

But 'direct action' was not always so immediately successful:

The 'Walzermasken,' however, defied conquest even after two years of daily battlement, and it is now nearly four years before I can claim maturity and pleasure in performance. Put against this the fact that I worked at Beethoven's Op. 2, No. 3, for the first time the other day, memorised and polished it in a week, and achieved the same with 'Pathétique' in two days. That gives you just the ratio.

Have these pieces of Godowsky been heard in London? Mr. Howard says that 'many renowned touring virtuosi do not seem to be aware of them.' He adds that there is perhaps some excuse for avoiding them, 'considering the hair-raising expenditure of time and labour their study involves,' and doubts 'whether there are half-a-dozen artists in the world who play them.' His description of the general characteristics of the work makes us wish one or two of our London recitalists would give some tired battle horses a rest in its favour:

Godowsky's music mostly sounds as if three independent hands were employed on the board and sometimes more. He has discarded all packing and mere accompaniment: he writes pianistically, and yet as though for orchestra. Right through from high to low—and often he uses the entire length of the keyboard simultaneously for pages at a stretch—is the body of his music filled with voices which sing their lines with the freedom of speech of a string quintet. And as the dynamic technique of this Goliath, so his astounding learning to clothe new thoughts. All the past and future seem heralded in his works.

Of No. 9, 'Satire,' he says:

And now 'Satire,' of what? The spirit of satire and in the next 'Karikatur,' assail pedantry and everything else, and yet make beautiful music. 'Oh, well, of course,' you may say. Not so fast, however; look at the score and see what is there and how it is handled to make it what it is instead of a sepulchre. If old Albrechtsberger might rise to hear them he would doubtless drop dead again.

After indulging in further rhapsodies, he suddenly comes to earth and bounds up again thus:

This 'Elegie' is a beauty—reminds me of Caruso singing Massenet's 'Elegie,' to which it is akin in strength, but in the Godowsky idiom—always other voices there. Now here a 'Perpetuum Mobile,' a class of work which paradoxically and mercifully comes to a close. This one is charming enough to listen to, but to play is perversity bedevilled, fulfilling its name in its searching movement more than any I have seen.

(I will have to cut these remarks short—paper is costing about £200 per ton just now.)

The 'Menuet' is very lovely—stately dance of days gone by—and then the Tyrolesian rollicking 'Schubplatter'—the peasants slap the soles of their feet with their hands as they dance.

The comment on the price of paper is made the more piquant by the fact that the programme of the four recitals fills six pages 9" x 11½" of thick glazed paper, with a wide margin, in a cover of even thicker texture, and that dates and times are printed in words—'Twenty-fourth,' 'Eight-thirty o'clock,' and so on. But this little eccentricity is of no importance beside the fact that the programmes of the recitals are among the most striking we have ever seen. The average London recital is a tame 'follow-my-leader' affair in comparison.

We are glad to hear that Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott is forming a new choral society in London, to be known as the Philharmonic Choir. The new body will aim at the performance of the great choral masterpieces, with orchestral accompaniment, as well as such a cappella works as require a large number of voices for adequate performance. Among those to be undertaken are the following: Double Motet, 'Sing ye to the Lord,' Bach; Beethoven's ninth Symphony; 'The Song of the High Hills' (new) Delius; 'News from Whydah,' Balfour Gardiner; part-songs, 'Morning Song in the Jungle' and 'Father and Daughter,' Grainger; and 'The Hymn of Jesus' (new), Holst. The choir will make its first public appearance at the Royal Philharmonic Society's concerts on February 26 and March 25, on the first of these occasions singing the 'Choral Symphony,' and on the second providing a choral programme. Rehearsals will be held at the Ethical Church, 46, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W. (railway stations: Queen's Road, Metropolitan and Central London Railways), from 6.0 to 7.30 each Wednesday evening from the beginning of October to the end of March. The annual subscription will be half-a-guinea, which will entitle members to the privilege of a serial ticket for the series of seven concerts of the Royal Philharmonic Society at Queen's Hall at two-thirds of the ordinary price. Members must provide their own music. A few singers of exceptional ability may be admitted free of subscription at the discretion of the conductor, but such singers will not be entitled to any special privileges in respect of concert tickets. All communications should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. Granville Humphreys, 145, Elms Road, Clapham Park, S.W.-4. Inquiries should be accompanied by a stamped addressed envelope.

Mr. Scott's work with the Oriana Choir is a guarantee not only of enthusiastic and skilful training, but of an exceptionally interesting choice of works. For some years past the 'Oriana' programmes have been models in their avoidance of the hackneyed and in their generous recognition of the claims of our native composers, past and present. We wish the Philharmonic Choir the success we feel sure it will deserve.

We read in a daily paper that in 'Green Pastures of Piccadilly,' the play at the Ambassadors Theatre, one of the characters remarks that we have no Wedding March, and complains that we have to fall back on German works—Mendelssohn's 'Wedding March' and the Bridal Chorus from 'Lohengrin.' This kind of thing is often said, but as a matter of fact there are plenty of good marches and pieces of a suitable character by English composers. Among those definitely called 'Wedding March' a particularly good example is that by W. T. Best, in Book 6 of his 'Collection of Organ Pieces for Church Use.' Best was an unequal composer, but perhaps his great fame as a player and transcriber has prevented him from receiving such credit as is due to him. The 'Wedding March' is one of his most effective works. It is only moderately difficult, and should be known to all who are getting tired of the standing dishes. Not only does it appeal to us because it is English and unhackneyed. Comparing it with the Mendelssohn March, we are bold enough to say that we prefer the Best because it is the better.

Among those who were created bards at the Welsh Eisteddfod was Mr. Alfred Kalisch, the honour being conferred in recognition of his services to music and literature. Mr. Kalisch's bardic title is 'Davidd o'r dwerain' ('David of the East').

THE NATIONAL WELSH EISTEDDFOD.

By WILLIAM CHILD.

CORWEN, Monday, August 4.

The holding of a great national Festival at such a small place as Corwen—a village consisting of one street—puzzles the Saxon visitor until he learns that the beautiful valley in which Corwen rests has been the scene of some of the most stirring events in Welsh history. It has many literary associations as well, among the most practical of its sons being Thomas Jones (1647), who published the first Welsh almanac and the first Welsh-English dictionary and Welsh grammar to be widely used by his fellow-countrymen. The great local hero, however, is Owen Glendower, one of whose mansions was hard by, and who here rallied his first supporters for his fight against the English. The national spirit burns very brightly in these hills and valleys. Mixing with the crowd in the Eisteddfod field, I hear so little of my own language that I find it difficult to realise that England is but a half-hour's railway journey off.

Semi-national Eisteddfodau have been held at Corwen annually for a very long time. The large wooden pavilion in which the more recent of these have taken place has been much enlarged for the present gathering, and now seats about ten thousand. There are no galleries or obstructions of any kind. There is a pronounced rise from the platform, so that seeing is easy from all parts. Acoustically the pavilion is as near perfection as can be. A good speaker with a reasonably powerful voice can be heard distinctly at the back, and the most delicate choral effects are very telling.

The chief musical interest—at all events, so far as the outsider is concerned—lies in the choral items. To-day's programme is not very important in this respect. An action-song for school children, in parties of twelve, is a new competition, and not without significance. Taken in conjunction with the announcement that the 1921 Eisteddfod syllabus will include a prize for a play, to be performed by competing parties of amateur actors, it indicates a decided relaxation of the old Welsh puritanical objection to the stage. To-day's action-song competition showed us some very promising young performers. The choirs first sang a delightful Welsh folk-song with appropriate features, and then gave us an item of their own choice. Throughout the acting was far better than the singing, while the music of the own-choice pieces was generally very poor—uninteresting melodies, weakly harmonized, and not too well accompanied. After the folk-song, it was a big descent (for example) to the number in which we were bidden to sing 'Hey for the life of a highwayman, the life that is hoppy and free,' with masks, fainting damsels, and toy pistol-cracks ad lib. Is there a dearth of action-songs with sensible schemes and really good music, however simple? I hasten to add that the competition kept a huge audience delighted for a couple of hours, and, judging from the applause, I appeared to be the only dissatisfied listener present.

Another new choral feature to-day was the competition for mixed choirs of about forty voices from places of worship. The tests consisted of a hymn, a psalm, and a short anthem. The standard of the eight competing choirs was generally excellent. Musically, the first test provided the best material, the tunes being good examples of Welsh hymnody. The chanting was careful, and full of neatly-prepared points, but most unfortunately showed the inelasticity that has long since become an Anglican tradition. The Welsh singers are capable of so much freedom in their other singing that it was disappointing to find them unable to solve the problem presented by the Anglican chant—the use of measured music as a medium for prose. The anthems were a miserable lot. That sung by the first choir opened thus :

THE NATIONAL WELSH EISTEDDFOD, CORWEN : THE PAVILION.

The example, with its harmonic mark of the beast at *, struck a note above which very little of the remainder rose. It was pitiable to hear capable and enthusiastic singing wasted on such poor material. Another matter for regret was the failure to recognise the beauty of unaccompanied singing. All the choirs were well balanced, and the addition of a pianoforte and harmonium merely duplicating the voice parts was an irritating impertinence.

The only other choral event to-day was the open contest for choirs of not less than forty-five voices. The test-pieces were Elgar's 'My love dwelt in a Northern land' and E. T. Davies's 'Now silent the harp.' Unfortunately there was only one entry—the Liverpool Harmonic Choral Society (Mr. D. Roberts). The judges gave them the prize, and might well have been more laudatory in their comments. True, a good deal of the mystery of the Elgar song had escaped the singers. Like most of the composer's best works, great and small, it demands much that cannot be expressed in the copy, and most of this elusive quality was missing to-day. Moreover, in the delicate detached accompaniment to such passages as 'And all that night' they gave us too pronounced a pizzicato effect. But their sudden loudening and sforzando were excellent, and in the second song, which called for sonority rather than subtlety, they were heard to great advantage. A good choir, which will be even better yet. They have some very brilliant sopranos.

The finals of various solo-singing classes have produced some fair performances. The entries are very heavy, and preliminary tests are beginning daily at 8.30. Competitors and judges have my sympathy. Fancy singing—or judging—an impassioned lyric at 8.30 a.m. !

The peculiarly Welsh institution known as penillion singing has given us some interesting moments. For the benefit of readers who have never heard it I may explain that the singer has to provide a kind of discant or counter-theme to a tune (announced beforehand) played on the harp by a second performer. The counter-theme must not begin with the tune; it generally enters at the end of the first phrase. The words are expected to be perfect metrically, and must rhyme. They are usually written by the singer; sometimes they are improvised. The more distinct the enunciation, and the more the discant is varied from verse to verse, the greater the merit. Such considerations as purity of tone and phrasing are of little account. As a matter of fact the singer has so much other fish to fry that he cannot afford to be bothered with the conventional vocal virtues. The successful penillionist in the juvenile class to-day was a small boy who delivered himself of the most piercing and metallic voice I have ever heard. It stabbed the air, and must have been heard over a good deal of the surrounding district. When this ten-year-old youth has doubled his age he will have either a remarkable voice or a husky whisper.

Tuesday.

We have had plenty of choral singing to-day. The 'Second male-voice competition' (so called to distinguish it from the chief event of this kind, which takes place on Thursday) gave us eight good bodies. They sang a couple of Welsh airs—'Men of Harlech' and 'All through the night.' All this singing was enjoyable, and frequently something more. The winners—the Gwalia choir, from Nant y Glo (Mr. W. R. Lewis)—especially roused us in the 'Men of Harlech.'

I mentioned in my notes of yesterday the unnecessary and irritating accompaniment of the church choirs. The 'Men of Harlech' arrangement was another example of the way in which this intensely musical people will spoil a good thing. The vocal harmony was in four parts, and might well have been left to take care of itself. But no! the pianoforte gave us a few bars of trivial prelude, and then added an accompaniment consisting chiefly of 'tiddly-bits,' after this manner :

Fortunately, 'Men of Harlech' is such a fine tune, and the choirs were so robust, that this miserably poor decorative scheme was unable to do its worst: both tune and choirs seemed to shake it off impatiently. We had yet another case of the kind later on when, in order to fill a gap in the proceedings, the audience sang a few hymns. Led by a conductor on the platform, they rolled out a couple, in harmony, with grand effect. Then an official who should have known better went to the pianoforte and accompanied the remainder. Never did pianoforte sound so ineffective. It could hardly be otherwise, with eight thousand people lifting up their voices, and only a few hundred able to hear the miserable percussion instrument that suggests drawing-rooms, concert-rooms, and practice-rooms, but has nothing useful to contribute when the songs of Zion are being sung by a multitude. A big organ, or a brass band, if you like, but when such a chorus as this sets going, lock the pianoforte and lose the key.

The chief open choral competition, for choirs of not less than eighty voices, led to some fine singing. The tests were 'Sylvia,' a rather commonplace part-song by J. H. Roberts, and Bach's 'God goeth up with shouting.' Five choirs competed—Ammanford Choral Society, Shotton and District Philharmonic, Nottingham Philharmonic, Cefn and District Choral Society, and Llangollen Choir. Gledholt Vocal Union, of Huddersfield, had entered, but did not appear. Ammanford (Mr. E. Bowen-Jones), numbering a hundred and forty-one voices, won with some splendid singing, especially in the Bach chorus, Nottingham (Mr. William Turner) coming second. This contest roused great enthusiasm.

The reception of the winners' performance of 'God goeth up' was almost as thrilling as the singing itself. Such a word as 'thrilling' should be rarely and cautiously employed, but it fairly describes the winning performance, especially in regard to the close of the first half of the chorus, where the long strands of the polyphony are suddenly tied and sheared off :

Ex. 3. Allegro.

God go - eth up with shout - ing, and the Lord with sound of the trum - pet.

The effect of the springing tenor, and, even more, of the high D's of the basses, hammered out crescendo, was electrifying. All the signs point to a host of Bach converts having been made to-day. It should be added that the Ammanford choir had been travelling from 6 a.m. until they entered the pavilion in the afternoon, singing fourth instead of first as announced. Their journey cost £300, and the prize was £75. Leaving the unsatisfactory balance sheet to take care of itself, they carried their conductor round the field in triumph.

The Crowning of the Bard took place with due ceremony at mid-day. I wished to be impressed, but was not. The whole thing contains too many anachronisms. Could not some Welsh air be found wherewith to accompany the successful bard to the coronation? To-day we had 'See the conquering hero' played by a brass band with some harmony and melodic turns that I did not identify as Handel's. And the crowning song, finely sung by Miss Annie Davies, would have been better without the pianoforte accompaniment, which not only struck the wrong note, but contained a Spohrish touch in the last line. The garments worn by the bards and other dignitaries were very effective so far as they went, but they did not go far enough by about nine inches. Of all human garb trousers are the least picturesque. These prosaic cylinders of cloth are always an eyesore, but never so much so as when they peep out from beneath ceremonial apparel. I recall, with a special shudder, two stout pepper-and-salt calves, supported by gleaming brown boots. . . . Moreover the presence on the platform of several officials in ordinary attire; the advertisement on the pianoforte, in foot-long letters, of the fact that it and other instruments were hired from so-and-so; the roars of laughter when, during a recitation of a stanza by one bard, another, apparently hard of hearing, stepped forward and began to turn the item into a duet by firing off his little effort,—these things killed the crowning, so far as I was concerned. Only at one point was the affair lifted to a really high plane as ritual,—when the arch-druid demanded thrice 'A oes heddwwch?' ('Is it peace?') and the gathering replied as one 'Heddwwch!' whereupon the great ceremonial sword was sheathed. Apart from this the crowning was one of the least impressive events of the day. Before another ceremony of this kind comes my way, I hope a good stage-manager will get to work.

Wednesday.

To-day has been almost entirely given up to the children. The inevitable falling-off in musical interest has been more than made up by the human appeal. Nothing so far has been more delightful than the folk-song competition for school choirs of not less than thirty voices. There were a dozen entries, and the tests were five short ditties, sung unaccompanied. The choirs were generally large and well-drilled, and the singing was full of spirit. With no accompanying harmonies to attract the listener, the melodies were subjected to the severest of tests. They came well out of the ordeal, not only by virtue of their tunefulness, but perhaps even more because of their delightful rhythmical freedom. Nothing can be better for the musical training of children than this early appreciation of the importance of an interesting rhythmical scheme. The youngsters sang with an elasticity that was wholly charming. Unfortunately the same praise cannot be extended to the purely vocal side. The tone was generally rather hard, and in the louder passages inclined to shrillness. Only the winners (Cybi Juvenile Choir, Holyhead) showed genuine refinement in this respect. This—a girls' choir—was conducted by one of its members, Dilys Hughes, aged ten. It was real conducting too, not mere time-beating. The singers, in many cases three or four years older than their tiny director, made full and prompt response to her calls. On both sides the performance was quite natural and unaffected. When we saw what was coming most of us expected a display of offensive precocity. Only a few phrases were needed to reassure us. It may be said that the rhythmical and imitative faculty is so strong in children that most of the members of a class would be able to take a turn with the baton. This is true, but the result would no more be real conducting than would the efforts of the members of an adult choir called on in the same way. Personality is the vital factor that distinguishes the human metronome from the genuine conductor. Personality reveals itself at a very tender age, however, and there is no doubt that the handing over of the baton to promising children would discover a proportion of talent which, if judiciously directed, and applied to suitable material, as in this case, would yield valuable results later. After all, if we admit that the conductor is both born and made, why should we leave the making part until the potential conductor is between twenty and thirty years of age?

In leaving this delightful competition, a tribute should be paid to the Welsh Folk-Song Society, which is doing excellent work in collecting and publishing native songs, and to whose activities this contest is directly due.

We have had to-day the chairing of the Bard, a ceremony which suffered from the same defects as that of yesterday, with additional slovenliness in the playing of 'See the conquering hero.' There were fifteen entries for the competition for Children's Choirs of not less than forty voices. The test-pieces were a couple of two-part songs: David Evans's 'Soldiers and Sailors' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Drake's Drum.' Both songs unfortunately called for a strenuous style that showed the weakness of the singers, the tone being at times painfully shrill and forced. We were frequently reminded, too, of the difficulty in regard to the lower part in elementary school choirs. So long as the school-leaving age remains fourteen, completely satisfactory results can be obtained only by recognition of the fact that all but a mere handful of the singers are first trebles. There are two ways of providing for their needs—by unison singing, and by two- and three-part songs in which all the voices cover pretty much the same ground, the parts frequently crossing, and occasionally combining in unison. Passages, and sometimes whole songs, written in canon at the unison or at the third or fourth below, would provide good material for the early study of part-singing.

The finals for the boys and girls' solo singing showed very promising interpretative gifts. But the palm in this direction must go to the juvenile reciters, and especially to the children of nine and ten. Nothing shows the national genius for oratory more convincingly than the ease of gesture and inflection of these infants.

There has been some very fair work in various instrumental finals to-day, the judges giving their opinion that in no department of music has Wales made such advances as in pianoforte playing. I suppose we ought to be pleased. Far more important, however, was the capital playing of the finalists in the competition for trio (pianoforte, violin, and 'cello) and the even better work by the best of the violin soloists. Wales's chief musical needs are local orchestras and chamber music parties. No doubt a thousand good pianists will be welcome, but a thousand good string and wind players are a necessity. When they are forthcoming we shall not find a London orchestra engaged to play the accompaniments to the chief choral test, as is to be the case next year at Barry. Even with the present dearth one would have thought that populous South Wales could have provided a local orchestra, the leaders only being imported. With a whole year in which to arrange such a band, the engagement of a London orchestra seems a tame surrender. Compensation will no doubt be found in the stimulus local musicians will receive from the visitors.

Thursday.

High-water mark has been reached to-day. The pavilion has been packed, even the gangways being solidly filled, and many hundreds have had to be satisfied with such fragments of music as could escape into the grounds. The greatest crush was during the male-voice choir contest. Before that took place we had some pleasing singing by seven female-voice choirs. The tests were Holbrook's 'Gentle Spring' and D. D. Parry's 'The sea maidens,' the former being a particularly attractive piece. Two choirs easily stood out from the rest, Mr. William Turner's Girls' Prize Choir from Nottingham, and the Rhymney Ladies' Choir (Miss M. Richards). Of these two the latter was decidedly the better, giving a highly finished performance, with a breadth and sonority that are too often lacking in choirs of this type.

The male-voice choir contest took place in an atmosphere of tense excitement that occasionally flamed up into a threat of disorder. Fortunately the singing of a hymn served to calm the gathering. To one accustomed to the patience and placid good humour of a London crowd, there is something almost terrifying in a gathering where the emotions lie so near the surface that they may be roused and soothed by means that would leave the Saxon cold. Here a word of praise is due to the officials in charge—known as the 'conductors'—who were ready with an oration of any length, grave or gay, wherewith to fill up gaps. When the savage breast refused to be soothed by words, the conductor struck up a hymn, and had the audience singing in less time than an English chairman would have taken to decide on the tune or the key. As is usually the case with those who are gifted with a ready tongue, the conductors talked too much, and occasionally delayed the proceedings, but of their eloquence, tact, and domination over the crowd it is difficult to speak too highly. There might easily have been some ugly moments in the over-heated and congested hall to-day, but for their never-failing supply of homilies and anecdotes—the latter producing such roars of laughter that I regretted my ignorance of Welsh till a native informed me that they were mainly chestnuts.

Of the twenty-one male-voice choirs who had entered, eighteen appeared. The tests were Vaughan Thomas's 'The lost love' (Wordsworth's 'She dwelt among the untrodden ways'), sung unaccompanied, and D. Protheroe's 'Invictus,' a setting of Henley's well-known lines. Both pieces left a good deal to be desired as music. The first almost entirely failed to express the poignant personal feeling of the poem, and the second, in spite of some dramatic moments, was spoilt by the conventional character of most of the means employed for emotional purposes, the coda being especially weak.

The strife was long—nearly three-and-a-half hours. With few exceptions the choirs displayed beautiful tone and blend, the best of them, in breadth and sonority, suggesting organ-tone. The chief failure was in regard to intonation, few ending the unaccompanied song without a slight loss of pitch. In 'Invictus' the more chromatic passages—which happened also to be very loud—caused trouble, many of the choirs forcing and sharpening painfully. The best of the singing was wonderfully good. The amount of discipline that must have gone to the production of such ensemble made one wonder why our not too economical Government does not spend a few thousands of pounds on male-voice choralism as an antidote to Bolshevism. It would be difficult to imagine anything less suggestive of industrial unrest than the sight of these men—nearly two thousand of them altogether, and many of them from South Wales collieries—singing difficult music from memory, absorbed in their task, obedient to every sign from their conductor (never stopping to reflect that, after all, he was an autocrat!) and fighting as keenly as any of their mates at football. Nobody stopped to demand a soviet, and there was no talk of downing voices.

The choirs varied greatly in size—from sixty to a hundred and thirty—and it looked as though the heavyweights were going to carry the day. But a Lancashire choir, Nelson Arion (Mr. Lawson Berry) gave us a new version of the old North Country saying by proving conclusively that a very good little 'un is always better than a good big 'un. Tredegar Orpheus (Mr. J. D. Evans) came second, and one of the largest choirs, Williamstown (Mr. Ted Lewis), was a close third. The verdict was a long time coming, and a good stiff dose of hymn singing and eloquence had to be administered to the anxious partisans. With this event, the competitive side of the proceedings came to a splendid finish.

Friday.

I learn that yesterday's receipts were well over £2,000, easily the largest sum ever taken in one day at an Eisteddfod. In spite of the exceptionally heavy expenses it is now certain that there will be a substantial profit.

Mention should be made of the very successful concerts with which each day has closed. That on Monday was devoted to Welsh folk-songs, Tuesday's and Thursday's were of a miscellaneous character, and on Wednesday Dr. J. J. Parry's opera 'Blodwen' was performed. I had daily set out from my headquarters at Llangollen intending to be present at the concert, but on each occasion after eight hours in the crowded field and pavilion, I emerged such a moist unpleasant body that the prospect of a cool and quiet evening was too much for me. Even the opportunity for hearing what the programme book wildly called the 'Prolouge to Paglacci' by Leon Cavall, or 'On with the motley' by Leon Cavallo, or favourite pieces by Chopin and Pagainni, or somebody's

'O. P. 14' could not drag me back to the Pavilion. I mention these little slips because they are typical of the chief weakness of the Eisteddfod. It all needed a bit of tightening up. We lived too much from hand to mouth. The various contests were numbered, but not timed, and as the numbers proved to be but the slenderest indication as to the sequence of events, visitors were more or less tied by the leg. Thus, in order to be sure of hearing the choral items, I had to sit through many speeches in Welsh, and such things as the adjudication on 'No. 5 (m). Best utility garment (adult's cast-off garment converted for a child).' As the verdict was of course delivered in Welsh, I had not even the satisfaction of picking up hints as to their excellent method of dealing with the more frayed portions of my wardrobe. A system of showing the competitor's number was badly needed too. Frequently choirs sang out of the published order, and the oral announcements were not always heard. Far too many distractions were allowed during the performances. The rule as to the closing of doors at such times should have been rigidly enforced. There are many other such points that might be mentioned, but no doubt the authorities are well aware of them, and have duly made notes. I must add a complaint as to the choice of test-pieces. In only a comparatively few cases was the music worthy of the performance. A comparison with the prospectus of next year's Eisteddfod at Barry shows a difference of standard that ought not to be possible in an event of such far-reaching educational importance. The 1920 test-pieces are fifty per cent. better than the 1919; what is there to prevent those of 1921 from being fifty per cent. worse? The policy of leaving a great deal to the local committee is sound on the whole, but there should be an advisory committee of recognised musicians—a kind of second chamber—ready to help with suggestions, or even with the blue pencil if necessary.

Too much of the music of this week seemed to have been chosen merely because it was by Welsh composers. One may sympathise with the feeling that promoted the selection, at the same time pointing out that in the matter of composition, as in instrumental music, Wales has a good deal of leeway to make up. And if Welsh pieces were required for tests, why did not the names of Walford Davies and Vaughan Williams appear? When it is remembered that the Eisteddfod syllabus forms the staple work of thousands of musicians during a great part of the year, it will be seen that the choice of works is of vital importance. Only the very best should be good enough, and the wider the net is cast the better. I should add that the judges were Mrs. Mary Davies (folk-song), Dr. David Evans, Dr. Caradog Roberts, Dr. D. C. Williams, and Mr. E. T. Davies. Their findings generally were those of the rest of us, so we may congratulate one another.

To-day we ceased to be competitive, and became co-operative with a great Psalmody Festival—an example of community singing that is probably without a rival.* It is a worthy end to a wonderful week. Musically, as I have shown, the festival has been alternately depressing and uplifting. But although I went chiefly to hear the music, I soon saw that the Eisteddfod is far more than a mere tournament of song. It is perhaps the most vital expression of nationality to-day. If I had gone to Corwen holding the view of the handful of eccentrics who tell us that there are no longer any nations, I should have come away converted. The music was a by-product, and most of its impressions may be effaced in a few months: the human and social side of the Eisteddfod was a moving and unforgettable experience.

RUGGIERO LEONCAVALLO.

BY F. BONAVIA.

Ruggiero Leoncavallo, whose death occurred on August 9, was born at Naples, March 8, 1858. His life was a succession of failures and successes, of great hopes and disappointments, which made it difficult to estimate at any particular moment the actual worth of his achievements. The appreciations which have appeared after his death show this very clearly, for the great majority of obituary notices either praise him or blame him more than is perhaps just. Great praise and blame are usually the portion of the pioneer, and Leoncavallo was certainly not that. But it cannot be denied that he had a very considerable talent, and that he showed at times a much finer grasp of the technique of composition than any other composer of his group. 'Pagliacci' is still the best thing the Italian 'realist' school has produced. It has none of the glaring faults of its only rival—'Cavalleria.' As for the others, who remembers now 'Samara' or the author of 'A Basso Porto'? Leoncavallo was a musician who could have left something more enduring than 'Pagliacci' if he had not had a fatal strain of weakness in his character, a want of determination and stability of purpose, which became manifest very early in his career.

He left the conservatoire of his native city at eighteen, a pianist of considerable skill, well grounded in theory. It is the opinion of those who then knew him, that if he had persevered he might easily have made a conspicuous name as a pianist. But music no longer sufficed him, and he went to Bologna to take a course of literature at that university under Carducci. He profited by the teaching of the great poet, and turned it to good account in his libretti, which possess unusual literary merit. At Bologna he completed the score of his first opera, 'Chatterton,' and hoped for a time to earn recognition with its production. He was yet to learn that the way to success is seldom easy. In the meantime the problem of making a living was becoming urgent, and despairing of appearing before the public as a composer, Leoncavallo decided to travel and seek better fortune abroad. After wandering in many places, he reached Cairo, where at first it looked as if his luck had turned. As a pianist he found remunerative work, and he was welcomed at Court. The political situation, however, became menacing. The Egyptians were arming to resist European occupation, and Leoncavallo had to seek safety in flight, reaching Ismailia after an adventurous ride of twenty hours. Embarking on board a French ship, he sailed to Marseilles on his way to Paris, where he intended to settle. But the French capital had little to offer him. He could at first earn only a scanty livelihood by accompanying the divettes of café-chantants. Later on his skill as a pianist made him acquainted with musicians of a higher standing. He struck up a friendship with Victor Maurel and Elise Frandin, and returned to Italy with the score of a new opera, 'I Medici,' which he offered to the publisher Ricordi.

Once more success seemed within his grasp. The opera was accepted by the Italian publisher, but acceptance did not imply immediate performance, and Leoncavallo saw his high hopes wither. Bitterly disappointed he abandoned altogether the original idea of a trilogy of which 'I Medici' was to be the first part, and fired by the ideals of the 'realists' who were then coming into prominence, with Verga in literature and Mascagni in music, he set to work on 'I Pagliacci,' the plot of which was based on an incident of which he had himself been a spectator. It is not true that he composed 'Pagliacci' commissioned by Sonzogno. On the contrary, Ricordi's rival publisher, Sonzogno, was little inclined to hear the score which Maurel and Fraudin recommended so warmly, answering their inquiry with the remark that 'the bus was full up.' He gave way in the end, and Leoncavallo was called. The young composer reached Milan after a night journey, and walked about the streets in the rain until the time when he could call on Madame Frandin, who was to introduce him to Sonzogno. The result of that meeting is known. Success had come at last, and in a very short time Leoncavallo found himself famous and free from care. All Europe endorsed the verdict of the Dal Verme audience, and 'Pagliacci' became one of the most popular operas in existence.

So much interest is now taken in congregational singing, especially of hymns, that we have asked Mr. Child to defer his comments on the Psalmody Festival until our October number, wherein they will appear as the basis of an article on 'Welsh Hymn Tunes and Hymn Singing.'—[Ed., M. T.]

Was the success deserved? The answer to this question depends entirely upon the point of view of the critic. If we hold that all opera must conform to the epic standard set by Wagner, 'Pagliacci' will be found wanting in almost every respect. If, on the other hand, we refuse to be bound by any such limitation, we must admit that the judgment of the public was not a mistake. The text has the rare merit of a poignant story and rapid action, and the music has all the lyrical flow of the Italian School; but the texture is infinitely more substantial than is the case with Mascagni's or the earlier Puccini operas. The orchestration is also carefully balanced, and is free from the vulgarities which mar, for instance, the Easter Hymn in 'Cavalleria.'

The success, then, was not undeserved. But it was never repeated. Dying at sixty-one, Leoncavallo leaves not another line that can add anything to the fame he achieved with 'Pagliacci.' From the moment his name became known he appears to have worked no longer for the sake of his art but for the sake of success by means of his compositions, and the mistake was fatal. He worked constantly and passionately: he attempted operette, comic opera, and ballet. Once or twice he came within reasonable distance of the goal, sometimes he missed it altogether. He produced 'Bohème' (perhaps the best of the operas which followed 'Pagliacci') when Puccini had already scored an overwhelming success with a similar adaptation of Murger's novel, and his own work had no longer a chance of being judged without bias and dangerous comparisons. 'Roland of Berlin,' composed at the command of the Kaiser, 'Zaza,' 'Maja,' 'Mameli,' and the belated productions of 'Medici' and 'Chatterton,' were all unsuccessful. 'I Zingari,' produced in London seven years ago, was in itself a confession of failure, as it attempted to repeat, with a slightly different setting, the episodes of 'Pagliacci.' Better fortune had two operettas—'Malbruk' and 'Reginetta delle Rose.' Neither, however, succeeded, as they were meant to do, in reviving old Italian opera buffa.

The cause generally given for these failures is that Leoncavallo was dazzled by his good fortune, and that the confidence bred by success blinded his faculty of self-criticism; and this is probably true, since it is proverbially more difficult to resist the effects of good than of bad fortune. But it is also obvious that his anxiety to retrieve his failures, and his very industry, led him to squander in futile attempts a few seeds which in due time and properly nurtured might have given a better harvest. In 'Zaza,' and especially in 'Bohème,' there are pages of great promise. Those promises were never realised, and even the lyrical vein was worked until it had almost nothing more to give. Thus the once most popular composer in Europe died a bitterly disappointed man.

THE EISTEDDFOD AND THE MODERN SPIRIT.

BY ALFRED KALISCH.

A visit to a National Eisteddfod cannot fail to impress an impartial listener profoundly. The impression in my case was mixed: on the one hand there was unstinted admiration for the vast amount of musical talent hidden away in the hills and valleys of Wales, on the other regret that so much of it is, if not precisely wasted, directed into wrong channels, with the result that Wales does not take the place which is her due among the musical peoples of the world. If a bold metaphor may be allowed, Wales, instead of climbing up the slopes of Parnassus, is for ever walking round and round the bottom of the hill, and is spending in the process an amount of energy which would suffice to bring her very near the top-most pinnacle.

She could take her place among the creative musical races without sacrificing one tittle of those peculiar musical qualities which are justly her pride. She could become international without ceasing to be national.

In the programme drawn up for the National Eisteddfod for next year it is easy to recognise an admirable effort to bring Wales into line with the musical movements in the world beyond the Welsh border, and the hopes of the promoters that the Festival of 1920 will mark an epoch in Welsh music is based on solid grounds. There is a way, a comparatively simple way, in which this foundation can be broadened and strengthened.

The Eisteddfod claims, and rightly claims, to be the People's University of Wales, and among its chief instruments of musical enlightenment are the awards delivered by the adjudicators. Much that was said in the first week of August from the platform at Corwen was of considerable and lasting value, but while listening one felt that a great deal of the good advice given to conductors and competitors ought to have been unnecessary. I felt—as I have felt at many competitions—that if all this good guidance as to interpretation, as to the importance to be attached to the spirit in preference to the letter of the music, had been given before the study of the music was begun instead of after many hours had been more or less misspent in practising it in the wrong way, the audiences would have heard finer performances and the performers would have had a better reward for their labour.

A concrete example will serve to point the moral. No one who was present can doubt that the award of the prize to the Ammanford Choir for its fine rendering of a Bach chorus was absolutely right—not because the choir had a finer quality or a surer technique than its rivals, but because the conductor had learned some of the secrets of Bach interpretation in a good school. He had heard in the days of Richter in Manchester that Bach is the most human of composers as well as the most classical, and how to express both elements in performance. The lack of just this training of the conductors made itself felt in some of the other performances. The conductors know it now, no doubt, but how much better it would have been had they known it months ago!

As next year's Eisteddfod is likely to be of such great importance to the progress of art in Wales, it would seem worth while to try to seek a remedy, and it does not seem hard to find. Could not some systematic effort be made to instruct conductors, competitors, audiences, and (with all due respect be it said) some of the adjudicators in the true method of interpretation and the real musical significance of the more important test-pieces now, before the study of them is begun? It is a work which would probably not be unprofitable to those that undertake it. If two or three musicians of eminence who could speak with authority were to write a booklet on the subject, it would certainly have a ready sale. A few lectures in some of the principal centres of North and South Wales would draw large audiences, and would certainly be discussed fully in the Welsh Press. The eyes of Wales would be opened to certain aspects of the art to which at present she seems almost blind.

She would not, with a widened outlook, love her beautiful folk-songs less, nor cease to sing her hymns in a way unapproached by any other country and which brings tears to the eyes of the most blasé listener.

AN ANCIENT SONG.

By C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS.

I have been shown a photograph of the MS. of a song by Renaus de Hoilande, found in the Record Office. The music is written on a four-line stave, having the C clef on the top line. The notes are the square longa and the diamond brevis: though hastily formed, they are perfectly legible. There are several evident mistakes, and in one place the scribe seems to have become confused, for he has scratched out a note necessary to the rhythm and inserted in its place what should have been the succeeding note. Under a magnifying glass the remnant of the note that has been erased is visible, and I have restored it in the transcription.

The compass of the melody embraces the octave from middle C downwards. Tritonic melodic passages frequently occur: this is also the case in the contemporary melody, 'Samson dux fortissime,' published in photographic facsimile by the Plainsong Society ('Early English Harmony,' vol. i., plate 12).

The majority of cadences consist of the formula G, F, A. The constant return to this formula, combined with the wavering of the tonality between the keys of C and F, gives a kind of pathos which can be enhanced by the addition of simple harmony. Whether the composition was a 'dance-song' I cannot say.

Some years ago I was asked to teach the Solesmes form of plainsong to a body of priests in South Italy. I found that in singing from the ancient books behind their High Altar they invariably sang an unwritten B flat when a tritonic melodic passage occurred. They could not explain why, but said that 'to sing B natural in such places was contrary to nature.'

Our present composer evidently had in his mind singers who would thus alter his work: for in his last phrase he inserts a quadratum (our natural) in the descending notes C, B, A, G, F. In this pentachord the feeling of the key of F with the B flat must have been strong even in those days, more especially so with the cadences used here. But the scribe, in his haste, forgot to allow room for the quadratum in its proper place, and inserted it where he could, which happened to be before the C. There can be no doubt as to the intention of this misplaced sign.

With regard to the time-value of the individual notes, in 'Sumer is icumen in' and in 'Samson dux fortissime' the longæ and breves are arranged alternately throughout, except in the 'pes' which accompanies the canon, where the longs are three-time by position. Their values are therefore left in no doubt.

In the Hoilande song, taking the cadences as the starting-point for each phrase and working backwards, correcting evident mistakes of the scribe, we find the longæ practically equal to two breves throughout. This was their original value before the mensuralists complicated the matter by the introduction of a threefold value. Thus 'Longa autem apud priores organistas duo tentum habuit tempora sic [sic?] in metris' (Walter Odington, Monk of Evesham, circa 1220); 'Longa simplex continet duo tempora' (Coussemaker, Anonymus 4); 'Recta longa appellatur illa quæ continet duas breves rectas tantum' (Johannes de Garlandia).

Syncopations occur in this song, as also in 'Samson dux fortissime.' They are indicated by two notes of the same name placed very close together, as in the strophicus of Plainsong.

The rests or lengthening of the final notes, necessary to complete the rhythms, are not shown in the notation, but must be taken for granted from the verbal punctuation. The rhythmical sense was as strong in those days as in ours: probably even stronger. The first section of the song consists of a pair of four-bar phrases repeated. The second has an intermingling of three- and four-bar phrases, having a distinct artistic design worthy of the most modern composers. No doubt this is influenced by the metrical form; if so, it shows that the poets were fully alive to the charm of metrical variety. The phrase-construction is most interesting and attractive, and the melody strikes me as possessing peculiar beauty.

RENAUS DE HOILANDE.

[Transcription.]

Si tost canus autant a bien amer
Prant garde amours si doit merchi avoir
Qui se garde por a celi donner
Qui servi l'a si qu'il doit parior;
Por cou ai jou tel voloir
Que ie ne voel mie
Que madame enst m'amie
Este lors que je le ve
Pour autre tour s'estre pooit eusi.
Gar on peut bien a le fois trop haster
Et se doit bien cascuns amans savoir
C'amours ne veut nus des siens oublier
Mais selonc chou que cascuns a despoir
A amours d'aidier pooir
Et se fâlt ele partie
Quant ele entant canus prie.
Conciens que bien a servi
Amours le fait nommer de dame ami.
En cou me doi ades reconforter
Car nus ne peut parfaitement voloir
S'il ne li plaist autant a endurer
Cou dont amours fait les siens endoloir,
Con de merchi recevoir
Car puis camours le maistrise
Pour sen profit le castie,
Et pour bien savoir ensi
D'amours vauroit pour rieurs metre en oubli.
Ceste raison me fait si lie porter
Cou dont amours fait les siens esmouroir,
Qu'il m'est avis seulement dou penser
C'a paines mieus doit fuis amis voloir.
Et quant celi puis veoir
Vers qui mes cuers s'umelie
Il convient tautost qu'il rie
Amis qu'il se taingne a gari
Car je ne vis fors d'amours et de li.
Oame por tous mies cuers dotriner
Sage de droiste onnestee concevoir
Je ne vous os de moi merchi rouver
Mais s'en si est qu'en face mon devoir,
Moi voele ramentevoir
Amours par sa cortoiseie
Tant qu'en vois pites vourie
Soit par amours que jem pri
Si qu'ele soit avec amours pour mi.
Loes que ma caucons vie
Ert a ce pui envoie
Sera madame per qui
Amours me tient (amours) amoureux et joli.

[illegible]

RENAUS DE HOILANDE.

Si tost ca - nus au - tant a bien a - mer Prant gar - de a -
- mours si doit mer - chi av - oir Qui . . se gar - de por a ce -
- li don - - ner Qui ser - vi l'a si qu' il doit par - ior ;
or, (?)
Por cou ai jou tel vo - - loir Qe ie ne vo - el mi - e Que ma - dam - - e enst m' ami - - e Es - te lors que . . .
je le ve Pour au - tre . . tour s'es - tre poo - it eu - si.

* The B is evidently a mistake for A. † The note C has been erased in the MS. and the next note A substituted, leaving a note (and apparently a syllable also) short in the phrase. ‡ The scribe appears to have forgotten to leave room for the natural in its proper place before B and to have inserted it where he could.

SOME MUSICAL ADVERTISEMENTS.

BY C. EDGAR THOMAS.

The story of early advertising constitutes a singularly interesting chapter in the history of commercial enterprise, the fascination of which is due in great part to the peculiar and unaccountable dearth of literature concerning the subject.

Modern developments in advertising—especially those of the past twenty years—have completely revolutionized the art, so that the quaintly phrased and invariably witty advertisements that adorned the news sheets of the 17th and 18th centuries, with their frankly personal note, have now entirely disappeared from our ken. Indeed, on perusing a number of these primitive writings, one cannot fail to marvel that they influenced the business they did, while it is clear that the majority of them were 'puffs' of no ordinary magnitude.

The following examples of early advertisements relating to the musical profession are well worth preserving, for apart from their diverting qualities they incidentally give information that renders them doubly interesting and valuable.

The first specimen under notice marks an interesting epoch in the history of the drama, inasmuch as it heralded the first appearance of David Garrick as a London actor. Curiously enough, however, this playbill commemorating the event does not mention his name. Neither does it contain the name of the author of the play, who, if Shakespeare, must have been considerably improved (?) and amended. In this connection also, it should be remembered that about the middle of the 18th century the monopoly of the patent theatres was such that plays performed elsewhere had to be advertised and regarded solely as interludes to a musical entertainment. The bill in question read as follows :

October 10, 1741.

GOODMAN'S FIELDS.

At the late theatre in Goodman's Fields, this Day will be performed a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music, divided into two parts. Tickets at Three, Two and One Shilling.

N.B.—Between the two parts will be presented an Historical Play, called the Life and Death of

KING RICHARD THE THIRD, containing the Distresses of King Henry VI.

The Artful Acquisition of the Crown by

King Richard,

The Murder of the young King Edward V. and his Brother in the Tower,

The Landing of the Earl of Richmond,

And the Death of King Richard in the memorable Battle of Bosworth Field, being the last that was fought between the Houses of York and Lancaster.

With many other true historical passages.

The part of King Richard by a Gentleman

And the part of Lady Anne by Mrs. Giffard,

With entertainment of Dancing

By Mons. Fromet, Madame Duvall, and the two Masters and Miss Granier.

To which will be added a Ballad Opera in One Act, called

THE VIRGIN UNMASK'D.

The Concert will begin exactly at Six o'clock.

In the year 1700 was issued an advertisement that must be considered the first printed announcement relating to a play-house. It appeared in the columns of the Flying Post for July 4, and as a curiosity is worth preserving :

At the request and for the Entertainment of several persons of quality at the New Theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, to-morrow, being Friday the 5th of this instant, July, will be enacted 'The Comical History of Don Quixote,' both parts made into one by the author. With a new entry by the little boy, being his last time of dancing before he goes to France: Also Mrs. Elford's new entry, never performed but once and Miss Evans's jig and Irish dance: with several new comical dances, composed and performed by Monsieur L'sac and others. Together with a new Pastoral Dialogue, by Mr. George and Mrs. Haynes, and a variety of other singing. It being for the benefit of a gentlemen in great distress, and for the relief of his wife and three children.

Previous to this, however—in the reign of William III.—one John Houghton, F.R.S., who combined the business of apothecary with that of a dealer in 'Tea, Coffee, and Chocolate,' commenced an advertising paper which he called A Collection for the Improvement of Husbandry and Trade. In those old days the editor of the paper and the advertiser frequently spoke in the first person singular, while the advertiser also often spoke through the editor. The issues of this curious publication contained many advertisements regarding the musical profession, of which a few specimens taken at random will serve to give a tolerably good idea of the style then prevalent :

I want a Negro man that is a good house carpenter and a good singer.

If any young man that plays well on the violin and writes a good hand desires a clerkship, I can help him to £20 a year.

I want a complete young man, that will wear livery, to wait on a very valuable gentleman, but he must know how to play on a violin or flute.

I want a genteel footman that can play on the violin to wait on a person of honour.

If I can meet with a sober man that has a counter-tenor voice, I can help him to a place worth £30 the year or more.

The London Gazette for 1670 onwards published many quaint advertisements of concerts given under the direction of John Banister, and these must on no account be overlooked :

These are to give notice, that at Mr. John Banister's house (now called the Musick-School) over against the George tavern in White Fryers, this present Monday, will be Musick performed by excellent Masters, beginning precisely at 4 of the clock in the afternoon, and every afternoon for the future, precisely at the same hour.

On Thursday next, the 14th instant, at the Academy in Little Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, will begin the first part of the parley of Instruments, composed by Mr. John Banister, and perform'd by eminent Masters at 6 o'clock, and to continue nightly as shall by bill or otherwise be notifi'd. The tickets are to be delivered from one of the clock till five every day, and not after.

On Thursday next the 22nd instant of November, at the Musick-school in Essex buildings, over against St. Clement's Church in the Strand, will be continued a consort of vocal and instrumental musick, beginning at 5 of the clock every evening.

John Banister gained some fame as a performer on the violin, and eventually succeeded the celebrated Baltzar as leader of Charles II.'s band in 1663. Of humble origin, he is said to have been sent to France for improvement, by order of the 'Merry Monarch,' and eventually to have been dismissed from the royal service for saying that the English violin players were superior to the French. Pepys in his Diary, under date February 20, 1666-67, says: 'They talked how the King's Viallin, Bannister, is mad; that the King hath a Frenchman come to be chief of some part of the King's Musique.' This Frenchman who received the Royal appointment was none other than the impudent pretender Louis Grabu, the composer of the music to Dryden's 'Albion and Albanus.' Banister was buried in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey.

(Continued on page 485.)

MADRIGAL FOR FIVE VOICES

BY

ORLANDO GIBBONS, 1612.

Transcribed by H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

♩ = about 72.

SOPRANO. p Ah! . . . dear heart, . . .

1st ALTO. p Ah! . . . dear heart, . . . why do you rise, why

2nd ALTO. p Ah! dear heart, why do . . . you rise, dear

TENOR. p Ah! dear heart, why do you rise, dear

BASS.

PIANO. (For practice only.) p

cres.

. . . why do you rise? The light that shines comes from . . . your eyes, your

cres.

do . . . you rise, do you rise? The light that shines comes from your eyes, the heart, why do you rise, you rise?

cres.

heart, why do you rise? The light that shines comes from . . .

mp cres.

The light that shines comes from your

cres.

mp

Between the asterisks the 2nd Alto and Tenor parts have been interchanged.

eyes, the light that shines comes from your eyes, from your eyes ; light that shines comes from . . your eyes, the light that shines comes from your eyes, comes

The light that . . shines comes from your eyes, your eyes, the light that shines comes from your

. . your eyes, the light that eyes, the light that shines comes from your eyes, comes from your f cres. dim. f dim.

The day breaks not, it is my heart, To think . . that you and from your eyes ; The day breaks not, it is . . my heart, my . .

eyes, . . your eyes, from . . your eyes ; The day . . breaks not, it is my shines comes from your eyes ; The day breaks not, it is . .

eyes, your eyes ; The day breaks not, it is my heart, To think . . . that you and f  f  f dim.

rall.

I must part, to think that heart, To think .. that you heart, To think.. that you and I must part,.. that you ..

my heart, To think .. that you and I must part, that

I must part, to think that you and I .. must part, to think that rall.

p a tempo.

you and I must part. Oh! stay, or else my joys will and I must part. Oh!

a tempo.

and.. I must part. Oh! stay, .. or else my joys will die,

p a tempo.

you and I .. must part. Oh! stay, or else my joys will

a tempo.

you and I must part. Oh! stay, or

p a tempo.

die And per - - ish in their in - fan - cy,
 stay, or else . . . my joys will . . . die,
 . . . or else my joys will die, And per - ish in die, And per - ish in their . . . in - fan - cy, Oh! stay, . . . or else my else my joys will die, And per - ish in their in - fan - cy, and per - ish in . . .
 and per - - ish in their in - fan - cy.
 And per - - ish in their in - fan - cy.
 their in - - fan - cy, and per - ish in . . . their in - fan - cy.
 joys will die, And per - - - ish in their in - - fan - cy.
 their in - fan - cy, and per - ish in their in - fan - cy.

mf dim. e rall. pp
mf dim. e rall. pp
mf dim. e rall. pp
mf dim. e rall. pp
mf dim. e rall. pp

(Continued from page 480.)

Leaving aside the purely artistic musical advertisements, there are others, chiefly connected with the musical instrument trade, that must be noted. The fashion of advertising poetically has for long fallen into disuse, but at one time it was quite a general practice and by no means uncommon for the poetical powers of the more ambitious advertiser to be taxed almost to breaking point—and sometimes beyond it!

About the middle of the last century the firm of Gray & Davison, organ-builders, of 9, New Road, Fitzroy Square, proclaimed their merits by the following interesting advertisement:

But, oh, what art can teach,
What human voice can reach
The sacred organ's praise!
Notes inspiring holy love,
Notes that wing their heavenly ways
To meet the choirs above.—John Dryden.

The brightest laurels that the poet won
Was when he sang of Gray and Davison.
The gorgeous hall, far opening to the view,
Unrival'd shows the rest of London through;
Still, story above story, on we glide,
And see new wonders rise on every side;
In pillar'd pomp the emporium stands on high
And vaulted roof aspiring to the sky.
Far o'er the World their organ notes ascend,
And fill the Imperial Isles from end to end;
They sing the morning's birth on Ganges shore,
And join in evening lands Niagara's roar.
They like an orb careering through the sky,
Light to surrounding satellites supply.
We heard of old their organ anthems flow,
By thy beloved shores, Ontario,
Till o'er Toronto sky—involving flames
Wrapt half the city and Cathedral of St. James.
Still o'er that land their organ notes arise,
And charm therewith the first of colonies.
Abbeys and churches, halls of every grade
Resound with organs that this firm hath made;
St. George's, Windsor—ay, the loved abodes
Of Brunswick line and our terrestrial gods.
In the north gallery of the transept stands
That greatest wonder of surrounding lands,
Whose deep-toned anthems rising swell amain
As if the spheres combined rang through the ethereal plain.

The Council medal, in that eventful day
They bore from all the myriads of the world away.
Long, great, and mighty men of enterprise
Be ye the glory of our English skies;
In every clime your organs find a place
And every magic superstructure grace;
Their anthems pour harmonious and divine,
Long as the spheres sing out or planets shine.

Similarly, Messrs. Clinton & Company sought the same medium for the purposes of advertising their Equisonant Flute and their improved Cylinder Flute with 'graduated holes,' the writer dropping into prose half-way, with ludicrous effect:

Other than Theban harp and Lydian lute,
I sound to hail the sultan of the flute.
Now other firms perchance are growing old,
Or else no star of science they behold;
For we know th' palm our Clinton did salute,
Him only for improvements in the Flute.
His name shall now across the ocean ring,
And I will orders back to England bring.
In '62 all nations have confessed
That Clinton's flutes were decidedly th' best.
The new patent's known even to the poles,
Granted t' em exclusively for graduated holes!

(Upon the Cylindrical Flute; removes former objections to that system; renders the tone and tune superior to any other cylindrical flute.)

You may rely on all your orders sent,
For he's professor of the instrument,
Over whatever continent and sea,
Will be fulfilled, his name's a guarantee,
As if entranced competitors were mute,
When our Clinton thro' science improved th' flute.
The hope of centuries and our age's want
Are realised and supplied through the Equisonant.
Thus far the muse doth this late tribute pay
To the transcending genius of our day.
Let after ages note how brightly rose her
Fame thro' the illustrious composer.
Competition with my hero! What would follow?
The fate of Marsyas challenging Apollo.

A former visitor to the premises of Messrs. Rüst & Company has borne testimony to the excellence of their 'patent pianos' in no uncertain measure, and we can only hope that the firm suitably rewarded his extravagant poetical flights!

I listened to weird notes that seemed to flow
In fountain streams thro' our great Rüst & Co.,
'Twas like the morning music of Creation's day,
And, 'midst enchanted aisles rolling far away,
In distance thrill'd and seemed to live for aye,
And those pianofortes earth's myriads charm,
Thro' internal mechanism and outward form;
Our Rüst doth, too, on progress e'er intent
Increase the volume of the instrument.
New upright grand! I thought celestial courts
Transformed, existed in pianofortes.
The telescope-front-desk as to me shown
Hath added greatly to his high renown.
In their advantages whole worlds rejoice
For now may freely spread the singer's voice
Rüst the greatest increase of power doth win
Upon the principle of the violin,
Which I will well to myriads explain
In other lands beyond the western main.
Of high knowledge the bard is in possession,
Our Mr. Rüst belongs to the profession;
Hence he knows whatever may be required
More than by the mere mechanic can be acquired.
Rüst, too, is the philosopher of science,
In whom melodious arts have all affiance.
The Royal Patent Tubular stands alone,
Mark! for a grand, yet liquid pure tone,
Like singing rays from the Omnific throne.
I listen, and I roam through fairy bowers,
My soul on lyre-like wings, sublimely towers,
Here legions do from ev'ry realm resort,
For Rüst hath them for sale and for export!
And him anon the enraptured muses greet
At No. 34, Great Marlborough Street.

An interesting little advertising medium entitled The Londoniad was in circulation during the 'fifties and 'sixties of last century, and from one of the issues of this publication we extract the following poetical appreciation of the 'Orchestrion,' built by Messrs. Imhof & Mukle, the 'only manufacturers in London':

The most practical firm that I did meet
Was Imhof & Mukle in Oxford Street.
Among the great variety they have
Is One that doth my rapt attention crave;
Not since Amphion lived and Arion,
Was aught to equal their Orchestrion.
Self-acting instruments in ages past
Have been in vogue, but destin'd not to last;
Bearing as they did th' general impress
Of some peculiar age; but worlds confess
That our firm's works, like music of the spheres
Unfaltering anthem thro' the lapse of years.
Their great establishment did often greet
My vision passing on through Oxford Street;
And I would call the attention of my friends,
To this famed house on whom the world depends.
Thro' Germania's circles their renown
Hath soar'd too high for man to pull it down,

While all who 'tempt their fame's superior blaze,
Shine, and gladly shine, but with reflected rays.
Their Orchestrion that met our wond'ring view,
Spoke with the master's soul in '62.
Their Boxes, Overture, Drum, Snuff, Pianoforte
Transform'd my Cabinet to an Empyrean Court;
We hail their Flute instruments self-acting,
Th' lyre-winged Muse me (Loretto like) escorts,
Self-acting musical clock pianofortes,
Lo English Concertinas do appear
In another page—I may not name them here;
But they're the representatives of Nicol Frères.
In some cathedral vast or civic dome,
Their spirit wonder-works shall find a home.
The mode of action, I all arduous watched,
Th' additional time-regulator attach'd
To th' main machin'ry which th' rallentando
Obtains, and, too, the accelerando.
In furtherance of your works I will engage,
O blest enchanters of a miraculous age;
Corporation themes or songs of Zion,
Shall make the winds thro' the Orchestrion.

As a final specimen of these curious poetical appreciations, we reproduce an advertisement emanating from the establishment of Owen & Stoddart, who in 1856 occupied premises in Red Lion Square, Holborn, and patented a new type of pianoforte called 'The Emperor':

How shall the enraptured Muse the works declare
Of Owen & Stoddart, in Red Lion Square.
To Mr. William Stoddart of our firm
In whom from the period of his birth, the germ
Of high intellect rose in the world's mind,
Sufficient to make up for all mankind.
Once in Columbia he stood confest,
And still his memory illumines all the West.
Why need we wonder? His angelic art
Should elevate the soul, enlarge the heart.
His triumphs by millions I might here recount
And fill with echoes all the sacred mount.
But I must leave them at the present, for Great attention now demands 'The Emperor,'
New order of Piano—his latent
Energies he revived by the Queen's Letters Patent,
And I have listened to those glorious works by him,
As if transform'd; the wings of Seraphim
Fill'd gales of Paradise like radiant lyres
Attun'd, and suns and systems join'd th' immortal quires;
And this Piano far surpasses all
That within the Bard's cognisance did fall,
In its rare quality of tone and touch
No generation ever play'd on such.
In its construction, glory of my song!
The beautiful is combined with the strong,
Enabling it to keep in tune twice as long
As instruments called once our country's pride,
And most approved by all the world beside.
How lovely the Emperor appears,
The Bright Enchantment of our wondrous years!
Not to stand flat against a cold dead wall,
But where the artiste can be seen by all.
And oh! what holy visions round me rise,
There, like some spirit-haunted grove of Paradise,
With high hymnings fill'd; it doth seem to bloom,
(All finish'd to stand in the middle of the room);
And the tone while it doth in the centre stand,
Is astonishing—all equal to a Grand—
And so assists the voice in singing, be it known,
That any person scarce would know their own.
For this great wonder there, too, is a cause,
And answerable all by nature's laws:
By the two vibrating sounding-boards are sent,
Or lifted up the voice far o'er the instrument.
Through flying centuries fain would I prolong
Their wizard deeds in my enchanted song,
And make the old world from oblivion start,
And attune a new creation for Owen & Stoddart.

Church and Organ Music.

NEW LIGHT ON THE ORIGIN OF 'MISSA DE ANGELIS.'

BY H. V. HUGHES.

Of all the historic treasures of the Church's older music, few create wider interest than the wonderful 'Missa de Angelis.' It occupies a position unique in the liturgical songs of the Catholic Church, for it is dignified with a place in the latest editions of the official books of Rome, after but not among the other plainsong Masses of the Ordinarium Missae. The reason is musical rather than liturgical, for De Angelis is historically and musically different from the rest, being written in a mode which is identical in its intervals with our modern major tonality. Experience has shown this service to possess a marvellous vitality and popularity, extending over hundreds of years, and a beauty which needs only to be heard in order to be appreciated. In certain whole districts in Northern France as well as in countless other churches in the West of Europe,* it is the 'standing dish' at the Sunday Mass, a real common song of the people, known and loved by them for generations. Many adaptations of the music to English words have been published during the last fifty years, and the service is becoming a serious rival to the less melodious Merbecke. It holds, to some extent, a balance between the more austere 'orthodox' plainsong, and melodiousness in our modern C major sense.

Before proceeding further it may be pointed out that the service divides musically into two sections:

(1.) De Angelis proper, i.e., the Kyrie, and Gloria in Excelsis and Credo which are built up on the melodies of the Kyrie; and

(2.) The Sanctus and Agnus Dei, to which the melodies of the now extinct office of St. Nicholas have been fitted. This division has been recognised in more than one printed book of the last century, in which a different Sanctus and Agnus have been added to the Kyrie, Gloria, and Credo.

It is with the former that we are mainly concerned, for the problem of the latter part is simple, the only question being at what time the plainsong of the old St. Nicholas office was adapted to the Sanctus and Agnus Dei. Of this we have no certain knowledge, but if we hazard a guess at somewhere about 1264 we shall probably be on the right track, for it was in 1264 that Urban IV. commissioned St. Thomas of Aquinas to prepare an office for the new feast of Corpus Christi, and we find that for the Antiphon to Magnificat in the first Vespers of the feast (O quam suavis) the same melody has been used, namely, that of 'O Christi pietas,' the Antiphon to Magnificat at the second Vespers of St. Nicholas.† There is no trace in the office of St. Nicholas of the Kyrie melody of De Angelis, and there seems little doubt that the two parts are different in origin. As regards mode, they are both Lydian; but in range they are distinct. Thus we find that editions in modern notation usually place the Sanctus and Agnus in the 'seat' of the mode, i.e., with the final on F, while transposing the Kyrie, Gloria, and Credo down to the key of E flat or even D.

* The Gloria and Sanctus have even penetrated into the books of the conservative chaplains of the Mozarabic rite at Toledo—see Dom Pothier's article in Revue du Chant Grégorien, 1904-05, p. 118.

† See the facsimile of the Sarum Antiphonale, published by the Plainsong and Mediæval Music Society, plate 361, column 2. The Vatican edition suggests 11th and 12th century for the Sanctus, and 15th for the Agnus.

Recent attempts to fix the date of the Kyrie-section, or De Angelis proper, show at a glance what progress has been made in this corner of the field of plainsong research during the last twenty years. In 1903 the date was said to be '17th or 18th century'; in the following year Gastoué, in his 'Principaux chants liturgiques,' pronounced it 16th century at least; Gropellier followed in the Révue du Chant Grégorien for January, 1905, by referring the melody back to Ante thronum, an Alleluia-verse from a Franciscan Proser of the 14th century. He suggests that the composer of the Kyrie de Angelis used this melody in his work, and he traces also the Kyrie itself to an Ordinary of Bayeux vaguely dated by Chevallier as '13th to 15th century.' The same scholar notes in the Révue two months later another Franciscan MS., dated 1402, with both Kyrie and Gloria in two-part descant, named 'Kyrie Lombardi.' Gastoué, in July, 1905, notes in the same journal a Rouen MS. (Paris. B.N. lat. 904) of the end of the 14th century.

But in the British Museum (Arundel 14) is a curious MS. to which a still earlier date is to be assigned—13th to 14th century—which seems to have escaped notice hitherto. The late Prof. Wooldridge did not include it in 'Early English Harmony,' nor, as far as I know, has any other writer either on harmonized or liturgical music quoted it. And yet on folio 35 is found the Kyrie de Angelis scored for three voices, with the melody in the lowest part. The transcription of this is of such interest that it is reproduced here:

Original Clefs.

C.F.

le - y - son. Ky - rie le - y - son. Chris - et le - y - son. Ky - rie

le - y - son.

The first thing we notice about the melody as given here is that it has all the characteristics of folk-song: if anyone is sceptical about this let him sing over the phrase beginning at (a) (noting specially the unusual E at (b)), and be converted. Next we observe that the form of the melody is simpler than the received version. We should not be right in ascribing this simplification to the exigencies of the harmony; counterpoint of this period, indeed, talked much but cared little for exigencies, and we invariably find that plainsong phrases when taken for canti fermi in the 13th century preserve their melodic outline almost intact, though varying their rhythm to suit the new requirements of the composer. We may in the absence of other evidence take this form as purer and more primitive than the one in use to-day.

The manuscript contains three other Kyries of similar musical form, all of which are very strongly suggestive of folk-song; in fact the fourth begins and ends unblushingly in the key of C major. And it may or may not be worth mentioning that the body of the MS. contains Giraldus Cambrensis' 'Descriptio Hiberniae': his remarks on English part-singing in the 12th century have often been quoted from his 'Descriptio Cambriae.'

We have been accustomed to look upon De Angelis as a foreign or Continental service, and some people have even classed it in public with the Missa Regia and the other two 'conceived' plainsong Masses of Henri Dumont, which were written at the end of the 17th century. But until earlier evidence (which perhaps this article may provoke) is found on the other side of the Channel we shall be justified in claiming the Kyrie de Angelis (if not the whole service) as a product of England, owing its origin to an adaptation of English folk-song to the Liturgy.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

PROFESSOR BUCK'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

Dr. Buck, who succeeded the late Sir Hubert Parry as President of the Royal College of Organists, gave a very practical address at the presentation of diplomas on July 26. Speaking of organists' salaries, —a question very much discussed to-day—he said :

The council have been considering the matter that is in everybody's mind just now—the question of reconstruction ; and they ask me to say that they have really taken to heart the position of organists in the country at the present time. It is extremely difficult to know what to do, or to say what can be done. The organist's salary remains the same, whilst the cost of living is doubled. Even in peace time, when things were so much easier, the lot of the organist was very far from easy, and it was often difficult to make both ends meet. Now that a sovereign has gone down to ten shillings, or less, the ordinary organist more than ever is working at a mere starvation wage, and his plight is only equalled by that of the clergyman under whom he serves. Various people are taking in hand the matter of the clergy, and if any suggestions are proffered by which the lot of the organist can be made a little more reasonable, the council will not be behind hand in seeing what can be done. I think you will all agree with me that in England, more than in any other country in the world, the organist is, musically speaking, really an important person. Any of you who have travelled must have been struck with the fact that in German or French towns the organist does not hold the position he does in England. It never occurs to the people abroad that they should look to the local organist to run their orchestras and choral societies. In England, if the organist is not the man in charge of musical affairs, you want to know why, and in English country towns, especially, the organist is the repository of all the musical progress and thought that there is—the fons et origo of almost all artistic activity. Wherever we look for progress in musical things in England, we look for the standard set by the calibre of the organists inhabiting the country towns. In England, more than in any other country I know of, if the calibre of the organist is lowered—and it certainly will be if these starvation wages are going to be even nearer the hunger line—we shall not only be doing disservice to the men who do honourable work, but we shall without doubt let down the standard of good music throughout the country, and it is important from the point of view both of ourselves and of English music that that standard should be kept up.

In the long run it seems to us that the question must be settled by the congregation. We cannot believe that the average body of Church people would refuse to co-operate in a scheme by means of which the organist's salary should be augmented from a parochial fund. Most parish churches have already similar funds for other objects. The individual subscription is small, but, well organized, the financial results are surprisingly large. The congregation must be told frankly that without such aid the Church music must be cut down. They have no right to expect their organist to be satisfied with pre-war wages merely because he is almost the only working-man who has not threatened to strike.

Proceeding, Dr. Buck gave some sound common-sense advice on tactful propaganda :

I suppose all of you at some time or other in your lives have had the experience that I have had a great many times, of talking to people who want to know why you worry about what sort of music they like? They get their enjoyment out of one sort of music, and I get it out of another sort. Why, they say, should I interfere with them? Only the other day—and this is the reason it has entered my head to talk about it this morning—I was talking to a highly educated man and well-known scholar, and he said exactly the same thing to me. 'Why should you worry about what I like? I hear any amount of music at all sorts of odd times, and can enjoy it all, but you with your sophistication tell me you cannot enjoy it. Why should you rob me of my enjoyment, and give me less pleasure in life?' I think I am right in saying that this dilemma must have confronted almost everybody in this room in some form or other, at some period of their lives. Now, when a man tells you that by trying to get him to like a good thing instead of a bad thing, you are robbing him of enjoyment, there is only one answer to be made; and it has struck me as very curious, even in talking to professional musicians, how very few people know what that answer is. So I thought I would tell it once more, and put it before you. And the answer is this: In all matters of æsthetic enjoyment, as in almost every other matter in the world worth talking about, enjoyment is to be measured by quality and not by quantity. If a man comes to you with his pockets bulging with money, you do not, unless you are a very small child, conclude he is a rich man. His pocket may contain 239 pence; in which case his neighbour, with one pound-note, is much better off, for he has more capital and has it in a more convenient form. It is exactly the same with enjoyment. The man who is enjoying something rather poor all day long is not nearly so well off as the man who is enjoying something really good occasionally. If this truth is not at once admitted, you can apply it to other things. You might ask the man who puts these questions to you, which of the two he thinks is attaining the greater literary enjoyment: his servant maid, revelling every day in the reading of some blood-and-thunder novel, or some murder case in the papers, or himself, reading a Thackeray novel once a week. The uneducated person—I mean artistically uneducated, because a senior-wrangler may be quite uneducated musically-speaking—the uneducated person in any line will always tend to like the wrong thing. He will like his picture because it is gaudy in colour, or tells a pathetic story—not in the least degree because it is a fine painting. In literature and in pictures, no less than in music, education means getting to see the idea behind the presentation. By doing that you are increasing your enjoyment, and if you are helping another along the same road, you are doing him a good turn.

If you want any proofs of that I do not know any more convincing than to ask a man in any line of life in which he has acquired a standard of taste, whether he would go back to the stage he was in before he got to that standard. If you find a man who really does know what a good picture is, you will never find him willing to go back to the stage when he liked any picture that came along. If you find a man who really knows what great literature is, he would rather go without literature altogether than go back to that stage when he got his highest enjoyment out of third-rate. No man who has reached the higher platform will ever go back to the lower one, and that is convincing proof to my mind that you are doing a man a good turn by trying to raise his taste. We can all of us, in music, remember some phase of our career when we liked things which we now blush to think we did not see through. I can remember a time, I frankly admit, when I thought Wely's Offertoire in G was about the finest piece of music ever written. I used to hear it a good deal, and on hearing things of that class, I thought I was enjoying good music. But though, like many others in that phase, I got a good deal of enjoyment out of them, would I go back to that stage and like it over again? Of course I would not. I do not think anybody in this room would.

The amateur gets so many hard knocks from the professors, that the following remarks of Dr. Buck will come as a kind of salve :

... The professional in every branch of life is much too prone to underrate the amateur. There was a witty and wise man who once said that in matters of age it was not years that counted, but maturity. If you think that over you will see how true it is. You will see how it applies to the case in point. For in matters of art it is not skill, but sensitiveness, that is important. The amateur may be, and very likely is, a far more sympathetic person than the professional, who in many cases has had the edge of his sensitiveness blunted. In my own acquaintanceship I could put my hand on a dozen professional men and on a dozen amateurs, and in everything that really matters about music, in the value of an opinion about a new piece of music, in telling you what there is behind it, in anything concerning feeling, I would take the feeling of the amateurs though the average of them may not have enough technical skill to play a hymn-tune. The real difference between the professional and the amateur is a difference of technique.

Dr. Buck concluded by a further piece of sound advice which is badly needed by many propagandists outside the organ-loft:

Lastly, and in some ways this is the most important advice of all, I do warn the young enthusiast against taking away the man's pennies before he has changed them for silver or gold. There are a great many keen men in the world who think they could establish universal good taste if they could only by a stroke of the pen wipe out all the second- and third-class stuff, leaving us nothing but the first-class. That is not true. You do not make a man good by taking away his opportunity for committing evil. It is not by taking away all the bad stuff that you will make people like good stuff. You will make them like it in quite a different way. For nearly twenty years I have been trying to spread a greater love of good music among the most unpromising set of people on the earth, and that is the ordinary schoolboy. You find him at an age when he likes everything that is startling and vivid in colour and taste; you find him when he is out for adventure, and a rebel against any kind of authority. He is always finding out and learning by his own experience, and you try to get him to like a thing which must in the majority of cases seem most appallingly dull to him. Indeed, if a man told me he was going to get a set of boys to like Bach's fugues by depriving them of all music on a lower plane, I should know that that man had better be put in a lunatic asylum, because however noble his intentions, he is using the pruning-knife where I think a wiser man will take the plant—that is, the love of music—and endeavour patiently to graft on to it a finer sensibility and discrimination.

ORGAN RECITALS.

- Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Imperial March, Elgar; Andantino in G, Franck; Fugue in F minor, Adams; Scherzo in A minor, Best; Sonata No. 1, Harwood.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Recessional, Gray; Sonata No. 4, Guilmant; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Finale to the Etudes Symphoniques, Schumann.
- Mr. Henry Riding, Chigwell Church—Bell Rondo, Morandi; Serenade, Pierne. At St. Mary Abchurch (two recitals)—Alla Marcia, Holloway; Triumphal March, Purcell Mansfield. At St. Mary-the-Virgin, Aldermanbury (three recitals)—Intermezzo, Hollins; Alla Marcia and Gavotte Musette, Nunn; Finale, Faulkes.
- Mr. Herbert C. Morris, St. David's Cathedral (three recitals)—Sonatas Nos. 4 and 5, Mendelssohn; Caprice de Concert, Stuart Archer; 'The Storm,' Lemmings; Toccata in F, Bach; Aubade, Johnson; Sonata in A, Borowski; Berceuse, Lemare; Visione, Rheinberger; Postlude in D, Smart.
- Mr. F. Gandy Bradford, St. Andrew's, Exmouth—Pæan, Harwood; Prayer and Cradle Song, Guilmant; Triumphal March, Lemmings.
- Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Victory Epilogue, Griffith; Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Summer Sketches, Lemare.
- Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church (two recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; La Cathédrale Enloutie, Debussy; Fantaisie, Saint-Saëns; Concerto in F, Handel; Barcarolle from the fourth Pianoforte Concerto, Sterndale Bennett; Air from County Derry, Hamand; Coronation March, Tchaikovsky.

- Mr. Albert Orton, Walton Parish Church (two recitals)—Finale, Sonata No. 1, and Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; March and 'Des Mirlitons,' Tchaikovsky; Andante in F, Wesley; Grand Chœur in E flat, Guilmant. At Newport Parish Church, I.O.W. (two recitals)—Largo ('New World' Symphony); Festival March, Hofmann; Overture, 'Athalia': Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; March for a Church Festival, Best.
- Dr. G. J. Bennett, Lincoln Cathedral—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; First Movement from the 'Unfinished Symphony'; Transformation Scene from 'Parsifal'; Fantasia in A, Boëllmann; Ave Maria d'Arcadelt, Liszt; Triumphal March from 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' Grieg.
- Dr. Westlake Morgan, St. Paul's, Bournemouth—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; 'Cuckoo and Nightingale' Concerto; Concerto in G minor, Becker.
- Mr. Harold Helman, St. Margaret's, Ilkley (nine recitals)—Prelude on Old Northern Chimes, Luard-Selby; Pæan, Harwood; Pastorale, Scarlatti; Aria (Suite in D), Bach; Finale (Sonata No. 20), Rheinberger; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Fantasia and Fugue in F minor, Mozart; Choral No. 2, Franck; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Segert; Variations de Concert, Bonnet; Concerto in F, Handel; Marche Nuptiale, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach.
- Mr. C. E. B. Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (three recitals)—Concert Overture in C minor, Fricker; Berceuse, Dobson; Romance in D flat, Lemare; Concert Overture in C minor, Mansfield; Spasalizio, Liszt; Toccata in F, Widor.
- Mr. William Robson, Yarm Parish Church—Concert Overture in C minor, Mansfield; Sursum Corda, Ireland; Variations and Fugato on 'Bedford,' F. H. Smith; Festive March in D, Smart.
- Mr. F. G. Milford Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holborn (two recitals)—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Allegro Cantabile, Widor; Fugues in D and G minor, Bach; Overture in C, Hollins; Coronation March, 'Le Prophète.'
- Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (two recitals)—Imperial March, and Overture to the opera 'H.M.S. Pinafore,' Sullivan; Britannia Overture, Mackenzie; Coronation March, 'Le Prophète'; Heroic March, Brewer; Air and Variations from the fifth Suite, Handel; Overture in C, Mendelssohn.
- Mr. Bertram J. Orsman, The Cloisters, Letchworth—Pæan, Harwood; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Spring Song, Hollins; March on Handel's 'Lift up your heads,' Guilmant.
- Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. Thomas's, Regent Street (four recitals)—Triumphal March, Bossi; Installation March, Stanford; Scherzo in F, Guilmant; Allegro in A minor, Allegretto in C, and Moderato in F, Gade; Impromptu (Sonata in C minor), Lyon; Fantasia in E flat, Best; Preludio Romantico, Ravanello; Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Réverie and Festival March, Quef.
- Mr. S. M. Popplestone, Parish Church, Weston-super-Mare, (two recitals)—'Finlandia'; Cantilène, Wheeldon; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Grand Solemn March, Smart; Symphony in C minor, Holloway. At All Saints', Weston-super-Mare—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; 'The Curfew,' Horsman; Triumphal March, Hollins.
- Mr. H. Percy Richardson, St. Nicholas, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Sonata No. 2, Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Cortège, Debussy; Preludes on 'Rockingham' and 'Old 104th,' Parry; Berceuse and Divertissement, Vierne; Toccata in D, Maily.
- Mr. John H. Jackson, St. Matthew's, Portsmouth (two recitals)—Præambulum Festivum, Karg-Elert; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Overture to the Occasional Oratorio; Prelude, Scriabin; Berceuse, Arensky; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.
- Mr. C. H. Moody, Pershore Abbey (two recitals)—In Nomine Domini, Sea Song, MacDowell; Prelude, 'Dream of Gerontius,' Elgar; Sonata in C minor, Rheinberger; Marche Pontificale, de la Tombelle. At Ely Cathedral—Echo pour Trompette, Claudio Merulo; Canzonetta, Dietrich Buxtehude; Muzète, Jean François Dandrieu; Arabesque, Cortège, Louis Vierne; Pastorale, Enrico Bossi.

APPOINTMENTS.

- Mr. Jesse Balme, lay-clerk at Ripon Cathedral.
 Mr. F. Gandy Bradford, music master, St. Luke's Diocesan Training College, Exeter.
 Mr. Edward G. Croager, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Brondesbury.
 Mr. Paul Rochard, organist and choirmaster of Kendal Parish Church.
 Mr. C. W. Surridge, organist, Whittington College, Archway Road, N.
 Mr. P. Syvret, junr., organist and choirmaster, Royal Crescent United Methodist Church, Jersey.

Reviews.

SONGS.

Two Songs from Shakespeare: 'O Mistress mine.' 'Come away, Death.' Op. 9. By B. J. Dale.

My Life is like a Garden. By Leonard J. Walker.

Fifteen Capstan Chanteys. (School Song-Book, No. 263);
Eighteen Pulling Chanteys. (School Song-Book, No. 262);
Nine Ballads. (School Song-Book, No. 261.)
 Collected and arranged by Cecil J. Sharp.

[Novello & Co.]

The Motherland Song-Book—Vol. 2, Sea Songs. Arranged by Martin and Geoffrey Shaw; Vols. 3 and 4, Sea Songs and Chanties. Edited and arranged by W. Vaughan Williams.

[Stainer & Bell.]

Fair Daffodils. By Frank Bridge.

Mantle of Blue. By Frank Bridge.

[Winthrop Rogers.]

Mr. Dale's songs are dated 'Berlin, February, 1918,' and are among the firstfruits of the very considerable amount of music composed by British prisoners in Germany. As they were written after three and a-half years' internment, we need not be surprised to find the composer showing something of his feelings by writing music so characteristic of Elizabethan England that many passages, especially in 'O mistress mine,' sound as if they had come straight from the pen of Morley. Perhaps it was something of the same feeling that made him use his native tongue for directions—'bright,' 'slow down,' 'a little held back,' 'a shade lower,' and (best of all) 'heartly'—appropriately enough at 'Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty!' (He is even so English as to be not quite consistent, for we find espress. and dim..) Both songs are published in two keys, for high and medium voices. 'O mistress mine' is remarkable for its rhythmic freedom, bars of 2, 3, 4, and 5 crotchets occurring apparently without method. It will be found, however, that the result is delightfully flowing, and the verbal accentuation perfect. The old-world flavour is produced by a simple harmonic scheme, and especially by a characteristic use of the tonic seventh. But there is not the slightest feeling of spurious antique: the whole song is fresh and breezy, with just the right hint of sentiment behind its happy-go-lucky phrases.

'Come away, Death' has been often set, and so perfect a lyric is it that no composer ever seems to fail of at least a measure of inspiration in treating it. Mr. Dale strikes an unusually dignified note throughout. Pathos there is, but it is of a lofty type that we too rarely find in our native songs. The pianoforte part consists largely of full chords, arpeggio, with melodic passages added from time to time. The expressive character of the song is heightened by a viola obbligato, which begins with the introduction to the second verse and is an important constituent until the end. There is much polyphonic interest during this latter half. A quotation from the last page will give an idea of the great merits of this song—its breadth, melodic beauty, and nobly-expressive character:

The musical score is for the song 'Come away, Death' by B. J. Dale. It is written for voice and piano. The key signature has one sharp (F#), and the time signature is 4/4. The score is divided into two systems. The first system shows the vocal line with lyrics 'Lay me, O' and the piano accompaniment. The second system continues the vocal line with lyrics 'where Sad true lov-er nev-er' and the piano accompaniment. The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, and dynamic markings like 'cres.', 'f', 'dim.', 'pp', and 'sonor.'.

It is a delight to come across songs such as these, two of the most exquisite of English lyrics, set to music in every way worthy.

Mr. Walker's song is a good example of a type that makes a ready appeal to the average audience, without a marked descent to banality. It is well written, with a pianoforte part easy, but not deficient in interest. Perhaps the rhythmic scheme is built too much on the pattern set by the opening phrase, and the closing of lines three and four of verse one suffers from the vocal fall to the same note. Why not end line three as in the second verse?

With the passing of the sailing ship the jolly old chanteys lost their main use, but thanks to enthusiastic collectors, they have not been allowed to disappear. Mr. Sharp has given us two sets that may be relied upon to stimulate any audience. The interest is mainly in the music, the words being often doggerel. Some of the doggerel, however, is distinctly funny, having all the inconsequential excellence of the best type of nonsense. Only the stodgiest of hearers could fail to be tickled by 'The Drunken Sailor,' 'Knock a man down,' 'Poor old Reuben Ranzo,' or 'In 'Frisco Bay.' The rhythm in many cases is fascinating. Probably some of the eccentricities are due to the irregular action of the labour with which the chantey was connected. Be that as it may, the result makes one marvel more than ever at the complacency with which so many musicians are content with works in which the pattern is as regular as clockwork. Mr. Sharp has arranged the chanteys for solo voice (generally of medium compass) with a simple but telling pianoforte part.

The Ballads are of the primitive type that deal with rather gruesome doings in many verses. It seems a pity that such fine tunes as 'Lord Bateman,' and 'The Cruel Mother,' for example, could not have been provided with words that would have made them more practicable for school use. The first runs to twenty-one verses, and the second deals with a mother who kills her two children with a penknife, and is afterwards told by the juvenile spooks that they go to heaven and she to hell. Not very suitable fare for schools, surely. The set is notable, however, for a splendid ballad in 'The Low Low Lands of Holland,' and a very striking variant of Barbara Allen, here given as 'Barbara Ellen,' with most of the tune in 5-4 time.

Vol. 2 of the 'Motherland Song-Book' consists of familiar sea songs compiled and arranged chiefly with a view to outdoor use. The harmony is bold and simple, and a good send-off and confident performance are ensured by the occasional unison and the frequent doubling of the melody by the tenor.

Dr. Vaughan Williams's collections of sea chanties are specially suitable for choral use. Many are laid out for solo voice, with vocal accompaniment. The quaint harmonic possibilities are made the most of, as may be expected. The settings are not difficult; any average small choir could make a great effect with them.

The volumes contain also three fine modern songs in Stanford's 'Sailing at Dawn' and 'Farewell,' and Martin Shaw's 'Called Up.'

Of the two songs by Frank Bridge the more convincing is 'Mantle of Blue.' The setting of 'Daffodils' seems too sophisticated for old Herrick's simple lines. In 'Mantle of Blue' the touching appeal of the words is heightened by the music, a striking feature being the throbbing bass. This is one of the composer's best songs.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Twenty Short and Easy Pieces by various composers.
Set III.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Like its predecessors, this volume is well calculated to supply the needs of several types of players. The pupil who has just 'found his feet,' and is anxious for interesting work of not too exacting a nature, is catered for; the organist (deputy or regular) with limited technique and little opportunity for improving it will find here pieces well within his powers; and to the fully qualified player who wishes for a handy collection containing a number of short good works by standard writers, the book will be welcome. The composers drawn upon include A. Herbert Brewer (Melody in A), Chipp ('Ave Maria'), Percy E. Fletcher (Interlude), Alan Gray (Intermezzo), Guilmant (Postlude in F), Ireland ('Sursum Corda'), Raff (Cavatina), Rheinberger (Monologue in G), Rubinstein (Melody in F), Schumann ('Dreaming'), Selby, Tours, W. G. Wood, and John E. West ('Aspiration,' and Sketch in C minor).

Suite for Pianoforte Duet. By York Bowen.

[Stainer & Bell.]

Mr. York Bowen's Suite was the prizewinner in a competition held in May, 1918, in connection with Musical Opinion. It contains three movements, Prelude, Dance, and Nocturne. All are excellent, and it is safe to predict wide popularity for the Dance, a brilliant piece of work with the flavour of the English country dance, heightened by modern harmonic seasoning. After this rousing section, the Nocturne is somewhat of an anticlimax. Players will probably adopt the composer's suggestion, and transpose the order of the second and third movements. The Suite is only moderately difficult.

Letters to the Editor.

ORATORIO CHOIR AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

SIR,—It is proposed to form a special choir of boys and men, with the object of giving renderings in Westminster Abbey of extended sacred choral works. The choir will number about two hundred picked voices, no one receiving payment for his services, and will be accompanied (as a rule) by a full professional orchestra. It is intended that the works performed should be of all styles and periods, preference being given to those which are not very frequently to be heard, and a feature being made of unaccompanied music. The works selected for the coming season are:—before Christmas, Handel's 'Israel in Egypt'; before Easter, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion Music; after Easter, a selection of unaccompanied motets.

The help of the boys of several of the best London choirs has already been secured, through the co-operation of their choirmasters; it now remains to enlist the services of basses, tenors, and a few male altos. It is felt that there must be many who, though they are unable to undertake the responsibilities of membership of a regular Church choir, are nevertheless keenly interested in Church music, and would welcome the opportunity for taking part in renderings such as those proposed: regular members of Church choirs, too, whether professional or amateur, will, it is hoped, come forward. The essentials for membership are a good voice, accuracy in reading at sight, and an enthusiasm which will assure regularity in attendance.

The rendering of great works in the unique surroundings of the Abbey should prove extraordinarily impressive, and it is hoped that those to whom religious music makes a strong appeal will respond with offers to help as performers, or, what is no less important, will take a share in the financial support which is essential to the initial success and permanence of the effort.

Those who are willing to help in either way are invited to communicate with me at the Abbey, when full particulars will be forwarded.—Yours, &c.,

SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON
(Organist of Westminster Abbey).

PURCELL'S ANTHEMS.

SIR,—I have just read the August number of the Musical Times. I should like first to thank the writer of the article on Purcell's music for his able and timely summary of that great composer's achievements: then, if I may, to add one or two comments.

I was sorry to see the old tag of the text-books and history-books once more repeated, that 'too many of Purcell's anthems suffer from concessions to the taste of the period,' and that ritornelli 'of decidedly secular flavour' intrude. Give a dog a bad name, and the unthinking reader will do the rest. Has the writer of these remarks heard the anthems to which he alludes sung and played sympathetically, after careful rehearsal? I have rehearsed and performed in my College Chapel a good many Purcell anthems, including several of the so-called 'secular' examples, with the orchestral ritornelli in their entirety. I told my singers and players of the 'secularity' legend; they agreed with me that it was nonsense. Those who listened on each occasion, as far as I could gather by inquiry, confirmed the opinion of the performers. In further support of my contention, let me cite some information which may be new to many. A few years ago Mr. E. J. Dent showed to me several hitherto unknown Church compositions in MS. by Lully, which had been recently unearthed in Paris. I examined them carefully. They are as unlike his secular compositions, composed for the Court, as any thinking man would expect from a composer of Lully's versatility and discrimination. Humfrey and Blow presumably were influenced by Lully's Church compositions as well as by his secular work. Purcell was a pupil of both, and we acknowledge him to be the most distinguished composer whom we have produced. Yet we easily and thoughtlessly credit him with gross lack of taste, which fails to distinguish between secular and sacred. If Purcell's anthems be secular, then the word has no meaning for me.

One more grumble. Your able writer continues, "The Fairy Queen," "King Arthur," "Dido and Æneas," and "Dioclesian," . . . are hardly likely to be performed save by societies of an antiquarian or other special character.' I cannot agree. In July, 1914, we had here at Cambridge University over a hundred young people—undergraduates, women students, and others—most of them keenly interested in modern developments of art in all forms, rehearsing 'The Fairy Queen' with obvious enthusiasm, and revelling in its tunes and rhythms, its delightful freshness and humour. Further, a similar number of enthusiasts—some of them, I am glad to think, the same people as in 1914—in our rejuvenated University are going to give six performances of the same work in the Cambridge Theatre in February, 1920. I hope and believe that if those who call much of Purcell's music antiquarian will come and hear it, they will find that Purcell is still unsurpassed in invention, humour, and power of setting his native tongue to music.—Yours, &c.,

Cambridge,

CYRIL B. ROTHAM.

August 11, 1919.

['FESTE' writes :

'I am glad to hear that the ritornelli sound more in keeping than their appearance on paper suggests. Opportunities for hearing Purcell's anthems are so rare that few of us are able to apply the only satisfactory test—that of the ear. But even so, I doubt whether the best of performances can remove the other serious objection to some of these passages—their too frequent interruption of the main musical stream. In both matters, however, I do not press my theory against Dr. Rootham's practice. In regard to the dramatic works, until I see some signs to the contrary I must adhere to my opinion that they are hardly likely to be performed save by Societies of an antiquarian or other special character. The Cambridge performances surely come under the second category. I have so much faith in the attractive power of the best of these works that I hope the missionary efforts of Dr. Rootham and others will lead to their being taken up by the average choral Society. Further, I suggest that during the week in which the "Fairy Queen" is given at Cambridge, the College chapels should draw their service music as far as possible from Purcell, using the orchestral accompaniments when practicable. Those of us who come will then have a fine opportunity for hearing and comparing two sides of the composer's work.']

PURCELL'S SONATAS.

SIR,—I entirely agree with 'Feste's' remarks on the Sonatas of Purcell. I am frequently asked to suggest music of the kind for concerts in England and abroad, and the only editions of the Sonatas that can be obtained are a few odd German ones. It is high time that the best of these works appeared in a cheap and handy form.—Yours, &c.,

'PURCELLIAN.'

BRITISH MUSIC AND PATRIOTISM.

SIR,—I have been listening to the controversy over British music which has been raging of late, with great interest and sometimes with no little amusement—to the senseless rant of the self-supposed patriot who denies the great German composers because they are German; to the unthinking enthusiast who persuades himself that British music is 'the goods' because it is British.

Both types of writer fail to understand that the intelligent listener wishes to hear good music, but cares not a rap what is the nationality of the composer. It therefore behoves the British composer to make good music rather than aim at British music. Most of the controversy has been argued, on the one hand by men with 'names' in the musical world who, from the tone of their arguments, seem to have axes to grind, and, on the other hand, by critics who are suffering from mental indigestion due to a surfeit of musical food. I have been in France four and a half years, returning home in March. During that time I have been quite out of touch with music other than marching songs and the like. I now find very great changes in British music at home. I derive comfort from and feel hopeful for the future when I listen to Stanford, Delius, Bantock, and a very few others; but the vast majority of stuff I hear fills me with despair. The recipe for most of it might well be as follows: Grate some sounds until they form a hard, chaotic mixture; mix with a lot of rests and a scale or two that has been buried for some hundreds of years; stir well; add a good lyric; serve hot, with lots of froth on top.

You have only to mix the same ingredients in different proportions, give the mess a different name, and there you have a new dish to delight British musical appetite!

I find far greater sincerity and true expression of feeling in songs of the 'Tipperary' class which I heard at the Front than the stuff I hear at home, which only masquerades as good British music. Thank God for Stanford and the few others!—Yours, &c.,

ALEXANDER BAILLIE.

28, Dartmouth Row,
Blackheath, S.E.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY'S NEW CATALOGUE.

SIR,—Will you allow me the courtesy of your columns to call the attention of British composers to the catalogue which is now being compiled and which we hope to publish in October? I anticipate that it will be a bound volume of some 400 pages, and as we are anxious to make this, the general catalogue, as complete as possible, I invite those composers who have not yet been approached for lists of their compositions, to send such lists to me at once, with the names of the publishers.—Yours, &c.,

FRANK SOLMAN

19, Berners Street, W.1. (Secretary to the Information Bureau Committee, British Music Society).

THE GRAMOPHONE AS AN AID TO MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

SIR,—It has struck me that the frequent repetition of certain compositions at concerts is not due merely to the 'cussedness' of the British musical public, but to the fact that at present the only means that the listener has of becoming familiar with the masterpieces of music—of 'making them his own,' as it were—is by hearing them at concerts. I am of opinion that this intimacy is the summum bonum of music from the listener's point of view, but in any case the psychological factor cannot be ignored, more particularly by those who have the interests of British composers at heart. The policy of substituting for the present system one in which a great diversity of complex modern works are performed will inevitably tend to drive audiences back to that type of music which they can appreciate at a first hearing, the result being a degradation of musical taste which cannot but react on the standard of British composition.

The solution appears to me to lie in making the general public more familiar with the classics by improving and popularising the means of mechanical reproduction. In proportion as this object is attained, so will there be increasing opportunities at concerts for the introduction of new works, the concert-platform being thereby relieved of some part of its duties as a means of musical education, and becoming more the centre of musical progress.

As to the means of achieving this object, the gramophone seems to offer the greatest possibilities but for the fact of the limitations at present imposed by the size of records. I have recently heard reproductions of chamber music which in point of tonal fidelity were almost all that could be desired, but in which the compositions recorded were so ruthlessly mutilated, owing to lack of space, as to be hopelessly unsatisfying from a musical point of view.

Being interested in the possibilities of removing this limitation, I consulted the files of the Patent Office, and discovered that an instrument had been invented which could play any number of disc records continuously without a break, two turntables being provided, one record starting when the other came to an end. What the object of the inventor was I cannot say—there were dark references, either in that specification or in others of a kindred nature, to penny-in-the-slot machines, which seemed to hint at possibilities undreamt of by me—but if such an instrument could be taken up from the music-lover's point of view and made a commercial success, I believe that the contribution to musical knowledge (and indirectly the service to British composition) would be almost inestimable.

I should be glad if any of your readers could inform me regarding this type of gramophone, and as to whether the proposal for reproducing serious music by its means has ever been considered.—Yours, &c.,

IGNOTUS.

STRAVINSKY AND HIS CRITICS.

SIR,—Mr. Leigh Henry draws an arbitrary distinction between 'diatonic' and 'chromatic' music—as though five brand-new notes had recently been added to the scale. He might have learned, even from the 'obsolete clichés of academic theory' in which he has received so complete a training, that musicians have made use of twelve tones for quite a long while.

Stravinsky's chromaticism does not differ in kind from that of Wagner or Delius, but only in degree of remoteness from the element of key. Any terminology that can be used for analysing the harmony of Wagner can be applied just as well in the case of Stravinsky—though harmonic analysis, at no time particularly profitable, becomes more than usually futile when, as in the example quoted by Mr. Henry, the progression is evidently the result neither of systematic thinking nor of an emotional impulse, but of 'objective investigation of actual tonal values and relationships' on the pianoforte.

I feel pretty sure that the term 'enharmonic modulation,' whatever its shortcomings may be, would give most musicians a clearer idea of the procedure than the paragraph—which I will forbear again to quote—immediately preceding Mr. Henry's exposition of Stravinsky's 'modulating method.' To one who, like myself, has been familiar for some years with such masterpieces of modern music as Schönberg's five orchestral sketches and the superb string quartet of Béla Bartók, the study of Stravinsky's methods is hardly likely to present any great difficulties, nor to cause any great surprise, save that which is occasioned by the spectacle of a man turning to trivial account the resources which his predecessors and some of his contemporaries have evolved for the purposes of serious expression.

Experimentation for its own sake is of little value. In the first place, it is necessary to discover something which someone else has not already discovered—which Stravinsky has certainly not done—and in the second, to be able to turn that something to significant account. Stravinsky and his followers have too mean a conception of the purpose of art to be able to accomplish this.

'Dulce est desipere in loco'—but let us not be persuaded that the Joker is the most important card in the pack.

The propagandists of the Stravinsky cult should reflect that those who find 'Pétrouchka' an agreeable evening's entertainment will be more likely to pursue their study of the composer's music on the strength of this pleasant impression than as the result of reading articles of or about (or even towards!) the 'unprecedented,' if unphilosophical, things it is supposed to give utterance to. If these things are not apparent in the music, still less are they apparent in the propaganda.

And incidentally the disciples, whether 'literary' or illiterate, should combine together against mutual contradictions. For while Mr. Henry tells us of Stravinsky's 'keen rhythmic sense' and of the 'conciseness in structural dimensions' which imparts to every phrase, note, and chord in his work an 'acutened and carefully selected value,' another partisan, M. Florent Schmitt, in some recent comments on the stylistic similarity of Stravinsky and Lord Berners, remarks that in the music of both 'there is the same procedure of development which consists almost always of repetitions or fragments of repetitions cunningly managed and disguised, the same stunning monotony of rhythm' (!).

Where shall the truth be found? I, for one, find M. Schmitt's account the more reasonable of the two.—Yours, &c.,

MORTIMER CATTLEY.

8, Warbeck Road, W.-12,
August 4, 1919.

MUSIC IN CAPETOWN.

SIR,—In a recently published article, Dr. Walford Davies discussed the necessity for the general public hearing big orchestral works frequently, in order really to love them as they deserve. 'If I hear a Brahms Symphony,' he remarked, 'I shall probably have to wait two years before I can hear it again'—or words much to that effect. This was presumably in London! On reading this I immediately said to myself, 'He would not have to do that in Capetown,' and pondering the matter further, I felt that a description of the musical activities here would be of interest.

Capetown had been very much cut off from the world during the last half of the war. On the average, mails arrived but once a month—sometimes only once in six or eight weeks. The difficulties of obtaining music from Europe have been great. Nevertheless in the short space of five years, Capetown has become a musical centre of unusual interest.

In these days it is not given to many to start an orchestra in, musically speaking, a new country. Yet this has been done by the Municipality of Capetown, and it is gratifying to record that the whole organization has been from the beginning in the hands of a man from the Royal Academy of Music, Mr. Theo. Wendt.

Organizing, conducting, and choosing the music for such an enterprise is no light work, but it has been admirably carried out. I am most impressed, however, by the way in which Mr. Wendt has handled, and indeed created, his audience. Though it is easy to sing a conductor's praises, it is hard to say exactly how this has been done. The fact however remains that the Symphonies of Beethoven and Brahms—and one notices particular enthusiasm for all four of the latter—are here looked upon as regular fare. This in a country where six years ago symphonies had not been heard, and where no orchestra existed within many thousands of miles!

Nearly all the established symphonic works of the 19th and 20th centuries are now well-known here. At the same time one is glad to say that the continual repetition which has become the fate of certain Schubert and Tchaikovsky compositions elsewhere, has been skilfully avoided. The symphonies which have received most performances in the last two years are those of César Franck and the fourth of Glazounov. Modern works and novelties are given in plenty, and in this direction one may confidently cite Capetown as a good model, both from the point of view of the enterprise of the conductor and the enthusiasm of the audience.

The orchestra is still of modest dimensions—about forty members, many being ladies. It is hoped to increase this number shortly, particularly in the strings and brass. Weakness in these has precluded the presentation of some of the biggest modern symphonic works. Several of the players have been on active service, and the orchestra is not without its casualty list.

Concerts take place in the spacious City Hall, which will accommodate some two thousand people. Symphony concerts are given with lowered lights, a practice one would gladly see become universal. The concerts are allotted to Thursday evenings for ten months out of the twelve. Afternoon concerts, which usually include a symphony, are given twice a week during the same period. In the last two years, all the Beethoven Symphonies (excepting the Finale of the No. 9) have been heard three or four times, the 5th, 6th, 9th, and all the Brahms Symphonies four or five times.

The following is a brief summary of other symphonic works heard during the same period. Each has received two or more performances, except that marked (*), which has been played only once.

SYMPHONIES.

Tchaikovsky	4th, 5th, 6th.
Dvorák ...	3rd, 4th, 5th, and Symphonic Variations.
Scriabin ...	2nd*.
Kalinnikov	1st.
Stravinski ...	1st.
César Franck	1st, 'Pysche,' and Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra.
W. H. Bell	2nd, Symphonic Variations, 'Arcadian Suite.'
Elgar ...	Variations.
Schubert ...	7th, 8th.
Schumann ...	2nd, and Pianoforte Concerto.
Glazounov ...	4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and Violin Concerto.
Brahms ...	Violin Concerto.
Beethoven ...	Pianoforte Concertos.
Haydn ...	In D.
Mozart ...	In E♭, G, C.

In addition to symphonic works the orchestra has most standard works, and, as I have said above, plenty of novelties, in its répertoire.

For the forthcoming season most of the above are down for repetition, and there are novelties for Capetown in Symphonies by Berlioz ('Romeo and Juliet'), W. H. Bell (3rd, in F), M. Steinberg (1st, in D), and Glazounov (8th, in E♭); also in smaller works by Jongen, Duparc, D'Indy, Florent Schmitt, Sekles, and Sibelius. R. Strauss's 'Death and Transfiguration' will receive its first performance here this season.

Each season is generally arranged in conjunction with some special scheme. Last year all the Beethoven Symphonies were played in chronological order. This year there are to be fortnightly performances concurrently with Prof. W. H. Bell's University lectures on 'The Evolution of the Symphony.' These will cover ground from Haydn to César Franck, concluding with Symphonic poems by Liszt, Saint-Saëns, Franck, and Strauss, as a postlude. Plébiscite concerts are given at the conclusion of each season. On the last occasion the ninth Symphony obtained pride of place. A British Symphony (W. H. Bell's No. 2, in A) was an easy second.

This forcibly reminded one how unpardonably this composer (also a R.A.M. man) is neglected. No doubt the fact that most of his important work is still in MS. partially accounts for this. Nevertheless I cannot get away from the feeling that things would have been very different had he been a foreigner. Prof. Bell is head of the South African College of Music, where he has some six hundred pupils under his supervision, and simultaneously occupies the Chair of Music at the South African University. In spite of these arduous duties he has within the last two years turned out three large symphonic works, in addition to many songs and two sonatas for violin and pianoforte. I hope at an early date to write in detail about his Symphonic Variations and the second and third Symphonies.

A Municipal Choral Society has lately been formed which works in conjunction with the orchestra. Performances of 'The Last Post' (Stanford), 'Spirit of England' (Elgar), 'Song of Destiny' and Contralto Rhapsody (Brahms), and 'La Vita Nuova' (Wolf-Ferrari) are promised for the coming season.

All this musical activity at the Antipodes is remarkable, and to my mind not the least delightful feature is the sincere appreciation accorded to new and unfamiliar symphonic works. These, whether the composer be well known or a complete stranger, are guaranteed an unprejudiced hearing in Capetown.

M. VAN SOMEREN GODFERY.

Cape Garrison Artillery,
Drill Hall,
Capetown, South Africa.

INFORMATION WANTED.

SIR,—Will any of your readers kindly tell me by postcard where I can buy 'Lochaber na mair' as a pianoforte solo and Allister McAlpine's 'Lament' as a baritone solo?

HENRY CUNLIFFE (M.A. Oxon.)

20, Eaton Gardens,
Hove.

A MUSICAL STREET CRY.

SIR,—Perhaps this street cry, I think an old one, will be of interest to your readers:

Yours, &c.,

4, Camden Crescent, Bath. N. F. BYNG JOHNSON.
August 5, 1919.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

W. M. SHERRATT, for forty years organist of the Parish Church, Stoke-on-Trent. He was one of the leading musical personalities in North Staffordshire, where he did much to raise the level of musical life. As organist and accompanist of the North Staffordshire and District Choral Society, he helped this well-known choir to achieve its great successes. He was also organist of the King's Hall, Stoke, and of the Triennial Festival which was held in the Potteries.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, on August 1, in New York. Well-known as an operatic impresario and builder of opera houses, among which the Manhattan Opera House was the most famous. In 1911 he built the London Opera House, Kingsway, now a picture theatre.

RUGGIERO LEONCAVALLO, on August 9. A critical and biographical article appears on p. 476.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of September, 1859:

... Compositions for male voices should not be florid, and should contain but few rapid progressions, or should, at any rate, be facilitated by the use of simple progressions. ... All difficult and troublesome harmonies should be avoided; therefore, the two lowest parts should be kept apart as much as possible in divided harmony, in fifths and sixths, and also in fourths (in chords of the second or ninth), by which the harmony will be more easily perceived and comprehended.*

CRESSWELL.—The fifth annual concert of the Cresswell Choral Society was held on the 3rd of August. The programme consisted of selections from the compositions of Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Bishop, Hullah, and other eminent composers, which were performed very creditably, and gave great satisfaction to a crowded auditory. A vote of thanks was proposed to the conductor, Mr. W. H. Bliss, for his services on this occasion. After the concert, the choristers, the clergymen of the parish, and many of the neighbouring clergy and gentry, sat down to an excellent supper, presenting a spectacle of social intercourse seldom witnessed in this county.

MOZART'S TWELFTH MASS, by HENRY SMART, arranged for Pianoforte in a complete form. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

* From an article on 'Choral Part-Songs for Male Voices,' translated from the German by Sabilla Novello

MUSIC IN SOUTH AFRICA.

BY ELIZABETH OLGA RACSTER.

To the majority of people South Africa brings nothing but vague thoughts of an untamed country, inhabited by wild beasts and savages. The artist has probably thought of it with aversion, if he has thought of it at all. Consequently the assertion that South Africa has a musical centre where the conditions are akin to other musical centres must cause surprise. As one who has acted as musical critic for the past seven years on the leading morning paper in Capetown, and who has only recently arrived in England, I am able to give accurate details of music in South Africa, which may induce people in the old country to look differently upon the art of the South African colonies.

The oldest city in South Africa is Capetown. It stands beneath Table Mount, in the heart of trees, flowers, oak groves, pine woods, healthy hills, and arum-lillied vales. On the south it is washed by the warm currents of the Indian Ocean, while on the north-west are the Atlantic breezes. In this spot musical art has been growing through the years, fostered by eager amateurs, until the professional standard has been achieved.

Capetown has now a large College of Music (over four hundred pupils), a Choral Society, Chamber Music Association, and Municipal Orchestra. The town, which fifty years ago was striving to support an amateur choir and orchestra of modest proportions and negligible capacity, can now claim the most desirable musical conditions. The Orchestral and Choral Society developed so that it was possible to hold regular musical festivals. In 1906, the Corporation of Capetown undertook to finance these concerts, which were then held for the first time in the City Hall, where there is a fine auditorium seating over twelve hundred people.

That year saw the commencement of a series of choral festivals on a massive scale, where such works as Berlioz's 'Damnation de Faust,' Elgar's 'King Olaf' and 'Caractacus,' Pierné's 'Children's Crusade,' Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' were given. Quartets of solo-singers were brought over from London each season to take part in these festivals, and it became the rule for the Capetown Festival to be followed by similar festivals in Durban and Johannesburg, the soloists from England proceeding also to these other towns.

No one who has watched the course of music in any part of the world can have failed to notice the changes which orchestral concerts have wrought in the public taste. That which had happened elsewhere happened in Capetown also. The choral festivals claimed the interest of the community for about three years; then the orchestral portion of the Society severed its connection with the Choral Association and gave some orchestral concerts, with the result that a public which had formerly been content with choral music now clamoured for the delights of the Symphony. Two rival amateur orchestras vied with each other for a year or more; then they were both extinguished by a step which was taken by the Corporation of the City of Capetown.

In 1914 the City Council decided to form a Municipal Orchestra. Instrumentalists were brought out from England, and an orchestra of excellent players was assembled under an able conductor. It was a venture, but it was well worth while, for it raised Capetown music in one jump to the level of that of the big centres of the world. A comprehensive scheme of concerts was quickly organized by the musical conductor, a fine musical library was brought together, and the orchestra started upon a career which has made it famous in every part of South Africa. A preliminary tour of the Union was made, then the orchestra settled in its home, and except for two weeks' annual holiday, concerts have been given nearly every day in the week. Every Thursday there has been a Symphony concert in the City Hall, the best classical and modern works having been played on these occasions. There are some gifted pianists at the Cape, so that it has been possible to present most of the great Pianoforte Concertos; every Saturday evening a popular smoking concert, with good, light music, attracts large audiences; and during the week concerts are given by the orchestra at some of the most favoured spots in the Peninsula. On Sunday afternoons and evenings thousands flock to the orchestral concerts held on the pier. There are also dance evenings, when the pupils of the principal teacher of dancing at the Cape entertain large audiences with dance-poems accompanied by the Municipal Orchestra. I believe I am not wrong in stating that Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite has been danced only in Capetown outside of Russia.

In the matter of musical tuition South Africa was nothing but a cradle of dreams up to a few years ago. There was talent, there was the wish to learn—a combination that occasionally attracted teachers from England, who found the stress of making a livelihood by music in a big town too arduous to be agreeable. They scattered over the vast country, teaching in primitive villages, and occasionally settling in some of the towns. All beginnings are tentative, but no country I think could have suffered more from bad instruction in music than South Africa did in the past. Separated by immense distances, young students had to accept what they could get, and that charlatanism often crept in and took advantage is not to be wondered at; but the results were far-reaching and disastrous.

At last a change for the better was effected by the Superintendent-General of Education at the Cape. In conjunction with the South African Colonisation Society in London, he made it possible for teachers of music to be sent out from England to fill posts in Government Schools. This effected a great change, and it also brought about the establishment of private music-schools. Two women—one a teacher of the pianoforte, the other a teacher of singing—established the South African College of Music in Capetown. It started on a modest scale, on the system of teachers bringing their own pupils and paying a percentage of fees to the College. In 1912 a Government subsidy of about £1,000 a-year was granted the College, and a professor from the Royal Academy of Music, London, was brought over to fill the post of principal. After this it was merely a question of days and weeks.

The College grew with the speed of a prickly pear bush. When the change was made there were about half a hundred pupils. The next term there were a hundred and twenty-nine, after which the numbers increased rapidly, so that in 1914 the College had to be moved to much-needed larger premises in Capetown.

The College and the Municipal Orchestra created such a new atmosphere in the life of music in South Africa, that it is small wonder Johannesburg and Durban are also seriously thinking of establishing municipal music.

Mr. T. Wood, Mus. Bac. Oxon., has been appointed director of music at Tonbridge School in succession to Dr. H. Campbell Stewart, who proceeds to Magdalen College, Oxford.

THE MUSICIANS' GIFT TO H.M. FORCES.

TO PROVIDE MUSICAL ACTIVITIES AMONG THE MEN.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.Hon. Treasurer.—Prof. H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.Hon. Secretary.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac.Organizing Secretary.—Madame Lily Henkel.Office.—Y.M.C.A., Music Section, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.2.

	£	s.	d.
Total received	4,045	0	0
Total received since December 31, 1918	1,124	0	0
Receipts during the month July 11 to August 10, 1919	27	0	0

(a) THE MONTH'S DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. Tobias Matthey. Collection at Invitation Concert	20	10	0
Miss Esther Gilfillan. Collection at Pupils' Concert	5	5	3
Miss Agnes Fennings (5th Donation)	1	1	0
Mr. W. Bartley Robinson	0	5	0
	£27	1	3

(b) THE MONTH'S ORGAN RECITALS.

Preston. New Longton Church.—Mr. H. Lawson	£0	6	0
--	----	---	---

The receipts for this month are unfortunately smaller than ever before, while the needs are ever increasing. It is natural that summer brings with it a slackening of concert activities, but it is very desirous that those enjoying a holiday should remember their less fortunate fellow-men still on duty in Germany, in the East, in Russia and elsewhere, to whom music affords welcome recreation, as well as serious occupation for those who are taking it up as a study in leisure hours. It is hoped that not only will the autumn see renewed efforts from all music-lovers in organizing concerts to carry on the work of the Music Section, but that during the summer vacation open-air entertainments and organ recitals at seaside and country resorts may be arranged as a means of raising urgently needed money for the Musicians' Gift Fund.

A £1,000 SONG.

Wonderful is the enterprise of the Northcliffe Press. Some months ago the London Magazine offered a prize of £1,000 for a song commemorating 'Liberty.' As a result, nearly two thousand songs were sent in from all parts of the United Kingdom, and the decision was duly announced in the August issue of this Northcliffian organ. The three judges to whom the musical MSS. were submitted were: Sir Frederic Cowen, Mr. Landon Ronald, and Lieut. H. Williams, Mus. D. (Grenadier Guards), and they awarded the prize of £1,000 to Mr. Claude Arundale, of London, for his setting of 'The Flag of Liberty' to words by Fred E. Weatherly. The song has been issued, and our readers can form their own opinion of its merits, but the average musician will probably class it among the ephemeral trifles of 1919, although it is quite evident that the composer was writing down to the 'popular' level. If any reader seeks to know the personality of Mr. Claude Arundale, it is duly set forth in the August number of the London Magazine, copiously illustrated. It is permissible, however, to add that the pen-name 'Claude Arundale' disguises a really clever Irishman who is building up fame in another profession in London, one of whose forbears was the friend of Mozart and Brinsley Sheridan, and who came from the same county in Ireland that produced Oliver Goldsmith, T. P. O'Connor, and John MacCormack.

W.H.G.F.

Mrs. Mary Layton's annual students' concert took place at Fulham Town Hall on July 17, before a large audience. The programme included part-songs given by the Ladies' Choir and Mendelssohn's 'To the Sons of Art,' sung by the male-voice choir, recently strengthened by the return of demobilized pupils.

THE POSITION OF WEBER.

BY HERBERT ANTCLIFFE.

It is constantly asserted that the position of a musician is not assignable during his own lifetime because those who would assign it are too intermixed with his and their own circumstances. Judging by the fluctuating regard in which some composers who have been dead for several generations are held, it is no easy matter to place even these, unless they are of the few outstanding universal geniuses. None disputes the positions of Bach, Beethoven, Handel, Mozart, or Wagner. Many ask whether Brahms, Mendelssohn, Gluck, Spohr, and even Haydn, Schubert and Schumann are great musicians in the fullest sense of the term. Carl Maria von Weber also is variously estimated, and ranked according to the idiosyncrasies and tastes of those who have to place him.

With such a composer as Weber, one whose work possessed qualities which make it above all things attractive, it is easy to overlook or to forget what he did in the development of musical spirit and technique. We are entranced by the sheer beauty of sound in his 'Auforderung zum Tanz' and his overtures, by the brilliance and sparkle of his pianoforte music, and the poetry of every one of his ideas. Never are we repelled, scarcely ever are we awed; but always we have aroused within us a feeling of affection which few other composers induce. Scarcely has he suffered even the disparagements of the ultra-modernists or incurred the hatred of the ultra-conservatives. True it is that much of his work is forgotten, sunk in the kindly oblivion which takes away our faults and weaknesses even though it be along with some of those things that we could wish to have remembered.

Weber's influence has been none the less strong because frequently it has been unconscious and unrecognised. Conscious imitation may make little impression on the imitators, and may readily be altered. That which is unconscious becomes infused into the being, and it invariably leaves its mark, though it may not always change entirely the mode of thought and feeling. And the reason why nine out of ten of the composers of the latter part of the 19th century were deeply influenced by the music of Weber is that they found it pleasing and, without any deliberate copying, allowed themselves to be imbued with the feeling it expresses. Weber has never been a classic in name; his position as a 'great master' of the text-books has been quite a limited one. In actual practice, however, his work has moulded that of nearly all his successors. With Gluck he was the regenerator and vivifier of opera, though his reform was on more natural and less drastic lines. He was the first to find in the orchestra an inevitable means of beauty and expression, so that those who hear his orchestral works now are never conscious of weakness or experiment. Not even of Beethoven or of Wagner can this be said, but it is true of Weber, and of many who have followed his lead. It is the result of the deepening musical feeling; of the growing union between the composer and his music, whereby the latter has become the most natural expression of all human emotions and of many human thoughts. 'From Weber's time,' said the late Mr. Dannreuther, 'about 1820, a new spirit was in the air, and an increasingly rapid process of change and expansion resulted from its appearance.' And Weber was in fact as well as by chronology the leader and inaugurator of this spirit.

The technical expression of this spirit was the development of programme music, and in all the details of this Weber anticipated Liszt, Wagner, and Strauss, as well as Debussy, Bantock, and John Alden Carpenter, as effectively as did Bach himself, and much more fully and completely. The 'Concertstück' may not be a great masterpiece; but it is in no small degree remarkable how it anticipated the symphonic poems of Liszt, Saint-Saëns, Smetana, Richard Strauss, and other composers. Nor, although it went further than any of his previous works, was it in any way an isolated or premature effort. In his Pianoforte Sonata in A flat first of all, and later in the 'Auforderung,' the 'Jubel' Overture, and the Sonata in E minor, he had already prepared the way, and in each subsequent work he simply moved forward on logical lines. That it 'marks a new departure in the treatment of the pianoforte as a concert instrument,' and is full of ingenious devices both in the solo part and the orchestration is only a matter of detail. It is of greater moment that it is written in one continuous movement, though based upon Concerto form.

This is an example of one of the strongest forces of Weber as a reformer. He never for a single instant lost sight of the firm support of classical tradition. His Overtures revolutionised that form, and prepared the way for the great concert-overtures and for such works as the 'Tannhäuser' Overture. Yet they were quite as closely related to those of Beethoven and even of Mozart and of their minor contemporaries.

Like all those who have created art-work which has demanded the attention of the world at large, his most important creations were of a national or racial character. Moreover, the nation to whose art he contributed and which in some degree he reformed was the only one in which he was really in sympathy. In spite of his friendship with foreigners, and particularly with Englishmen, he was a German of the Germans. Not, it should be noted, of the distorted Germanism of to-day, but of the best qualities of that race which produced the great musicians and the great writers as well as the finest housewives in the world.

His reforms arose from his essentially home-loving nature, not from any experience of other nations or any desire to take advantage of their better qualities or conditions. 'Oberon' was a German opera just as much as 'Der Freischütz,' though it was composed to English words and delighted the English people as much as the other had excited the Germans. In inaugurating or reinstating German opera he did for national opera in general what he could not have done had he been more cosmopolitan in education or sympathies. For he proved what no cosmopolitan could have done, that though it defies definition there is such a thing as nationality, and that it is a thing which finds expression in the higher forms of art. His principle that 'strict truth is the first and foremost requisite of vocal music,' and that 'any vocal music that alters or effaces the poet's meaning and intention is a failure,' sounds elementary now. It was by no means commonly recognised in his day, and even to-day many composers fail to put it into practice.

The music of Weber which suffers from modern disparagement more than any other is the bulk of what he wrote for the pianoforte. Apart from the pieces already mentioned, that is, those with a programmatic intention, his pianoforte music is frequently regarded as consisting of mere tonal glitter. There is some foundation for this idea, though it is somewhat exaggerated in its statement. Through the works of Chopin and his successors and imitators we have got into the way of expecting virtuoso music of any kind to be so labelled, and also to be given some other nominal object. Generally we demand that a 'study' shall be something more than a study in technic arranged in a manner to give musical satisfaction. It must be a study in emotion as well as in aesthetics. Weber, however, came before this method, and he adapted the methods of his own day to his own purposes. Consequently he wrote formal works which aimed chiefly at brilliance; and he achieved that—and at times something more. Pianists of to-day find his music not without its uses, and it does not altogether lack attraction to those who listen. When this is said, however, there is little more to add. What he did in this way was to help in making possible the brilliant technic of the 20th century. And he did it in a way that, except in rare instances, is always musical.

With these considerations Weber claims a place of his own, which, if it is not in the foremost rank of genius, is at least in its close vicinity.

BELLS.

By W. W. STARMER.

THE CATTISTOCK BELLS.

On Thursday, July 31, M. Josef Denyn gave his annual recital on the Cattistock Carillon. There was a very good audience, and the weather conditions were better than for some years past. A beautiful day—with ideal atmospheric conditions—added much to the enjoyment of a most interesting programme. Although the Carillon has a limited compass (three octaves) of small bells, with certain defects as to accuracy of tune, it is gratifying that M. Denyn has been induced to come over annually for nearly a quarter of a century and give these recitals, which have ever been greatly appreciated by all lovers of bell music.

The Rev. R. P. Stickland, Rector of Cattistock, faithfully carries on the project initiated by the Rev. H. Keith Barnes—the donor of the bells and the beautiful tower in which they are placed, together with a sum of money the interest on which up to the present has been sufficient to provide for the proper upkeep of bells and chimes. Now, however, with the increased cost of everything, something must be done to help this fund if these annual recitals are to be continued and the chime tunes changed each year. There should be no difficulty about this, and if the exact needs are properly made known surely there ought to be no lack of support for such a worthy object. Cattistock is the only place where the chimes play tunes on the Continental plan, i.e., melodies harmonized in three or four parts, and not melodies only as with us.

M. Denyn began his recital with a brilliant extemporisation on Mr. W. W. Starmer's Preludium specially written for the Peace celebrations at Malines, and played there for the first time on June 30. The Flemish songs were all charmingly treated, but the third item, by Miry, was exceptionally good. Pleyel's Rondo gave ample opportunity for executive display and artistic effect, while the most expressive number was undoubtedly Chaminade's 'Viens mon bien aimé.' The programme was as follows:

1. Extemporisation on Preludium for Carillon
W. Wooding Starmer
2. Flemish Songs—
 - (a) 'De Liefde op t'ys' Houben
 - (b) 'Roeland' Houben
 - (c) 'Al Zingend 't vry lied' Miry
 - (d) 'De Zwarte Leeuw' De Laet
3. Rondo from Second Sonatina Pleyel
4. Popular English Melodies.
5. Viens mon bien aimé Chaminade
6. National Anthems of the Allies.

TUNES ON BELLS.

One of the popular English melodies played by M. Denyn at Cattistock was 'Tipperary.' With skilful treatment by such a virtuoso it was exceedingly effective—and this on the bells of Cattistock Church! The Vicar of Wellingborough, the Rev. R. Smeaton, recently refused to allow 'Tipperary' to be played on the bells of the parish church. Said he, 'If "Tipperary," why not the "Fox Trot" or "Tommy, make room for your Uncle"?' The analogy is by no means an apt one, and in these columns we have nothing to do with his reasons or prerogative. 'Tipperary' should not be attempted on the Wellingborough bells, because it cannot be played upon them without gross mutilation. The mutilation of any tune, and particularly of well-known melodies, is much to be deprecated. No tune should be attempted on a smaller number of bells than the exact notes require. In this respect probably our National Anthem has been most sinned against. Words fail to describe such caricatures as the following:

DORSET.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

LINCOLNSHIRE.

and yet these have been tolerated and listened to year in and year out without a word of protest!

ROYAL OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

CLOSE OF THE SEASON.

A good climax was worked up before the Royal Opera Season of 1919—post-bellum and generally notable—came to an end at the unusually late date of August 2. The season improved as it went along—in other words, the foreign standard reasserted itself in a more decided manner at the later stages than was the case at the commencement. At the last performance of all—a gorgeous representation of Verdi's 'Aida'—one felt that the old standard had been reached once more. It is important that this standard should be represented. It is a help to us in building up our operatic reputation. That reputation is growing. For one thing the season—that is the Royal Opera summer season—has this year witnessed what it has never witnessed before, namely, the production of an English opera sung to English words by English singers.

This is what happened when Mr. Isidore de Lara's 'Nail' was produced on July 18. Whether it was the most representative work and whether the singers were the best the country could bring forward need not be discussed in this connection. The fact remains that at last native art—or a phase of it—has been represented in an undertaking so far devoted to foreign effort. The ice has been broken, and this constitutes the achievement. It is to be feared that neither the work itself nor its exponents will be held to have broken a record. Mr. Isidore de Lara is no stranger to opera. He has written several since the far off days of 'The light of Asia' and 'Amy Robsart,' but he does not seem to have profited by the experience. One does not discover the expansion of style to be expected in a hand that has been at work for five and twenty years. His plot offers plenty of opportunity. M. Jules Bois, the author—his book has been put into good English by Mr. Edwin Evans—has chosen a picturesque setting in placing his story in Algeria. He meets all requirements of grand opera, not omitting the tragic finale in which the lovers die miserably in the desert. Nail is imperturbed by the Emir but prefers her bandit lover Hadyar. The Emir pursues her through various scenes, including that in which in order to save her lover she seems to yield. But ultimately the true hearts flee to the desert, where they are followed by the Emir. Hadyar is killed and Nail poisons herself. There are some effective scenes, including that of the Street of the Ouled Nail and the Moorish Café. It is in the latter that the composer is at his best. But the music never flows; it moves squarely. It is not lacking in emotion, and Mr. de Lara can make his climax as well as anyone else; but he seems to prefer awkward intervals, while his true nature is struggling to write flowing melody. The English singers who performed the work were Miss Rosina Buckman (Nail), Mr. F. Mullings (Hadyar), with Messrs. Percy Heming, Foster Richardson, and Walter Hyde in the smaller parts, and an excellent trio of dancers. Sir Thomas Beecham conducted.

An Act from the work was included in the gala performance which took place in the last week of the season. It was given in aid of the Officers' Families Association, and was attended by the King and Queen and large numbers of the public. A modest scheme of decoration consisting of flags to drape the Royal and Ministerial boxes only was followed, and all the receipts, which must have been considerable, were devoted to the cause. Excerpts from 'La Bohème,' with Dame Melba, and MM. Burke and Sammarco, 'Roméo et Juliette,' with Dame Melba and M. Anseau, and 'Louise,' with Madame Edvina and M. Anseau, formed the bill.

The last novelty of the season was a one-Act opera by M. Maurice Ravel. It is his first essay for the stage. In it he brings his special powers of description to bear in illustrating his story of the elderly clock-maker, his young wife, and her numerous lovers. It is essentially modern opera, and represents the latter-day interpretation of the term. But the genius of the composer permeates the whole, and makes it completely acceptable to those who are ready to forget precedent. The charm is material as well as ethereal, for there is not only the representation of the clocks and mechanical toys, but also a good deal of expressive music that very well depicts the nature of the wife with many lovers. It was delightfully played, Madame Donald distinguishing herself greatly by her presentation of the part of the wife who hides her lovers in the clock cases. MM. André Gilly, Dua, Maguenat, and Cotreuil assisted in a production that is in the nature of something operatically new, and is in itself a work of genius. Mr. Percy Pitt conducted, and the production was well received, particularly by the younger generation of opera-goers. Finally the season came to an end with a triumphal performance of 'Aida,' in which Madame Amerighi, M. Lappas, Madame Kirkby Lunn, M. Cotreuil and Signor Mugnone had their share.

FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

THE PHILHARMONIC HALL.

It is to be hoped that musicians will not be led into regarding the performances of the Southern Syncopated Orchestra as merely a rag-time concert, or as a superior kind of nigger-minstrel show. The performers are coloured, and rag-time plays a considerable part in the scheme, but there is much of genuine musical interest both in regard to material and performance. The playing of the band is admirable, and though some of the instrumental numbers are decidedly noisy, the rhythmical energy and abounding spirit save much of it from banality. The cream of the entertainment, we think, is on the vocal side. The solo-singing of Mrs. H. K. Reavis and Miss Lottie Gee is of a high order, and the male chorus and double quartet performances of religious folk-songs, such as 'I got a robe,' 'Go down, Moses,' and 'Joshua fit the Battle of Jericho' are among the most fascinating things we have heard for a long time. Further variety is imparted by quaint dialect recitations. The whole performance, including the conducting of Mr. Will Marion Cook, is refreshingly unconventional.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The twenty-fifth season opened with the usual éclat on August 16. The programme consisted of familiar items, with one novelty, Mr. Balfour Gardiner's 'The Joyful Home-coming,' conducted by the composer. The new piece expresses the soldier's joy at the prospect of demobilisation. It is not a work of great importance or originality, but its breezy character was so much to the taste of the audience that they gave it an emphatic encore. On August 19, Moussorgsky's four 'Chansons Enfantines' received their first performance in England. They were sung by Madame Anne Thursfield. Unfortunately, the singer was so overweighted by the orchestra that it is difficult to give a judgment on the works. Our impression is that they are unduly complex for their childish text.

The novelty on August 20 was an Overture, 'Prince Hal,' by David Stanley Smith, an American composer who is professor of theory at Yale. The work begins in arresting fashion, but the interest falls off owing to the disjunct character of the middle portion. A very enjoyable feature of this concert was Melsa's brilliant playing of the Mendelssohn Concerto.

The Hall has been re-upholstered and decorated during the vacation. We hope the colour-scheme will improve on acquaintance. At present it strikes us as being painfully hard and aggressive.

Scholarships at Trinity College of Music, tenable for one year, with possible renewal, have been awarded to James Walter Borders, pianoforte; Elsie Minnie Brown, singing; Eva Kiss, pianoforte; Olive McInnes, pianoforte and singing; Cyril Archibald Marks, organ; Dorothy Isabel Rice, elocution and pianoforte; Vida L. W. Slocombe, singing; Grace Dorothy Stevens, singing; Muriel Winifred Stopes, pianoforte; and Gilbert Vere Sutton, pianoforte: for three months (probationary) to Edith Jessie Maud White, violin and singing.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

Local choral Societies are taking a holiday after a very busy period of work. Plymouth Orpheus Male Choir, however, already announces the opening of its autumn season on September 24, for which date it has engaged Madame Rosina Buckman, Mr. Tom Burke, and Melsa. An Orpheus Glee Choir from Llantrissant, comprising twenty voices, gave a concert at Dartmouth on August 8. The singers' tone-quality was very expressive, as, indeed, is usual with the Welsh choirs. This was also exemplified in the singing of the Welsh Serenaders, who visited Exeter on August 17. The richness of the voices and earnestness of expression imparted by the choir created, however, a longing for more intelligence in phrasing and interpretation.

It was a matter for deep reproach that music played a very inconspicuous part in the Peace celebrations at Exeter. At Plymouth a choir of fifteen thousand voices sang on the historic Hoe under the direction of Mr. David Parkes, and in many other places throughout the two counties choirs of proportionate numbers were organized. But at Exeter, which from its great advantages of position and tradition should be a busy musical centre, there was nothing of the kind. We understand that the sub-committee for music, that included Dr. Wood, desired to assemble a choir of fifteen hundred voices for open-air demonstration, but this proposal was negated by a short-sighted general committee, and the day passed ignominiously so far as music was concerned. Certainly Mr. W. E. Cotton's Male-Voice Choir, or a portion of it, made a first appearance after re-organization, and we heartily welcome these choristers. The arrangements were, however, too informal to assume any historic significance.

The Isca Glee Singers, suspended during the war, made a re-appearance at Exmouth and Exeter on August 13, 15, 16. Their singing was characterised by the same spirit and unanimity as in former times, and when continued association has produced a more perfect blend of voices the effect will be all that can be desired.

In the process of a tour of Devon, Miss Carrie Tubb and party appeared at Torquay and Exmouth on August 12 and 13. The gifted soprano introduced some new songs by Alison Compton, A. Miller, W. Cadman (an attractive 'Time and I'), and Harold Craxton. Miss Beatrice Eveline's artistic playing was a distinct source of pleasure, and Mr. John Huntingdon and Mr. Berkeley Mason completed the party.

H.M. Grenadier Guards Band also toured Devon at the end of July, its novelties being a Marche Elegiac, 'Gheluvelt' (composed by the conductor, Capt. A. Williams, M.V.O., Mus. Doc., 'in memory of a great guardsman'), 'Esquisses Caucassiennes,' by Ippolitov-Ivanov, Edward German's Suite and 'The Tempter.' The band of H.M. Irish Guards, conducted by Lieut. Charles H. Hassell, visited Tiverton on August 14 to take part in an elaborate presentation in pageant of the history of the town as written by the Mayor, Mr. A. T. Gregory. The entr'acte pieces were well chosen, and the band gave a first performance of a March, composed by the musical director, Mr. R. Bareham, which, original both in matter and manner, was also well adapted for processional purposes.

Visiting Chudleigh Parish Church on a recent Sunday we were struck by the beautiful proportions of the fabric, which should present ideal acoustic properties. Of this, however, there was no opportunity to judge, for something like havoc was the result of the relations between choir and organist, the former being in the chancel and the latter at his instrument in the distant west gallery. With the congregation intervening, what sympathy could exist between the leaders of the music? On inquiry we were told that a sum of £300 was in hand for organ purposes, but that it had not been possible to procure permission to bring the organ to the east end or even to instal the console there. It is difficult to imagine any reason for retaining a condition of things which destroys all sense of worship and dissipates the fine effects which might be obtained from the Cathedral-like character of the Church and from the well-trained choir. A like condition of things obtains at St. Peter's, Tiverton, with the same unhappy results.

Organ recitals have been given in Black Torrington Church by Mrs. Carbonel on August 10, with Miss English as violinist; and at St. Mary's, Barnstaple (after rebuilding of the organ), by Mr. Courtney J. Williams on August 13, when the choir sang anthems.

Mr. Hugh Fowler, appointed in June last as organist at St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton, has already proved an acquisition to the musical life of the town. His first organ recital, on August 13, was on good classical lines, and consisted entirely of organ music, the only novelty being a 'Coro joyeuse' by A. Sidney Marks. Oratorio pieces, sung by Mr. S. J. Bishop with artistic understanding, maintained the high standard of the recital. Organ recitals have also been given alternately on Sundays at Holy Trinity and St. Andrew's, Exmouth, by Mr. G. Bradford and Mr. F. Morley respectively, and a month's series on Wednesdays has been given in the Wesleyan Church. At Ashreigney the rector, the Rev. J. L. S. D. Bennett, gave an organ recital on July 30, and at Lynton on the same date another was given by Mr. W. H. Northcott.

A violin recital was given at Seaton on August 7 by the Rev. E. Newland-Smith.

CORNWALL.

The choir formed for Peace celebrations at Wadebridge by Mr. H. Devey has not yet been disbanded, and has given several concerts for local and other charities.

Church choirs of St. Buryan, St. Just, and Lelant held a united Festival at St. Buryan on July 23, with choral Eucharist and Festival Evensong. Mr. F. G. Luke's Centenary Choir at Camborne was assisted at its concert on July 24 by Holman Male-Voice Quartet, and the Holman Male Choir on the same date gave a concert at Basset Road, assisted by the Treloar Orchestra. St. Ives Choral Society has not waited long for re-organization, and sang selections from 'Faust' on August 7, with an orchestra led by Mr. Dowrick.

Mr. H. C. Tonking has carried out his usual summer series of organ and violin recitals at Newquay. On August 13 he played a Romance from a Suite for violin by David Parkes, with the composer at the organ, and the two musicians at another recital played Merkel's Sonata in D minor for two performers at the organ. Early in the month a Welsh choir, the Cambria Singers, visited the Pavilion, and sang with plenty of Celtic temperament.

Wesleyans of Cury, near Helston, have decided to build a new organ in their Church as a war memorial, at a cost of £330.

Organ recitals have been given at Mousehole on July 27 by Mr. A. W. Rabyln, of Newlyn, his programme including music by Bach, Handel, and Grieg.

DUBLIN.

The regrettable impasse in the Dublin music trade still continues, and a recent attempt at settlement (August 14) proved unsuccessful. As a result, at the date of writing business has now been suspended for seven weeks in the three principal music warehouses in the Irish capital, namely, Pigott's, Cramer's, and Crane's. In particular, those who desire sheet-music, or who wish to book seats for the theatres, are seriously inconvenienced. Another attempt at settlement is shortly to be made.

An Anglo-German, Carl Gilbert von Hardebeck, has been appointed to the recently-founded chair of traditional Irish music, founded at Cork.

It cannot be said that a high standard of music was attained at the Oireachtas (somewhat similar to the Eisteddfod) held at Cork during the first week of August. The pipe-playing was not at all up to that of former years, and the poor show for the Uilleann pipes competition was not hopeful for the vitality of that beautiful instrument—which, it may be said in passing, Shakespeare refers to as 'woollen' pipes!

The only music heard in Dublin during the drought in August was the scrappy stuff of the revues. Taken all round, the music at the picture-houses is of a fairly good class, up-to-date classical items being included in most programmes.

Dr. Grattan Flood's 'John Field: Inventor of the Nocturne,' will shortly be published by the Caudle Press.

Recent visitors to St. Patrick's have been sorry to learn of the rather serious illness of the accomplished organist, Dr. Charles G. Marchant, who has so capably directed the music of the national Cathedral since 1879.

ITALY'S VOCAL TRADITION.

BY E. HERBERT CESARI.

In most quarters of the world, and particularly in English-speaking countries, the ambition of students of the vocal art is to complete their studies in Italy. While the reasons for this predilection are many, it may be cited that the most perfect examples of beautiful singing have been provided by the Italians, and indisputably the finest voices have come from Italy. These alone would be sufficient to inspire vocal students with a desire to study in the same school which produced these prodigies; but another, and perhaps more impelling reason is that the highest pinnacle attainable by a singer is to take part in Italian Grand Opera. The principal passport into the great opera houses throughout the world where Italian opera is performed is a record of operatic successes in Italy. The singer who has not achieved success in Italy has very little chance of being engaged by the impresarios of the big undertakings, although there are of course exceptions to this, as indeed there are to every other rule.

The attraction that Italy has for vocal students from all parts of the world is extraordinary. It is also very dangerous, because the average student regards Italy as a sort of magic land where vocal miracles are performed for the asking, so that it is only necessary to get there and the rapid mounting of the ladder of fame will follow as a natural consequence. Singers have generally such supreme confidence in their latent powers that it seems to them that if only they can get to Italy then the great obstacle has been overcome and the rest is easy. But no art is easy, and singing is as difficult and complicated an art as any other.

This exaggerated estimate of Italy is unfortunate because students come here with a wrong idea. Instead of coming prepared to settle down to the hardest work, they regard study as a light affair, and seem only to plan to have a good time, combining business with pleasure. Thus much disillusionment and the crumbling of dream castles can be accounted for.

Italy has always been representative of the art of singing, and will always continue as such notwithstanding the distinctly palpable decadence which the art has undergone during the last fifty years. In no other country in the world is song felt so acutely to be the quintessence pervading the very existence of the entire nation, from the highest to the lowest rank, as it is in Italy. It is predominant and all-prevalent. The mystic attraction and fascination enshrouding Italy, of which most foreigners are keenly sensible—and which is indefinable—is also felt by the Italians themselves. As with many other branches of art, song had birth in Italy. The memory of the past is the attraction of the present. Song has had its part in the formation of this fascination and subtle magnetism. Song flourished in Italy long before other countries became alive to the latent potentialities of the human voice. The Italian voice is universally recognised as being the finest for beauty of tone and flexibility. Further, the question has often been asked concerning the reason for the abundance of voices in that country. A solution may be found in the hypothesis that the intrinsic melliflence of the Italian language (to which must be added, as contributory factors, the effects of climate and temperament) is directly conducive to the development of a superior set of throat muscles which are constantly receiving from early childhood not only physical exercise but also mental excitation, such development being atavistic, and the aptitude for song instinctive in the race. This mental development might be compared with the theory advanced that racehorses and greyhounds have attained their present proportions indicative of speed and agility through the continued mental and physical endeavour of generations of these animals pitted against one another in the race. Where thought is action and action thought, the sum of well-directed continuity is growth and development. In Italy song is a national development, mental as well as physical—it is a national excrement. Spain can be said to be the rival of Italy in point of quality in voices. It is however the quantity as well as the quality of voices born in Italy which is so astounding. So many of the contadini have glorious voices, developed naturally, singing, as do the birds, out of pure joy, with absolute freedom of throat. If approached by an inquiry as to whether they would care to study for the theatre, they enjoy the 'joke,' shrug their shoulders, and say that they have no desire whatsoever to become a comico. Many of these peasants, and especially those of Southern Italy, are far from lacking the requisite intelligence and verve to follow a serious course of vocal study, but to them the idea of the theatre is preposterous and not serious. Many of the greatest singers, past and present, come from the people. Italy still gives birth to many wonderful voices; competent masters, however, are lacking.

It is a fallacy that all throats are alike in construction. Nothing is further from the truth. The difference lies not only in the greater or lesser elasticity of the vocal ligaments, but also in the major or minor mobility and responsiveness of the pharyngeal parts as an integral whole when co-operating in the formation of sounds the spontaneity of which is but the direct result of throat muscles brought to a pitch of obedient perfection.

Very little reflection is required to satisfy ourselves that among more Northern nations speech tends to become guttural, and the number of fine voices fewer. With exceptions, English, German, and Russian voices do not possess the attractive quality and thrill of Italian or Spanish voices, neither have they that same facile extension and soulfulness. The Irish are more akin to the Latin races in temperament, while approaching them also in euphony of racial speech. They have given birth to some superb voices, quite capable of holding their own abroad.

Speaking a smooth, sweet-flowing language is a continual vocal gymnastic, and is undoubtedly a distinct aid to the correct 'placing' of the singing voice. The Italian language, into which no guttural sounds have been introduced, is first for suavity, whilst it is also first for the emission of pure vocal sounds. Yet Italy is not now producing singers that could be favourably compared with those of past glories, although beautiful voices still abound. The bel canto is, however, in a deplorable state of decay.

ITALY'S VOCAL DECADENCE.

The scarcity of genuine masters is the prime cause of vocal decadence to-day, whose baneful repercussion is everywhere manifest. This pernicious decay element could be crushed by solving the question of 'methods'—so-called—of singing. The terms 'method' and 'school' as applied to the teaching of singing should be abolished, because they are misleading. Half a century ago fifty masters had but one way of teaching, based on natural emission; to-day fifty masters have fifty different 'methods' or 'schools,' each vaunting pet theories of his own, duly magnified by the masters as discoveries or innovations.

In her time Italy has yielded the finest master-singers and singer-masters. How does she stand to-day in this respect? As a matter of sober fact she can lay no claim to superabundance, whether it be in singers or masters. There is still a slight ascendancy over other countries by reason of the existence of some of the 'old guard,' who are imparting their knowledge to the younger prospective exponents of the art as conceived by them and by their precursors. Masters who have reached the very core of their art are now rare among Italians. Some have emigrated, a few only remain. There are also some good masters abroad who are not Italians. It is difficult, however, to get a grip of the bel canto idea as the old singers meant it without having first sojourned in this country, which is so very much more in touch with nature in this respect. The air would seem to exude music and song. The sweet musical language, the surroundings, tradition—all are powerful coefficients in a musical education, especially with regard to singing. The bel canto means beautiful singing, and is but the development and education of the voice along natural lines. Rather than an art, it is an artful return to nature. The frequent fault of many masters who have received accurate teaching is that they try to improve on the hard-and-fast rules handed down to them, and adduce for so doing the dogma of modern physiology on the subject, which is still unsatisfactory in its attempt to explain the mystery of vocal mechanism. Many soi-disant masters profess to teach the bel canto, about which they have not the remotest idea. The intelligent perusal of treatises is useless for the acquisition of sufficient knowledge. Nothing short of actual personal endeavour, into which meditation takes no small part, guided by suggestions and examples of an experienced bona-fide teacher, can give an insight into the bel canto.

In Italy to-day there are hundreds of masters who are devoid of all fundamental knowledge of the art of singing except for a few ideas picked up haphazard, interspersed with some stock phrases drawn from a treatise or two written by competent men. Such is their sole equipment for an enterprise abounding in intricacies. During the last decade there has been a mania—as unscrupulous as it is insensate—on the part of many pianoforte- and music-teachers generally, and even accompanists, to turn their hand to teaching singing in consideration of its lucrative possibilities. In passing, I may state that one of the most distinguished professors of music in Italy admitted having been drawn momentarily into this cajoling vortex only to retire immediately on feeling his total incompetence. The conscientious ones—the real artists—have returned to their own particular profession. The song-wolves, styling themselves professors, would seem to prosper for a time. They impose their ‘method’ on the inexperienced, trustful, and, may be, enthusiastic pupils. Often they are brilliant pianists, and hypnotise their pupils by pianistic acrobatics. Dazzled by such technique, the tyros take for granted their ability to teach singing, and do not reflect that in order to train a voice much experience on the part of a master is necessary, the only way to sing being that based on naturalness, the understanding and absorption of which entails profound personal study of the idiosyncrasy of the vocal organ, not essentially from a physiological but rather from a practical point of view. Only years of unremitting, thoughtful study can give experience, competency, and consequent mastery over one of the most difficult of arts.

My limited space does not permit development of this subject as it merits. It is so vast that a volume would be necessary to embrace the whole question satisfactorily, and appease the appetite of curious students hungering for definite, reliable information.

There is a potent force, a very great fount of power and good behind the beautiful voice of a singer. Every effort to redeem and restore to present and future generations the traditions of a glorious past would be worthy of the noble art of singing.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

BRUSSELS.

The summer holiday of the Monnaie was of a month's duration only, and on August 1 it re-opened with ‘Romeo and Juliet,’ chosen as a tribute to the memory of Gounod, whose centenary it was impossible to celebrate at Brussels last year, as the Opera House was closed. The revival of this charming opera was a marked success. It was evident that a lot of work had been done in connection with the scenery both in new effects and in re-painting the old ones. Two artists new to the Monnaie were in the cast—Madame Helbronner, a delightful soprano from the Opéra-Comique, Paris, and Mlle. Terka Lyon, who was formerly an actress at the Théâtre du Parc, Brussels. Her change to the operatic stage had been a success in Paris and naturally in Brussels she was warmly welcomed. The season at the Monnaie promises to be very interesting.

M. Anseau, fresh from his successes at Covent Garden, has returned, and goes to the Monnaie in October.

On the occasion of the recent visit of President Poincaré several decorations were handed to musicians, notably E. Ysaie, Kufferath, director, and Strong, conductor of the orchestra of the Monnaie. At the recent examinations at the Conservatoire, Brussels, a boy of ten gained the ‘1er prix’ with honours in advanced theory of music.

The death is recorded here of F. Renard, the violinist, at the age of seventy-one. His latter years were devoted to teaching more than to public performances. He is best known, perhaps, as the composer of a popular ‘Berceuse’ for violin.

MILAN.

A NEW OPERA, ‘IL PERGOLESE.’

The first performance of a new opera, ‘Il Pergolese,’ composed by Maestro Lamberto Landi, took place at the Carcano Theatre on June 7. The subject of this work is based on the legendary love-story of Pergolesi and Princess Maria Spinelli. According to this story, the tie of ardent sympathy was discovered by the young patrician's brother, who constrained her to enter a convent. For Pergolesi nothing remained but to compose and conduct the music of the vestural Mass to be held in the church on Maria taking the veil. The unfortunate attachment caused the death of Maria a few months after this event. On this legend, which has found credence with various historians and even by Florimo—although it is practically certain that it has no sure foundation—Marsili, the librettist, has built the subject-matter for this opera. It lays no pretence to literary merit, but effectively exploits the romantic and sentimental elements of the story.

The impression made by the first performance was favourable. The opera is not, neither is it meant to be, a ponderous score requiring dissection. It will work into the sympathies of music-lovers, especially as it calls into prominent relief the figures of the genius Pergolesi. Landi, the composer, who hails from Lucca, the birthplace of Puccini, had several calls before the curtain, and was given a whole-souled reception.

To judge by the frequency of performances, Beethoven's ninth Symphony has come again into particular favour. On June 7, in the Teatro Regio at Turin, it received an admirable performance under Toscanini, when a hundred professors played, and the choral forces numbered three hundred voices. The soloists were Di Giovanni, Toti, Dal Monte, Ida Bergamasco, and Paolo Ludikar. The Prelude and the ‘Good Friday’ music from ‘Parsifal’ preceded the Symphony, which was repeated the next evening. Since then the Beethoven work has been given in the large hall of the Verdi Conservatorium, Milan, again preceded by the Wagnerian items above mentioned. The choir of two hundred and eighty voices was divided into four groups—sopranos, mezzo-sopranos, tenors, and basses. Of these, a hundred and fifty singers were amateurs. The orchestra numbered a hundred and twenty players. The same soloists who lent their services to the Turin performances were also present on this occasion, and Toscanini was the conductor. One and all got a tremendous reception. On June 20 the Symphony was heard for the fourth time. Every performance saw the Conservatorium packed to overflowing. A few days later the great Maestro gave his last concert there. The programme consisted of Haydn's Symphony in D major, the Overture to Beethoven's ‘Leonora’ No. 3, Respighi's ‘Fontane di Roma’ (‘The fountains of Rome’—a great favourite), Dukas's ‘L'Apprenti Sorcier,’ the Prelude to ‘The Mastersingers’ and ‘Life of the Forest,’ Wagner.

Toscanini the indefatigable closed the season of symphonic concerts at the People's Theatre on June 24 by conducting the same programme given a few days before at the Conservatorium: The Overture No. 3 of ‘Leonora,’ the Prelude to ‘The Mastersingers,’ and smaller pieces.

There is to be a grand open-air concert, ‘pro orfani infanti,’ on July 13, at the Arena, Milan.

E. HERBERT-CÉSARI.

Milan.

The ex-service men at the Chappell Pianoforte Company's factory made a presentation to Mr. William Boosey on July 18, in token of their gratitude to Mr. Boosey and the firm for generous treatment during their absence on service.

The South-West Choral Society re-starts work on September 23, the season's programme being ‘Elijah,’ ‘Hiawatha,’ and ‘The Redemption.’ The conductor is Mr. Arthur R. Saunders.

Miscellaneous.

The Royal Philharmonic Society announces seven concerts, all on Thursday evenings, for its next season which will begin on November 20, the last concert taking place on May 20. The conductors will be Mr. Albert Coates (two concerts), Mr. Landon Ronald (two concerts), Mr. Adrian Boult, Mr. Geoffrey Toye, and Mr. Kennedy Scott. The programme will be on familiar lines. At least one British work will be in each programme, and several new British works will be produced. An interesting new departure will be the first appearance of the newly formed Philharmonic Choir, of which Mr. Kennedy Scott is the conductor. It will sing in the ninth Symphony of Beethoven under Mr. Coates on February 26, and under Mr. Kennedy Scott, in a British programme, on March 25. In response to many requests Delius's Violin Concerto will be repeated. The names of soloists will be announced in due course.

July 31 saw the third annual musical Festival to be held in Lydbrook Parish Church, Hereford. Inaugurated by the present vicar, the Rev. G. A. Hopkins, these Festivals maintain a high musical standard and do a great educational work in this mining village. An orchestra from Ross-on-Wye, conducted by Miss Beatrice Bellamy, played Beethoven's 'Egmont' Overture, Schubert's 'Heroic' March No. 3, and 'Unfinished' Symphony, and also accompanied the choir in Brewer's anthem, 'God is our hope and strength.' Solos were sung by Mr. William Batey, of Hereford Cathedral, and Miss Olive Bevan, of Abercarn, N. Wales. Violin solos were contributed by Miss F. Oliver. A notable feature of the Festival was the singing by the boys of Handel's 'Rejoice greatly,' and the organist, Miss Elsie Black, is to be congratulated on the high pitch of excellence which these village lads have reached under her training.

The principal scholarships at the Guildhall School of Music have been awarded as follows: Special Corporation Scholarships to Antoinette Trydell, Margaret Fairless, Marie Dare, Marjorie L. Hall, Sydney Harrison, Kathleen B. McQuitty, Rose Kosloff, Doreen Thornton, Albert Edward Stambrey, Ivy M. Jermy, May Busby, and Moses Mirsky; the Heilbut (Major) Scholarships to Pamela Baselow, Marjorie Claridge, and Rene Maxwell; the Heilbut (Minor) Scholarship to Doris Godson; the Mitchell Scholarships to Marion Doris Brown, Audrey Hemmerde, David Latner, and George E. Smith; the Mercers' Scholarship to Frank Laffitte; the Carnegie Scholarship to Reginald Pursglove and Kenneth Turner; the S. Ernest Palmer Scholarship to Henry Stanley Taylor. The two last-mentioned are scholarships of the Worshipful Company of Musicians.

The first performance at Kingston, Jamaica, and the first in the colony, of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Bon-bon Suite,' was given on June 24 by the Kingston Glee Singers' Society, under the conductorship of Mr. George D. Goode. The baritone soloist was Mr. W. Spooner, and Mr. L. Carvalho accompanied. Other choral items were Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' Tomkins's madrigal 'Weep no more,' Hullah's 'The sands of Dee,' Newton's 'The frog,' West's arrangement of 'The lass with the delicate air,' and Parry's 'Music, when soft voices die.' The concert was so great a success, and so many would-be listeners were excluded, that the programme was repeated on July 1.

On July 18, 19, and 21, the Borough of Richmond, Surrey, indulged in organized Peace festivities, music playing a prominent part. Massed singing by three thousand school children took place on Richmond Green; a grand procession paraded the town on the Saturday, and further massed singing followed; and on the Monday an entertainment and tea given to old people at the Drill Hall, Old Deer Park, included a programme of orchestral music, solos, and ladies' choral singing. The chief musical organizer was Mr. J. Hullah Brown, who was assisted in conducting by Mr. Ambrose P. Porter and Mr. Frank E. Lyne.

The Bristol Gleemen announce that their work, which was suspended during the war, will shortly be renewed. Some fifty members have re-joined, and under the direction of Mr. Charles Stear, rehearsals are in progress.

Answers to Correspondents.

M.D.D.—When Wagner said that 'the first six bars of "Rule, Britannia" expressed the British character,' he evidently saw in it the directness and simplicity with which our race has long been credited. But he said it so long ago, and so much has happened since, that possibly the estimate needs revision.

CÆSAREA.—We do not know of any organ arrangement of the slow movement of Schumann's second Violin Sonata, Op. 121. Can any reader oblige with the information?

CONTENTS.

	Page
Modern British Composers—V. John Ireland. By Edwin Evans (concluded)	457
The Third Period of César Franck. By Sydney Grew	462
Programme Music: Its Limitations and Abuse. By Arthur L. Salmon	464
The New Direction in Spanish Music. By Leigh Henry (concluded)	465
Interludes	468
Occasional Notes	471
The National Welsh Eisteddfod. By William Child	472
Ruggiero Leoncavallo. By F. Bonavia	476
The Eisteddfod and the Modern Spirit. By Alfred Kalisch	477
An Ancient Song. By C. F. Abdy Williams (with facsimile)	478
Some Musical Advertisements. By C. Edgar Thomas	480
Church and Organ Music	486
New Light on the Origin of "Missa de Angelis." By H. V. Hughes	486
The Royal College of Organists—Professor Buck's Presidential Address	488
Reviews	490
Letters to the Editor	491
Obituary	494
Sixty Years Ago	494
Music in South Africa. By Elizabeth Olga Racster	495
The Musicians' Gift to H.M. Forces	496
A £1,000 Song	496
The Position of Weber. By Herbert Antcliffe	496
Bells. By W. W. Starmer	497
Royal Opera, Covent Garden. By Francis E. Barrett	498
The Philharmonic Hall	498
The Promenade Concerts	498
Music in the Provinces	499
Italy's Vocal Tradition. By E. Herbert Cesari	500
Musical Notes from Abroad	501
Miscellaneous	502
Answers to Correspondents	502

MUSIC:

"Ah! dear Heart." Madrigal for Five Voices. By ORLANDO GIBBONS, 1612 ... 481

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. The National Eisteddfod, Corwen: The Pavilion.
2. "Rolling down to Rio." Arranged as a Part-song for S.A.T.B. By Edward German.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALLEN, ALFRED H.—Hymn for a Memorial Service. 1st d. Words only, 2s. per 100.

ARMSTRONG, G. A.—"Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem." Anthem. 6d.

BESLY, MAURICE.—"Big Steamers." Song. Words by RUDYARD KIPLING. 2s.

BEVAN, T. P. M.—"Block City." Song. 2s.

BROWNING, S.—"Tis sweet to live." Song. 2s.

BULLIVANT, GERALD.—"Grant us Thy Peace." Unaccompanied. (No. 1070, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

- CARSE, ADAM.—"The Beacon." Four-part Song. (No. 1334, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.
- DALE, B. J.—Two Songs from Shakespeare: No. 1, "O Mistress mine," in F; No. 2, "Come away, Death," in E. 2s. each.
- FARRAR, E. B.—"Brittany." Song. In E flat and G. 1s. 6d. each.
- FETHERSTON, REV. SIR G. R.—"I love to hear the story." Hymn. 2d.
- "Sun of my soul." Hymn. 2d.
- GERMAN, EDWARD.—"Theme and Six Diversions. For Full Orchestra. 1st Violin, 2s.; 2nd Violin, 2s.; Viola, 2s.; Violoncello, 1s. 6d.; Bass, 1s. 6d.
- HAM, ALBERT.—"The Rudiments of Music and Elementary Harmony, with Test Papers. 4s.
- JONES, J. OWEN.—"The God of Dreams." Part-song for S.A.T.B. English and Welsh words. 1s.
- ROSS, W. G.—"A Daffodil Wedding." Song. In D. For Soprano or Tenor. 2s.
- SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 327) contains the following music in both notations:—"The Dream Lady." Junior Unison Song, by GEORGE RATHBONE. "A little Stream" and "Dismissal." Rounds for Three Voices, by R. T. WHITE. "The Rainy Holiday." Round for Three Voices, and "Merrily flows the Silvery River." Round for Four Voices, by ALFRED MOFFAT. 1½d.
- SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo.) B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.
- No. 1261. "To-morrow." Unison Song." E. T. SWEETING. 2d. —
- TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
No. 2302. "Oyes! has any found a lad." THOMAS TOMKINS. 1½d.
- WALKER, LEONARD J.—"The Summertime of Love." Song. In B flat and D. 2s. each.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

- NOBLE, T. T.—"The Mourners." Arranged to Chopin's Funeral March. 15 cents (6d.).
- PARKER, HORATIO.—"He faileth not." For S.A.T.B. 15 cents. (6d.).
- SCHUBERT, F.—"To the Infinite." Song. 60 cents. (2s. 6d.).

DR. AIKIN'S BONE PROPS

(FOR VOICE PRODUCTION).

The Bone Prop was designed by Dr. W. A. Aikin for the purpose—suggested in his book "The Voice: An Introduction to Practical Phonology" (Longman's, 1910), pages 78 and 81—of keeping the jaws open during the practice of vowel sounds.

The length of the Prop varies from five-eighths to one inch to suit different mouths. It is lightly made with a groove for the incisor teeth at either end, and a hole for the string which passes round the neck to prevent the Prop from being swallowed or dropped on the ground.

The effect of the Prop is fully explained in the Work above referred to. Its object is mainly to preserve the resonant property of the mouth, and to demonstrate the Resonator Scale. At the same time it requires much greater movement of lips and tongue in forming the vowels, and so improves articulation.

Price 6d. each; 5s. 6d. per doz. Postage 3d.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS:

ARNOLD & SONS,

GILTSPUR STREET, LONDON, E.C.1.

Telegraphic Address:
"INSTRUMENTS," LONDON.Telephone:
City 5240 (3 lines).

FOR SALE.—COLLARD SEMI-GRAND PIANO. In perfect condition. £130, or near offer. Also PEDAL ATTACHMENT. White, Crundale Rectory, near Canterbury.

CYRIL SCOTT
NEW SONGS.

Price, net. s. d.

- SEA FRET. C (D to D sharp) and E flat ... 2 0
- SONGS OF A STROLLING MINSTREL:—
1. ORACLE. E flat (D to E flat) and F ... 2 0
2. OLD LOVES. G (G to E) and A ... 2 0
- SUNSHINE AND DUSK. Two Keys ... 2 0
- TIME O' DAY. Two Keys... ... 2 0

CYRIL SCOTT
NEW PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

Price, net. s. d.

- A LITTLE RUSSIAN SUITE. Complete ... 3 6
1. RUSSIAN AIR. 2. SIBERIAN WALTZ. ... 2 0
3. DANCE ... Each 2 0
- FIRST BAGATELLE ... 2 0
- CAPRICE CHINOIS ... 2 0
- Played by MARK HAMBOURG.
- TWO PASTORALS:—
1. ALLEGRETTO ... 2 0
2. CON DELICATESSA ... 2 0
- RONDEAU DE CONCERT ... 4 0
- Played by MOISEWITSCH.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, TENOR LAY CLERK. £110. Preference, and additional £50, if qualified to act as Assistant-Teacher in Choir-School. Communicant. Apply, with references and testimonials, at once, Pre entor, Ely Cathedral.

A FINE LIBRARY OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC FOR SALE, including works by modern British, French, and Russian Composers. Also a quantity of Music for the Violin, Violoncello, Flute, Organ, and other instruments. Call or write for catalogue, post-free. HAROLD REEVES, 210, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C. 2 (New Oxford Street end, next to Prince's Theatre).

WANTED, by Young Lady, Post as ORCHESTRAL PIANIST. Good sight-reader, accompanist, and pianist. London district preferred. "B," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.
SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1, not later than FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 19 (FIRST POST).

NOVELLO'S MUSIC FOR SMALL

	Full Orchestra.	Small Orchestra.	Full Score.	Piano. Conductor.	Violin Conductor.	Piano. Solo.	Piano. and Violin.	Violin Imo.	Violin 2do.	Viola.	Cello and Basso.	Cello.	Basso.	Piccolo.
Bennett, "Eventide"	3/-					1/6		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.
Carse, "Gavotte"	4/-					1/6		6d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Coleridge-Taylor, "Four Characteristic Waltzes" ...	13/-					2/6		1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...
" "Prelude"	12/-					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "2nd Entr'acte, "Nero" ...						2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "Intermezzo," "Nero" ...	5/6			6d.		1/6		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.
" "Singing Girls' Chorus" ...
" "Finale"	12/9			1/6		2/-		1/-	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	1/-
" "1st Entr'acte, "Nero" ...	8/9			1/-		2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "Eastern Dance," "Nero" ...	2/9	2/6				2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "Novelletten," No. 1 ...	2/9	2/6				2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" " "2	2/9	2/6				2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" " "3	2/9	2/6				2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" " "4	4/3	2/6				2/-		1/-	1/-	1/-	...	6d.	6d.
Cowen, "Four English Dances" ...	15/-					2/6		1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...
" "May" ("Months," No. 5) ...	18/-					2/6		1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	...
" "June" (" "6)	3/6					2/-		3d.	3d.	3d.	...	6d.	3d.
" "September" (" "9)	7/6					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "December" (" "12)	5/9					2/-		3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.
" "Menuet d'Amour"	4/3		3/6			1/6		6d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Davies, "Solemn Melody" (strings and organ)	1/9	2/-				1/6		3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.
" " (full orchestra)	5/-	3/-				1/6		3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.
Elgar, "Chanson de Matin"	3/-	2/6	6d.			1/6		3d.	3d.	6d.	...	3d.	3d.
" "Chanson de Nuit"	2/9	2/6	6d.			1/6		3d.	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.
" "Pleading" (Song), in G	3/-			3d.				3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...
" "Serenade" ("Wand of Youth") ...	1/9	1/-	A			1/6		3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
" "Romance"	7/-							6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "Canto Popolare"	4/9	3/-				2/-		3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
Fletcher, "Bagatelles" (strings only) ...	2/6					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	1/-	...
Gounod, "Green Hill," in E flat	3/6		6d.					3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...
Haynes, "Westwood Gavotte"	4/9					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
Holbrooke, "Souvenir de Printemps" ...	3/3					2/-		3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Holst, "Greeting"	3/3					2/-		3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Ireland, "Bagatelle"	5/9					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
Johnson, "Elves," "Faerie Suite" No. 1 ...	6/-		1/-					6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
" "Pavane"	5/-		6d.			1/6		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
Kreuz, "Conversation Amoureuse"	5/-		1/-			2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	1/-	...
Lemare, "Andantino"	4/3		1/-			1/6		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
" "Chant sans Paroles"	3/9			6d.		1/6		3d.	6d.	6d.	...	3d.	3d.
" "Menuet Nuptiale"	3/3		6d.					3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Mackenzie, "Benedictus"	3/6					2/-		6d.	A	A	6d.	6d.	...
Rameau, "Gavotte"	4/6					1/6		3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Reed, "Serenade" ("Suite Venitienne") ...	3/6		6d.			3/-		3d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...
Roëckel, "Graceful Dance"	5/-					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
Wareing, "Summergold Gavotte"	5/6					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
Wendt, "Air de Ballet"	5/6		1/-			2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
West, "Intermezzo"	3/9		6d.			1/6		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
" "Marjorie Gavotte"	4/3					2/-		6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...
" "Maypole Dance"	10/-		1/6			2/-		6d.	3d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.
Wolstenholme, "Allegretto"	4/6					1/6		5d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...

N.B.—Parts marked A are printed together.

Parts marked B are printed together.

Parts marked C are printed

† Transposed from

ORCHESTRAS. SUITABLE FOR CINEMAS, &c.

Flauti.	Oboi.	Clarinetti.	Fagotti.	Corni 1 & 2.	Corni 3 & 4.	Trombe.	Cornetti.	Tromboni 1 & 2.	Trombone 3.	Euphonium.	Tuba.	Timpani.	Cassa.	Piatti.	Side Drum.	Triangle.	Tambourine.	Harp.	Solo-Cornet.	Organ.	Harp or Piano.	Bells.
3d.	3d.	6d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	A	...	6d.	...	3d.	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/6	1/-	1/-	...	1/-	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	A	A	A	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	6d.	...	...	...	...
A	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	B	B	3d.	B	...	6d.	...	...	...
6d.	+6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	6d.	6d.	B	B	A	3d.	C	...	6d.	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	A	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	2/-	1/-	1/-	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/6	1/-	1/-	†1/-	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	6d.	A	...	...	A	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	3d.	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	3d.	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	6d.	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	...	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	...	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	6d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	3d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
3d.	3d.	6d.	3d.	3d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
1/-	1/-	1/-	1/-	6d.	...	...	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...
6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	6d.	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...

together. † Oboe has the Melody.
Trumpet Part.

X Flute has the Melody.

* For Solo part, see Pianoforte and Bassoon Copy, 2/6.

HARVEST FESTIVAL MUSIC.

CANTATAS.

SONG OF THANKSGIVING FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS (OR CONTRALTO) SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards, Two Shillings and Sixpence. Tonic Sol-fa, 9d.; Words only, 10s. per 100; String Parts, price 9s.; Wind Parts, 14s. 6d.

A GOLDEN HARVEST

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

HENRY KNIGHT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE RAINBOW OF PEACE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

HARVEST-TIDE

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 5s. per 100. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR CHORUS, SEMI-CHORUS, AND ORGAN

BY

GEORGE GARRETT.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 6d. Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

HARVEST CANTATA

FOR SOPRANO (OR TENOR) AND CONTRALTO (OR BARITONE) SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Words only, 5s. per 100.

SEED-TIME AND HARVEST

FOR SOPRANO AND TENOR SOLI AND CHORUS

BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Two Shillings.

Words only, 5s. per 100; or 2d. each with Music to the Hymns.

Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Orchestral Parts can be hired.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING

FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, 15s.

THE GLEANER'S HARVEST

FOR FEMALE VOICES

BY

C. H. LLOYD.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

THE JUBILEE CANTATA

FOR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

BY

C. M. VON WEBER.

Price One Shilling.

Full Score, 21s.; String Parts, 8s.; Wind Parts, 7s.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST SONG

FOR SOPRANO SOLO AND CHORUS

BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 5s. per 100.

String Parts, 4s. 6d.; Full Score and Wind Parts, 15s.

HYMNS, Etc.

TWELVE HYMNS FOR HARVEST

Selected from THE HYMNARY.

Price One Penny.

LET ALL OUR BRETHREN JOIN IN ONE

HARVEST HYMN BY J. BARNBY.

Price One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

SOWING AND REAPING

HARVEST CAROL BY J. MAUDE CRAMENT.

Price Three-Halfpence. Words only, 1s. per 100.

THE JOY OF HARVEST

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

A HARVEST HYMN OF PRAISE

By J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Twopence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

THE SOWER WENT FORTH SOWING

HYMN FOR HARVEST BY J. BARNBY.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, One Penny.

MAKE MELODY WITHIN YOUR HEARTS

HARVEST CAROL BY F. A. J. HERVEY.

Price Three-Halfpence.

O LORD OF HEAVEN, AND EARTH AND SEA

By J. BARNBY.

On Card, Price One Penny.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

By WALTER B. GILBERT AND J. BARNBY.

Price One Penny each.

NOVELLO'S HARVEST ANTHEMS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

LET US NOW FEAR THE LORD OUR GOD.

By A. M. GOODHART.

Price Threepence.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

FATHER OF MERCIES, GOD OF LOVE.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Arranged for Boys' or Female Voices.
Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

THE LORD GOD PLANTED A GARDEN

BY
HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

FEAR NOT, O LAND

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

LORD OF THE HARVEST

COMPOSED BY

R. REDHEAD,

EDITED BY ALFRED REDHEAD.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

IF YE WALK IN MY STATUTES

COMPOSED BY

H. A. CHAMBERS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THUS SAITH THE LORD GOD

COMPOSED BY

GEORGE C. MARTIN.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

I WILL CAUSE THE SHOWER

COMPOSED BY

E. W. NAYLOR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

AND GOD SAID

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Threepence.

YE SHALL GO OUT WITH JOY

COMPOSED BY

OLIVER KING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL GREATLY REJOICE

COMPOSED BY

E. C. BAIRSTOW.

Price Threepence.

THE ETERNAL GOD IS THY REFUGE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

(From the 100th Psalm.)

COMPOSED BY

EBENEZER PROUT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

SING A SONG OF PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THOU, O GOD, ART PRAISED IN SION

COMPOSED BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GOD THE ALL-FATHERLY

BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Twopence.

IT IS A GOOD THING TO GIVE THANKS

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

GIVE EAR, O YE HEAVENS

COMPOSED BY

W. G. ALCOCK.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE VINEYARD OF THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

HERBERT W. WAREING.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN GOD

(FROM "SEEDTIME AND HARVEST")

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

I WILL MAGNIFY THEE

COMPOSED BY

ARTHUR W. MARCHANT.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

COME, YE THANKFUL PEOPLE, COME

COMPOSED BY

BRUCE STEANE.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE WAITETH FOR THEE, O GOD

COMPOSED BY

MYLES B. FOSTER.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O THAT MEN WOULD PRAISE THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

W. WOLSTENHOLME.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

THE JOY OF THE LORD IS YOUR STRENGTH

COMPOSED BY

HUGH BLAIR.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

BLESS THE LORD THY GOD

COMPOSED BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O BE JOYFUL IN THE LORD

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

PRAISE TO GOD, IMMORTAL PRAISE

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price Threepence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

O HOW GREAT IS THY GOODNESS

(FROM "THE RAINBOW OF PEACE")

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Three-Halfpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Three-Halfpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1897.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

	HARVEST ANTHEMS.	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Sing to the Lord of Harvest		3d.	2d.
While the earth remaineth		3d.	2d.
Blessed be the Name of the Lord		3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G		1/6	1s.
--------------	---------	-----	-----

Or, separately:—

Te Deum		3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera		2d.	2d.
Benedictus		2d.	2d.
Jubilate		3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion		8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above		2d.	2d.
Amen ditto		1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis		3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)		1s.	8d.
-------------------------------	---------	-----	-----

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie		3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion		6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis		3d.	2d.

Te Deum in B flat		3d.	2d.
-------------------	---------	-----	-----

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)		3d.	1½d.
---	---------	-----	------

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D		3d.	2d.
-----------------------------------	---------	-----	-----

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)		2s.	—
--------------------------------	---------	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)		1/6	1s.
--	---------	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR HARVEST FESTIVALS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES AND ANTHEMS.

Venite setting in A (Chant Form)		2d.
Te Deum laudamus in A (for Festivals)		3d.
Benedictus and Jubilate in E		3d.
Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A		4d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa		1½d.
Harvest Anthem: Blessed be Thou		3d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa		1½d.
Short Anthem: Thine, O Lord		2d.
Anthem: O clap your hands		4d.
Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa		2d.
Harvest Festival Hymn: Sing to the Lord		1d.
Festival Anthem: I was glad		3d.
Ditto, Ditto, Tonic Sol-fa		2d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

HYMN

FOR A

MEMORIAL SERVICE

WORDS AND MUSIC BY

ALFRED H. ALLEN,

Organist of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Inverness.

PRICE THREE-HALFPENCE.

Words only, 2s. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO SONGS

FROM SHAKESPEARE

1. O MISTRESS MINE, in D and F. EACH 2s.
2. COME AWAY, DEATH, in D flat and E. EACH 2s.

COMPOSED BY

B. J. DALE

(Op. 9).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

F. W. FABER.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AFTER TUMULT, REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

QUARTET

FOR

STRINGS

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 83).

Score, Price 5s.; Parts, 8s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

FOLK-SONGS OF ENGLAND.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY CECIL J. SHARP.

FOLK-SONGS for Use in SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

Sch. Songs
No.

SET I. (SOMERSET.)

950. AS I WALKED THROUGH THE MEADOW.
951. I'M SEVENTEEN COME SUNDAY.
952. THE CRYSTAL SPRING.
953. MIDSUMMER FAIR.
954. A FARMER'S SON SO SWEET.
955. ADMIRAL BENBOW.
956. BINGO.
957. THE KEYS OF CANTERBURY.
958. THE COASTS OF HIGH BARBARY.

SET II. (SOMERSET.)

959. O WALY, WALY.
960. THE LOVER'S TASKS.
961. THE SHEEP SHEARING.
962. THE GREEN BROOM.
963. THE GREENLAND FISHERY.
964. THE TREE IN THE WOOD.
965. COME, ALL YOU WORTHY CHRISTIAN MEN.
966. BRENNAN ON THE MOOR.
967. OH NO, JOHN.

SET III. (VARIOUS.)

984. DANCE TO YOUR DADDY.
985. THE FARMYARD.
986. AS I WAS GOING TO BANBURY
987. THREE LITTLE TAILORS.
988. THE THREE SONS.
989. THE POOR COUPLE.
990. THE RED HERRING.
991. DASHING AWAY WITH THE SMOOTHING
IRON.
992. ONE MAN SHALL MOW MY MEADOW.

SET IV. (VARIOUS.)

993. SWEET WILLIAM.
994. CHESAPEAKE AND SHANNON
995. THE KEEPER
996. THE LARK IN THE MORN.
997. FAREWELL, NANCY.
998. THE SIGN OF THE BONNY BLUE-BELL.
999. THE WATCHET SAILOR.
1000. WASSAIL SONG.
1001. ROBIN HOOD AND THE TANNER.
1002. HEAVE AWAY, MY JOHNNY.

SET V. (SOMERSET.)

1077. THE LITTLE TURTLE DOVE.
1078. THE SWEET PRIMEROSES.
1079. BEDLAM.
1080. THE BRIERY BUSH.
1081. GEORDIE.
1082. WILLIAM TAYLOR.
1083. THE BRISK YOUNG WIDOW.
1084. SPANISH LADIES.
1085. MY MAN JOHN.

SET VI. (VARIOUS.)

EDITED BY R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.

1128. THE JOLLY PLOUGH BOY.
1129. THE CUCKOO AND NIGHTINGALE.
1130. SERVANT MAN AND HUSBANDMAN.
1131. THE FEMALE HIGHWAYMAN.
1132. THE CARTER.
1133. I WILL GIVE MY LOVE AN APPLE.
1134. MY BOY BILLIE.
1135. DOWN BY THE RIVERSIDE.
1136. THE FOX.
1137. FARMYARD SONG.
1138. THE PAINFUL PLOUGH.

FOLK-SONG CAROLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

No.

1175. KING HEROD AND THE COCK.
1176. THE MOON SHINES BRIGHT.
1177. THE HOLLY AND THE IVY.
1178. COME, ALL YOU TRUE GOOD CHRISTIANS
1179. COME, ALL YOU WORTHY GENTLEMEN.
1180. AS I SAT ON A SUNNY BANK.
1181. THE VIRGIN UNSPOTTED.
1182. SONS OF LEVI.
1183. WASSAIL SONG.

BALLADS.

1262. LORD BATEMAN
1263. LADY MAISRY.
1264. BARBARA ELLEN.
1265. THE OUTLANDISH KNIGHT.
1266. LITTLE SIR HUGH.
1267. LORD THOMAS AND FAIR ELLINOR.
1268. THE BLIND BEGGAR OF BETHNAL GREEN
1269. THE LOW, LOW LANDS OF HOLLAND.
1270. THE CRUEL MOTHER.

PULLING CHANTEYS.

1271. HAUL ON THE BOW LINE.
PADDY DOYLE
1272. KNOCK A MAN DOWN.
JOHNNY BOWKER.
1273. GENERAL TAYLOR.
TOM IS GONE TO HILO.
1274. POOR OLD REUBEN RANZO.
THE DEAD HORSE.
1275. WON'T YOU GO MY WAY.
OLD STORMEY.
IN FRISCO BAY.
1276. TIDDY I-O.
LOWLANDS LOW.
1277. SHALLOW BROWN.
SALLY BROWN.
1278. BLOW, BOYS, COME BLOW TOGETHER.
HAUL AWAY, JOE.
1279. O I'M GOING TO LEAVE HER

CAPSTAN CHANTEYS.

1280. WHIP JAMBOREE.
1281. SHANADAR.
THE HOG-EYED MAN.
1282. GOOD MORNING, LADIES ALL.
LOWLANDS AWAY.
1283. O JOHNNY, COME TO HILO.
STORMALONG JOHN
1284. CLEAR THE TRACK.
THE BULLY BOAT
1285. A-ROVING.
HE-BACK, SHE-BACK.
1286. SANTY ANNA.
THE DRUNKEN SAILOR.
1287. BLOW THE WIND WESTER.
1288. RIO GRAND.

Each Set, Complete, Ninepence. Voice Parts only, Threepence (In the Press).

Price in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations: Three-Halfpence each Number.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.
 January. Lullaby for the New Year.
 February. (St. Valentine) Flirtations.
 March. Boreas.

BOOK 2.
 April. In Springtime.
 May. Italian Serenade.
 June. Birds.

BOOK 3.
 July. Butterflies.
 August. Mid-day Réverie.
 September. Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.
 October. Autumn Evening Song.
 November. Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
 December. Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	—	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	...	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	...	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte ...	complete	3s. od.	Full Score (Full Orchestra) ...	...	5s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte ...	separately, each	1s. 6d.	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ...		6s. od.	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra...		7s. od.	Strings, each Number ...	...	2s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra...		12s. od.	Separate String Parts, 6d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement ...	...	15s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BY

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN

BY

VARIOUS COMPOSERS. SET III.

PRICE, PAPER COVER, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

CLOTH, FOUR SHILLINGS.

CONTENTS.

1. MELODY	A. HERBERT BREWER
2. MAESTOSO	GEORGE CALKIN
3. AVE MARIA	EDWARD T. CHIPP
4. INTERLUDE	PERCY E. FLETCHER
5. INTERMEZZO	ALAN GRAY
6. POSTLUDE	ALEX. GUilmANT
7. SURSUM CORDA	JOHN IRELAND
8. LIEDER OHNE WORTE No. 22	F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY
9. ANDANTE	GUSTAV MERKEL
10. DUETTINO IN G	ERNEST NEWMAN
11. CAVATINA	JOACHIM RAFF
12. MONOLOGUE No. 5	J. RHEINBERGER
13. MELODY IN F	ANTON RUBINSTEIN
14. DREAMING	SCHUMANN
15. THE POET SPEAKS	SCHUMANN
16. SOFT VOLUNTARY	B. LUARD-SELBY
17. MENUETTO	BERTHOLD TOURS
18. ASPIRATION	JOHN E. WEST
19. SKETCH IN C MINOR	JOHN E. WEST
20. ANDANTE CON MOTO	W. G. WOOD

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH THE CHORALE PRELUDES

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

Complete in Five Books, to which is added a Sixth Book, containing the Chorales only.

CONTENTS.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Book XV. Orgelbüchlein (Little Organ Book).	5	0	Book XVIII. Miscellaneous Preludes (Part I.) ...	3	6
Book XVI. The Six "Schübler" Preludes and the "Clavertübung" (Part III.) ...	3	6	Book XIX. Miscellaneous Preludes (Part II.) and Variations ...	3	6
Book XVII. The Eighteen Preludes ...	3	6	Book XX. The Chorales only ...	3	6

"What is needed," wrote Schweitzer, in concluding a chapter on these magnificent organ works of the great master, 'is a cheap edition of the Chorale Preludes in the original form, distinguishing the collections planned by Bach himself, from detached chorales that have come down to us.' At length, in the excellent edition before us, we find admirably fulfilled every detail of Schweitzer's ideal.

"We have no hesitation in recommending this edition of the Chorale Preludes."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"This fine series is a triumph of British music publishing, and, with clear editing and informing prefaces and annotations, it should prove of the greatest value to students of the old master."—The Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W. 1.
Sold also by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT AND CO., LTD., Paternoster Row, E.C. 4.—Monday, September 1, 1919.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

No.			No.			No.
1	Our Native Land ...	Reichardt 2d.	87	A Finland love song...	H. Hiles 1½d.	173	The Moon ...	H. Smart 3d.
2	Cricketers' Song (T.T.B.)	Macfarren 2d.	88	Evening ...	" 1½d.	174	A Spring Song ...	Ciro Pinsuti 3d.
3	Boating Song ...	Monk 2d.	89	To the Morning Wind ...	" 3d.	175	An Autumn Song ...	" 3d.
4	Song of the Railroads	Macfarren 3d.	90	To Daffodils ...	" 3d.	176	The Two Spirits ...	" 3d.
5	Good-morrow, fair ladies	Morley 2d.	91	Summer longings ...	" 3d.	177	The Crusaders...	" 1½d.
6	Home Fairy (T.T.B.B.)	Winter 2d.	92	Night, lovely Night...	F. Berger 1½d.	178	The Caravan ...	" 1½d.
7	The Wreath ...	Benedict 2d.	93	Essay, my Heart ...	" 3d.	179	Stradella ...	" 3d.
8	Countryman's Song ...	Rimbault 3d.	94	Childhood's melody	" 1½d.	180	When evening's twilight	Hatton 1½d.
9	Student's Greeting (T.T.B.B.)	Berner 2d.	95	Now ...	" 3d.	181	Absence ...	" 1½d.
10	Magdalen College Song ...	Monk 2d.	96	Sunset ...	" 1½d.	182	April showers ...	" 1½d.
11	Integer Vitæ (T.T.B.B.)	Flemming 4d.	97	Arise, the sunbeams hail	" 3d.	183	The red, red rose ...	" 1½d.
12	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren 1½d.	98	Night winds that ...	J. B. Calkin 1½d.	184	Beware, beware ...	" 1½d.
13	Harvest Song ...	Macfarren 2d.	99	Breathe soft, ye Winds	" 1½d.	185	The Sailor's Song ...	" 1½d.
14	Come, heavy sleep ...	Doulard 2d.	100	My lady is so wondrous fair	" 1½d.	186	Good-Night ...	" 1½d.
15	Fisherman's Song ...	Rimbault 2d.	101	Chivalry of Labour (S.S.A.T.B.)	" 4d.	187	Blythe is the bird ...	" 2d.
16	In all thy need ...	Doulard 2d.	102	Come, fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.)	" 3d.	188	Stars of the summer night	" 1½d.
17	All among the barley	" Stirling 2d.	103	Echoes ...	" 1½d.	189	The hemlock-tree ...	" 4d.
18	When icicles hang ...	Macfarren 2d.	104	Phœbus ...	" J. Barnby 1½d.	190	Jack Frost ...	" 1½d.
19	Jolly Cricket Ball ...	Monk 2d.	105	Luna ...	" 1½d.	191	I loved her ...	" 3d.
20	Emigrant's Song ...	Macfarren 2d.	106	A Wife's Song ...	" 1½d.	192	The Village Blacksmith	" 1½d.
21	Shepherd's Song ...	Brewer 3d.	107	Home they brought...	" 1½d.	193	Bait, The (Come live with me)	" 1½d.
22	Pedlar's Song ...	Doulard 3d.	108	Annie Lee ...	" 1½d.	194	Softly fall the shades of	" 3d.
23	Fairies' Song (S.S.S.)	" Bishop 6d.	109	Starry Crowns of Heaven	" 1½d.	195	Auburn (Sweet village)	" 3d.
24	June (S.S.A.) ...	" F. Dun 2d.	110	The Wind ...	" 3d.	196	Bird of the wilderness	" 3d.
25	Awake! the starry	Mendelssohn 2d.	111	The Skylark ...	" 1½d.	197	The Summer gale ...	" 2d.
26	Fair Flower ...	Rimbault 2d.	112	The Sands of Dee	G.A. Macfarren 1½d.	198	I met her in the quiet lane	" 2d.
27	O happy he who ...	Gastoldi 2d.	113	Alton Locke's Song ...	" 1½d.	199	If thou art sleeping ...	" 3d.
28	Green Leaves ...	" Taylor 2d.	114	The Starlings ...	" 1½d.	200	Spring Song ...	" 3d.
29	Dirge ...	" S. Wesley 2d.	115	The Three Fishers ...	" 1½d.	201	Good wishes ...	" 3d.
30	Angler's Trysting Tree	" Corfe 3d.	116	The World's Age ...	" 1½d.	202	Parting and Meeting	" 2d.
31	The Dream ...	" Stewart 2d.	117	Sing high ho! ...	" 1½d.	203	Whether kissed by sunbeams...	" 3d.
32	God speed the Plough	" Richter 2d.	118	Fairy Song ...	A. Zimmermann 1½d.	204	The roses are blushing	" 1½d.
33	There is a ladie sweete	" Ford 2d.	119	Good-Night ...	" 1½d.	205	The Rivals ...	" 3d.
34	Football Song ...	Monk 3d.	120	Gone for ever ...	" 3d.	206	The village dance ...	" 1½d.
35	Haymakers' Song ...	Stewart 3d.	121	Flowers ...	" 1½d.	207	Song of the Gipsy maidens	" 3d.
36	Come away, Death ...	Macfarren 3d.	122	To Daffodils ...	" 3d.	208	The Waterfall ...	" 3d.
37	Old May-day, in A	Benedict 1½d.	123	Good Morrow ...	" 3d.	209	Over hill, over dale ...	" 3d.
38	Invocation to Sleep ...	" 3d.	124	Sigh no more, ladies	Macfarren 1½d.	210	Love me little, love me long	" 3d.
39	A Night Song ...	" 3d.	125	You spotted snakes (S.S.A.A.)	" 3d.	211	Going a-maying ...	" 3d.
40	Dirge for the faithful lover	" 1½d.	126	Take, oh take those lips away	" 4d.	212	See, the rooks are homeward	" 3d.
41	A Drinking Song (T.T.B.B.)	" 3d.	127	It was a lover and his lass	" 1½d.	213	Sweet Lady Moon ...	" 3d.
42	Sylvan pleasures ...	" 4d.	128	O mistress mine	" 1½d.	214	Hark, the Convent bells are	" 1½d.
43	Consolation ...	" H. Smart 1½d.	129	Under the greenwood tree	" 3d.	215	When evening's (male voices),	" 3d.
44	Good-night, thou glorious Sun	" 1½d.	130	Hark, the lark ...	" 1½d.	216	Warrior's Song ...	" 2d.
45	Hunting Song ...	" 1½d.	131	Tell me where is fancy bred	" 1½d.	217	Absence ...	" 2d.
46	Lady, rise, sweet Morn's	" 1½d.	132	The Violet ...	" H. Leslie 3d.	218	April showers ...	" 1½d.
47	Summer Morning ...	" 1½d.	133	One morning sweet in May	" 1½d.	219	The red, red rose ...	" 3d.
48	The Sea King ...	" 1½d.	134	Daylight is fading	" 1½d.	220	Beware, beware ...	" 1½d.
49	Orpheus with his lute	Macfarren 1½d.	135	Down in a pretty valley	" 1½d.	221	The happiest land	" 1½d.
50	When icicles hang ...	" 1½d.	136	The Primrose ...	" 1½d.	222	The Sailor's Song	" 3d.
51	Come away, Death (S.A.T.T.B.)	" 3d.	137	Arise, sweet love ...	" 1½d.	223	Busy, curious fly	" 2d.
52	When Daisies pied ...	" 3d.	138	'Tis break of day ...	H. Smart 2d.	224	Good-night, beloved...	" 2d.
53	Who is Sylvia ...	" 3d.	139	My true love hath my heart	" 2d.	225	Bacchanalian Song	" 3d.
54	Fear no more the heat	" 1½d.	140	Doth not my lady come	" 1½d.	226	Stars of the summer,	" 1½d.
55	Blow, blow, thou winter wind	" 1½d.	141	Spring Song ...	" 1½d.	227	King Witlaf's Song	" 3d.
56	The Belfry Tower ...	J.L. Hatton 1½d.	142	The Curfew ...	" 1½d.	228	Tars' Song ...	" 3d.
57	England ...	" 1½d.	143	Hear, sweet spirit ...	" 1½d.	229	The hemlock-tree	" 4d.
58	Come, celebrate the May	" 1½d.	144	Spring Voices ...	S. Reay 3d.	230	Jack Frost ...	" 1½d.
59	Song to Pan ...	" 1½d.	145	Waken, lords and ladies gay	" 3d.	231	The Lye ...	" 3d.
60	The Indian Maid ...	" 1½d.	146	As it fell upon a day...	" 3d.	232	I loved her ...	" 3d.
61	The Pearl Divers ...	" 4d.	147	Huntsman, rest ...	" 3d.	233	Village Blacksmith	" 3d.
62	Robin Goodfellow	G.A. Macfarren 1½d.	148	'Tis May upon the mountain	" 1½d.	234	The Letter ...	" 3d.
63	Break, break on thy cold grey	" 1½d.	149	Take, oh take those lips away	" 1½d.	235	Shall I wasting in	" 3d.
64	Echoes (The Splendour falls)	" 1½d.	150	The Rainy Day ...	A. Sullivan 1½d.	236	Way to build a boat	" 4d.
65	Song of the Railroads	" 1½d.	151	Oh, hush thee, my babe	" 3d.	237	I loved a lass ...	" 3d.
66	Christmas ...	" 1½d.	152	Evening ...	" 1½d.	238	The Lifeboat	" 4d.
67	Adieu, Love, Adieu ...	" 3d.	153	Joy to the Victors ...	" 2d.	239	Shepherd's farewell...	H. Smart 1½d.
68	Sir Knight, Sir Knight	Macfarren 1½d.	154	Parting gleams ...	" 1½d.	240	The waves' reproof	" 3d.
69	The Wounded Cupid	" 1½d.	155	Echoes ...	" 1½d.	241	Ave Maria ...	" 1½d.
70	Woman's smile ...	" 3d.	156	Spring ...	" W. Macfarren 1½d.	242	Spring ...	" 2d.
71	Autolycus' Song ...	" 1½d.	157	Summer ...	" 1½d.	243	Morning ...	" 3d.
72	Footsteps of Angels ...	" 3d.	158	Autumn ...	" 1½d.	244	Hymn to Cynthia	" 1½d.
73	The Sun shines fair ...	" 1½d.	159	Winter ...	" 3d.	245	Cradle Song ...	" 1½d.
74	The Pilgrims ...	" H. Leslie 1½d.	160	You stole my love ...	" 1½d.	246	The joys of Spring	" 3d.
75	My soul to God ...	" 3d.	161	Dainty love ...	" 1½d.	247	Dream, baby, dream	" 1½d.
76	Awake, the flow'rs unfold	" 1½d.	162	Drops of Rain ...	J. Lemmens 1½d.	248	A song for the Seasons	" 3d.
77	How sweet the moonlight	" 1½d.	163	The Fairy Ring ...	" 3d.	249	O say not that my heart	" 2d.
78	Land, Ho! ...	" 1½d.	164	The Light of Life	" 3d.	250	Love and mirth...	" 3d.
79	Up, up, ye Dames	" 1½d.	165	Oh, welcome him ...	" 3d.	251	Sweet Vesper hymn	" 1½d.
80	Thine eyes so bright ...	" 4d.	166	Sunshine through the	" 3d.	252	Crocuses and Snowdrops	" 1½d.
81	All is not gold ...	Westbrook 3d.	167	The Corn Field ...	" 3d.	253	Stars of the summer night	" 1½d.
82	Hark how the birds ...	H. Lahee 3d.	168	Wake! to the hunting	H. Smart 1½d.	254	Wind thy horn...	" 3d.
83	All ye woods (S.S.A.T.B.)	" 1½d.	169	Dost thou idly ask ...	" 3d.	255	The land of wonders	" 2d.
84	My love is fair (S.A.T.B.B.)	H. Leslie 1½d.	170	A Psalm of Life	" 1½d.	256	Yellite birds that sit and sing	" 3d.
85	Charm me asleep (S.A.T.B.B.)	" 3d.	171	Only Thou ...	" 1½d.	257	How soft the shades of	" 1½d.
86	When twilight dews ...	H. Hiles 1½d.	172	I prithee send me back	" 1½d.	258	How sweet is summer	" 2d.

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY RUDYARD KIPLING

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

ARRANGED AS A PART-SONG FOR S.A.T.B. BY THE COMPOSER.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro marcato.

SOPRANO. sf mf I've nev - er sailed the

ALTO. sf mf I've nev - er sailed the TENOR. sf mf I've nev - er sailed the

BASS. sf mf I've nev - er sailed the

Allegro marcato. ♩ = 108.

PIANO. fff sf mf Ped. *

A-ma-zon, I've nev - er reached Bra - zil; But the "Don" and the "Mag-da -

A-ma-zon, I've nev - er reached Bra - zil; But the "Don" and the "Mag-da -

A-ma-zon, I've nev - er reached Bra - zil; But the "Don" and the "Mag-da -

A-ma-zon, I've nev - er reached Bra - zil; But the "Don" and the "Mag-da -

Ped. *

Also published in NOVELLO'S TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 2303; and for Male Voices (T.T.B.B.) in THE ORPHEUS, No. 551; and NOVELLO'S TONIC SOL-FA SERIES, No. 2253

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO.

- le - na," They can go there when they will! Ah!
 - le - na," They can go there when they will! Ah!
 - le - na," They can go there when they will! Ah!
 - le - na," can go there when they will! Ah!

Yes, week - ly from South - amp - ton, Great steam - ers white and gold, Go...
 Yes, week - ly from South - amp - ton, Great steam - ers white and gold, Go...
 Yes, week - ly go, Go
 Yes, week - ly from South - amp - ton, Great steam - ers white and gold, Go...

roll - ing down to Ri - o, (Roll down, roll down to Ri - o!) And I'd roll - ing, roll - ing, (Roll down, roll down to Ri - o!) And I'd roll - ing down to Ri - o! (Roll down, roll down to Ri - o!) I'd roll - ing down to Ri - o! (Roll down, roll down to Ri - o!) I'd a tempo marcato.

a tempo marcato.

Ped. * Ped. *

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO.

like to roll to Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old ! to roll, ...

like to roll to Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old ! to roll, ...

like to roll to Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old ! to roll, ...

like to roll to Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old ! to roll, ...

mf f Ped. *

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

I'd like to roll to Ri - o Some

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

I'd like to roll to Ri - o Some

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

I'd like to roll to Ri - o Some

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

I'd like to roll to Ri - o Some

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

Ped. *

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO.

day be-fore I'm old!

day be-fore I'm old!

day be-fore I'm old!

day be-fore I'm old!

Ped. * Ped. sf mf *

I've nev-er seen a Jag-uar, Nor

I've nev-er seen a Jag-uar, Nor

I've nev-er seen a Jag-uar, Nor

I've nev-er seen a Jag-uar, Nor

Ped. * Ped. sf mf *

yet an Ar-ma-dill-O dil-low-ing in his ar-mour, And I

yet an Ar-ma-dill-O dil-low-ing in his ar-mour, And I

yet an Ar-ma-dill-O dil-low-ing in his ar-mour, And I

yet an Ar-ma-dill-O dil-low-ing in his ar-mour, I

Ped. * Meno mosso. pp *

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO.

A tempo.

s'pose I nev - er will, Ah ! Un - - s'pose I nev - er will, Ah ! Un - - s'pose I nev - er will, Ah ! Un - - s'pose I nev - er will, Ah ! Un - -

A tempo.

f

cres. e rall.

a tempo marcato.

- less I go to Ri - o These won - ders to be - hold, Go .. roll - ing down to

- less I go to Ri - o These won - ders to be - hold, Go .. roll - ing,

- less I go, Go roll - ing down to

- less I go to Ri - o These won - ders to be - hold, Go .. roll - ing down to cres. e rall.

a tempo marcato.

p ten. cres. e rall. sf p

Péd.

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO.

Ri - o, Roll real - ly down to Ri - o! Oh, I'd love to roll to roll - ing, Roll real - ly down to Ri - o! Oh, I'd love to roll to Ri - o, Roll real - ly down to Ri - o! I'd love to roll to Ri - o, Roll real - ly down to Ri - o! I'd love to roll to

* Ped. * p

Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old! to roll, ...
Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old! to roll, ...
Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old! to roll, ...
Ri - o Some day be - fore I'm old! to roll, ...

Ped. *

ROLLING DOWN TO RIO

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

I'd love to roll to Ri - o Some day be-fore I'm

rit. ff

I'd love to roll to Ri - o Some day be-fore I'm

rit. ff

I'd love to roll to Ri - o Some day be-fore I'm

rit. ff a tempo risoluto.

Ped. * Ped. * Ped. *

old !

old !

old !

old !

lunga pausa.

sf sf sf

Ped. * Ped. *

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 920.—Vol. 60.
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

OCTOBER 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. D.

FORTY-NINTH SEASON, 1919-1920.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1919, AT 2.30 P.M.

ELIJAH - - - - - MENDELSSOHN

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MR. BEN DAVIES.

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.
MR. HERBERT BROWN.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1919, AT 2.30 P.M.

A TALE OF OLD JAPAN - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR
THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN - PARRY
NEWS FROM WHYDAH

H. BALFOUR GARDINER

THE SPIRIT OF PAGEANTRY (ORCHESTRA ONLY)

PERCY E. FLETCHER

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MR. WALTER HYDE.

MISS DILYS JONES.
MR. FREDERICK RANALOW

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1919, AT 2.30 P.M.

CAROLS

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. JOHN COATES.

MISS DORIS VANE.
MR. GEORGE BAKER.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS CARRIE TURR.
MR. GERVASE ELWES.

MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

HIAWATHA - - COLERIDGE-TAYLOR

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.

MR. BEN DAVIES. | MR. HERBERT BROWN.

SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR

MADAME KIRKBY LUNN.

MR. GERVASE ELWES. | CAPTAIN HERBERT HEYNER.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MR. JOHN COATES.

MISS ASTRA DESMOND.
MR. NORMAN ALLIN.

THIS IS NOT A SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE VOYAGE OF MAELDUNE - STANFORD
SONGS OF THE FLEET - - - STANFORD
THE MYSTIC TRUMPETER

HAMILTON HARTY

THE VISIONS OF HANNELE (ORCHESTRA ONLY)

HUBERT BATH

MISS CARRIE TURR.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.

MISS PHYLLIS LETT.
MR. HERBERT BROWN.

Of the EIGHT CONCERTS to be given, Seven, including the Carol Concert on December 20, will be comprised in the Subscription Series. Prices of Subscription for these Seven Concerts: Stalls, £1 19s.; Arena, £1 11s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), £1 4s.
Prices of Tickets for each Concert: Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony (Reserved), 4s. 9d.; Unreserved, 3s.; Gallery (Promenade), 1s. 3d.
Subscribers' names will be received and tickets issued at the Booking Office, Royal Albert Hall, and the usual Agents.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, October 11 and 25, at 3.
LECTURES on "THE HISTORY OF MUSIC" will be given by the Principal, on Wednesdays, October 22 and 29, at 3.30.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM begins Monday, November 3.
Entrance Examination, October 29, at 3.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted. Prospectus can be had on application.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western." London.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The CHRISTMAS TERM commenced on Monday, September 22nd. A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age. Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

AUTUMN TERM COMMENCED MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 22ND:
DRAMATIC STUDENTS' PERFORMANCE of "As you Like It," in the Autumn Term. Production under the direction of Mr. IAN FORBES-ROBERTSON.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects, Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications were again advanced on April 1, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.
Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.
Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.
Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.
The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.
Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor.. .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.
SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opens on Monday, October 6.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Lessons.

Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes.
Lecture-Lessons on "Fingering: its Principles and Application," will be given by Mr. T. B. KNOTT, F.R.A.M., on November 1, 8, and 15, at 2.30.

A Six-Months' Course in "The Art of Teaching" commences on October 7, by Mr. H. L. READ, Mus. B.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

LONDON.

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M., F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers' Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

£100 SINGING; £50 Piano Scholarships,
Souvenir Cup, Cash Prizes, and Medals. Mr.
Clifton Cooke's OPEN COMPETITION November 1 and 8.
Prospectus, Secretary, 26 M, Guilford Street, W.C. 1.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and
117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.)

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teacher
Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons
in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and
Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES
STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxii, § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

Organist (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of Dr. LEWIS, Warden.
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING

TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal
Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists. Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A.

Invented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

COPY OF TESTIMONIAL from HARVEY GRACE, Esq., F.R.C.O., Editor of The Musical Times.

"February, 1919.
"The value of 'The Techniquer' was first brought home to me fully during a long period when war work made my visits to the keyboard very infrequent. I am convinced that, whether used in addition to regular technical work, or as a substitute when practice is unobtainable,
'The Techniquer' is a real boon, and I strongly advise my brother organists to give it a trial: they will be, as I am, delighted.
"HARVEY GRACE."

Send for particulars and testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL)

OFFICES: 19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

For the Fostering and Encouragement of British Music at Home and Abroad.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Secretaries for Foreign Correspondence:

MR. E. J. DENT. MR. FRANCIS TOYE.

Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

CAN YOU HELP

BY ARRANGING HOME MUSIC CIRCLES?—BY CONCERTS OR LECTURES?—BY OBTAINING NEW MEMBERS?—BY HELPING TO FOUND A BRANCH IN YOUR TOWN OR DISTRICT?—BY ASSISTING AT CENTRES (LONDON, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, ETC.) WITH LIBRARIES & CATALOGUES?

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Acting-Secretary, 19, BERNERS ST., W. 1.

STEINWAY HALL

LOWER SEYMOUR STREET, W.

(MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE)

Vocal Recital, Tuesday, October 14, at 8,

ASSISTED BY

Miss ELSIE CHANTLER, Miss MURIEL P. BARNARD, AND MASTER STANLEY FLOOD.

Accompanists:

Piano: Miss MABEL MANDER, Mr STEPHEN LUMSDEN.

Organ: Mr. F. HUBERT BELTON.

Tickets, Reserved, 7s. and 4s. 3d.; Unreserved, 2s. 3d. (including Tax), may be obtained from "Studio," 317, Regent Street, W. 1.

ASHBURTON HALL, 28, RED LION SQUARE, W.C.

COURSE OF TEN LECTURES

ON "THE STORY OF BRITISH MUSIC,"

By PERCY A. SCHOLLES, Mus. Bac.

On THURSDAY EVENINGS, at 7.30, commencing on October 16. Course Tickets (7s. 6d.) and Short Syllabus from F. TALLANT, 28, Red Lion Square, W.C. 1.

THE NEXT

Midland Competition Festival

WILL BE HELD IN

BIRMINGHAM, MAY 8-15, 1920.

SYLLABUS NOW READY,

Post-free, One Shilling,

From Hon. Secretaries, Queen's College, Birmingham.

Royal National Eisteddfod of Wales,

BARRY, AUGUST 2-7, 1920.

COMPETITIONS FOR CHOIRS, BANDS, SOLOISTS, ETC.

List of Subjects, 11d. (post-free), from Music Secretary,
Mr. W. M. WILLIAMS, 9, Old Village Road, Barry.

D. ARTHEN EVANS, General Secretary.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supercedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRS,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

CAPTAIN

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Ballad Concerts.

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Orchestral Concerts.

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Choral Concerts.

Address usual Agents, or

IBBS & TILLET, 19, HANOVER SQUARE, W. 1.

Permanent Address:

Goff's Oak, Cheshunt, Herts.

MR. CHARLES TREE

Will Sing "ELIJAH," London, Wakefield, Luton, &c., &c.
"MEPHISTO" in Berlioz's "Faust," Halifax and Leicester.
ORCHESTRAL & BALLAD CONCERTS with leading Societies.
Will give his RECITAL-LECTURE on "THE ART OF EASE IN SINGING," and its resultant LONG LIFE OF THE VOICE, throughout the country during the coming season.

Mr. TREE gives a limited number of Singing Lessons, dealing principally with that vital point—placement of voice—showing the definite means to obtain that forward position which is so essential.

Concerts, Lectures, &c. Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP
without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

PIANO SCORE OF THE BALLET:

THE GOOD-HUMoured LADIES

Music by DOMENICO SCARLATTI.

Arranged by VINCENZO TOMMASINI. Cover Design by A. P. ALLINSON.

PRICE 10s. (No Discount).

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH ST., LONDON, W. 1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS EVETTS, A.R.C.M. (SOPRANO).

Oratorios, Ballads. Recent Successes.
7, Beech Croft Road, Oxford.

MR. DONALD REID (ALTO).

(St. Paul's Cathedral.) Special Services, Oratorio, Organ Recitals, &c.
Also free for Sunday Evening engagements. 64, Burlington Avenue,
Kew Gardens, S.W.; or St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

IVOR WARREN (TENOR).

Opera, Oratorio, Concerts, &c.
Lessons in Voice-Production and Singing,
60, Belsize Road, N.W.6.

MR. JOSEPH GILBERT (BARITONE).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
Address: 26, Compton Road, Kensal Rise, N.W.10.

MR. CHARLES THORNTON (BASS-BARITONE).

Concerts, Oratorios, Receptions, &c.
For vacant dates, write, Rook's Nest, Whytecliffe Rd., Purley, Surrey.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c. For vacant dates, address
67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, F.R.C.O.,

For Organ Recitals.
27, Methuen Park, Muswell Hill, N.10.MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN
THE EMINENT ORATORIO BASS.Of the London and Principal Provincial Concerts, Royal National Eisteddfod, South Wales Musical Festival, &c., &c.BRAHMS'S "REQUIEM" (Bradford Old Choral Society).—
"SPECIAL COMMENDATION must be given to Mr. J. Coleman for the manner in which he delivered the bass solos. He sang with GREAT DIGNITY."—Bradford Daily Telegraph.The Yorkshire Post says: "Mr. James Coleman sang the baritone solos meritoriously.""GOLDEN LEGEND" (Sullivan).—Mr. James Coleman used his EXCEPTIONALLY FINE BASS VOICE with excellent effect throughout."— Bradford Daily Telegraph."ACIS AND GALATHEA."—"Mr. J. Coleman gave the Polyphemus Airs with huge success."—Bradford Daily Express."THE MESSIAH" (Wrexham Parish Church).—"Mr. James Coleman, as usual, sang the parts assigned to him superbly."—North Wales Guardian."THE MESSIAH" (Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool).—"The audience will not readily forget Mr. James Coleman's dramatic and masterly singing."—Liverpool Daily Post."THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS."—"Of the Priest one cannot record TOO MUCH PRAISE. Mr. J. Coleman opened out in the 'Profiscere anima Christiana' in great style, while his magnificent singing as the Angel of the Agony marks him out as one of the FINEST artists for this work."—Mid-Glamorgan Observer."THE VEIL."—"Mr. J. Coleman made splendid use of his resonant bass voice, coupled with an admirable conception of the philosophic doubts of the searcher after knowledge."—Western Mail.LLANDUDNO PAVILION CONCERTS.—Mr. J. Coleman has been repeating previous triumphs at Llandudno, and I must say I do not know any vocalist who gives me MORE REAL PLEASURE to listen to."
—Llandudno Advertiser.For terms and vacant dates, address, James Coleman, Vicar-Choral, Lichfield Cathedral.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now
demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte
Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore
Street, W. 1.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

GRADED POSTAL COURSES:—

- (1) L.R.A.M. Course. (3) A. and F.R.C.O. Courses.
- (2) A.R.C.M. Course. (4) Mus. B. and Mus. D. Courses.
- (5) General Musical Knowledge Course.

"Short Revision Courses" also, for each Diploma.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSSES.

For Prospectus, Address, 48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 3 First Mus. Bac.

4 Final Mus. Bac. 2 Final Mus. Doc.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. N. SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

*The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear,
along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly
permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post,
to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 136 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " "MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COM-POSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Bros., Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence.
Terms, &c. Radcliffe, Manchester.ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(formerly Mangelsdorff), of the British Expeditionary Force,
France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-INATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 47, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11.DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 869 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh
Heath, 346.DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS.
FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1.DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGELICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes,
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
L. Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE, TUITION, &c., for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSES:

- | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

SOLO BOY WANTED, for London Presbyterian Church. Light duties; good salary; many privileges. Apply, with photo, "Clef," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ALTO WANTED, for Choir of St. Peter's, Bayswater. Good Reader. Salary, £15 per annum. Write, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W. 13.

EXPERIENCED SOLO TENOR AND ALTO
REQUIRED AT ONCE, for St. Thomas's, Regent Street, W. 1. Light duties. £15. Write, Herbert Gisby, 131, Wellmeadow Road, Catford, S.E. 6.

TENOR REQUIRED, for St. Anne's, Soho. Must be good Reader and able to sing Bach's Passion Music. Salary, £25. Write, in first instance, to "Organist," 57a, Dean St., Soho, W. 1.

CHRIST CHURCH CATHEDRAL, OXFORD.

There are VACANCIES in the Choir for TWO BASSES. Salary to commence at £105, plus premium for pension. Applications to be sent to The Organist, Christ Church, Oxford, not later than October 17.

BARITONE (used to singing Bass in Church Choir) open to join C. of E. Choir, preferably in N. London. References. State terms. Herbert Kennard, 35, Arthur Road, Holloway, N. 7.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL—The post of ASSISTANT-ORGANIST is VACANT. Stipend, £100. Applications should be sent to The Organist, Manchester Cathedral.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL—ASSISTANT ORGANIST WANTED; to be also Organist of St. Margaret's Church. Combined salary, £75. Apply to Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, The Precinct, Rochester.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for St. John's Church, Keswick. Apply, stating salary required, The Vicar, St. John's Parsonage, Keswick.

WANTED, an ORGANIST & CHOIRMASTER, for Holy Trinity Church, Latimer Road, W. 10. Salary, £35 to £40 per annum. Reply to The Rev. H. T. Carnegie, Harrow Mission, Latimer Road, W. 10.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Blairgowrie Parish Church. (Two-Manual Pedal Organ, by Harrison, Durham.) Salary, £60 per annum. Applications, with copy testimonials, to be lodged with J. W. Young, Sessions Clerk, Blairgowrie, by October 8.

WANTED.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, for Sonning, near Reading. £50. Apply, with references, &c., to Rev. G. P. Crawford, The Vicarage, Sonning.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for the Parish Church, Gorleston-on-Sea. Good Organ and Choir. Every prospect of an extensive Teaching Connection. Apply, stating age, experience, and salary required, to The Vicar, Gorleston, Great Yarmouth.

REQUIRED, for St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Bedford Park, W. 4, ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER. Salary, £70 per annum. Apply, with copies of testimonials, to The Vicar.

ORGANIST WANTED at once, for the Amhurst Park Wesleyan Church. Commencing Salary, £20 p. a. Distant applications cannot be entertained. Apply, with full particulars, by letter, to Mr. Love, 23, Higham Road, London, N. 15.

ST. SIDWELL'S Wesleyan Church.—WANTED, ORGANIST. Apply, stating age, experience, salary, to Trustees' Secretary, A. J. Luscombe, "Exedene," South Summerlands, Exeter.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER of experience, A.T.C.L. Churchman, Communicant, Accompanist, Choir-trainer. Highest references. DESIRES APPOINTMENT in London (North pref.), "H. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W. 1.

ORGANIST REQUIRES BERTH. West or N.W. London. Experienced. C. of E. Would take good Assistant's berth. "Organist," 2, Coronation Rd., Park Royal, N.W. 10.

YOUNG LADY PIANIST, Good Sight-Reader and Accompanist, SEEKS ENGAGEMENTS or Musical Appointment. "M. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORCHESTRAL PRACTICE—City Society has VACANCIES for CLARINET, VIOLA, 'CELLO, and DOUBLE-BASS. Occasional public appearances. Apply, Box P, c/o Knight's Advertising Offices, 48, Watling Street, E.C. 4.

PIANO TUNERS WANTED, FOR INDIA—Apply, by letter, to "S. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGAN (PIPE) TUNER AND REPAIRER WANTED, FOR INDIA. Apply, by letter, to "S. C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

REQUIRED BY OFFICER, 5 years' service, POST IN SOME MUSICAL CAPACITY, in or near London. War prevented Degrees; but excellent knowledge of Organ, Piano, Harmony, Counterpoint, Choir-training, &c. Testimonials. "G. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MUSICIAN AND COMPOSER, with highest recommendations, desires POST in London as PUBLISHERS' READER—Revising, Arranging, &c. Thorough knowledge instrumental, vocal, choral, orchestral, and chamber music. "K.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

PIANOFORTE DEALER, established 35 years in Birmingham, good Tuning connection, DESIRES PARTNER (experienced) with Capital. Further particulars, apply, "E. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—TWO-MANUAL ("Doherty") REED ORGAN. Pedals; 26 stops and pipes; hand-blown. Carved Oak. Perfect condition. Suitable for small church. £90 net. Jarvis, 15, Wells Road, Ilkley, Yorkshire.

AMERICAN ORGAN WANTED—Two Manuals and Pedals preferred. Lowest cash price to M. T. Moore, 54, City Road, London, E.C. 1.

FOR SALE.—Three-Manual PIPE ORGAN, almost new, as now standing in S. Nicholas Church, Blackwall. Gt., 6 Stops; Sw., 6; Ch., 4; Ped., 1; Coup., 6; Comp. Ped., 6. Can be seen by appointment. S. Nicholas Church, Prestons Rd., Blackwall, E. 14.

AMERICAN ORGAN.—Fine Instrument, by STORY & CLARK. 16 Stops. Handsome Case. Loud and Soft Swell, and Grand Organ. A bargain for £25. 80, Lawrie Park Road, Sydenham, S.E. 26.

FOR SALE.—COLLARD SEMI-GRAND PIANO. In perfect condition. £130, or near offer. Also PEDAL ATTACHMENT. White, Crundale Rectory, near Canterbury.

PIANO AGENCIES FOR AUSTRALIA—Quotations wanted for Medium and Cheap Grade Pianos. Supply early New Year. Catalogues. Full particulars to "Australian," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED, in LONDON, by Musician and Composer with highest recommendations, POSITION for Coaching, Accompanying, &c. Thorough knowledge all branches best music. "W. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGANIST, giving up, has MUSIC FOR SALE. Half-price. Standard Composers. List on application. "S. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

VIOLIN, by BENJAMIN BANKS. Lovely Specimen. Hart's Guarantee. J. E. Lacy, Bac en House, Felixstowe.

BANJO, in GOOD CONDITION. A bargain, £5 5s., or close offer. 80, Lawrie Park Road, Sydenham, S.E. 26.

MANDOLIN.—Good Instrument, in GOOD CONDITION. £2 2s., including Case. 80, Lawrie Park Road, Sydenham, S.E. 26.

ZITHER-BANJO.—Splendid Tone, in GOOD CONDITION. £10 10s., including Solid Leather Case. Lambert, 80, Lawrie, Park Road, Sydenham, S.E. 26.

HARMONIUM, by BAUER, FOR SALE.—Four Sets of Reeds. Apply, "H.," 2, Morella Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W. 12.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION AND EXAMINATIONS.

PATRON—HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

PRINCIPAL—DR. F. J. KARN, MUS. BAC. CANTAB.

DIRECTOR OF EXAMINATIONS—G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, ESQ.

HIGHER EXAMINATIONS, 1919.

The following is the List of SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES at the DIPLOMA EXAMINATIONS held in London and at Provincial and Colonial Centres for the half-year to July, 1919:—

DIPLOMAS IN PRACTICAL MUSIC.

LICENTIATES (L.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Olive M. Allatt, Jessie M. Ackroyd, Annie D. H. Anderson, Eileen Allison, Elizabeth Bullock, Mary A. Bailey, Doris Button, Mary Brown, Alice I. E. Bartlett, Jean Brown, Doris M. Carver, Elizabeth Chard, Alice E. Cann, Doris C. Chapman, Harriet E. Caswell, Edith V. Clark, Margaret V. Chid. Bridie C. Daly, Bessie Davies, Hilda F. Exley, Kathleen M. Evans, Harry M. Firth, May Frizel, Clare C. Flanagan, William A. Gil, Ethel Gane, Lilian M. George, Kathleen M. Graham, Florence H. Harris, Grace E. M. Hurn, Annie J. Henderson, May Horton, Ivy E. Hill, Nora L. Hamilton, Amy Idle, Nancy Jones, Mary B. Johannesson, Leonard A. Kew, Joseph W. Lyons, Joseph Lancaster, Rees T. Lewis, Elsie M. Louis, Blodwen M. Lewis, William H. Mould, Leslie D. Maitland, Florence E. Morris, Rose E. Moore, Elizabeth M. Maxwell, Mary B. Morgan, Blodwen Miles, Cragg W. Moate, Etheline Mitchell, Veronica M. Meyers, Ada Nicholls, Emma Oliver, Dorothy M. Prince, Doris Prothero, Ella M. Procter, Mena Pfeiffer, Kathleen E. Reynolds, Harry Richards, Margaret M. Roche, Nettie Rice, Ivy L. Sandstrom, Winifred Savage, Elsie Shoard, Maisie D. Srawley, John Sanderson, Douglas Smith, Mary E. Smith, Gladys M. G. Scott, Dorothy Simpson, Dora Sanderson, Margaret A. Smyth, Mavis I. V. Spurrell, May Smith, Dorothy Tranter, Ina Tocher, Minnie G. Tomkins, Lydia Unwin, Elsie Wood, Emily Woodworth, Marie Wall, William G. Woolton, Winifred Worrall, Fred Watson, Helen I. S. Wragg, Alice Wilcox, Amy J. Witheford, Florence Winsbury.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Alfred Copp, Albert Davis, Alex Gordon, Elsie Hill, Irene Hill, Lily Hopkins, Oswald Yat Sen Lyen, John McIlroy, Elizabeth Moody, Elizabeth R. Pocock.

ORGAN PLAYING.—Alexander B. Anderson, William H. Simon.

SINGING.—Edith Bannister, Gladys Bolton, Daphne Farrell, Mabel Harwood, Violet E. E. Jones, Edward J. Meredith.

ELOCUTION.—Mona M. Scilley, Lily Ward, Ethel Waller.

TEACHERS' DIPLOMA (T.D.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Charles H. H. Bock, Beryl Clark, Cecilia Conaghty, Ada E. Thomas, Phyllis B. Angela Taylor.

ELOCUTION.—Patrick J. Dear, Sally Lobel, Primrose Spence.

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.).

PIANOFORTE PLAYING.—Ethel Anderson, Olive E. Aspinall, Donald Atkinson, Donald Andrews, Ellen Allen, Grace O. Anderson, May Andrew, Minnie E. Breeze, Thomas Bridges, Ada C. Bennett, Agnes Beahan, Gladys V. Buckley, Ellen Boulter, Alfred Bollington, Mary Bryant, Gladys C. Burnett, Elsie Brown, Winifred M. Butler, Doris K. Ball, Richard A. B. Burke, Doris E. Baker, Sybil E. Baynam, Catherine Beddoe, Ivy W. Browne, Emily Bowling, Lilian Booth, Dorothy G. Bargery, Doris Blinkhorn, Thelma E. Bennett, May Brooks, Hilda Boyton, Hannah Blakey, Doris M. Brett, Marjorie Broomfield, Eva M. I. Butt, Doris M. Rywater, William R. Bennett, Olga I. J. Clark, Lillian A. Cooper, Filletta R. Coulson, Fedora Curry, Eunice Comer, Amy Cobb, Alice Craig, Edith Carter, Dora L. Chambers, Gladys V. Crick, Sallie Connor, Kathleen M. Carrington, Vida C. Coldwell, Theresa Clough, Doris Cowell, Sarah Crewe, Doris V. Clitherow, Eliza Carnall, Emma Connor, Florence H. Cross, Annie I. Close, Marie T. Cadisch, Alice M. Carr, Kathleen M. Cowley, Mary Cooper, Edith Connor, Louis A. Cramer, Constance M. Cave, Ruth Crawshaw, Elsie M. Charman, Hilda Crook, Freda E. Carpenter, Edith Court, Edna Courtis, Elizabeth Corrie, Annie E. I. Chilton, Eileen M. Coles, Agnes M. Cooke, Macey Cadden, Hanna W. Cameron, Lilian E. Curtis, Eleanor E. Clancy, Jane Carlyle, Irene Cumming, Isabella Cosson, Cicely V. Critchley, Maudie Dunn, Hope Daley, Nellie I. Duncan, Elsie Davies, Florence Davies, Lizzie C. J. Delaney, Eileen Duffy, Mary A. Denton, Hilda V. F. M. Davey, Eva E. Driver, Hannah Davies, Cyril Davis, Maisie Dunne, Violet Davies, Ida F. M. Day, Nancy N. Dix, Elsie M. H. Davis, Lilian Drowley, Margaret Davies, Rachel A. Davies, Ruth Edwards, Elizabeth L. Evans, Mary Egan, Marianne E. English, Margaret S. Edwards, Evelyn E. Ellis, Elsie Ellis, Beryl M. Elliott, Elizabeth Etechells, Doris A. M. Flegg, Vera N. Fordham, Cissie T. Field, Olive E. Fisher, Miriam Freiman, Catherine H. L. Forbes, Ethel L. Freeman, Nellie B. Field, Gladys M. Foster, Florence Francis, Nellie Frost, Florence A. Friswell, Alice Grigg, Yvonne Gombert, Agnes Gray, Ida Gibbs, Elsie Gleeson, Annie E. Garforth, Marjorie Griffiths, Mary E. Griffiths, Susa Gleeson, Annie Griffiths, Edith M. Granger, Lloyd George, Margaret B. Gardner, May Gordon, Ellaline M. Gentry, Minnie Galdini, Agnes Gray, George Gordon, Jessie S. Galloway, Eliza Goodwin, Lavender W. Gerard, Elizabeth Geraghty, Isabel Goitisol, Gladys Gadsen, Gertrude M. Giles, Agnes Galvin, Monica M. Gibson, Caroline H. Gill, Iris Green, Lily C. Holt, William R. Hanson, David W. Hughes, Winifred K. Harding, Sarah F. Hopkins, May Harren, Margaret Holdcroft, Ida V. Hicks, Mary A. Higgins, Marjorie Howard, Maud Hill, Mona Holt, Lilian Heath, Doris M. A. Horton, Sarah E. R. Hunter, Clarice F. Hart, Dorothy S. Horne, Lillias Hunter, Alice D. Heffernan, Cecily M. E. Hill, Dorothy L. Hawtin, Mabel W. Hudson, Marion Henry, Veta Hewett, Lily Ingram, Elsie Isaacs, Mary A. Jones, Ceinwen Jones, Marie James, Gladys Jones, Elsie Jones, Margaret A. Johnson, Evelyn M. B. Jackson, Violet James, Cushila Jones, Mary C. Jones, Muriel L. Jephson, Florence L. King, Kathleen Kelly, Esther M. Kitchin, Eleanor A. King, Gladys V. Knappan, Mary I. Koch, Evelyn Kirk, Lillian Keep, Gwendolen Lewis, Edith F. Lyne, Mary Long, Margaret B. Laird, Hilda R. Lloyd, Amy M. Lowlsly, Dorothy Lee, George H. Law, Ethel Leaver, William Longdin, John E. L. Lazzari, David T. Lane, Frederick E. Lefever, Aline M. Lovett, Eva I. Lines, Iris A. Longmuir, Annie Lockett, Lilian Loynds, Gwladys Mathias, Hannah McKavanagh, Ethel E. Mackinlay, Christina M. Mielbach, Florence McKenzie, Florence Michaels, Florence M. Mellors, Barbara Marshall, Hilda A. Mursell, Rosa Masson, Gertrude McMahon, Mary E. G. McIntyre, Una M. Morris, Cora E. Morris, Pearl F. Marshall, Doris C. Macpherson, Evelyn R. Montgomery, Alice McDougall, Millie McLaren, Jessie H. Meyer, Ivy P. Mitchell, Ella Miller, Linda M. Mason, Sylvia I. Matthew, Vivie F. McCardle, Connie Mullin, William Mackay, Alma H. Macgraw, Lucy Mullens, T. Oriel Meredith, Caroline M. E. Newall, Edith V. Newman, Gertrude Needham, Gertrude M. Noonan, Ruby Neilson, Vera Nelson, Katie Owen, Mary J. Owen, Edith M. Owen, Francis M. A. Officer, Alice M. O'Gara, Dora O'Connor, Grace Oxley, Theresa O'Halloran, Gladys Pedlow, Rose D. G. Paton, Hilda W. Phillips, Alice E. Price, Gwendoline A. Preston, Alice G. Pilling, Dorothy Pearson, Eleanor E. Perkin, Elizabeth Pimblett, Edna R. M. Pryor, May L. Plummer, Rita Perry, Elizabeth Perry, Lizzie Power, Lucy Patrick, May Patmore, Janet Patterson, Philomena Rheinberger, Elsie Richardson, Aileen M. Ryan, Lena M. Ryan, Molly Ryan, Edna Robson, Winifred E. Russell, Kathleen H. Rolph, Elsa Rowntree, Edna E. Reader, Cecil Reece, Edith I. Roscoe, Millicent Rolfe, Foma D. Renton, Beatrice Rhodes, Elizabeth R. L. Roberts, Grantley Rudge, Freida Robinson, Mary Rooney, Renee Riesterer, Ethel Ryle, Catherine Rothwell, Constance G. Robertson, Annie H. Rankin, Idris Roderick, Edith Rogers, Ethel M. Reed, Dorothea I. Kudland, Elsie Riddle, Jean S. Ross, Arthur Street, Mina Sims, Kathleen D. Sargent, Lydia M. Spray, Alice Sykes, Constance Simpson, Joseph Simpson, Dorothy Simpson, Genia Scott, Clara J. Stewart, Doris E. Short, Elsie S. Simpson, Ethel W. Scriven, Nellie Sparkes, Annie B. Strangleman, Amy Slater, Lottie Shaw, Lilian Standerwick, Stella B. Shallcross, Audrey Smith, Bessie M. Salmon, Emily M. Stephens, Cora A. Smythe, Doris Stuckenschmidt, Rita Suffern, Rita Sayers, Winifred N. Stacpool, Irene E. Stebbing, Edna L. Stone, Elma Sawyer, Ettie M. Suna, Lila A. Sanders, May E. Timbs, Florence L. Tomkins, Edith Thomas, Gladys V. Thornton, Henrietta A. Tait, Maisie W. Tibbins, Bessie Thomas, Percy Thomasson, Catherine S. Thomas, George F. W. Tinsdale, Jessie P. Taylor, Grace Treharne, Clara Thomas, Kate E. E. Tunstall, Fanny Todd, Thomas S. Taylor, Edith Thirlway, Hilda Taylor, Harold Trueman, Ethel M. J. Thomas, Ethel Tonkin, Geraldine Townsend, Sylvia Taylor, Emily M. Tuck, Marion Upex, Doris G. Verrall, Martha L. Veall, Alice M. Vince, Marie Vickers, Grace L. Vassar, Jessie Valentine, Ella White, Mary Wilson, Kathleen Waters, Beatrice K. Williams, Florence M. Winch, Florence A. Wilson, Lilian Winship, Marion F. Wild, Eleanor E. Williams, Mabel Willis, Doris L. Wilson, Adeline F. Worlin, Jeannie C. C. Wilson, Margaret Watkins, Sarah W. Wells, Marian Walker, Marjorie Wilkinson, Dorothy E. Wyatt, Elizabeth Woodhead, Constance V. Wells, Harold Ward, Alice M. Webb, Sarah A. Wainwright, Marv Wilson, Essie M. Witton, Fanny V. Weymouth, Lilian Withell, Fanny E. Warden, Margaret I. Winkelman, Edith E. Wood, Doris Walton, Esther M. Watters, Gladys A. Whitten.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

ASSOCIATES (A.L.C.M.)—Continued.

VIOLIN PLAYING.—Anna L. Bartels, William T. Backhouse, Charles W. Clark, Eileen Connell, William E. Dalleywater, Doris Formby, John Farrimond, Evelyn Gibbs, David Jacobson, Frederick R. Johnson, Ilma Marie, Mavis Morris, Phyllis O'Dwyer, Winnie Pithie, Freda A. Rigby, Thomas Slattery, Una A. Schlesinger, Norma A. Telgmann, Mary Thornton, William H. Yates, May Young.

SINGING.—Jessie M. Bilby, Gladys Bolton, Violet F. Bryant, Minerva M. Clarke, Marie Cobbledick, Nellie Courtial, Evelyn Daniels, Dora M. Derbyshire, Alice Eyre, Rosina I. Edwards, Elizabeth E. Evans Dora Gray, Hilda L. Hawkins, Leonard W. Hanks, Florence E. Jones, Hope Kerr, Ruby Kemelfield, Olive C. Lewis, Elizabeth L. Mackenzie, Barbara F. S. Masters, Elsie Molyneux, Charles H. Pollard, Dorothy Speight, Dora Stansfield, Florence H. Wakefield, May Willis, Grace Wilkinson, Katie Woodbridge, Ellen G. L. Young.

ORGAN PLAYING.—Wilfred A. Bishop, Ernest H. Davis, Frank H. W. Monk, Cecil S. Richards, William H. Simon.

VIOLONCELLO PLAYING.—Tasma Tiernan.

CORNET PLAYING.—Arthur Eaves, Frank Wright.

EUPHONIUM PLAYING.—Thomas S. Johnstone.

ELOCUTION.—Beatrice M. Ashton, Annie R. Adamson, Dorothy F. Ashton, Constance H. Barritt, Rosalind M. Branford, Elsie B. Church, Francis J. Duffy, Annie A. Fleming, Alice C. Greenwood, Eleanor J. Herriott, Annie Hutton, Beatrice M. Hoyle, Cherry Holmes, Francis P. Jones, Ursula Kirkbride, Agnes Milroy, Dora McCall, Ada Plant, Marjorie Pym, Florence A. Sloss, Lily Ward, Winifred Ward, Mabel A. Worrall, Mary W. C. Young.

DIPLOMAS IN THEORETICAL MUSIC.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A.Mus.L.C.M.).

Grace E. Blencowe, Alice Couchman, Albert Green, Mary Hand, Ernest E. Huck, Albert H. Jones, Enverness W. McDavid, Ada Nicholls, Nicholas Robins, Beatrice F. Stables, Gladys Stewart.

The examiners were: Horton Allison, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Cantab., F.R.A.M.; Alfred W. Abdey, Esq., Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O.; Edward R. G. Andrews, Esq.; Algernon Ashton, Esq.; S. Bath, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.; Percy S. Bright, Esq., Mus. Bac. Lond., F.R.C.O.; Chas. T. Corke, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab., A.R.A.M.; H. Bromley Derry, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon. et Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; W. O. Forsyth, Esq.; Leonard N. Fowles, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; Cuthbert Harris, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.; Thomas Hassard, Esq., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; H. F. Henniker, Esq., Mus. Doc. Cantuar., A.R.A.M.; G. Augustus Holmes, Esq., Director of Examinations; George Herbert, Esq.; George Hooper, Esq., A.R.A.M.; A. H. Howell, Esq.; Charles E. Jolley, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; F. J. Karn, Esq., Mus. Doc., T.U.T., Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Geo. F. King, Esq.; M. Kingston, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Thomas W. Lardner, Esq., Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., A.R.A.M.; D. J. Montague, Esq.; G. D. Rawle, Esq., Mus. Bac. Lond.; Roland Rogers, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.; J. Howlett Ross, Esq.; R. Walker Robson, Esq., Mus. Doc., Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., L.R.A.M.; Sydney Scott, Esq., Mus. Doc. Dublin, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.; G. Gilbert Stocks, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.; Reginald J. Shanks, Esq.; C. Reginald Toms, Esq.; John Thornton, Esq.; Harold E. Watts, Esq., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

There were 1,140 Candidates for Diplomas, of which number 628 passed, 486 failed, and 26 were absent.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the DIPLOMAS of ASSOCIATE (A.L.C.M.) and LICENTIATE (L.L.C.M.) are held in London and at certain Provincial and Colonial centres in APRIL, JUNE, JULY, and DECEMBER; and for the DIPLOMAS of ASSOCIATE IN MUSIC (A.Mus.L.C.M.), LICENTIATE IN MUSIC (L.Mus.L.C.M.), the TEACHER'S DIPLOMA (L.C.M.), and FELLOWSHIP (F.L.C.M.) in JUNE, JULY, and DECEMBER.

The NEXT LOCAL EXAMINATION in all branches of practical and theoretical music will be held in December, the last day of entry being November 15.

REPRESENTATIVES are required to form LOCAL CENTRES in vacant districts in Great Britain and all other parts of the world. Ladies or gentlemen willing to undertake the duties should apply to the Secretary for particulars. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

GOLD, SILVER, and BRONZE MEDALS and BOOK PRIZES are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations. Full details will be found in the Syllabus.

The TEACHING DEPARTMENT of the College provides COMPLETE MUSICAL EDUCATION for Students, Amateur or Professional. PRIVATE LESSONS are given in Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Harp, Organ, Harmony, Counterpoint, and Musical Composition (including Fugue, Orchestration, and Musical History), Mandoline, Guitar, and Elocution; also in Violoncello, Flute, Clarinet, and all other orchestral instruments. LESSONS MAY COMMENCE FROM ANY DATE.

There are CLASSES in Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint, Ear Training, Sight Singing, &c.; also SPECIAL COURSE of TRAINING for Teachers of Music, and PROFESSIONAL COURSE for Pianists, Violinists, and Vocalists. Fine THREE-MANUAL ORGAN (39 stops) in the College Concert Hall, available for lessons and practice.

The College is open from 9.30 a.m. to 9 p.m. The staff consists of over 90 professors.

The ORCHESTRA, OPERA CLASS, CHOIR, STRING QUARTET CLASS, DRAMATIC CLASS, and CONDUCTORS' CLASS meet each week.

The 245th Students' Concert took place in the Concert Hall of the College on July 9.

The Opera Class have in rehearsal "Iolanthe," by Gilbert and Sullivan.

Full particulars of both Education and Examination Departments of the College, together with Syllabus and Forms of Entry, can be obtained on application to

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telephones: 3870 Central and 3948 Gerrard.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London."

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, MUS. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, MUS. D.

October 1st, at 3 p.m.—Inaugural Address, to be delivered by H. A. HARDING, MUS. D., F.R.C.O.October 8th and 22nd, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concerts.October 15th, at 3 p.m.—Lecture-Recital by Dr. C. W. PEARCE, on "The English School of Organ Building and Organ Playing, between 1815 and 1851."October 23rd, at 4 p.m.—First of Four Musical History Lectures by Dr. C. W. PEARCE. Subject: "The immediate predecessors of J. S. Bach in his own country."October 29th, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte and Violocello Recital by Messrs. HENRY GEEHL and L. LEBELL.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

THE ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys for Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

CYRIL SCOTT

MODERN FINGER-EXERCISES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

Price 3s. net.

PRESS NOTICE.—"For every pianist who looks forward musically these exercises will be a boon. They will simplify much modern music which would otherwise offer obstacles to the student."

CYRIL SCOTT

SECOND

PIANOFORTE ALBUM

CONTENTS:

RUSSIAN DANCE.	ASPHODEL.
INTERMEZZO.	CAVATINA.
ODE HEROIQUE.

Price 3s. 6d. net cash.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Music Dealers.

BROADWOOD

PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

The Secret of Successful Practice

(SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIC)

DOUGLAS TAYLER - - 1s. 3d.

"I have read it carefully, and find it full of wise hints put in an interesting way."—WM. TOWNSEND, Author of "Balance of Arm."

FAIRIES OF THE STREAM

KETÉLBEY.

This is a Valse Brillante of the Durand type. It is melodious, sparkling, and makes a brilliant show piece for any Pianist of moderate attainment. A British product, it should easily take the place of the imported article, and be given its chance on all School programmes and syllabuses.

NEW ALBUMS FOR THE PIANO.

LEE WILLIAMS SPRING IMPRESSIONS.

ARTHUR SOMERVELL BY THE SEA.

Both these Albums are worthy the attention of every Professor and Amateur.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR. WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

A

WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

"One of the most lively books of the season. It is a handsome, well-illustrated volume, and without a dull page."

"One of the most satisfying volumes of the kind that we have ever read."

Other Press Notices will be found on page 570.

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

(From a Photograph by Thos. Barker, Cork.)

QUEENSTOWN CATHEDRAL.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

OCTOBER 1, 1919.

QUEENSTOWN CATHEDRAL.

By W. WOODING STARMER.

On entering the 'Cove of Cork,' admittedly one of the finest harbours in the world, the most conspicuous object on the hill overlooking Queenstown Harbour is the beautiful cathedral of St. Colman—the glory of the diocese of Cloyne, and one of the most graceful structures in the kingdom. The site on which it stands—that of a former church—is 150-ft. above the sea level, and commands a magnificent view seawards. This noble building, which has been in course of erection for half a century—the first stone was laid on September 30, 1868, by the then Bishop of Cloyne, the Rev. Dr. Keane—is now completed, and was consecrated with due solemnity on Sunday, August 24. At first considerable trouble was experienced in making the foundations, which in some places are over 25-ft. deep; these difficulties, however, were so successfully dealt with that the substructure is as solid as the rock itself.

The original designs of the Cathedral were by the eminent architects, Messrs. Pugin & Ashlin. When the outer walls had reached a height of 12-ft. it was decided that these designs were too plain, and lacked the requisite dignity of an important cathedral church. Consequently Mr. Ashlin prepared the new plans for the present ornate Gothic structure, a special feature of which is the artistic elaboration of detail in every part of the building. It is surely Mr. Ashlin's chef d'œuvre, displaying genius and capacity of the highest order.

Bishop Keane died in January, 1874, and was succeeded by the Rev. Dr. McCarthy, who pushed on the work to such advantage that the roof was completed in 1879. He also adorned the exterior with a number of fine statues of apostles and saints. The High Altar—a gem of art as to design, materials, and execution—was erected by the priests of the diocese to commemorate the fiftieth year of Dr. McCarthy's priesthood. Bishop McCarthy died in December, 1893, and was succeeded by the Rev. Dr. Browne, the present Bishop of Cloyne, who by his zealous labours and long years of office has completed the magnificent building scheme. During his period the most important additions have been the completion of the tower and spire, the clock and chimes, the carillon of forty-two bells with clavier, the sacristies, numerous stained glass windows, and much other decorative work. The internal dimensions are as follows: Length, east to west, 210-ft.; width, nave and aisles, 84-ft.; height of roof, nave, chancel, and transepts, 100-ft.; height of interior ceiling, 80-ft. The height of the tower and spire (to the top of the cross) is 300-ft. The structure has cost approximately £200,000.

The nave and transepts are groined with pitch-pine and the aisles with stone. The outer walls are of blue Dalkey granite, with cut stone dressings of Mallow limestone. The columns of the nave, shrines, and confessionals are of Irish marble from the quarries of Fermoy, Midleton, and Connemara. All these take a very high polish, and no material could have been used with better results. The mosaic flooring is of exquisite Celtic pattern. The tower is faced with Newry granite, but the spire is of limestone.

A RICH INTERIOR.

Internally, the vertical mouldings, the diapered ornamentation of the walls, and the elaborately carved capitals, combine to produce a richness of effect unequalled in any other modern church in Ireland. The continuation of the nave walls as a screen across the transepts, and the open triforium with its moulded arches and columns extending throughout the building, are remarkable features. The apse, with its rich arcading and tracery, gorgeous colouring of the windows, and the very beautiful detail of the marble reredos, is most striking in character.

THE EXTERIOR.

The exterior is a most impressive example of early decorated French Gothic. The west front is particularly attractive, with its deeply recessed moulded arch, rising the full height of the front and enclosing the main entrance doorway and the rose window above it. The elegant tower and spire, the octagonal turrets, and the flying buttresses, complete the general effect of proportion and beautiful outline of the building as a whole.

THE ORGAN.

The organ, by Messrs. Telford, of Dublin, is erected in the west gallery. The splendid oak case is specially designed so as to accentuate the graceful lines of the rose window and its stained glass. Rising to a height of 45-ft. on either side are towers in Gothic tracery, forming a most artistic adornment to the west end of the Cathedral. For the front there are seventy-seven pipes of pure tin, polished and burnished. The action is tubular pneumatic throughout, with a console facing west. There are fifty-nine draw-stops, nine combination pistons for Swell, Great, and Pedal organs, pedal helps for each manual actuated by hinged tablets, and 2,468 pipes. The wind supply is excellently provided for by the electric installation in the tower.

SPECIFICATION.

Great Organ (Compass CC to G), 56 notes.

	Ft.		Ft.
1. Double Salicional ..	16	10. Flute ..	4
2. Bourdon ..	16	11. Gemshorn ..	4
3. Large Open Diapason ..	8	12. Twelfth ..	2½
4. Small Open Diapason ..	8	13. Fifteenth ..	2
5. Flute ..	8	14. Mixture (3 ranks) ..	16
6. Stopped Diapason ..	8	15. Double Trumpet ..	8
7. Gamba ..	8	16. Trumpet ..	8
8. Quint ..	5½	17. Clarion ..	4
9. Principal ..	4

SWELL ORGAN.

	Ft.		Ft.
18. Lieblich Gedackt ..	16	25. Harmonic Piccolo ..	2
19. Open Diapason ..	8	26. Mixture (3 ranks) ..	16
20. Gedackt ..	8	27. Double Bassoon ..	8
21. Dulciana ..	8	28. Cornopean ..	8
22. Voix Celeste ..	8	29. Oboe ..	8
23. Principal ..	4	30. Clarion ..	4
24. Wald Flute ..	4	31. Tremulant ..	—

SWELL PEDAL ORGAN AND COUPLERS.

	Ft.		Ft.
32. Violone ..	16	35. 'Cello ..	8
33. Bourdon ..	16	36. Swell to Pedal ..	—
34. Flute ..	8	37. Swell to Great ..	—

CHOIR ORGAN.

	Ft.		Ft.
38. Gamba ..	8	41. Clarabella ..	8
39. Dulciana ..	8	42. Harmonic Flute ..	4
40. Stopped Diapason ..	8	43. Clarinet ..	8

CHOIR PEDAL ORGAN AND COUPLERS.

	Ft.		Ft.
44. Bourdon ..	16	47. Swell to Choir ..	—
45. Flute ..	8	48. Great to Choir ..	—
46. Choir to Pedal ..	—

PEDAL ORGAN AND COUPLERS.

	Ft.		Ft.
47. Open Diapason ..	16	55. Gross Quint ..	10½
50. Violone ..	16	56. Bombard ..	16
51. Bourdon ..	16	57. Trumpet ..	8
52. Octave ..	8	58. Swell to Great ..	—
53. 'Cello ..	8	59. Great to Pedal ..	—
54. Flute ..	8

THE CLOCK AND QUARTER CHIMES.

The clock and carillon machine is by Messrs. Smith, of Derby, and the movement is the largest and most powerful in Ireland. The clock face is 7-ft. 6-in. in diameter. The quarter chimes (Westminster) are played on four bells, and the hour is struck on the great bell—the first stroke being the exact time. The clock also operates the chime-tune mechanism which requisitions seventeen bells of the carillon and plays twelve tunes: (1.) 'The Minstrel Boy'; (2.) 'The Harp that once'; (3.) 'Let Erin remember'; (4.) 'Faith of our fathers'; (5.) 'Erin, the Tear'; (6.) 'God of mercy'; (7.) 'Adeste Fideles'; (8.) 'Hail! glorious St. Patrick'; (9.) 'God bless our Pope'; (10.) 'Tantum ergo'; (11.) 'How dear to me'; (12.) 'Avenging and Bright.'

The chime-tunes are so arranged that, so far as possible, the bells are used equally, such a method keeping the whole of the mechanism in working order and preventing the undue wear of any particular bells and their connections.

THE CARILLON.

The carillon of forty-two bells with clavier 3½-octaves in compass is the largest and finest in the United Kingdom, and the most perfect set of bells in the world tuned to equal temperament. The founders are Messrs. John & Denison Taylor, of Loughborough. The total weight of the bells is 17-tons 2-cwt. The weights of the six largest are as follows:

		cwts.	qrs.	lbs.
1.	F	20	0	5
2.	D#	24	2	6
3.	D	28	2	26
4.	C#	35	1	15
5.	B	48	2	3
6.	A	67	2	22

The smallest bell weighs only 13-lb.

THE QUEENSTOWN BELLS

SCALE.

All sounding one octave higher.Photo. by

INTERIOR OF THE CATHEDRAL.

Thos. Barker, Cork.

A special feature of the day's proceedings on August 24 was the inauguration of the carillon by M. Antoine Nauwelaerts, the city carillonneur of Bruges, who gave three recitals, the programmes of which were as follows:

MORNING, 11.15 TO 11.45.

Sonata	...	...	...	...	G. Van Hoey
'Ave Maria'	...	...	...	...	Schubert
Prelude in C major	...	...	...	...	Bach
Adagio from 'Pathetic' Sonata	...	...	...	...	Beethoven
Neapolitan Song	...	...	...	...	Casella
'Rubensmarch'	...	...	...	...	Benoit

AFTERNOON, 3.45 TO 4.30.

'Song of Victory'	...	...	...	...	Mestdagh
'Pêcheurs de perles'	...	...	...	...	Bizet
'O star of eve'	...	...	...	...	Wagner
Gavotte	...	...	...	...	Vandervell
'Spring Song'	...	...	...	...	Mendelssohn
Serenade	...	...	...	...	Gabriel Marie
'Rubensmarch'	...	...	...	...	Benoit
'Berceuse de Jocelyn'	...	...	...	...	Godard

EVENING, 7.30 TO 8.15.

Fantasia 'Les Cloches de Corneville' ...	Planquette
Flemish Songs :
(a) 'My mother tongue'	Benoît
(b) 'When the swallows homeward fly' ...	De Broeck
(c) 'Antwerp Tower'	Verhaeren
Stances	Flegier
Andante cantabile	Denyn
Intermezzo	Mascagni
Fantasia, 'Carmen'	Bizet

In listening to carillon playing it should be borne in mind that practically all the music must be specially arranged by the player for the instrument on which he is performing, as carillons vary so much in the number and weight of the bells and in the compass of the clavier. A noteworthy feature of the Queenstown carillon is the great advance made in the action-work connecting the clavier with the bells, giving the player easy and absolute control over the amount of tone he desires. The Queenstown carillon is tuned to equal temperament to the accuracy of a single vibration—a splendid achievement which is historic in the matter of bell-tuning. In the Continental carillons—not excepting the most famous ones (particularly when they contain bells of many periods and founders), the tuning has never been accurate enough to permit of any consideration as to 'just' or 'equal' temperament. The task of the carillonneur has always been to hide the defects of his instrument and to choose only those keys and harmonies which are most effective. The Queenstown bells offer no such difficulties to the player.

M. ANTOINE NAUWELAERTS.

M. Nauwelaerts is one of the best representative players of the modern Belgian school of carillon playing. The items of his programmes were all well chosen, showing the possibilities of the bells as well as his great executive ability, for he is indeed a master of his art. His playing was brilliant, with well-defined rhythm. The deep expressive powers displayed in Schubert's 'Ave Maria' and Beethoven's 'Adagio' were a revelation as to the capabilities of bells. Benoit's 'Rubens-march' perhaps showed his splendid pedal technique to the greatest advantage. The immense audience—for the town was thronged with people—was quite carried away by the delicacy of the pianissimo passages and the rich and resonant tone of the bells.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

(Continued from September number, page 462.)

VI.—GUSTAV HOLST.

When, at an earlier stage of the movement which has attracted attention to our native composers, many of us were distressed at the devastating uniformity of the products of our teaching institutions, one commonly heard two names cited as striking exceptions—those of Gustav von Holst (as he was then known) and Vaughan Williams. Because they had escaped the impress of the mould, there was an excusable tendency to regard them both as revolutionaries. Now that the passage of time has improved our sense of perspective, we are compelled to admit that there is very little that is typical of revolution in either of them; that, at least in some respects, they might both be described as reacting towards influences historically anterior to those brought to bear upon them in their student years; and that if their work differs characteristically from that of most of their contemporaries, it must be attributed to causes other than those which precipitate a mutiny. If at any time in his career Holst appeared to be shouting 'À la lanterne,' it was not because he wanted to cut off anybody's head, but because he wanted more light. Possibly that desire contained within itself elements of heresy, as the student who seeks enlightenment other than that of authority is not commonly held up for the emulation of his fellows; but if heresy there was, it was passive, without flags or manifestos, and, above all, without proselytism. The fact is that Holst seems to have set out with an unusually clear conception of what he wanted to do, and whatever he may have rejected in the course of moulding his music to his liking, he rejected, not because he disapproved of it, but because it did not happen to suit his purpose. At the same time, he was then too diffident concerning his own aim, and has remained far too modest, to attempt to prescribe for others. In this fashion he has attained to an achievement which is rare, not only in music, but in all art: the assertion of personality without arrogance. Both in his music itself, and in such utterances as he may be persuaded to make about music, there is a contrast amounting almost to paradox between his insistence upon self-expression and the absence of egotism in his musical ideals. Such freedom as he has won for himself, he encourages the humblest of his pupils to seek. As an instance, if they invent—or think they have invented—a melody, he tells them to give it a free rein, and leaves others to impose the shackles of the four-bar phrase with its cadential handcuffs. Such license as may result will, if it is bad, correct itself with the gradual development of musical taste; but, given innate talent, there is always the chance that it may be good, and the phantasy of which it is the expression might be dulled for ever if subjected to rigid symmetry at the tenderest stage of its growth.

The statement that Holst set out with a clear conception of what he wanted to do requires qualifying. It was not a dogmatic programme, nor was it aggressively self-conscious. I have described it as clear, but this clearness is due to its original simplicity. In the first place he wanted to write music. The other articles of his musical creed evolved gradually, and clustered round this elementary impulse. Now, it sounds like a platitude to say that a successful composer began with a desire to write music, but it is nothing of the kind. Most budding composers are hampered by a multitude of other motives. The lowest of them is to acquire fame and applause. Wealth may be left out of account, for it is happily inaccessible to composers of artistic worth. The highest of them is to reform a world which does not want to be reformed. Between these two lie all kinds of impulses arising out of youthful emotions. The young aspirant who sits down to a sheet of music-paper with no other desire than that of making music is in reality very exceptional. Holst himself, in retrospective mood, claims that he had the initial advantage of not being hampered with great and noble ideas clamouring for expression. There is evidence of it in his early works, which held no greater promise than that of a pleasantly melodious writer of unexciting music. An anonymous critic in a musical contemporary suggests that he might have developed into another Edward German. He sowed no wild oats, not from excess of scruple, but because he had none to sow. Most emphatically he has not sown the wind, and so has been preserved from reaping the whirlwind. And the secret of this commendable abstention is contained in that apparent platitude. His preoccupations at this time were exclusively musical. He seems to have been strangely immune even from the most prevalent of youthful temptations, that of showing how clever he was. In fact, in the conventional, and especially in the academic sense, he had no cleverness to display. Scholarships exist in this country in such profusion that scarcely any pupil of respectable ability escapes one. As a boy, Holst tried seven or eight times in succession to secure one, and succeeded only within a few days of passing the age-limit. It is beginning to be recognised that failure to obtain a musical degree is of excellent augury for a musician's future. Holst's case shows that there is something to be said in favour of failure to win a scholarship.

Gustavus Theodore von Holst, to give him for once his full name, was born in 1874, at Cheltenham. Before the war he was assured by cynically-minded friends that this exotic handful would be of great advantage to him in an English career. When war broke out it became very much the reverse. Having no occasion to bear his ancestors any ill-will, he appears to have been indifferent to either argument until last year, when offering his services under the Educational scheme of the Y.M.C.A.* It was then pointed out to him that the 'von,' however innocent in itself, would not be helpful in the task he was about to undertake, and he thereupon took the necessary legal steps to free himself from the encumbrance. As however a foreign tinge still clings to his name, it is perhaps advisable to say something of his family, although the tale has been told so often that there can be few musicians left who still regard him as anything but an Englishman. It was originally a Swedish family, but at the time when Sweden was practically mistress of the Baltic, branches of it settled in Dantzic and Riga. The composer's great-grandfather, born in 1767, migrated from Riga in 1807 with his Russian wife, and died at Hampstead in 1854. Their son Gustavus Valentin von Holst was born at Riga, but was only eight years old when they brought him to England. His wife, Honoria Gooderich, hailed from Norwich. They settled at Cheltenham, and their son, Adolf von Holst, became well known locally as pianist and organist. He married a Cheltenham lady, Clara Lediard, and students of heredity can work out for themselves how much of Swedish or Russian blood circulates in the veins of Gustav Holst, their son. Of German blood there is certainly none, for the family never had any German connections. Even the collateral branch which settled at Dantzic did so when this was still a Polish city. The 'von' probably indicates a Baltic barony conferred by Russia. These details are, of course, entirely irrelevant to our purpose, but given solely in deference to the very natural state of public feeling. Otherwise it would suffice to say that the composer comes of an English family that has been musically inclined for three generations.

His father intended him to become a pianist, but he proved refractory, and turned his attention to composition. A village organistship gave him the first opening in a direction which was to have important results for his career—the handling of choirs, of which he had conducted several, besides a small orchestra, before coming to London to study at the Royal College of Music. He became a pupil of Sir Charles Stanford for composition, armed with a certain facility which might have run away with him if there had been anything to run away with, which, as we have already explained, there was not at this early period. Whatever Stanford may have objected to in his young pupil's work was, as the latter confesses, not far-fetched, but merely immature. On the other hand, he gained much from constant association with Vaughan Williams, his senior by two years. They met regularly three times a week, and Holst ascribes much of the knowledge and experience that came to him at this time to the influence of this friendship.

* Under this scheme he went last October as musical organizer to Salonika, the following March to Constantinople, and then travelled to various camps in Asia Minor.

Meanwhile he had become a sufferer from neuritis, which compelled him to abandon definitely all prospects of playing the pianoforte or the organ. Like a true philosopher, he has discovered advantages in the affliction, which he regards as the best of all safeguards against overscoring. A sufferer from writer's cramp is not likely to put in much unnecessary padding. But although his predilection for choir training and composition easily consoled him for the sacrifice of the keyboard, it must not be assumed that he has any real prejudice against the pianoforte as a musical instrument. On the contrary, he regards it as a limitation that he has never succeeded, to his own satisfaction, in writing a pianoforte piece. He is, however, an enthusiastic and successful teacher of the young, and he is quite definitely convinced that the pianoforte has a pernicious effect on musical education, and should not be tolerated in the class-room. So far from his being alone in this, the great body of Continental experience is on his side. With no other aid than a tuning-fork, notes, intervals, and chords assume a reality to the young mind which is of far greater musical value than any results that can be obtained mechanically by depressing keys. Of this I can speak from my own knowledge, for I owe a great debt to the classe de solfège of a French school which I attended at the age of nine. It is undoubtedly this conviction that has made Holst so admirable a choir-trainer. Early this year his duties took him to a camp in Asia Minor, where he found sixteen candidates awaiting musical tuition. Obsessed by the fetish of the pianoforte, fourteen of them desired instruction on that instrument, and two wanted to sing. After a heart-to-heart talk, these numbers were exactly reversed, and Holst had a little choir of fourteen voices, which six weeks later was awarded the first place in a competition. What became of the other two aspirants I have not heard, but if they had a strong bent for the keyboard it was right that they, and they only, should be taught the pianoforte.

Holst felt, however, the necessity for taking up an instrument, and his choice fell upon the trombone, with which he had acquired some familiarity as a boy. On leaving the Royal College, he took it up professionally, and joined the orchestra of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, for whom he also acted as répétiteur. Afterwards he was engaged by the Scottish Orchestra, and he did not definitely relinquish this part of his musical activities until his appointment as musical director and teacher of composition at Morley College, a post which he still holds, in conjunction with that of principal teacher at St. Paul's Girls' School. He was also, for a time, musical director of the Passmore Edwards Institute, and has played the organ at Covent Garden. This summarises the practical side of his career, which is of more importance than usual in the development of this composer, for in his case development has always proceeded from practice to theory, and never, as so often happens, from theory to practice.

This characteristic feature is nowhere better exemplified than in his cult of pure melody. So far as he can be accurately described as a revolutionary, his personal revolt is against the restraints which the course of musical history has imposed upon the melodic line. First came measured music, with enforced symmetrical bars from which we have only lately commenced to emancipate ourselves, and then followed the great ascendancy of instrumental over vocal music which, owing to the adoption of forms originating in the dance, added the further restraint of symmetrical grouping of the bars themselves, chiefly in multiples of four, a restraint which probably had its origin in the requirements of the dance-figures of the period. Natural melody knows no such restrictions, and Holst insists always that natural melody should be allowed to take its course. In his own case, the melodic thought appears to flow easily in the uneven rhythms, such as 5-4 and 7-4, the latter of which is a great favourite with him:

'CHORAL HYMNS FROM THE RIG-VEDA'—Second Group.

EX. 1.
INT & 2nd TREBLE.

ALTO.

PIANO.

mf

Burn up our sin fierce flam - ing Ag - ni,
Thou with thy face that shi - neth bright - ly,

cres.
Flame for us O Ag - ni,
cres.
Flame for us O Ag - ni,

f Flame!
f Flame!

8.....
f 2

f

Flame for us O Ag - ni!

'CHORAL HYMNS FROM THE RIG-VEDA'—First Group.

EX. 2.

Moderato maestoso.

mf

love is on us cast. I would that all Him knew and loved Him firm and fast. They nev - er would it rue But hap - py be at last.

As an ideal, he has kept this always before him, but in its attainment he has been influenced by three phases of his experience. The first of these is represented by the Oriental studies of which we shall have more to say when dealing with his compositions individually. The East has its own conventions, but symmetry in rhythmic invention is not one of them. The second influence is the prolonged study of folk-song, and of our older music, the melodic freedom of which is the source of so much beauty. The third is his preference for providing his own texts. In many cases it would not be entirely accurate to say that he has set his own words, for words and setting were so interwoven from their inception that probably he himself would be unable to say which brought the other in its train :

'CHORAL HYMNS FROM THE RIG-VEDA.'

Adagio. VOICES IN UNISON.

EX. 4. parlante.

pp

He, the Pri - mal one, . . Be - get - ter of the u - ni - verse, . . Be - got - ten in mys - te - ry, . . Lord

. . of crea - ted things, Lord of heav'n . . and earth. . .

pp staccato.

SONGS FOR VOICE AND VIOLIN.

EX. 3.

VOICE.

My Le-man is so true of love and full

VIOLIN.

stead-fast, yet seem - eth ev - er new His

But he does not stop there, and in one of his recent compositions, which consists of four songs with accompaniment for violin only, he dispenses with the time-signature altogether and allows the melody to proceed with whatever degree of rhythmic freedom appears requisite to its complete expansion :

VOICES IN HARMONY.
cantabile.

Who is He? How shall we name Him when we of fer sac-ri-fice?

Having no knowledge of foreign languages, except a little Sanscrit acquired during his poetic excursion to the East, he has sought consistently for the true melodic equivalent of English speech. Concerning this aspect of his music I wrote, some months before the outbreak of war, as follows*:

'I have often complained that our native composers are not inspired by the qualities of their own language. Instead of seeking its true musical expression they are content with what is in reality instrumental writing, thinly disguised by words, rather than a true use of the vocal medium. Holst is here an honourable exception. His vocal writing obviously grows from his text. The path by which this result has been attained is not without interest. As the masters of the classical tradition were German, the knowledge of vocal writing he acquired in his student years was almost entirely based on translations, which are nearly always very poor. So far from learning how to set an English text adequately, he and his fellow students were not even made aware of the difficulties of the problem. Subsequently, when teaching at Morley College, he used the vocal material at hand to perform some works of Purcell, and he had the unusual acumen to realise what we have lost under the musical hegemony of Germany. To recover it has been his ideal ever since, and his peculiarly admirable vocal idiom is the result. Si sic omnes!'

(To be continued.)

BEFORE-BREAKFAST MUSIC.

By GERALD CUMBERLAND.

If I had time and the necessary knowledge, I would write a learned and vituperative book on the influence of the digestive organs on the theatre, and in my book my readers (I am postulating readers) would discover a long and, I hope, amusing chapter devoted to that form of art we call opera. If it were the custom to perform operas before breakfast instead of after dinner, do you suppose for a moment that Mascagni would have composed 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' Puccini 'Madame Butterfly,' Wagner 'Tannhäuser,' and Richard Strauss 'Elektra'? If ever we are sane, we are sane in the morning. After dinner and (conceivably) wine, we are, so to speak, a little bit 'above ourselves': the world is romantic for a few hours, our worries are buried, our unpaid income-tax is forgotten. Already divorced from the realities of life as we enter the theatre, we are quite prepared to be carried still further into that grotesque land where passionate love, undisciplined and unveiled, appears to be the only topic of conversation.

Until a few months ago I congratulated myself that I had escaped seeing 'Thaïs.' True, I, to my shame, had heard 'Cavalleria Rusticana' twenty-seven times and 'Elektra' nine; but 'Thaïs'—never. Then one evening, on entirely false pretences, I was taken by a friend to Covent Garden. They were doing 'Thaïs.' I suppose this opera belongs to that class of art which Nietzsche called Mediterranean music. It bored me, for I soon discovered that it portrayed the passion of love in its crudest and most naked form. Love was represented as a kind of sick frenzy—a long, feeble, and voluptuous cry of the flesh for satiety. It was a third-rate kind of love, and the characters on the stage were third-rate characters. The orchestration was lusciously sumptuous, the melodies were 'melting,' and the harmony glittered with the third-rate glitter of spangles.

I remember that as I came out of the theatre I began to recall to my memory, one by one, all the 'grand' operas I had heard. I could think of but a very few that were not concerned, in one form or another, with the passion of love; I could not recall one that was totally devoid of 'love' interest. And before I had reached home, 'This accounts,' said I to myself, 'for my waning interest in opera. It is not a form of art for grown men; it is fit only for boys in their late 'teens and early twenties.'

I told myself that of all the operas which exhibit the passion of love, 'Carmen' is the only one that does so in an endurable manner, for the music of 'Carmen' is witty and taunting, sunny and a little fierce. Bizet was not the kind of man to indulge either himself or any of the creatures of his imagination in long swooning ecstasies in which everything is told and nothing worth while is said. And I compared Bizet's music with Wagner's rich vulgarity of sex, with Richard Strauss's conquering brutality, with Puccini's lingering voluptuousness, and with Massenet's picture-dramas in which kissing lips, four times life-size, are thrown eternally on the screen.

* The Outlook, March 27, 1914.

'Are we, then, all dominated by this one passion?' I asked my friend, as we stood under a lamp-post at the parting of our ways; 'are we who compose music and write verse, novels, and dramas obsessed by a passion which, to most men, is but a passing, if volcanic, interruption in their lives?'

'No,' answered he, 'it is only composers of operas who wallow in the passion of sex. Consider our novelists and dramatists. Take "Hamlet," for example. The love interest there is of no account. Also "The Merchant of Venice," "The Tempest" . . .'

'Yes,' I answered, 'much of Shakespeare is immune. Think of the comedies and the historical plays: there is a world of different interests there. He doesn't surround you with a horde of mouthing men and prowling women. Then there are our modern comedies—Shaw, Barrie, and the rest. And Drinkwater's . . .'

'Novels also . . . Frank Norris, Harold Frederick. . .'

'Both American novelists!' I said; 'have we any English writers not . . .? As a matter of fact, even Mrs. Humphry Ward. . . . Yes, I'm afraid we shall find very few, if any. All novels, I suppose, are smeared with sex. But, after all, our writers have reticence and decency. They don't underline everything. They credit their readers with some imagination. But in opera,—No. I suppose it is because music so readily lends itself to hysteria and passion. The veriest fool can concoct musical frenzies. It is, I imagine, because opera is so full of passionate love let loose that it is held in derision and contempt by so many men of musical tastes.'

'But if you exclude love,' began my friend, 'what subjects would you put forward for operatic treatment?'

'I don't exclude love. Let it take its proper place in art as it does in life. All I maintain is that it should not be the all-absorbing topic.'

'But surely it is clear that many subjects suitable for treatment in novels, or poems, or in dramas, are, by their very nature, unsuitable for treatment in operas. You might, for example, write an admirable novel about the local politics of, say, Liverpool—the jealousies, the intrigues, the self-interests, the hypocrisies of all the people involved; but you could not possibly put that kind of thing into an opera.'

'Why not?'

My friend hesitated a moment, and lit a cigarette before replying.

'Well, it's obvious. The spirit of music is too intense, too elevated, too—well, sublimated, for low passions and mean ambitions. Music is so far removed from everyday life that it cannot express the commonplace ugliness of our natures, the common round and daily tasks of our existence. A man may conceivably express himself in song when he is making love, or even when he is seeking revenge, but it is ridiculous to expect him to sing, say, when he is trying to bribe his workmen to vote for him. You remember how absurd it always seemed to hear Pinkerton in "Madame Butterfly" ask for a whisky-and-soda.'

'True, it is impossible for music to express the ordinary commonplaces of every-day conversation, but even the mean things, like the local politics of a large town, can be dealt with in a lofty manner. There are both tragedy and humour in a subject of that kind. You cannot turn a realistic libretto into music, but any libretto that deals artistically and truthfully with life—no matter how commonplace its subject may be—is fit and suitable for operatic music. After all, music is the most fluid of all the arts: it can be made to express any shade of any emotion whatsoever.'

'I wonder . . . Indeed, I doubt it.'

'You are doubtful because it has never yet been done. And why it has never been done is fairly obvious. It is too big an experiment: a composer might devote two years' hard work to writing an opera about the politics of Liverpool, but in the present state of the public taste he would get no manager to stage it. Composers of orchestral and chamber-music all over the world are sitting biting their nails in their anxiety to be original at all costs. But not composers of opera. Few men have the courage of Debussy. Operatic composers seem more than content to work on the old lines—to get as far away from real life as possible. Why, even Rutland Boughton, who is certainly original and energetic, saturates himself with all the flapdoodleism of Malory and Fiona Macleod. They can see beauty only when it is far off. And yet what gorgeous operas might be made of such subjects as the harvest, the building of a cathedral, any of Sherlock Holmes's stories, war, religion, or almost any subject that comes into your head.'

'Our librettists and composers would have to change their methods.'

'Obviously. But why not? Isn't it time they did change them? Aren't we all sick of their post-Wagnerism? Let us have the before-breakfast opera instead of the after-dinner affair. Let our operatic composers cut down into the very tissues of our multiform life instead of merely exposing and dissecting exaggerated lust. Not until they do this will many of us regard them with anything but amazed contempt. Opera, as we have it to-day, is on its death-bed; it is dying through lack of nourishment—the nourishment of human life with its thousands of diverse pleasures and pains and ambitions and despairs. In all the stuff we have seen at Covent Garden this year a man either gets the woman he wants or he doesn't get her. And men and women of experience were asked to go, listen, and admire.'

'And our librettists—where shall we find them?'

'Perhaps we shan't find them—I don't know. It is certainly very singular that none of our poets of to-day knows anything of music.'

'Yes. Worse still, only half-a-dozen of our composers know anything about poetry.'

'So I'm afraid the time for the before-breakfast opera is not yet.'

THE RELATIONS OF MUSIC AND POETRY.

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON.

It is often necessary for composers to consider 'words for music,' to examine lyrics with a view to their musical setting; but it may be questioned whether they often seriously think about poetry in its true relation to their own art. Without offence it may be said that they are seldom fully qualified to do so. Music and poetry, though closely allied at times in the emotion that prompts them, have in reality a very definite distinction; and if we speak of them as sister-arts, they are quite as dissimilar as any two sisters can be. To music, probably, we may grant the earlier birth; if we claim a priority on all other grounds for the art of verbal utterances, there will undoubtedly be much dissent from those to whom music appears the more entirely satisfying. Leaving that thorny question of preference, we may yet say that poetry at its height has nothing to do with actual music at all—it needs no 'setting'; it brings its own music with it; it satisfies the soul and the inward ear with no need of help from external sound. This is really incontrovertible; the musician who has any just understanding of literature will at once admit it. What explicitly follows is that the truest, the most profound and complete poetry is not fit for music at all, and composers make a mistake when they turn their attention to it. The basis of true poetry is thought, permeated and transfigured by emotion; the basis of music is emotion. The sphere of music, and it is a very noble sphere, is that of the inarticulate; it does for us what, at times, no words can do. In a sense it utters, or at least suggests and partially conveys, the unutterable. It is really as absurd to speak of metaphysical or philosophic or ethical music, as it would be to speak of historical; music cannot convey record or incident, neither can it embody a process of thinking or reasoning, except simply as concerns its own formal structure. Music appeals to that part of the soul for which words are not enough; it appeals to the mood that is reverie rather than thought, dream and vision rather than definite expression. This being so, it is at its highest independent of words; but also, this being so, when it takes to itself words, they should be words of emotion rather than of deep thought.

Though it may sound heretical to say so, those composers who have been very careless as to the merit of the verses or libretti they have chosen have not really been very wide of the mark. If the right emotion was suggested, the words did not matter essentially. When we listen to a beautiful song, though we pay due heed to the lyric as well as to its setting, we do not listen critically, we do not ponder the words and draw profound spiritual meanings from them, or note their perfection (or the reverse) of verbal phrase. It is the emotion that moves us; the verse has actually done its work when that emotion has been suggested to us and its response won. This does not excuse those who select lyrics that are absolutely poor or defective from the literary standpoint; but it does explain why a judicious composer will often turn from the finest poetry to something of slighter literary value. He cannot cumber his music with words that listeners have to think about; thought and feeling are very distinct, and, as has been said, music is concerned mainly with the latter. A good lyric for music may be perfect of its kind, but its kind cannot be the highest as estimated by the most exacting literary criticism. A song of Heine's may be a perfection of exquisite graceful utterance, but we do not place it on the same level as a page from Dante or Milton at their noblest. It is enough if verses chosen for music be simply successful in their superficial expression of human feeling. Or, perhaps, as the word 'superficial' sounds depreciatory—but is not here intended so,—it may be better to say that their meaning should lie at the surface, phrased intelligibly, so that the emotion is at once grasped, and the appeal made, without the intervention of thought, the words being lucidly at one with that which they would express. Occult meanings, deep philosophic truth, can have no place in musical utterance. The best poetry, as Raff once said, may be too 'thought-heavy' for setting. Music cannot be didactic or propagandist; it cannot convey a theory. It is not a criticism of life, but an utterance of life's emotion. Do we really listen to the words of an opera or oratorio? Are we not rather caught up and borne on by the emotion that those words have suggested, so that we pass beyond the articulate to the undefined limitless region of the things that have no verbal language? As poetry at its highest has no need whatever of musical accompaniment, so does music itself, at its own highest, transcend entirely the spoken or written word, passing to that domain of pure spirit where the 'songs unheard' are sweetest.

The wise musician, therefore, goes to poetry for his emotion, but with the emotion his connection with them ends. They form the starting-point from which he rises; his music must say more than they do, or it has failed in its mission. His sphere is the sphere in which words fail—that mood of sheer emotion which becomes like trance, in which we thrill with ecstasy that no language can define, or quiver with a poignancy of sadness for which also any verbal utterance would be inadequate. Great poetry is not merely song, it is literature. Music is the perfection of song, but it must fail if it try to become literary.

We are glad to record that the great Midland Competition Festival at Birmingham, which has been in abeyance since 1915, is to be held again on May 8 to 15 next year. Judging from the syllabus, it promises to be the most complete and thoroughly-organized event of its kind. It is particularly worthy of note that all the 158 test-pieces (of which a full list is printed in the School Music Review for October) are British, and that they make a most attractive bill of fare.

Interludes.

A weekly journal has lately been catechising more or less eminent people as to what books they re-read, and 'Alpha of the Plough' has discussed the question in the Star. He says 'The most pathetic reply made to the inquiry is that of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. "I seldom re-read now," says that unhappy man. "Time is so short and literature so vast and unexplored." What a desolating picture!' It is. But there is one even more desolating, and it is provided by 'Alpha' himself. 'I rejoice to say that I have no passion for shaking hands with strangers . . . And so with books. Time is so short that I have none to spare for keeping abreast with the circulating-library. I could almost say with the Frenchman that when I see that a new book is published I read an old one. Like Shallow, I am always in the rearward of the fashion, and a book has to weather the storms of many a voyage before I embark on it. . . .' He ends by announcing his intention of sticking to his well-tryed volumes, 'leaving the vast and unexplored tracts of the desert to those who like deserts.' In other words, 'I have no interest in the literature of my own day. In fact I don't even call it by such an honoured name, preferring to use the slightly-contemptuous term "circulating-library." When those of my fellows who are so bitten with curiosity that they must needs go gadding about after new books unearth an undoubted masterpiece, I may (when it has weathered the storms of many a voyage) lay my Thucydides or Saint-Beuve aside in its favour for an hour. Till then, don't bother me. Can't you see I'm busy, growing a fine crop of mental fungi?' What a desolating picture! And 'Alpha's' allusion to the desert is less scrupulous than we expect from him. Sir Arthur spoke of literature as vast and unexplored. He will rub his eyes when he sees himself and other eager readers described as 'those who like deserts.' Meanwhile, I am wondering how the books which 'Alpha' himself has written would have fared had there not been a few thousand readers able and willing to keep abreast with the circulating library. Fortunately most of us manage to strike something like a happy medium between these two desolating extremes. Time may be short, but it will always be long enough for us to give our contemporaries fair play, and at the same time keep in touch with the best of the past. A world of Alphas, in which the making of new friends was shunned as being disloyal to the old, and as a risky speculation, would be no place for me.

'What has all this to do with music?' you ask. The point of the paragraph, like the bearings of Mr. Bunsby's observations, lies in the application thereof. The musical world has too many Alphas. It always has had too many. I can believe that when John of Fornsete shyly brought forward 'Sumer is i-cumen in,' and said to his fellow-monks, 'Here is a little thing of my own,' all but a few expressed a preference for the strings of 4ths and 5ths of good old Hucbald. Brother Alpha, the ceremoniaris, was particularly withering. 'I could almost say with the Gaul, that when I hear that a new carmen has been composed, I straightway sing an old one. I shall go on whistling Hucbald, leaving the howling wilderness of harmony for the impious among you who like howling wildernesses, and who do not know a good thing when you've got it. Retro Sathanis!'

The Philharmonic players who laughed at the first rehearsal of Beethoven's ninth Symphony were Alphas to a man, and the bulk of our concert audiences of to-day are sealed of the same tribe. A few Doyles there are, restless souls (mostly critics, blasé, and with an eye on the going to press of to-morrow's paper), who estimate the hour at which a new work comes on, prowl in and hear it, and prowl out again, carefully avoiding Largos, Cavatinas, and Solemn Melodies. But, on the whole, the Alphas have it, and conductors and orchestras with little time for rehearsal are well pleased. Think what a life would be theirs if they had to cater for a public of Doyles.

It is much easier to hold the balance between the old and new in literature than in music. I can indulge my taste for Sir Thomas Browne or Malory without compelling you to share the volumes. You, on your side of the party wall, can take your fill of Pope, and I wish you joy of it. But unless my appetite for the older music is that of the majority, I am likely to go hungry. Those of us who want to hear Byrd or Palestrina, Scarlatti or Couperin, come badly off. I would go a long way to-morrow to renew acquaintance with Schubert's C major Symphony, but so long as most people are satisfied with a state of things which gives us twenty performances of Beethoven's No. 5 or No. 7 to one of Schubert's masterpiece, I must stay at home and get what comfort I can from the full score. As a matter of fact, too, the average man is much more curious about new books than about new music. Generally his reading is almost confined to works of to-day. If his taste in books lagged with his taste in music, we should daily see trainloads of him going citywards reading Thackeray, with a volume of Carlyle in reserve for more serious moments. But he has forgotten these two writers long ago, to his loss. The artistic part of him is developed as Touchstone said Corin was damned, like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side. He will stand for hours in a draughty side-street in order to be present at the first performance of a new play which may prove to be the poorest return for his vigil and the good hard money he has spent on a ticket. He will join a circulating library, and order the new Wells or Arnold Bennett without waiting to read the opinion of the reviewers. But when he takes to concert-going, he looks out a programme that gives him as large a percentage as possible of the music he enjoyed years ago. He is even rather proud of this loyalty to his old favourites, and if you venture to hint that possibly the best of some new writer may be worthier hearing than the worst of Beethoven, he thinks you are an iconoclast. (But he won't use that word—why should he, with 'Bolshevist' lying handy?)

This ringing the changes on a few well-worn works is one of the greatest hindrances to musical progress. Even if the favourites happen to represent the composers at their best, the resultant neglect of the remainder of their work would be bad. When, as is too often the case, the popular item is merely a hashed-up affair or a transcription the case is far worse. If Bach and Handel, turning uneasily in their graves, could give us a piece of their mind, we should probably hear something like this. George Frederic, choleric as ever, would take the first innings. 'I had some pretty warm enemies when I was alive,' he would say (speaking unexpectedly colloquial English), 'but they take a back seat compared with some of my indiscriminating admirers of to-day. The first and worst of my posthumous enemies was he who lifted the tenor air, "Ombra mai fù," from my opera "Serse," transposed it from F to G, weakened the harmonies by turning some of my chords of the 6th into six-four-three (a chord I rarely used), and made it into a quasi-religious sweetmeat, served up in all sorts of tasty ways. You English are bad enough, but the Germans are worse. If you look at the catalogue of Carl Simon, of Berlin (don't start; we know more of what goes on than you think!), you will see advertised no fewer than forty-two perversions of it. My copy of the catalogue is an old one—1905. Probably there are even more editions available now. The disarrangement that touches me up the most is one for voice, 'cello, harmonium, and two guitars, with a third ad lib. Some day my poor ill-used tune will be set for bass-tuba, ocarina, and a jew's-harp quintet, with (of course) the organ supplying the regulation dose of religiosity. A nasty jab was dealt me about a century ago, when my "Hallelujah Chorus" was arranged for two flutes. (How Mr. Swiveller and a friend used to enjoy thundering it out!) But it has been left for the far more musically advanced 20th century to give me the knock-out blow. And all the while there are scores of good tunes (though I says it as shouldn't) lying buried in my operatic and other works; movements from organ concertos that are never heard except as organ solos (with modern cadenzas that are about as much in keeping as a top hat would be on my wig), and splendid choruses (I can't help saying what I know to be true) that ought to be lifted from their oratorio and other surroundings and given a fresh start. When I was alive the man in the street knew dozens of my tunes: his successor to-day thinks of me as a writer of two—an air in E (which he associates with a story of a cock and a bull and a village blacksmith) and "Ombra mai fù," known to him only as "Handel's Largo in G," and which makes him feel good and comfortable and Pleasantsundayafternoonish.'

By this time John Sebastian has his speech ready. 'Alas! my poor brother!' he begins, 'my case is even harder than yours. You are at least known by a couple of your own melodies, whereas the most popular work connected with my name is one in which I merely supply the accompaniment to a modern Frenchman's tune. It is called a "Meditation," and sung to "Ave Maria"—a Roman Catholic's melody over a Lutheran's harmony. What do you say to that as a step towards the re-union of Christendom? I admit the tune is good—even beautiful, though it is rather too hectic in places for my taste. Still, the job could not be much better done. There are two serious objections to it, however. First, it has not merely decorated my little Prelude: it has killed it. How often do you hear the Prelude without the Gounod trimmings? And for one performance at Queen's Hall of a Prelude and Fugue from the "48" you have dozens of the "Meditation." This is hard on me, but it is harder still on your audiences. They should be saved from themselves. If I were Sir Henry Wood I should occasionally announce the "Meditation" or the "Largo in G," and having lured the faithful inside, I should shut the doors and explain (via Mrs. Newmarch, per programme), that Bach and Handel had a good deal to say to present-day audiences, but they couldn't get their message to ears that were deaf to all but a tiny fraction of their music. (You should have heard Handel's comment on the fact that his "Waft her, angels," was sung twice in nine days at the Promenades.) Then I should say that instead of the "Meditation" Mr. Harold Samuel would play one of the "48," say the C sharp major from the first book (one of my pet works), or the French Suite in G (another of 'em). Instead of the Largo, Mr. Gervase Elwes would revive one of the beautiful airs that are buried beneath an absurd libretto. The bulk of the audience (perhaps the whole) would be delighted to have heard George and me at our best. George's vein of melody would not surprise them, but I am sure many would be astonished at finding the Prelude and Fugue as bright and free from dryness as any of my orchestral Suites of which they appear to be so appreciative.

'The other serious objection I have to the "Meditation" is that it perpetuates a miserable bit of editing on the part of Schwenke. Bars 22 and 23 of the Prelude I wrote thus:

Ex. 1.

Schwenke (I'd Schwenke him!) couldn't stand my unresolved discord. I can see him shaking his head. "What! a bass moving from F sharp to A flat? And a false relation? My dear Herr Bach! you should have known better—you, who read many a treatise on harmony, and, with more leisure, might even have written a tolerable one yourself. This sort of thing simply isn't done. Bar 22 must be followed by:

or:

which is even better. With your figuration kept up, the join is imperceptible. Don't thank me, Herr. Any little plumbing job of this kind I gladly do. Here is the passage, all nice and tidy and according to Cocker:

Ex. 4.

And now (Bach would go on) very few people know of my little anticipation of the modern practice of elision of cadences owing to Schwenke's impertinence having become a fixture through Gounod's adoption of it in the "Meditation." But I had a chuckle when Gounod afterwards tried his "Meditation" recipe with a Prelude in D minor from my shorter clavier works. It was as well done as the other, though my basis and his superstructure were perhaps a bit less attractive. Anyway, it fell so flat that it simply stuck, and nobody has yet picked it up. Not many sequels are successful, but few have failed so completely, and it is the only failure that has given me satisfaction.

'Another aspect of this overplaying a few works: Isn't it a bit hard on living composers? I ran against Beethoven the other day, and he was volcanic about it. He said he supposed he ought to be gratified at pianistic lions still tinkling away at his Andante in F, and Rondo in G, and other things that he never took much stock in, but if the players of his time had neglected his Sonatas in favour of such small beer by dead and gone composers he would have made a few appropriate remarks. In fact, he made a few on the spot, just to show what he could do when roused.'

There is something in old Bach's suggestion that an unfamiliar work should sometimes be sprung on the public in the place of a hackneyed one. At present, eleventh hour changes in the programme do the reverse, and please only the Alphas. But what is really needed is a kind of self-denial season, in which the old favourites (and a few fairly new ones) should be given a rest. Think what a step forward in appreciation would be made if, instead of six performances of such works as the 'Largo' we had two each of three good modern works that so far have not had a chance. Consider the growth of the repertory of both players and hearers (for hearers no less than players have to acquire a repertory, and one performance is almost as useless to the latter as to the former) if this self-denying ordinance were carried out thoroughly for a year. Here is a list of works that would be all the better for a rest: Handel's 'Largo,' the Bach-Gounod 'Meditation,' Walford Davies's 'Solemn Melody,' Raff's 'Cavatina,' Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C sharp minor, Mendelssohn's 'Bee's Wedding' and 'Spring Song,' Brahms's Hungarian Dances in D and G minor, Beethoven's 'Leonora,' 'Coriolan,' and 'Egmont' Overtures, Overture to 'William Tell'—the list shows signs of being too long for convenience. And add to it many vocal items that have the minimum of interest for us to-day—especially the operatic arias that lag superfluous merely because there is supposed to be a dearth of good songs with orchestral accompaniment, or that are taken down from the shelf from time to time in order that a singer may show his or her (especially her) paces. With more courage and enterprise on the part of conductors and audiences we should in a short time have a really musical public, with a proper curiosity as to new works, and a power of discrimination equal to that shown in regard to investments, clothes, food, and affairs generally. The chief shortcoming of our musical public to-day is this lack of discrimination, and there will be no improvement so long as the programme of the average concert and recital (especially pianoforte recital) is framed on lines that do little to extend the hearer's repertory. The average man takes his music mostly on Saturdays and Sundays. What exercise do his critical powers get? Occasionally he hears the first (and last) performance of a novelty. At its close, 'For what we have received,' he says, and claps his hands devoutly—even enthusiastically, if the composer comes on to embrace the conductor. The remainder of the programme is largely made up of music so familiar that what slender critical faculties he has promptly go to sleep. When he tires of these familiar pieces, what will take their place? I see no items clearly marked out as successors to the 'Cavatina' and the 'Solemn Melody.' And yet there are plenty in the back-ground. They are among the great mass of fine and attractive works that receive only about one or two performances a year, and so never get thoroughly assimilated. On the symphonic side take one convincing example. Franck's Symphony is now a popular work—thirty years after its appearance. Until the past few seasons it was rarely heard in this country. If it had been performed six times in the seasons of (say) 1900-01, what an impetus would have been given to popular appreciation of the modern symphonic school! As an example of the short work, there is the 'Queen Mab' Scherzo of Berlioz.

Did the composer ever write anything more attractive? How many times was it played in 1918? And yet I feel sure it would give our average man no less pleasure than the 'Bee's Wedding.' It would not be difficult to make a long list of works of this kind—works that should provide three-fifths of every programme, the remaining two parts being reserved for (a) first and second performances of new music, and (b) established favourites just short of the threadbare stage.

There will be little improvement until old works come up for scrutiny as severe as that given to new ones. There is a wide difference between literature and music in this respect. In books, the survival is to the fittest: in music it is too often to the familiar, and this familiarity is frequently a matter of luck.

The average man is at heart neither an Alpha nor a Doyle. His musical education could easily be advanced to such a stage that, asked as to his re-hearing of old music, he would say something like this: 'Time is short, and the field of music is vast, with an ever-growing horizon. Clearly I have no time to hear or study any but the best. If music, like literature and art, expresses something of the spirit of those of us living now, I must on no account neglect modern music. Its composers need not only my sympathy and encouragement but my financial support as well. On all grounds, then, my first duty is to the living composer. I must keep up my acquaintance with old and middle-aged music, but only with the very best. Of course it would be infinitely easier to stick to the old than to get at the very core of the new, but, with the help of the conductors and performers, I mean to do my duty and keep abreast with the musical circulating library. I must adapt and reverse the remark of the Frenchman, and say that when I hear a new work is down for performance I realise that an old one is in danger of being superseded. As long as possible I shall persist in being an optimist in regard to new music, believing that there are at least as good fish in the musical sea as ever came out of it—and perhaps even better ones. They are merely waiting to be landed. All that is needed is a wide net, fair play, perseverance, and a ruthless throwing back of the small fry.'

FESTE.

We gladly draw attention to the appeal on page 553 on behalf of the Glastonbury School. In most ventures there comes a critical moment when failure or success seems to depend upon the grasping of an opportunity. Such a moment has arrived for the Glastonbury School in the sudden opportunity for the purchase of a site whereon to build a permanent theatre. It will be a calamity for British music-drama if the School is unable to consolidate its work by such a purchase. The appeal makes out such a strong case for support, and is so weightily endorsed, that there is no need for us to do more than draw attention to it, and to wish it full success.

MUSIC IN ENGLAND DURING THE FIRST HALF OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY.

By JEFFREY PULVER.

(Concluded from August number, page 412.)

The fifth Earl of Northumberland may be taken as a specimen of that powerful class of noblemen keeping a state almost regal. And the choice is made not so much perhaps because of the proven high standard of the music made in his household, as on account of the ready source of information we possess in the 'Northumberland Household Book.' According to this valuable and interesting volume (1512), 'The Chapel of his Grace of Northumberland must have been on a par with those of the King and the Cardinal. In the year named there were permanently employed eleven gentlemen including the Master of the Children, six children, and players on the "tabrett, luyte, and rebeck." A couple of years later their numbers were increased. Following the King's example, the Earl paid his musicians extra sums of money for special work, and public holidays were not allowed to go by without some present to mark the event. At New Year the minstrels received rewards: 'Item. My Lorde usith ande accustomyth to gif yerely, when his Lordschipp is at home, to his Mynstraills that be daly in his Houshold, as his Tabret, Lute, and Rebec, upon New Yeres-day in the mornynge, when they doo play at my Lorde's chambre doure, for his Lordschipe and my Lady, xxs., viz., xiijs. iiijd. for my Lorde, and vis. viid. for my Lady, if sche be at my Lords fyndynge and not at her owen. And for playing at my Lordis Sone and heir Chaumbre doure the Lord Percy, ijs. And for playing at the Chaumbre doores of my Lords yonger sonnes my yonge Maisters, after viij the pece for every of them—xxiij. iiijd.' (Northumberland Payment Book, p. 343.) The Northumberland Household Book tells us what the minstrels received in wages: 'Every Mynstrall, if he be a Taberett, shall have iiijd.; every Luyte and Rebec, xxxiis. iiijd.; and to be payd in houshold if they have it not by patent or warrant' (p. 48). Minstrels frequently travelled with their masters when the latter paid visits; not seldom musicians went from place to place, and castle to castle, to exhibit their skill, and these the musical Earl also treated well: 'Item. My Lorde usith and accustomyth to gyfe yerely to every Erlis Mynstrellis, when they custome to come to hym yerely, iijs. iiijd. And if they come to my Lord seldome, ones in ij or iij yeres, than vjs. viiijd.' On St. Nicholas eve, the Master of the Children was paid 3s. 4d.; on Christmas morning the chapel received 20s. for playing the 'Nativitie' and the 'Excelsis'; and for the 'play of the Resurrection on Easter morning, xxs.' Like the King, these noblemen employed a Master of the Revels 'for the overseyinge and orderinge of Playes and Interludes and dressing that is plaid in the xii Dayes of Credenmas' (Northumberland Payment Book, p. 343). The performers in these masques were generally the Gentlemen and Children of the Chapel: 'Item. My Lorde useth to gyf yerely when his Lordeship is at home, in reward to them of his Lordschipp Chappel, that doith play upon Shroftewsdai at night xs.' (Id.) Burney gives many of the entries in this book, and adds (II., p. 571): 'This magnificent nobleman dying 1527, his son, the sixth Earl, whose passion for Ann Bullen is supposed to have occasioned his disgrace at Court, seems to have been treated with great insolence and indignity by Cardinal Wolsey, who, by an extraordinary stretch of power, to which the Earl thought it prudent to submit, demanded his Choral Books for the use of his own Chapel.' Letters concerning this requisition are still preserved in the family, in which the Earl says: 'I do perceaff my Lorde Cardinalls pleasour ys to have such Boks as was in the Chapell of my lat Lord and fayther (wos soll Jhu pardon). To the accomplychment of which, at your desyer, I am conformable, notwithstandinge I trust to be able ons to set up a Chapell off myne owne. I shall with all sped send up the Boks unto my Lords Grace, as to say iiij Antiffoners, such as I think wher not seen a gret wyll, v Gralls [Graduals], an Ordeorly [Ordinal], a Manuall, viij Prossessioners [Processionals].' Such a requisition was thoroughly characteristic of the Cardinal.

The travelling minstrels mentioned above must not be confounded with the Waits, an entirely distinct body. The latter were trained musicians, and not wandering minstrels or 'vagabonds' within the 'meaning of the Act': nor were they anything like—in work or excellence—the so-called 'waits' who make the nights at Christmastide so horrible to-day. They enjoyed privileges of their own and received official recognition (v. article by F. A. Borland in Musical News, July 31, 1915). They were properly apprenticed to masters in their calling, and each of them, under an Act of 2 Edward VI., was entitled to take two apprentices. Their work was very varied, and the accounts of their activities as enshrined in various municipal and civic archives make extremely interesting reading. In the sixteenth year of Henry VIII.'s reign a Royal Order compensated the Waits for the loss they had sustained by the discontinuance of the ceremonial observance of dedication-days of churches (Borland). In 1536-37 there was a 'Triumph ffor the conception of the Queen's Grace' (Jane Seymour, the mother of Edward VI.) at Norwich: 'Paid to the iiij Waytes for their labor blowynge upon the crosse time of the p'cession xijd.' By 'blowynge' I suppose is meant a performance on the Recorders. The Feast of Corpus Christi, with its procession, was celebrated in York with much splendour, and the Waits had their place in the ceremonies. In 1546, ms. is ordered to be paid for a 'base shalme.' (Ibid.). These few references should suffice to show what part this body of instrumentalists played in the musical scheme of the period.

The instruments in vogue during the fifty years under consideration were, first, trumpets, trombones, and drums; then lutes, shalms, pipes, harps, organs, rebecs, and virginals. All these are mentioned in the various books of payments and in the annals of royal and ducal bands and chapels. About half-way through the period we meet with viols. The performers on these instruments—so far as concerns those employed at Court—were largely foreigners: Italians, Frenchmen, Dutchmen, Germans; but, naturally, there was no lack of native players, as so many indications prove. It has, unfortunately, too often been the rule of the powers-that-be to employ an inordinately large number of alien musicians. This, when the result justifies the action, is not to be blamed; it is perhaps the only fault that can be found in the attitude of the Tudor sovereigns to music that they gave such great preference to foreign musicians when there was no dearth of excellent virtuosi of English birth. Viewed from the standpoint of the internationality of art, such preference cannot be condemned; but it is a habit that easily becomes a fashion, and as such is with great difficulty bounded by reason and justice.

The religious revolution that was coming could not but have affected music very much. The break with Rome would not have immediately made any great change in our music; but the versification of the Psalms in the vernacular would, and did, do so. Their editors, naturally enough, recommended their use in preference to the 'ungodly songes and ballads'; and Anthony à Wood says of Sternhold that he versified fifty-one of the Psalms, and 'caused musical notes to be set to them, thinking thereby that the courtiers would sing them instead of their sonnets, but did not, only some few excepted.' Miles Coverdale's 'Address unto the Christian reader' in his 'Gostly Psalms and Spirituall Songes' (1538) has:

. . . . Wolde God that our Mynstrels had none other thyng to play upon, neither our carters and plowmen other thyng to whistle upon, save psalmes, hymns, and such like godly songes. . . . And if women at the rockes [distaffs], and spynnyng at the wheles, had none other songes to pass their time withall, than such as Moses' sister . . . sange before them, they should be better occupied than with Hey, nonny, nonny, Hey, trolly, lolly, and such like fantasies.

Early in the reign we find the ballads much admired. Barclay, in the fourth Eclogue (c. 1514), says: 'Then laude ye songes, and ballades magnifie.' Certainly the King found nothing wrong in such light secular music, for—so far as we can tell with certainty—he composed some himself. Yet later in his reign (in 1543) an Act of Parliament was passed suppressing them almost entirely. Although some few exceptions were made, Henry seemed determined that nothing should appear which could be used 'as a weapon against the Reformation' (Chappell). The Act states that:

. . . . froward and malicious minds, intending to subvert the true exposition of scripture, have taken upon them by printed ballads, rhymes, etc., subtilly and craftily to instruct his highness' people, and specially the youth of this his realm, untruly. For reformation whereof, his majesty considereth it most requisite to purge his realm of all such books, ballads, rhymes, and songs, as be pestiferous and noisome. Therefore if any printer shall print, give, or deliver, any such, he shall suffer, for the first time imprisonment for three months, and forfeit for every copy 10*l.* and for the second time, forfeit all his goods and his body be committed to perpetual prison.

Books printed and published before 1540 were exempted.

In reviewing the composers of the period it will not be necessary at this time of day to give full biographies of the musical giants of that era; a few notes will be all that is called for in this place. Of 'the father of English Cathedral music' not much can be said to-day; moreover, Tallis's greatest activity as a creative musician was developed after the half-century under consideration. Tye, too, came to maturity when the fifty years designated had almost come to an end; he was not organist at Ely until 1541, and only achieved the Doctorate of Music in 1548. Still there can be little doubt that he enjoyed an enormous popularity in his own day; and in Sam Rowley's play, 'When you see me, you know me,' the Prince repeats what Grove thinks 'may be a genuine saying of Henry VIII.':

I oft have heard my Father merrily speake,
In your high praise: and thus his Hignesse sayth:
'England one God, one truth, one Doctor hath
In Musicke's art, and that is Doctor Tye
Admired for skill in harmony.'

Contemporary—for our present purpose—with Tallis and Tye was Robert White, a man of quite exceptional talent who is far too little known in this, his country. It is as Dr. Walker justly remarks: '... Whyte . . . is fairly to be reckoned—even remembering that Palestrina and Lassus were contemporaries—as among the very greatest European composers of his time. No English musician deserves more emphatically a tardy resurrection.' John Taverner is another name high in the list of English talent, and although its bearer could not hope for favourable comparison with Tye at his best, his genius was still sufficiently great to merit recognition to-day. Indeed, Foxe tells us that when imprisoned at Oxford for alleged heresy, he escaped death on account of his music. The same authority adds that 'this Taverner repented him very much that he had made songs to Popish ditties in the time of his blindness.' While speaking of narrow escapes from the stake, we may mention that of John Merbecke, whose 'premature reforming zeal,' to use Burney's words, 'nearly made a martyr of him. . . . He had, indeed, the honour of being condemned to the stake, but was pardoned.' It should be mentioned, however, that this pardon again must have been on account of his excellence as a musician, since such powerful personages as Sir Humphrey Foster and the Bishop of Winchester interceded for him. Then there were John Sheppard, whose three-part 'Stev'n first after Christ for Gods worde his blood spent' is described by Ambros as 'nothing less than a master-work'; the early John Dygon, who graduated as a B. Mus. in April, 1512, and whose motet 'Ad lapidis positionem' is printed by Hawkins; John Thorne of York, though late in the period, whose three-part motet 'Stella Coeli' is well worthy of notice, the conduct of the several parts being very dignified and full of vigour, the harmony excellent, and the imitation interesting (Ambros), Grove mentioning two more MSS. of his; and Edmund Turges, represented in the Fayrfax MS., and not even mentioned in Grove. Another early figure was William of Newark, Master of the boys of the Chapel; and still another was William Cornysh, whose son William was advanced enough to use the 'chord of the sharp seventh of a key, with a false fifth' (Burney).

Hugh Aston was a very eminent figure early in this half-century, and one of the most celebrated of pre-Reformation composers. A hornpipe of his, contained in the Royal MSS. App. 58 (British Museum) is, as Henry Davey remarks, 'an extraordinary piece of keyboard execution,' and its composer is claimed by this historian 'as the inventor of instrumental composition.' The Bodleian Library and that of the Music School (Oxford), Peterhouse Library (Cambridge), and the British Museum all possess specimens of his work. Robert Fayrfax was another famous writer of the period, but since I have dealt with him already in three articles contributed to Musical News (January 20, February 3 and 10, 1917), I shall do no more than refer the possibly interested reader to them. I think the names already mentioned will be sufficient to impress the student with the high importance of this period, to the history of English music. Nor does this list by any means complete the tale. But two minor lights might be mentioned, since they had to do with the controversies surrounding Henry's matrimonial affairs. The first is Mark Smeaton, groom of the chamber to Anne Bullen, and a musician high in Court favour. He was accused of misconduct with the Queen, and he ultimately confessed, though Anne strenuously denied it. That some understanding existed between the two can hardly be doubted when we consider some of the contemporary correspondence; but that he deserved the hanging he received, is quite open to question. The other was Thomas Abel, who instructed Queen Catherine in music. This meddlesome musician was injudicious enough to perpetrate a treatise entitled 'De non dissolvendo Henrici et Catharinae Matrimonio,' and came to an untimely end by hanging and quartering in 1540. The moral whereof is, that it was good for cobblers to stick to their lasts in the first half of the 16th century.

Before leaving the subject, I should like to draw attention to three volumes which illustrate, each in a different way, the music of the period. The books I am referring to are the MS. above mentioned (Royal MSS. 58), Rastell's 'Interlude of the four Elements' (1510), and a song-book published by Wynkyn de Worde, in London, in 1530. The first of these three contains what is the first music actually composed expressly for instruments, and not simply arranged vocal pieces. As such it is of great interest and value to the musical historian. The 'Interlude' illustrates one of the uses to which music was put secularly. It describes various natural phenomena in verses spoken by different allegorical characters. Towards the end is the direction, 'Then the dauncers without the hall sing this wyse and they within answer'; after which follows music to the text 'Tyme to pass with goodly sport, etc.'—obviously a popular song at the period. Wynkyn de Worde's publication arrived on the scene at a time when country and king were busy with religious controversy. Yet these things did not seem to affect the general public much, if such a collection of secular songs could find use and customers. In the book, of which the Bass part is in the British Museum (K.l.e.l.), 'ar contenynd XX songes IX of IIII partes and XI of thre partes.' The composers included are Cornysh, Pygot, Taverner, Fayrfax, Cowper, and Jones. There appears to be no other copy, or other part, of this work known.

The first half of the 16th century is important, therefore, for several reasons, and political and religious causes often had great effects. Church music was passing through one of its trying times, and methods were considerably changed in the fifty years under review. During the period, too, we find the King composing genial music; we see composers rising who could brave comparison with their Continental confrères; we notice the writing of original instrumental music, and the publication of the first book in England to consist exclusively of music. This was the critical time when music was kicking off its ancient swaddling-clothes, and was becoming the sturdy youth that reached such noble manhood at the close of the Elizabethan era.

WELSH HYMNS AND HYMN-SINGING.

By WILLIAM CHILD.

The Hymn Festivals that have been held in England during the past few years have been well worth while. They have undoubtedly improved congregational singing in the districts in which they took place by drawing attention to, and rehearsing, many new and neglected old tunes of the best type. But their indirect influence has been even greater. They have not only brought the question of popular hymnody well to the fore, and kept it there; they have reminded church-goers generally that the hymn-tune is not a part-song for the choir, but a song for the people, with the result that much of the old congregational diffidence is gone. Many organists and choirs now take a sympathetic view of the subject, so that the prospects of co-operation between the trained singers and the untrained crowd were never so bright as to-day. The Hymn Festival was an English adaptation of a peculiarly Welsh institution, but it can never flourish so vigorously as its original, because it will necessarily lack the note of frank emotion that distinguishes the Welsh gatherings. Moreover, fond as the English are of hymns, comparatively few of their favourites appeal to them on the national side. The old Welsh tunes have a good deal of the character of folk-song, and the intense racial feeling of the Welsh finds almost as much outlet in 'Caerlleon' or 'Joanna' as in 'Men of Harlech.' English people are fond of 'St. Anne,' or 'Ravenscroft,' because of long association, with little or no recognition of the fact that they are as characteristically English as any music we have produced.

The 'Cymanfa Ganu,' or the Psalmody Festival, was made a part of the Eisteddfod only as recently as 1916. The suggestion came from Mr. Lloyd George, surely the first British Prime Minister to take any practical interest in popular music. At Corwen the hymn-singing was the final event of the Eisteddfod. Two sessions were held, from 1.30 to 4.30, and from 5.30 to 9. Could we collect eight thousand English people for such a purpose twice on a hot summer's day? The gathering was supposed to be grouped according to voices, but the arrangements broke down, and although some hundreds of tenors and basses were in their proper places the majority of those present never got sorted out. I am inclined to think this was a gain. The effect of such a mass singing in harmony would have lost in blend had there been too rigid a classification. The accompaniment was provided by the band of the Welsh Guards and a local orchestra. Mr. Emllyn Evans conducted, and had his huge force remarkably well in hand throughout. The book contained thirty hymns, tonic sol-fa and staff editions being provided. The festival partook somewhat of the nature of a practice, as some of the tunes were new. I gathered from Mr. Evans that the book forms a kind of supplementary hymnal for the ensuing year, and is widely circulated throughout the country. The 'Cymanfa Ganu' has thus great educational responsibilities. The singing was overwhelming in its volume and fervour—so much so, that although I had heard glowing accounts of Welsh hymn-singing, I felt inclined to say with the Queen of Sheba, 'The half was not told me.'

There was little or no attempt at light and shade—a surprise in view of the violent dynamic contrasts in other Welsh singing. Moreover, the Festival book, like the Welsh hymnals generally, was plentifully sprinkled with expression marks. It would have been thrilling to hear a pianissimo from such a crowd, and I am sure it could have been got. What was needed was not sudden contrast in power, but the variety obtained by an occasional hymn sung softly or mezzo-forte throughout. There are many hymns which call for such treatment. The singing at Corwen was too continuously full-voiced.

To the visitor, the habit of singing the final portion of a verse over and over again was somewhat trying. There was apparently no method in this repetition. The conductor seemed suddenly to make up his mind, and took the crowd with him. As the structure of most Welsh tunes involves a good deal of repetition, the result led to monotony.

The band played the tunes over very woodenly, and it was fortunate that their accompaniments were audible only rarely. I was surprised at the ineffectiveness of even a good band for this purpose. There was a lack of foundation and sustained power, the bass being especially weak and tubby. One longed for the roll of an organ, with a big pedal and fine diapasons.

In my article on the Eisteddfod I mentioned the curious lack of appreciation of the beauty of unaccompanied singing. The same lack was apparent here. The band was of little practical use save for 'giving out' the tune, and if most of the singing had been unaccompanied, with the players joining in an occasional unison verse, they would have worked less with better results. Perhaps, too, the committee might consider the advisability of interpolating a good instrumental item halfway through each session. It would give voices and ears a much-needed rest, and the band would welcome the task as more congenial than playing hymn tunes.

The 'Cymanfa Ganu' is a wonderfully impressive affair, despite some details that strike the visitor unfavourably. He may have his doubts, for example, as to the advisability—even the decency—of making such promiscuous use of hymns in which the note of personal and intimate religious feeling is uppermost. Especially does this question arise when hymns are introduced to soothe the crowd, or to beguile the tedium of waiting. I understand that they are used thus even before political meetings and football matches! Of course, if the assembled politicians and sportsmen feel impelled to sing to the praise and glory of God on such occasions, so much the better. But without being uncharitable, I could not avoid an impression that the music, and the sheer physical joy of singing, were the prime considerations at the Eisteddfod.

This danger is apparently exercising some native leaders of thought. Thus, an outspoken article in the Welsh Outlook for August says:

The parasitic 'Cymanfa Ganu' must be subjected to an effective surgical operation, relieving the body Eisteddfodic for all time from an alien cankerous growth which threatens to sap its vitality. Those who witnessed the scenes at Birkenhead, and still more emphatically at Neath, cannot fail to have realised that the 'Cymanfa Ganu' was held not so much to the glory of God as to the glorification of man.

Even on the educational side the Festival leaves much to be desired. As a means of popularising good new tunes such a gathering is of immense value. But how if the tunes be bad? The 1919 book contains some very weak numbers, and I blushed to find that the weakest was an English tune, a miserable specimen of one of our worst types. I quote its opening phrases, so that I may not be suspected of exaggeration:

EX. 1. 'St. Catherine.'

J. G. WALTON, 1821—.

It is good for the Welsh to borrow music from their neighbours, but it is bad when they lay hands on the worst. I note, too, on the part of some of the Welsh hymn composers of to-day, a regrettable tendency to adopt an idiom that we in England are rapidly outgrowing, e.g.:

EX. 2. 'Milwauke.''

D. PROTHEROE, MUS. DOC.

Wales had far better stick to a handful of the best of her old tunes than adopt such enervating strains as this. Unfortunately, I gathered from conversations at Corwen that there is a tendency to discard the old in favour of the new—especially when the new is down to the above sample. Can the Welsh Folk-song Society do nothing to save the situation? It will be disastrous if future Psalmody Festival books are allowed to go further on the downward path. The evil wrought by so widely circulated a collection containing even a moderate percentage of feeble tunes is incalculable.

In regard to the older tunes, and indeed Welsh tunes generally, there is a tendency to overrate them. The very best, such as 'Ymdaith Mwngc' (E.H. 203), Prichard's 'Hyfrydol' (E.H. 301), 'Bangor,' or 'Merionydd,' are everything that a popular melody should be, but a good many that are better known in England have some obvious faults. 'Aberystwyth,' for example, has a poor melodic line for its first four phrases, and is saved only by the fine rise just before the end. Three of its four opening phrases end with:

and the other adds little variety by ending on the dominant of E. Sung to a long hymn, this opening becomes wearisome. Even a rolling performance of the tune by one of the biggest crowds at the Eisteddfod did not alter my conviction that it is overrated, and good in only one half.

The construction of the average eight-line Welsh tune—a b a b c d a b—tends to monotony. The frequent use of melodic passages founded on the common chord sometimes gives an impression of marking time rather than of sweeping progress, e.g.:

Ex. 4. 'Joanna.'

and this, from 'Elliot,' a tune by John Ellis, 1750-1834:

Ex. 5.

The oldest tunes are none the worse for a decidedly secular folk-song flavour, and in several 'The Miller of the Dee' seems to be in the background:

Ex. 6. 'Gweddi.'

The minor key is rather too much in evidence, and (at all events to the reserved Sax n) there seems to be too frequent leaning towards the lachrymose.

I have often heard English people discuss the harmony sung by a Welsh crowd. Credulous laymen tell us that the harmony is improvised: unbelievers say that it consists of what is known in England as 'singing seconds'—that is, thirds. The improvisation theory may be knocked on the head by the simple experiment of playing a well-known air and asking three musicians to extemporise the under parts. I have assisted at such a demonstration, and have seen the credulous laymen easily convinced that each of the parts so supplied may be excellent in itself, but not calculated to go well in harness. I have always fancied the 'singing seconds' theory was near the mark, but I now see that the great majority of these Welsh singers know the published harmony of their tunes, and sing it from memory. After all, this would not be an astonishing feat, even with a race less musical than the Welsh. Compared with the English and German their standard hymn tunes are few in number. There is, so far as I can gather, but one harmonization in regular use, and this is very simple. With the large mixed choirs at Welsh churches, and the constant repetition involved by the small repertory, it is not surprising that such a large proportion of the population should be able to sing hymns in harmony on the smallest provocation. Moreover, as we have seen, with the Welsh the hymn tune often takes a place that in England is filled by the popular song and chorus. For example, one day a char-a-banc passed me, filled with young fellows singing 'Tôn-y-Botel' in four-part harmony with delightful effect. A similar party of young Englishmen would have given us something very different, both in matter and manner.

At the Psalmody Festival the crowd were all singing from music-books. Neither on this nor on any other occasion did I hear any singing of 'seconds.' A few men sang the melody an octave lower—never a bad effect when the mass of harmony is big, and excellent in this case, as the hymns were always pitched high.

In England we have lately been preaching the virtues of unison singing, and certainly the method is infinitely preferable to the go-as-you-please mixture of unison, improvised harmony, and 'seconds,' we have tolerated for so long. But I fancy that the Welsh Psalmody Festival, and Welsh hymn-singing generally, would convince us that the ideal is congregational harmony, with a moderate use of unison. I am yet to be persuaded that an average English congregation cannot be taught to sing simple part-music. All they need is a copy of the music, periodical practices, and encouragement. The handful who are unable to do more than follow the tune should be told to stick to it. The men who double the melody in the octave below have been laughed at too often. What organist does not value his 16-fr. diapason on the Great? When he has a few in trousers he ought to be thankful.

Occasional Notes.

Miss Dorothy Howell, whose symphonic poem, 'Lamia,' met with such emphatic success on its production at the Promenade Concerts on September 10 and 13, is a native of Birmingham. Miss Howell's musical gifts are an inheritance from both her parents. Her father is an amateur pianist of taste and ability, and, through her mother, she is descended from Alfred Feeny, who was editor and musical critic of the Birmingham Daily Post in the days when the Birmingham Musical Festival was an event of the first importance in the musical life of England. Miss Howell, who has just attained her majority, has been writing music since she reached the age of nine. Her systematic study, however, may be said to date from September, 1913, when she came to London and entered the Royal Academy of Music. Her teachers there were Mr. Percy Waller, pianoforte (and during Mr. Waller's absence on active service, Mr. Tobias Matthay), Miss Gladys Chester, violin, and Mr. J. B. McEwen, composition.

'Lamia' was begun two years ago, and the score was completed in something over twelve months. While the composer was busy on this work she found time to write a number of pianoforte studies and smaller compositions of other kinds. Miss Howell's output includes also songs, chamber music, the first act of an Opera based on 'The Winter's Tale,' and smaller pieces for orchestra. She is at present engaged on the composition of a Ballet dealing with the legend of the Willow Pattern Plate. Arrangements are now being made for the performance of 'Lamia' in the chief provincial musical centres, including the composer's native city.

Believing, as we do, that the music of London should be decentralised as far as possible, we are glad to hear of the formation of the Hammersmith Sunday Concert Society. The Society will give a series of subscription concerts at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, on Sunday evenings at 8.30, beginning on October 5. The programmes are of first-rate quality, the following works being among those down for performance: John Ireland's Trio No. 2, Bantock's Old English Suite, Ravel's Trio in A minor, Herbert Howell's Comedy Suite for clarinet and pianoforte, Haydn's Symphony No. 13, Bach's C minor Concerto for two pianofortes and strings, &c., with vocal items of equal interest. The performers include the Philharmonic String Quartet, the Lyric Hammersmith String Quartet, Miss Rhoda Backhouse, Miss Gladys Moger, Messrs. John Ireland, Felix Salmond, Clive Carey, and other well-known soloists. The enterprise is under the direction of Mr. Arthur Bliss, 21, Holland Park, W. 11.

The Chesterian made its appearance as a musical journal on September 15. The aims of the newcomer are well set forth in an editorial, entitled, 'Aut frigidus aut calidus'—not the journal's only example of an unusual caption, for Mr. George Moore heads some interesting reminiscences, 'The nineness in the oneness.' Mr. Ernest Newman contributes a London Letter, Mr. Cyril Scott writes on Eugène Goossens, and Mr. Granville Bantock genially blesses the enterprise. The Chesterian promises to be a lively addition to the musical Press.

Mr. Josef Holbrooke's five concerts announced to take place at Marble Arch House have been cancelled, owing to the premises being unavailable through the falling-in of the lease. Mr. Holbrooke has arranged to give two concerts at the Portman Rooms instead. We have no information as to date.

BRASS BAND ARRANGEMENTS OF ELGAR'S SYMPHONIES.

At first sight a brass band seems the least suitable of mediums for such complex and subtle works as Elgar's Symphonies.

It is interesting to hear that the Black Dyke Mills Band is giving the best of proofs to the contrary. We learn that during the past season the band has fulfilled about forty engagements, and in every instance an outstanding feature has been the enthusiastic reception of the Elgar arrangement. The superb technique of such bands as the Black Dyke has long been recognised, and criticism has been mainly directed to their choice of music. That this fine band and its thousands of hearers are appreciative of such works as Elgar's Symphonies is the happiest of omens for the future of popular musical taste. We congratulate the bandmaster (Mr. A. O. Pearce), his players, and, not least, his audiences, and cannot refrain from expressing some envy. We in London get all too few chances of hearing the works in their original form.

THE MUSICIANS OF CHARLES II.

By C. EDGAR THOMAS.

Regarding the musical tastes of the 'Merry Monarch' there appears to be some slight diversity of opinion. The general impression seems to be that Charles did not concern himself much with the older and more solid kind of music represented by the compositions of such men as Gibbons, Byrd, and Tallis, and that he was impatient of anything but the lighter types of composition, a frame of mind for which his lengthy exile in France was no doubt in large measure due. Be this as it may, there is no doubt that the King displayed a great interest in the music and musicians of his age, and particularly in connection with the Chapel Royal. With the idea of encouraging his choirboys in the French style, Charles sent one of the foremost of them—Pelham Humphrey—to study in Paris, while it was from the Chapel Royal of the Restoration that the majority of the best composers came.

Pelham Humphrey—or Humfrey—was born in 1647, and at the Restoration became one of the first set of Children in the Chapel Royal under 'Captain' Henry Cooke. The latter, it may here be added, had seen service under the standard of the ill-fated Charles I., having gained a commission in the Royalist Army, from which service he was afterwards known as 'Captain.' In 1660 he was appointed one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal and master of the Children, and four years later 'Composer of the king's private music for voices,' at a salary of £40 per annum. He died in 1672, finding a last resting-place in the Abbey, and the old chronicler Anthony Wood says that his death was in great part caused by chagrin at finding himself surpassed in favour by Humfrey, who, as before stated, had been his pupil. Humfrey succeeded him—he had previously studied in Italy as well as France—but he enjoyed his preferment only two years, for in 1674, at the early age of twenty-seven years, he died, and like his tutor Cooke, was buried in the Cloisters of Westminster Abbey.

Another distinguished musician of the early days of the Restoration, and also among the first set of boys in the Chapel Royal of Charles II., was Dr. John Blow. A pupil of 'Captain' Cooke, he early evinced talent for composition, being one of the three concerned in the production of the 'Club Anthem,' written, so it is reputed, to celebrate a naval victory over the Dutch in 1665. Blow afterwards became the pupil of John Hingeston and Dr. Christopher Gibbons, and in 1669 was appointed organist of Westminster Abbey, a post which he held until 1680, when he generously resigned in favour of a pupil of his, Henry Purcell, then but a lad of twenty-two summers. After the latter's early death in 1695, Blow once more became organist of the Abbey, continuing there until his death. The fame of Purcell has been sung so often, and in general is too well-known to need anything more than a casual mention in this brief paper.

That delightful old gossip Pepys the Diarist has written this concerning John Blow, under date August 21, 1667:

This morning came two of Captain Cooke's boys, whose voices are broke, and are gone from the Chapel, but have extraordinary skill; and they and my boy, with his broken voice, did sing three parts; their names were Blaew [Blow] and Loggings; but, notwithstanding their skill, yet to hear them sing with their broken voices, which they could not command to keep in time, would make a man mad—so bad it was.

Some doubt exists, however, if Blow was actually the boy referred to, especially when it is considered that he would then have been nineteen years of age.

Among the pupils of Dr. Blow may be mentioned Jeremiah Clark, who eventually became organist of Winchester College in 1685 or thereabouts. Eight years later he became almoner and master of the children at St. Paul's Cathedral, in succession to his former master, Blow. Another famous pupil of Dr. Blow's was William Croft (1677-1727), who after leaving the Chapel Royal—he had lost his treble voice—was appointed the first organist of St. Anne's, Soho. In 1700 he and Jeremiah Clark became Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, and joint organists there some four years later.

The music for the Coronation of Charles II. was composed by Henry Lawes, who had survived the Interregnum, and died two years after the Restoration. Milton and Waller were ever fond of lauding the merits of this composer's works, and he would appear to have enjoyed great popularity during his day; but in the opinion of later critics quite unworthily. Dr. Burney, with engaging frankness, declares his work to have been 'languid and insipid, and equally devoid of learning and genius'; while Hawkins remarks that his music was 'deficient in melody, and neither recitative nor air, but in so precise a medium between both that a name is wanting for it.'

William Child, a pupil of Bevan, in 1660 became one of the King's private musicians, and Chanter of the Chapel Royal. A thorough Royalist, Child during the Commonwealth retired to a small farm and devoted himself to composition, declaring his feelings in the anthem 'O, Lord, grant the King a long life.' He died at Windsor in 1697 at the ripe old age of ninety years.

The following list is Charles II.'s Chapel establishment as recorded in a document entitled 'The Old Cheque-book of the Chapel Royal,' and which was edited for the first time by the late Dr. Kimbault, and published by the Camden Society, 1872:

The names of the Subdeane, Gentlemen, and others of his Majesties Chappell Royale, at the time of the coronation of King Charles the Second, Aprill 23, being St. George's Day, 1661.

Doctor Walter Jones, Subdeane.

Roger Nightingale.	John Sayer	} Ministers.
Henry Smith.	Ralph Amner
Durant Hunt.	William Tinker
Phillip Tinker.	George Low

Henry Cooke, Master of the Children.

Henry Lawes, Clarke of the Cheeke.

Thomas Peers, Thomas Hazzard,
John Harding, Gentlemen.

Edward Low, William Chyld, Christopher Gibbons, Organists.

William Howes, James Cob, Edward Coleman,
Thomas Blagrove, Nathaniell Watkins, Thomas
Purcill, Gregory Thorndell, John Cave, Henry Frost,
Edward Bradock, Alphonso Marsh, John Goodgroome,
Henry Purcill, Raphaell Courteville, George Betenham, Matthew Pennell.

Thomas Haynes, Sergeant of the Vestry.

William Williams, Yeoman. Georg. Whitcher, Yeoman.
Augustine Cleveland, Groome.

At which time every Gentleman of the Chapell (in orders) had allowed to him for a gowne, five yards of fine scarlet, and the rest of the Gentlemen, being laymen, had allowed unto each of them four yards of the like scarlet.

Much additional matter of interest concerning Charles II. and his musicians constituting the State Band may be gleaned from the following extracts from the House Accounts now preserved in the State Paper Office. The quotations are valuable inasmuch as not only are the names of the various instrumentalists set forth, but the amounts of their salaries are given in detail. Nominally for the year ending at Christmas, 1663, it yet includes payment for arrears—here and there covering the two preceding years—a fact that brought the total to £2,880 8s. 6d. It says much for a man like King Charles that he paid these arrears, and would seem to suggest that the King cherished a real regard for music. It should be noted that of the total sum just given, £668 13s. 8½d. was paid in settlement of the violinists; £162 17s. 11d. for the wind instruments; £358 13s. 10½d. for the lutes; £43 for the virginals; and £30 for the tuner. The trumpeters, however, were the heaviest item, amounting to £1,590. Irrespective of these items, certain members of the royal band obtained varying sums from time to time, for the purchase of new instruments, the repair of old ones, travelling expenses, &c. Finally, not the least interesting portions of these old transcripts are the prices that musical instruments then obtained.

The King's Private Band.

The Violins:

Alsoe allowed for mony paid to viij of his Mat^s Music^ons for the Violins, viz., Ambrose Beeland, John Singleton, Wm Young, Henry Brockwell, John Atkinson, Symon Hopper, John Huggins, and William Claxton, to every of them at xx^d pⁱ diem for his wages and xvij^d ij^s vj^d pⁱ annum for his Livery, all payable quarterly and due to them for halfe a yeare ended at our Lady Day 1662, Ciiij^sxxvj^d iij^s iij^d.

To Richard Dorney and Theophilus Fitz, two other of the said Music^ons, at the like wages and Livery pⁱann., payable as before and due to them for halfe a yeare ended at Midsum^r 1662, xlviij^s x^s x^d.

To Walter Vonckney, one other of the said Music^ons at his like wages and Livery, payable as before and due to him for One yeare and a halfe ended at our Lady Day 1663, lxiix^s xvj^s iij^d.

To John Vonckney, another of the said Music^ons, at the like wages and Livery, payable quarterly and due to him for half a yeare ended at our Lady Day 1662, xxiiij^s vs^s v^d. And to Henry Smith succeeding him in the said roome and place at the like wages and Livery pⁱann., payable quarterly by virtue of his Mat^s warr vnder the signet dated the Fifth day of October A^o RRs Carolⁱ S^cdi xiiij^{to} and due to him for halfe a yeare ended at Mich^{as} 1662, xxiiij^s vs^s v^d. In all xlviij^s x^s x^d.

To Davis Mell, one other of the said Music^ons, at the like wages and Livery, payable as before and due to him for three quarters of a yeare ended at Midsum^r 1662, xxxiiij^s xvij^s j^d ob. And to Wm. Vonckney, succeeding in the roome and place of the said Davis Mell at the like wages and Livery, payable q^uarterly by vertue of his Majesties War^t vnder the Signet dated the xxvjth of September: A^o RRs Carⁱ S^cdi, xiiij^{to} and due to him for one quarter of a yeare ended at Mich^{as} 1662, xj^s xij^s viij^d ob. In all xlviij^s x^s x^d.

To John Bannister, another of the said Music^ons, at the like wages and Livery, payable as before and due to him for one Yeare ended at Mich^{as} 1662, xlviij^s x^s x^d.

To Matthew Lock, Composer of the said Violins, at the like wages and Livery, payable q^uarterly and due to him for halfe a yeare ended at Christmas 1662, xxiiij^s vs^s v^d.

To George Hudson, another Composer of the said Violins, at xliij^s xv^s x^d pⁱ annuⁱ, payable as before and due to him for one quarter of a yeare ended at our Lady Day 1662, x^s xiiij^s xj^d ob.

To Wm. Saunders, another of the said Music^ons, at ij^s iij^d pⁱ diem for his wages and xvij^d ij^s vj^d pⁱ ann. for his Livery, payable as before and due to him for halfe a yeare ended at our Lady Day 1662, xxix^s vij^s j^d.

And to William Howes, John Strong, Edward Strong, Richard Hudson, Philipp Bockett and Henry Comer, vijth other of the said Music^ons, to every one of them at xlviij^s xij^s viij^d pⁱ ann., payable as before and due to them for halfe a yeare ended at the same time, Clxiiij^s iij^s iij^d. Total, vj^sclxviij^s xiiij^s viij^d ob.

Of the foregoing names two are deserving of more detailed notice—Davis Mell and John Banister or Bannister. The former was not only a clever violinist, but a clockmaker as well; he was born near Salisbury in 1604. Anthony Wood, the antiquary, mentions him in his 'Diary,' remarking of his visit to Oxford in 1657:

Peter Pett, Will. Bull, Ken. Digby, and others of Allsoules, as also A. W. did give him a very handsome entertainment in the Taverne cal'd 'The Salutation' in S. Marie's Parish. . . . The Company did look upon Mr. Mell to have a prodigious hand on the Violin, & they thought that no person, as all in London did, could goe beyond him. But, when Tho. Baltzar, an Outlander, came to Oxford, in the next yeare, they had other thoughts of Mr. Mell, who, tho he play'd far sweeter than Baltzar, yet Baltzar's hand was more quicker, & could run it insensibly to the end of the finger-board.

Mell succeeded Lanieri as the Master of the King's Band at the Restoration.

Banister was born in 1630, and early in life displayed a marked propensity for the violin. Gaining the notice of Charles II., he was sent to France to further his musical studies, and in 1662 was appointed leader of the 'Merry Monarch's' band, the notice in the State Papers running: 'Mr. Banister appointed to be chief of his Majesty's violins.' Pepys has written of him thus:

They talk how the King's violin, Banister, is mad that a Frenchman is come to be chief of some part of the King's musique.

Tradition has it that Banister was eventually dismissed the King's service for tactlessly remarking in the royal presence that the English performers on the violin were greatly superior to those of France. He is specially deserving of notice as having been the first to organize lucrative London concerts. Suitably advertised in the news-sheets of the day, they achieved quite a remarkable success. One advertisement—from the London Gazette of 1672—may perhaps be allowed a place here:

These are to give notice that at Mr. John Banister's house, now called the Musick-school, over against the George Tavern in White Friars, this present Monday, will be musick performed by excellent masters, beginning precisely at four of the clock in the afternoon, and every afternoon for the future, precisely at the same hour.

Banister died in 1679, and was buried in the Cloisters of Westminster Abbey.

The item concerning the wind instruments reads as follows:

Alsoe allowed for money paid to William Gregory, sen^r, John Strong, and Thomas Blagrove, iij^{es} of his Ma^{ty}s Music^{on}s for the Wind Instruments, to each of them at xx^d pⁱ diem for his wages and xvjⁱ ij^s vjdⁱ pⁱ ann. for his Livery, all payable q^uarterly and due to them for half a yeare ended at our Lady Day 1662. lxixⁱⁱ xvjsⁱ iij^d.

And to Thomas Lanier, another of the said Music^{on}s, for his like wages and Livery, due to him for Two yeares ended at Christmas 1663, iijj^{xx} xiiijⁱⁱ xx^d. Total Clxijⁱⁱ xvij^s xjdⁱ.

Lanieri—the name has been variously spelt—was the name of a family of 17th century musicians, of whom Nicholas Lanieri was the most famous. He appears in the extract concerning the lutes, which follows. Others of the family filled positions of importance as Court musicians.

As before-mentioned, the account for the lutes comprised a sum of £385 13s. 10½^d, and among those to whom money for 'wages and Livery' was due, together with arrears, were John Singleton, Nicholas Lanieri, Dr. John Wilson, D. Stooskin, Lewis Evans, John Hingeston, Thomas Baltzar, Henry Lawes, Paul Bridges, and Richard Hudson. Among these names, those of Baltzar and Lawes are the outstanding ones. Baltzar was to receive

Cxⁱⁱ pⁱ ann., payable as before and due to him for one whole yeare ended at Mich^{as} 1663, Cxⁱⁱ;

and Lawes, who has already been noticed:

At xx^{li} pⁱ ann^r for his wages and xvjⁱⁱ ij^s vjdⁱ pⁱ ann. for his Livery payable quarterly and due to him for half a yeare ended at our Lady Day 1662, xvijⁱⁱ xv^d.

A brief note on Baltzar may conveniently be inserted here. Undoubtedly he was the greatest violinist of his time, and in 1661 was appointed leader of the King's famous band of twenty-four violins. He must have occupied previously a position of private violinist to Charles II., for his name does not appear under the extract relating to the violinists of the royal band, but under that headed 'Lutes and other Private Musick.' Unfortunately he did not long enjoy his appointment, for two years later he found a last resting-place in the Cloisters of the Abbey. In passing, it is curious to note how many of the Restoration musicians were buried in the precincts of Westminster Abbey.

Regarding the 'Virginalls' only one name is given, and that of the famous Christopher Gibbons:

Alsoe allowed for money paid to Christopher Gibbons his Ma^{ty}s Music^{on} for the Virginalls, at iijj^{xx} vjdⁱ pⁱ ann for his wages payable quarterly and due to him for half a yeare ended at Mich^{as} 1663, xliijⁱⁱ.

Christopher Gibbons occupies an important position in the history of Caroline music. Starting as a chorister in the Chapel Royal, he afterwards obtained the appointment of organist at Winchester Cathedral, a post he vacated on becoming a member of the Royalist Army during the Civil War. At the Restoration he became organist of the Chapel in which he had commenced as a chorister, and afterwards private organist to Charles and organist at Westminster Abbey, a by no means small record.

The tuner and keeper of the 'Wind Instruments' was 'John Hingeston,' who received for his pains £60 per annum, besides £30 for half a year's arrears owing at Lady Day, 1662. This worthy was probably—but hardly any doubt exists—the John Hingeston who managed successfully to follow his calling through the troublous days of the Civil War, Commonwealth, and Restoration alike. Originally in the service of Charles I., as one of that monarch's musicians, he afterwards during the Commonwealth entered that of the Protector Cromwell, instructing the latter's daughters. Indeed he would appear to have become a great favourite with Cromwell, for he was appointed the Protector's organist at a salary of £100 a year, and frequently entertained his master at musical assemblies held at his residence.

A sum of £1,590 was paid for one 'sergeant Trumpeter,' who was allowed £100 a year, and fifteen ordinary trumpeters and one kettle-drummer each £60, this representing one and a quarter years' salaries at Michaelmas, 1663.

Among the incidental expenses in connection with the musicians of Charles II. are several little items of more than ordinary interest. Henry Cooke, Master of the Children of His Majesty's Chapel, received £23 17s. 9d. in 1661 for 'fetching ffive boyes from Newarke and Lincolne' for the King's service; 'for his owne attendance with the Twelue Children of his Ma^{ty}s Chappell at St. George's feast at Windsor by the space of vij^{en} dayes at v p diem to eache and Torchcs and Lights for practiceing Musicke against his Ma^{ty}s Coronacⁿ, a sum of £22 6s.; and again 'for money by him expended to Masters for teaching the said Children to write and Learne and speake Latin from Mich^{as} 1660 to the Lady Day following, and for a booke of the services and Anthemes for his Ma^{ties} service,' £50 16s. In the following year Cooke received 'for the Children of the Chappell Learning ye Violin,' £30, and 'for their Learning the Organ,' another £30. Two violins cost £10, and a similar sum was paid for a 'Harpiscall.' In the same year Cooke was also paid 'for himselfe and xiiijⁿ boyes (Children of his Ma^{ties} Chappell) for their attendance at Windsor at St. George's feast 1663, which continued six dayes at vs apiece p^r diem,' £21; and 'for the attendance of Mr. Bates and Mr. Gregory, two other Music^{ons} there, for the same time at the same rate,' £3; 'for carrying the Instruments that were for performance of the Musicke there,' 30s.; and 'for the charges of their Lodging there,' 40s.

In 1661 Thomas Baltzer was paid 'for two Vyolins and other things bought for his Ma^{ties} service,' £34 3s. 4d.; and Philip Beckett, 'one of his Ma^{ties} Musicians for ye Vyolins in ordinary, for a vyolin to be used in the Chamber of Vyolins, and for a Cornett to bee vsed in his Ma^{ties} Chappell Royall,' £18. The cost of conveying fifteen violinists to Windsor in April, 1661, was £22 10s., and two of them, Thomas Blgrave and William Hawes, for some reason not stated, received £3. On this occasion the transport of the wind instruments and their players resulted in a payment of £18.

On March 6, 1661, Henry Comer was paid £10 for a 'Treble Vyolin' which he had bought for the King's service, and in the same month Richard Darney received £7 for the purchase of a 'Tenor Vyolin.'

By warrant dated December 20, 1660, John Hingston, 'maker, tuner, and repairer of his Ma^{ties} wind instruments,' received a sum of £116 17s. 'for several wind Instruments by him bought and provided,' but unfortunately a detailed list of these, with the individual prices, is not given. The value of such a list need not be elaborated.

Among other entries relating to the purchase of instruments is one recording the payment of £40 to Davis Mill 'for musicke bookes for his Ma^{ties} Vyolins and a Cremona Vyolin,' and another which gives the price of 'two double Sagbuttes' as £30.

At this period—1660-63—a 'Base Vyoll' cost £10 six kettledrums 'and for mending the old ones,' £33 7s.; and two Cremona violins, 'and strings for Two whole yeares,' £50.

Another item of £121 13s. 6d. was for the purchase of 'a new Cabinet Organ, iij^r Violins, and severall other Instruments, and for stringing and repairing sundry other Instruments'; while the cost of 'Organs and a Harpiscord for the Kings Chappell at Hampton Court, and alsoe for the Queenes Private Chappell,' was £155 15s.

William Gregory, on March 26, 1662, received £17 for a Viol and Strings,' and John Singleton and twelve colleagues, all violinists, £305 10s. for fitting out and accompanying the King to Portsmouth for the reception of the Queen in 1662.

The following year seven violinists were each paid a sum of £20 to enable them to attend the Queen at Tunbridge.

Finally, it is interesting to learn that the cost of the music to entertain Charles II. during 'his Journeys in the Sum^{er}, 1665,' was £400, which sum was paid as 'the extraordinary charges' of seven violinists—John Banister and six others. Unfortunately we are left in doubt as to the extent of the royal 'journeys.'

The Musician's Bookshelf.

BY 'FESTE.'

If some such little volume as Percy Scholes's 'Introduction to British Music' (Cecil Palmer & Hayward) had appeared twenty-five years ago, we English of to-day would have a better conceit of ourselves in regard to music. Our musical history is a switchback of two rises and one long depression. We are now well up on the second rise, and any future decline is unlikely to be so long and profound as that we suffered between Purcell and Bennett. Mr. Scholes gives a very clear sketch of our chequered career, writing in the free and chatty style which makes his books so easy and pleasant to read. Perhaps he is sometimes inclined to see things in too rosy a light, but we have suffered so much from jaundiced critics eager to prove all our swans to be geese, that we can do with an occasional hint at the other extreme.

I am glad to see Mr. Scholes's convincing defence of the Puritans against the charge of loathing and abolishing music. As he says, the fact that during the Commonwealth Playford was able to publish three editions of 'The English Dancing Master,' 'Music and Mirth' (a collection of rounds and catches), Madrigals by Gibbons and Wilbye, Ayres by Campion, Gibbons's 'String Fantazias,' and many other books of lessons, dances, and theory, proves the period to have been far from dead musically. The chapter on 'The Victorians' makes it clear that this era also was not so black as it is sometimes painted.

Of course, Mr. Scholes's book is primarily intended for the general public, but musicians who know all the facts will benefit by reading it, because they will find their knowledge properly laid out. As a matter of fact though, the average trained musician is almost as ignorant as the amateur on this subject, chiefly because until recently the information had to be collected from various more or less heavy text-books. Here we have it brought to our door, so to speak, and served up with a dash of enthusiasm and optimism that will do us almost as much good as the facts themselves.

Not the least remarkable of modern developments in Church music is the revival of interest in plainsong, and a steadily increasing use of it. In this development Mr. Francis Burgess has played an important part, especially as a writer of text-books. He has just written another—'The Rudiments of Plain-chant,' the first of a series of 'Handbooks of Church Music' published by the Proprietors of Musical Opinion. He deals with the subject under four heads—History, Notation, Rhythm, and Tonality. Those of us who have heard how wonderfully effective this old music is when sung unaccompanied will agree with Mr. Burgess when he says:

Viewed as a department of musical history, the study of plain-chant will open up a great vista of possibilities in the direction of pure one-dimensional melody, untrammelled by considerations of added parts or of instrumental accompaniment. It is an extraordinary comment upon our present-day musical narrowness that there should be so few persons in this country who can tolerate melody unadorned. The loveliest folk-tunes have to be published with pianoforte accompaniments which, however skilfully designed, cannot fail to be a grievous anachronism. Even plain-chant itself is supposed to depend for its effect upon a tasteful and suitable accompaniment.

I believe that plain-songists will grow out of this error, just as they grew out of the even more serious one of believing that plain-song was effective only when sung loudly and rigidly by a huge body of men. Some enthusiasts even believed it was improved by a slightly nasal method of production! Mr. Burgess gives a very clear explanation of the notation, the rather forbidding old signs being bracketed with the tonic sol-fa and staff translations. Although there seems to be a likelihood of modern notation being generally adopted in future plainsong publications, it is important that teachers, at least, should know the old. There are certain subtleties that can be expressed through no other type. Mr. Burgess's little book is well written, and the only fault to be found with it is on the score of brevity. As the bibliographical appendix gives a list of text-books on the subject, with the order in which they should be studied, he evidently intends his essay to be an introductory manual. As such, it is excellent.

'Rejoice Greatly: How to Organize Public Ceremonies.' (British Institute of Industrial Art, Bow Street, W.C.) This book would have been more useful had it appeared a few months earlier. But public festivities are always taking place somewhere, so a beautifully illustrated guide can never be really out of season. We English are notoriously slovenly in our public rejoicings. We have an unhappy knack of hanging up the wrong flag, or of putting the right flag upside down, and of letting public colour-schemes settle themselves in a way we should never dream of in our homes or theatres. This handbook contains chapters on Organization (Major A. A. Longden), Street Decoration (R. Anning Bell and Norman Macdermott), Pageantry (Sir Frank Benson and Henry Wilson), Costume (Stephen Reid and R. Anning Bell), Heraldry (Oswald Barron and George Kruger Gray), Music (C. Kennedy Scott), The Organization of Choirs (Captain J. F. Thistleton), and Dancing (Cecil Sharp). The colour illustrations are admirable, the frontispiece (decorated barges, &c.) being an especially beautiful bit of colour printing. The chapter on Choir Organization is the chief concern of a musical journal, however, so I will not pause longer on the many other interesting features. Captain Thistleton's suggestions are all good and practical, but the subject needs fuller treatment. The recent valuable experiences of the special difficulties of outdoor choral work should provide material for an extension of the chapter in a future edition of the book. But is not the time ripe for something more accessible than a mere chapter in a large and expensive volume? The recent Peace celebrations evoked an amount of open-air choralism that has never been approached in this country, and probably nowhere else. It gave genuine pleasure to the public, and should be kept up. Is there any reason why the music in our parks and other public spaces should be confined to bands? Why should not local choral Societies take a part occasionally? There are difficulties to be met. The music needs to be of a direct and simple kind, and something in the way of a background or soundboard should be provided. In regard to the latter point, small concert parties at holiday resorts manage to give solo and ensemble vocal work with good results, and it surely ought to be possible for local authorities to make suitable provision. I suggest that the present would be a good time for the publication of a cheap handbook on the subject. Conductors who are known to have organized outdoor choirs should be asked to contribute suggestions based on their actual experiences. The suggestions should be carefully collated by an editor who is also an experienced choral conductor, and a list of suitable music of all grades and types should of course be included. A shilling book appearing next January would stimulate activities for the summer of 1920. The expenses of such activities should be met (at least in part) by the local authority. A farthing rate would do the business. Penny ones are often imposed for less useful purposes. The value of music in open spaces being recognised by the employment of bands (which presumably cost something), why not extend the scheme so as to include one of the most delightful and democratic forms of the art?

Works of fiction do not come to me for review unless they have some musical claim to consideration. Miss Cecilia Hill's 'Stone Walls' has such a claim, so I gladly mention it. Novelists, as a rule, come to grief when introducing musical references. In Miss Hill's story the art plays a prominent part, and is treated with sympathy and knowledge. If you ask for my opinion of the book on its mere story-telling side, I am bound to admit that, like Joe Gargery's ale, it do not over-stimulate. But (to continue the metaphor) many people still like their fiction drawn mild rather than bitter. To such, 'Stone Walls,' with its mixture of pretty sentiment and pleasant humour, will be welcome.

CAPT. B. S. GREEN, M.V.O.

The retirement of Captain B. S. Green, M.V.O., Director of Music of the Royal Marine Artillery, is announced, and the Services will lose one of their ablest conductors in consequence. Captain Green has the distinction of being the doyen of directors of music in the Services, having no fewer than fifty-four years to his credit. His band—the famous 'Blues'—is renowned in all parts of the world, and it owes much of its popularity to the sterling musical abilities of its conductor.

Photo by

Elliott & Fry.

Captain Green has a ways aimed at the preservation of a high musical standard, and has often denounced the average conductor's tendency to pander to the insipid tastes of seaside visitors. For many years he and his band delighted Southsea audiences with symphony concerts, and maintained a very high level of excellence. Latterly, the powers-that-be have substituted the light musical fare that one finds served up by seaside orchestras of some twenty instruments. 'Small band, less expense,' is the prevailing motto of entertainment purveyors, to the detriment of good music and to the disgust of real music-lovers.

In the course of an interview, Captain Green expressed these views with vehemence:

'A small band is absolutely useless and absurd for pier audiences. My band contains fifty instruments, and I do not call it a performance if they are not all heard. The soft string parts are lost. Regarding the quality of the music, it is deteriorating in a marked degree. I have had many letters asking me when I am going to re-commence my symphony concerts, which were greatly appreciated, but I cannot do so at the present rates. Small and cheap orchestras do not make for good programmes.'

Captain Green has been well endowed with decorations in the course of his musical career. He came to the R.M.A. in 1897 on the appointment of Captain Williams to the music directorship of the Grenadier Guards. Curiously enough, the latter took over his first appointment—that of bandmaster of the 10th Hussars—from Captain Green nine years previously. The subject of this sketch joined the 8th Hussars in 1865, and speedily enhanced the reputation of the 'Blues' band. It was the favourite band of Queen Victoria whilst she was in residence at Osborne House, Isle of Wight. It also had the honour of accompanying King Edward and Queen Alexandra on all the cruises of the royal yacht, the Victoria and Albert, and later accompanied the present King and Queen on the occasion of their memorable voyage in the Medina to the Delhi Durbar, after which Captain Green was made an M.V.O. A list of presents and decorations Captain Green has received from Royalty would take more space than we can spare. The donors have included, besides our own Royal Family, the King of Denmark, the ex-Kaiser, the King and Queen of Norway, the late King Carlos, the King of Greece, &c. The following is a specimen programme given by Captain Green:

- | | |
|--|-------------|
| 1. (a) Overture; (b) Scherzo; (c) Nocturne from 'Midsummer Night's Dream' | Mendelssohn |
| 2. Symphony No. 5, in C minor | Beethoven |
| 3. Suite for Orchestra: (1.) Præludium; Pastorale; (2.) Polka; (3.) Menuett; Sousedska; (4.) Romance; (5.) Finale, Furiant | Dooral |
| 4. Introduction to Act 5, 'King Manfred'; Lento in F major (4-4) | Reinecke |
| 5. Extrait du Ballet du Cid: (1) Andalous; (2.) Aubade; (3.) Aragonaise | Massenet |

H. B. E.

Mr. Harold Darke has commenced his tenth series of recitals at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on Mondays at one o'clock. The programme-book shows a scheme of exceptional interest. In connection with this church Mr. Darke is running a choral Society known as the 'St. Michael's Singers.' This Society is the outcome of a voluntary choir of City workers which has existed for about ten years, and has done good work, recently performing Parry's 'Voces Clamantium' and 'War and Peace,' Bach's 'God's time is the best,' 'A Stronghold sure,' 'Christmas Oratorio,' and 'St. John' Passion. The hon. secretary is Miss Saxby, 67, Cornhill, E.C.-3.

Mr. Richard Wassell will resume his weekly organ recitals at St. Michael's, Handsworth, on the first Monday in October. Similar recitals which Mr. Wassell gave weekly all through last winter attracted very large audiences. St. Michael's, Handsworth, boasts a fine Norman & Beard organ.

Church and Organ Music.

JAMES WATT AS ORGAN BUILDER.

By CLEMENT ANTROBUS HARRIS.

On Thursday, September 4, 1919, the good folk of Greenock, under the leadership of Lord Inchcape and the Secretary for Scotland (Mr. Robert Monro) celebrated the centenary of the death of one of the town's most illustrious citizens, James Watt. As a matter of fact the actual centenary had already passed by a few days; for the lad who, if not the first discoverer of the power of steam, did so much to develop it that he may be regarded as the inventor of the steam-engine, was born at Greenock on January 19, 1736, and died at Heathfield, near Birmingham, where he was interested in a large engineering works, on August 19, 1819.

Like many distinguished men James Watt was mostly self-taught, or at least home-taught. Being a very weakly child he was unable to go to school with regularity. His mother taught him reading and his father writing and arithmetic. Whether anybody taught him music, history does not say: probably not, as he had no ear for it, and 'could not tell B from a boiler explosion'—I quote the phrase as being peculiarly appropriate in his case. The chief bent he displayed as a lad was for mathematics and calculations, and he showed a great interest in machines. His original employment was as a mathematical instrument maker, first on his own account, and later to the University of Glasgow. It was while thus occupied that his attention became directed to the capabilities of steam. Even his phenomenal success in this sphere did not prevent his expansive mind interesting itself in other subjects. He invented a letter-copying press, a machine for copying sculpture, and numerous other devices unconnected with boiling water. And among these subsidiary activities was the making of an organ.

The original form of the instrument was that of a small table. Mr. James Steven, into whose hands it came about 1776, had an organ front with gilt pipes, and sides, placed on the top of the table, giving it the appearance it now has. Another owner had a third stop added to the two which it originally possessed. The qualities of the organ are said to have excited the surprise and admiration of contemporary musicians. The instrument was built by Watt in his house in High Street, Glasgow, in 1762, and forty-five years later was placed in St. Andrew's Church in that city. This was at the time when (and for long after) the 'kist o' whistles' was regarded as a 'squeaking abomination'—to quote an English Puritan phrase—by the Presbyterians, and the introduction of the instrument was the occasion of a great uproar. On hearing that the organ was to be played during divine service, no less a personage than the Provost (Anglice, Mayor) of the city wrote to the minister of the church, Dr. Ritchie, an enthusiastic fiddler, 'begging to know of him if such was really the case,' and adding that, if so, he would consider it his duty to enter a solemn protest against him and the congregation for all damages which might be the consequence. Dr. Ritchie was also held personally responsible for 'any breach of the peace which might possibly be occasioned by the innovation he had attempted to introduce.' Despite these civic thunders the organ was used, but only for one Sunday. Finding that their reprobate brother paid no attention to the commands of Cæsar, the fathers of the church, the Presbytery, interfered. This spiritual authority the fiddling minister was bound to obey, and the organ was immediately closed by their order. But this aroused rather than allayed feeling on both sides, and a fierce controversy followed, conducted mainly by means of pamphlets. Those familiar with church squabbles will not be surprised to learn that the language used in these fulminations showed no very marked improvement on that employed under similar circumstances by worldlings. Thus one of the 'friends of music,' writing to the Provost, protests against it as 'the illiberal mass of prejudice, bigotry, and party spirit rolled from one to another like a snowball full of every filthy ingredient.' As is usual in ecclesiastical

(Continued on page 551.)

Lead us, Heavenly Father.

October

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

ANTHEM FOR FOUR VOICES.

Words by JAMES EDMESTON.

Composed by F. W. WADELY.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andantino. ♩ = 69.

ORGAN.

p

Man.

SOPRANO.

p sostenuto.poco cres.

Lead us, Heav'nly Fa - ther, lead us O'er the world's tem - pest - uous

ALTO.

p sostenuto.poco cres.

Lead us, Heav'nly Fa - ther, O'er the world's tem - pest - uous

TENOR.

p sostenuto.poco cres.

Lead us, Heav'nly Fa - ther, O'er the world's tem - pest - uous

BASS.

p sostenuto.poco cres.

Lead, us, Heav'nly Fa - ther, O'er the world's tem - pest - uous poco cres.

Ped.

mp

sea; Guard us, guide us, keep . . us, feed us, For we have . . .

mp

sea; . . Guard us, guide us, keep us, feed us, For we have . .

mp

sea; Guard us, guide us, keep us, feed us, For we have . . no

mp

sea; Guard us, guide us, keep . . us, feed . . us, For we mp

dim.

no help but Thee, Yet pos-sess-ing ev-'ry bless-ing.

dim.

no help but Thee, Yet pos-sess-ing ev-'ry bless-ing

dim.

help but Thee, Yet pos-sess-ing ev-'ry bless-

dim.

have no help but Thee, Yet pos-sess-ing ev-'ry

dim.

If our God our Fa-ther be.

p

If our God our Fa-ther be.

p ing If our God our Fa-ther be.

p bless-ing If our God our Fa-ther be.

p

Saviour, breathe for-give-ness o'er us,

p

Saviour, breathe for-give-ness o'er us,

poco cres. mp

All our weak - ness . . Thou dost know ; Thou didst tread this earth . .

poco cres. mp

All our weak - ness . . Thou dost know ; Thou didst

poco cres. mp

dim.

be - fore us, Thou didst feel . . its keen - est woe ;

dim.

tread this earth be - fore us, Thou didst feel its keen - est woe ; . .

dim.

p pp

Lone and drear - y, faint . . and wea - ry, . . Through the des

p pp

faint . . and wea - ry, . . Through the

p pp

ert Thou didst go.

des-ert Thou didst go.

cres.

p Spi-rit of our God, .

p Spi

p Spi

dim. p

cres.

de-scend-ing, Fill our hearts with heav'n-ly joy,

cres.

rit of our God, Fill . . our hearts . . . with heav'n-ly joy,

cres.

rit of our God, Fill . . our hearts . . with heav'nly joy,

cres.

Love with ev-'ry pas - sion blend - ing, Plea - sure that . can nev - er

Love with ev-'ry pas - sion blending, Plea - sure that . can nev - er

Love with ev-'ry pas-sion blend - ing, Plea - sure that can nev - er

Love with ev-'ry pas-sion blend - ing, Plea - sure that can nev - er

cloy ; Thus pro - vi - ded, par - don'd, guid - ed, No - cloy ; . . Thus pro - vi - ded, par - don'd, guid - ed, ..

cloy ; . . Thus pro - vi - ded, par - don'd, guided, No - - - thing, cloy ; . . Thus . . pro - vi - ded, par - don'd, guid - ed, No - thing can . our peace de - stroy,

No-thing can our peace . de - stroy,

no - thing can our peace . de - stroy,

thing can our peace de - stroy,

no - thing can our peace . . de -

no - thing can our peace . . de -

no - - - thing can . . our peace de -

no - - - - thing can our peace . . de - sempre dim. poco rit.

Detailed description: This system contains five vocal staves and a grand piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in treble clef with a key signature of three sharps (F#, C#, G#). The piano part is in bass clef with the same key signature. The lyrics are 'no - thing can our peace . . de -' repeated across the staves. The piano accompaniment features a melodic line in the right hand and a harmonic line in the left hand. Dynamic markings include p (piano), poco rit. (poco ritardando), and dim. (diminuendo).

stoy.

stoy.

stoy.

stoy.

p pp pp

Detailed description: This system contains five vocal staves and a grand piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in treble clef with a key signature of three sharps (F#, C#, G#). The piano part is in bass clef with the same key signature. The lyrics are 'stoy.' repeated across the staves. The piano accompaniment features a melodic line in the right hand and a harmonic line in the left hand. Dynamic markings include p (piano), pp (pianissimo), and pp (pianissimo).

(Continued from page 544.)

strife, both sides quoted Scripture freely. One gathers that the Presbytery felt rather badly hit by some excerpts as given by a certain writer of pro-organ pamphlets, for in a solemn Minute they retorted by accusing him of 'culpable inaccuracy and a scandalous violation of the truth.'

The reader will naturally be wondering what the builder of the organ himself thought about it all, and whether he took any part in the controversy? Unfortunately history does not say. Watt had retired in 1800, seven years before his organ was placed in St. Andrew's Church. He was living at Heathfield Hall, near Birmingham, and was probably too happy and engrossed in his attic workroom there (still preserved in its old condition) to do more than smile at the noise which the silencing of his old organ was making!

And what became of the old organ itself? After lying for many years unused it was sold to Bailie Archibald McLellan for £400. On his death it was acquired by Mr. Adam Sims, of Coulter Mains, for £50. At the Coulter Mains sale in June, 1918, it was bought by Mr. George W. Macfarlane for its first price, £400. This gentleman generously presented the instrument to its old foe the Glasgow Corporation. Thereby he showed a keen—one is tempted to say whimsical—sense of eternal fitness of things, for he enabled the descendants of both sides in the old controversy to claim the victory. The 'lovers of music' can afford to laugh, for there is an organ in almost every church in Glasgow. And the opponents of instrumental music, chiefly the 'Wee Frees,' may sing hymns of triumph (of course unaccompanied), since the old organ which the man who 'stands at the head of all inventors' built, is not now used, or even housed, in a place of worship, but stands in the Central Hall of the Kelvin-grove Galleries.

James Watt's organ has been described in a Scottish newspaper as 'the first pipe-organ built in Scotland.' That it was the first since the destruction of organs and every kind of church furniture at the Reformation, is possible if not probable. Against such a theory is the fact that an organ was erected at Rouen Cathedral in 1640, eighty years after the Reformation, by George Leslie, a Scotsman, who presumably learned his craft in his own country. The presumption, however, is not a very convincing one, for he or his forbears may have been driven from their native land by lack of any work to do. But if we go behind the Reformation the statement is untenable, not to say grotesque. The organ was used much earlier, and to a much greater extent, in Scotland than has been generally recognised South of the Tweed and the Cheviots, or indeed by some Scottish historians themselves. In the old Treasurer's books of the Scottish Chapels Royal are to be found many items relating to the building and repair of organs, just as they are in similar books relating to English cathedrals and abbeys. The following are specimens:

1507, Jan. 12. Item to the chanoun of Holyrudhous that mendit the organ in Strivelin and Edinburgh, vij^{li}

1511. Item to Gilleam, organist, maker of the Kingis organis, for expenses maid by him at the sayd organis, in gait skynnis, and parchment for the belles, in naillis and spreitis of irne, in glew, papir, candill, &c., viij^{li} iiij^s

But the subject is too long to discuss in detail here.

The Church-Music Society's arrangements for the autumn include a recital of unfamiliar anthems, suitable for general use, at Southwark Cathedral on October 18, conducted by Mr. E. T. Cook, and two lecture-recitals on 'Voluntaries,' by Mr. Harvey Grace, at St. Mary Magdalene's, Munster Square, on November 1 and December 6. The first recital will consist of organ music based on ecclesiastical themes.

A Hymn Lecture-Practice will take place at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on November 29, conducted by Mr. Martin Shaw.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. C. E. B. Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham (four recitals)—Andante Cantabile (Symphony No. 5), Tchaikovsky; Grand Chœur in B flat, Haigh; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Suite in F minor, Driffill; Introduction and Passacaglia (Sonata in B minor), Merkel.

Mr. Harold Helman, St. Margaret's, Ilkley (four recitals)—Sonata in G (1st movement), Elgar; Dithyramb, Harwood; Andantino and Finale from 'Scheherazade,' Rimsky-Korsakov; Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Sonata, Reubke; Grand Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. Thomas's, Regent Street (three recitals)—Marcia Religiosa and Fugue (Sonata No. 6), Rheinberger; Pres de la Mer, Arensky; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Cantilène, Quéf; Canzonetta del Salvatore Rosa, Liszt.

Mr. Maughan Barnett, Auckland, New Zealand (four recitals)—Allegretto in B minor, Guilmant; Sonata No. 1, and Cornelius March, Mendelssohn; Carillon, Faulkes; Fantaisie in C, Franck; Bridal Music from 'The Birds,' Parry; Idyll, Rheinberger.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Unthank Road Baptist Church, Norwich (two recitals)—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Sursum Corda and Alla Marcia, John Ireland; Pean, Harwood; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme; Marche Pontificale, Widor; Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (two recitals)—'Recessional,' Alan Gray; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Finale to the Etudes Symphoniques, Schumann; Finale from Sonata Britannica, Stanford; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry; Allegretto Scherzando, Stuart Archer.

Mr. C. E. R. Stevens, St. Mark's, Jersey (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Overture in C, Adams; Sonata No. 8, Rheinberger.

Mr. Herbert C. Morris, St. David's Cathedral (two recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in A minor and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. J. A. Bellamy, Parish Church, Sidmouth (two recitals)—Three Impromptus, Coleridge-Taylor; Marche Pontificale, de la Tombelle; Capriccio alla Sonata, Fumagalli.

Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (two recitals)—The Pilgrim's Progress, Part 4, Ernest Austin; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; 'April Sorg,' Wolstenholme; Marche Cortège, Gounod.

Dr. T. Westlake Morgan, Parish Church, Weston-super-Mare—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Becker.

Mr. Wilfrid Arlom, Woollahra Presbyterian Church, Sydney, N.S.W.—Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio; Two Consolations, Liszt; Solemn March and Heroic Epilogue, 'Verdun,' Stanford; Finale in B flat, Franck.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral (four recitals)—Prelude and Fugue in G, Allegro (Sonata No. 1), and Fugue alla gigue, Bach; 'Idylls of Iona,' Julian Nesbitt; Sonata No. 9, Merkel; Theme with Variations, Noble; Legend, Liszt; Festival Prelude, Faulkes; Sonata No. 5, Della Torre; Pièce Héroïque, Franck; Sonata Cromatica, Yon; Fountain Reverie and Festival Toccata, Fletcher.

Mr. Ezra Edson, Conisbrough Parish Church—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Second Meditation, Guilmant; Fugue in G minor, Bach; Allegro Maestoso, Peace.

Mr. John Pullein, Elgin Parish Church—Sonata in C, Rheinberger; Fantasia in G, Wolstenholme; Preludes on 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace, 'Rockingham' and Croft's 136th, Parry; Improvisation—Capice, Jongen. High Church, Inverness.—Toccata in C, Rheinberger; Minuetto, Gigout; Preludes on 'Martyrdom,' Parry, and 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; Gavotte, Pullein; Con Spirito from Concerto, Arne.

Mr. S. Wallbank, Hexham Abbey (two recitals)—Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Andante (String Quartet in D), Tchaikovsky. St. Nicholas, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Andante Cantabile in G, Wesley; Nocturne in G minor, Bonnet; Con Moto, Saint-Saëns; Allegro Cantabile and Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (four recitals)—Air with Variations and Fugue, Franck; Concerto in B flat, Handel; Elegie, Vierne; Harmonies du Soir, Karg-Elert; Spozalizio, Liszt; Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Reger; Prelude on 'Dundee,' Parry; Sonata No. 1, Stanford.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Mr. Albert Orton, Newport Parish Church, I.O.W. (three recitals)—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Grand Offertoire, in D, Batiste; Triumphal March, Grieg; Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Merkel.

Miss Charlotte Gorst, Christ Church, Bala—Duo Sans Paroles, Henselt; Impromptu in A minor, Coleridge-Taylor; Festive March, Hurst.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Hinckley Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; 'In Springtime,' Tootell; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. C. Trevor, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford—Trio in F, Krebs; Gavotte, Martini; Communion on 'Irish,' Harwood; Postlude on 'Martyrs,' Harvey Grace; Andante Moderato in C minor, Frank Bridge; Prelude in D minor, Stanford.

Mr. R. W. Whittle, Childwall Parish Church—Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Clair de Lune, Karg-Elert; Cantilène, Salomé.

Mr. Greenhouse Allt, Blakeney Church, Norfolk—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Villanella and Madrigal, Ireland; Intermezzo (Sonata No. 20) and Berceuse, Rheinberger; Overstrand Church, Norfolk—Scherzo in B flat, Wolstenholme; Marche Funèbre and Berceuse, Vierne; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns.

APPOINTMENTS.

Captain Felix E. Baker (tenor) to H.M. Chapels Royal, St. James's.

Mr. F. Leslie Calver, organist and choirmaster, St. Michael's, Blackheath.

Mr. Alec H. G. Miller, organist and choirmaster, New Barnet Wesleyan Church.

Mr. Frederick Phipp, organist and choirmaster, St. Peter's, Devizes.

Mr. John Tyler, organist and choirmaster, Wretham-Road Church, Handsworth, Birmingham.

Reviews.

Introduction to the English Country Dance. By Cecil J. Sharp.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

This book appears at a time when dancing generally is immensely popular, and when our old English dances are receiving more attention than has come their way for generations. The astonished delight of those who see them for the first time is the best of all auguries for their revival.

Mr. Sharp's book is severely practical. He gives us first an explanation of technical terms and symbols, and the movements and figures, a page of general directions, detailed descriptions and diagrams of the twelve chosen dances, followed by the dance tunes set out in easily playable form. Such dances as these should take a high place in schemes of physical culture. 'Bear your body more seemly,' said Touchstone to Audrey, and there is sound sense in the remark. A good course of country dancing should give us the benefits of Swedish drill with none of the monotony. How much more buoyantly should we step out for the 9.40 of a morning if we had the agility and ability to go neatly through any of these jolly dances! But they demand qualities that many of us have unfortunately shed long ago. Says Mr. Sharp:

The dominant characteristic of the Country Dance is its 'gay simplicity.' Every movement in a Country Dance should be executed quietly, easily, and with economy of motion, and in a simple, unaffected manner. . . . No conscious effort to be graceful should be attempted.

Gaiety, simplicity, ease, quiet, economy of motion—if we had enough of these, and all that they imply, our reconstruction problems would soon be well on the way to solution. On all grounds, Mr. Sharp's book deserves a warm welcome. There can be no better antidote to the ungraceful and exotic contortions with which a section of our public become obsessed from time to time.

Pièces de Clavessin de l'Ecole Française. Transcrites et mises en Recueil, par Gabriel Grovlez.

Three Miniatures. By John Gerrard Williams.

Three Preludes. By Adolfo Salazar.

Pages Intimes (for pianoforte duet). By Joseph Jorgen.

[J. & W. Chester.]

The growth of the modern French School undoubtedly owed much to the awakening of interest in the older composers of France, and especially in the group of clavecinists of the 17th and 18th centuries. A handful of pieces from this source, such as Daquin's 'Le Coucou,' and the Musette and Rondeau of Rameau, have long been popular in England. A well-edited and convenient collection should have appeared years ago, and here—late, but welcome—is the very thing. The two books so far published contain twenty-one works, the composers drawn on being Clérambault, Rameau, Dagincourt, Dandrieu, Daquin, Duphy, Corrette, Chambonnières, Le Begue, Marchand, Couperin, and Dornel. M. Jean-Aubry contributes an admirable preface in French and English, and each composer is given a brief biographical note. The Editor has transcribed the pieces from the original editions, and has treated the grace-notes 'in accordance with the individuality of each composer.' Of the music it would be easy to write at great length and with enthusiasm, but it must suffice now to draw attention to one of the most delightful collections of old music published for a long time.

The 'Three Miniatures' of John Gerrard Williams are based on poems by Shelley—'Dawn,' 'The Isle,' and 'Time.' The first is in Toccata style, and would make a brilliant effect. 'The Isle' has a swaying tune effectively treated, and might have been called 'Nocturne.' The third is a picturesque sea-piece. Mr. Williams is a composer new to us. He has a fine eye for effect, but unfortunately appears to be obsessed with harmony based on the whole-tone scale. Of all harmony, this is perhaps the kind that cloyes the soonest. We hope the composer will show what he can do without it. We believe he can do a great deal.

Adolfo Salazar's Three Preludes suffer somewhat from an apparent inability to use ordinary means of expression. There is much that is fascinating in these little pieces, but somehow they leave an impression of experiment in tone-colour and sonority rather than of musical ideas that had to be expressed. Once or twice we thought a tune was coming, especially as the direction 'chanté' frequently appears, but each time the composer escapes doing such an obvious thing. When he yields, we shall enjoy his music far more.

Joseph Jorgen, on the other hand, is a thoroughly modern composer who can and does write melodies. His 'Pages Intimes' are a set of three moderately-difficult duets full of charm, both of tune and harmony. Their titles explain their character: 1. 'Il était une fois'; 2. 'Dansez, Mizelle'; 3. 'Le bon chival.' The duets, moreover, show how the whole-tone scale may be employed naturally. It is a good deal in evidence, but in no case does it give an impression of being dragged in because the composer wished to show he was up-to-date. Duettists, young and old, will revel in these three delightful pieces.

SONGS.

Time o' Day and Old Loves. By Cyril Scott; In the Woods. By Harold Austin; Portsmouth Hard. By Francis Toye; In the Great Somewhere. By H. T. Burleigh.

[Elkin & Co.]

The Adoration; The Rat. By John Ireland.

[J. & W. Chester.]

There is a fashion in song-words as in song-music. We have recently had a liberal allowance of roses, and just now everybody seems to be writing songs with titles ringing the changes on 'Mother o' mine,' 'Pal o' mine,' 'Land o' dreams,' and so on. One hardly expects Mr. Cyril Scott to be in the fashion, but here even he is, with 'Time o' day,' a song with slightly bucolic words,—‘What be time o’ day, Lass, What be time o’ day?’ Mr. Cyril Scott’s music is the curious blend he so often gives us in his songs,—a diatonic melody, on which hang an assortment of chords whose chief quality is too often mere unexpectedness. Sometimes they don’t hang, but are merely on the premises. In ‘Time o’ day’ the effect is more coherent than usual, and there are only two or three clumps of notes that are impertinent. But tastes vary, and perhaps these will be the very features that will most please the composer’s out-and-out admirers. The second song is far more natural, with a melody obviously based on French folk-song, and accompanied with just the mixture of reticence and sly humour that suit the words. The few unexpected progressions are delightful—perhaps because they are few. Mr. Harold Austin is much more conventional. ‘In the woods’ is a good-class song of the ballad type. Mr. Francis Toye’s ‘Portsmouth Hard’ has a good, straightforward tune of a somewhat obvious character, with an accompaniment that does not err on the side of enterprise. Should not the second chord in bar three of page 3 be C major? The C sharp, and the resultant diminished triad, is possible, but it is ugly and very much out of the picture.

By a crescendo of commonplace we touch bottom with ‘In the Great Somewhere,’ frankly sloppy and commonplace, and therefore likely to be popular, especially as it is ‘sung by Mr. Tom Burke at all his engagements’—probably with his tongue in his cheek.

It is refreshing to turn to a couple of songs with significant words set to music of real power—John Ireland’s ‘The Adoration’ and ‘The Rat.’ The words of both are by Arthur Symons. The setting of ‘The Adoration’ shows the composer at his best, the music being full of emotion, intense and restrained. The voice-part is a real tune of slightly antique flavour, with poignantly expressive harmonies, some of which do not produce their full effect at a first hearing. The whole song is tinged with the austerity that makes the composer’s music appeal long after more luscious works have lost their attraction. ‘The Rat’ consists of two verses, the opening lines at once striking an uncomfortable note:

‘Pain gnaws at my heart like a rat that gnaws at a beam
In the dusty dark of a ghost-frequented house.’ . . .

The music is harsh and, at first, almost repellent; but of its power and fidelity to the text there can be no question. It is rather difficult for both singer and player, but it gives the pair a fine chance. Both these striking songs are for medium voice.

Letters to the Editor.

AN APPEAL FOR A NATIONAL OPERA HOUSE.

SIR,—We seem still as far as ever from possessing a National Theatre for the production and development of British music-drama. Much has been said, and much has been written, with this object in view. Is it not possible that success has been withheld because those interested have set their hearts upon a great building before they had taken steps to secure a body of players for whom the Theatre would be a necessary home?

Here at Glastonbury, in the Festival School, we have a living organism, which has been at work in spite of war interruptions ever since 1913, and it is to house this organism worthily, and to enable it to carry out the work that its founders have hoped for it, that we make the present appeal. The Glastonbury Festival School is the outcome of a movement inaugurated in 1913 for the production of a cycle of Arthurian music-dramas by the late Reginald R. Buckley and Mr. Rutland Boughton. Upon the recommendation of Sir Edward Elgar and Prof. Granville Bantock, supported by many outstanding musicians, artists, and public men, an appeal was launched for a Festival Theatre at Glastonbury. War was declared just as the project showed signs of success, but a summer school, organized for the month of August, 1914, produced ‘The Immortal Hour,’ an opera which has since received the Carnegie Trust award. A committee was formed to continue the local work of the school and to arrange public performances from time to time. Up to the date of the present Festival (August, 1919) there have been seventy-nine public performances, of which forty-seven have been operatic, including the first production of five music-dramas by British composers.

Expressions of public opinion upon the work hitherto achieved include the following:

‘Sir Edward Elgar told me the other day that he looks upon the Glastonbury Festival enterprise as one of the most promising things in British Music.’ (Mr. Percy Scholes, in the Music Student, October, 1916.)

‘Has a value which simply cannot be exaggerated. In time to come people who have an artistic conscience will bring up their children here in Glastonbury.’ (Mr. G. Bernard Shaw, in an interview, the Music Student, October 1916.)

‘One’s interest in the performances grows with the experience of them.’ (Mr. Ernest Newman, in the Birmingham Post, September 11, 1916.)

‘One of the most remarkable achievements in the history of our music.’ (Mr. Charles Kennedy Scott, in the Musical Standard.)

During the Festival now in progress, amongst other works is being revived Shirley’s Masque, ‘Cupid and Death,’ for the first time since 1659.

The productions at present must take place in a small and very inconvenient room, and any real growth and development is stopped at every turn by the need for a theatre.

Fortunately we can announce that the option of a splendid site has been offered, but the decision to purchase must be made without delay, otherwise the offer will be withdrawn. Mr. Sydney Adshead (Professor of Town Planning, London University) is generously giving his services as hon. architect. It is estimated that at least ten thousand pounds will be needed to cover the cost of site, with grounds and hostel, permanent stage and lighting, and temporary auditorium. Mr. P. Napier Miles, of King’s Weston, Bristol, most generously starts the fund with a donation of £500.

We appeal with confidence to all who are anxious to restore to English life the heritage of beauty of music and of drama that once belonged to it, asking them to support this live and growing creative work by giving it adequate material home and surrounding.

Donations should be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Roger Clark, Street, Somerset, and cheques crossed ‘Festival School.’—Yours, &c.,

RUTLAND BOUGHTON

(Director),

ROGER CLARK

(Hon. Treasurer).

Glastonbury,

August 23, 1919.

[This appeal is endorsed by the Rt. Hon. J. R. Clynes, M.P.; Mr. John Drinkwater; Sir Edward Elgar, O.M.; Sir Frederick Pollock; Mr. G. Bernard Shaw; and Sir Henry Wood.]

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

SIR,—With the greatest interest I read the report of the proceedings of the Welsh National Eisteddfod at Corwen by Mr. William Child in your September number. As he states, the organization of the meetings left much to be desired, but the promoters of Eisteddfodau are not ignorant of this imperfection, and Mr. Child’s comments will no doubt precipitate improvements. The explanatory note on penillion-singing is somewhat imperfect and sometimes incorrect. Were an authority on this style of singing to write an article, readers of the Musical Times would find it both interesting and instructive. Successful penillion singers must possess a very wide knowledge of Welsh poetry and its peculiar construction, which would require a deal of explanation to the uninitiated. The feature of the report, however, which is the least encouraging or satisfactory to Welshmen is that of depreciation of the Welsh music chosen as tests, notwithstanding that it was the work of the best Welsh composers. Other notable English musicians have on previous occasions made similar and possibly more trenchant remarks. Admitting that all is true, is it not overlooked by these gentlemen that for years now Englishmen have strenuously fought for English music for English singers, players, and audiences? Have not varieties of Societies been formed to consummate this object? Even in reviewing 'Season programmes,' items have been enumerated under composers' names and notes of criticism and regret added that English composers had been neglected. The counter-argument of English promoters is that the public demand justifies the selection. Why, then, chide us for developing by our own methods? Promoters of Eisteddfodau are more consistent and true to their convictions in this respect, Welsh music being their first and not last consideration. While we recognise that the music of other countries may be better, to us the language allied to it is not so, and vocal music if of somewhat inferior quality allied to our own dear language is more satisfying. We have not, therefore, quite the same need to write as Mr. Barrett in your September issue (page 498): 'For one thing the season—that is the Royal Opera summer season—has this year witnessed what it has never witnessed before, namely, the production of an English opera sung to English words by English singers. This is what happened when Mr. Isidore de Lara's 'Nail' was produced on July 18. Whether it was the most representative work, and whether the singers were the best the country could bring forward, need not be discussed in this connection. The fact remains that at last native art—or a phase of it—has been represented in an undertaking so far devoted to foreign effort. The ice has been broken, and this constitutes the achievement.'—Yours, &c.,

THE BLACK MONK.

[While sympathising with the 'Black Monk' in the main, we must remind him that one of Mr. Child's complaints had to do with the absence from the syllabus of the names of Walford Davies and Vaughan Williams, who are surely among 'the best Welsh composers.'—ED., M.T.]

BRITISH MUSIC AND PATRIOTISM.

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. A. Baillie, is indisputably right in saying that it 'behoves the British composer to make good music rather than British music.' Does not, however, the one (for the British composer) imply the other? For if music is to be good music it must first of all be sincere music (I suppose few will be bold enough to deny this?), and if it is sincere music the composer cannot help—from the mere fact that he is British—writing music which will strike the hearer as essentially British also.

The great fault of nine-tenths (I might say, ninety-nine hundredths) of present-day music is that it stands for nothing at all—except (perhaps) a sort of superficial cleverness. Music of this type can, to my mind at any rate—and I believe to the minds of the great mass of the public—never be anything more than 'sounding brass and tinkling cymbal'—'empty and fine like a swordless sheath.'—Yours, &c.,

A. R. CRIPPS.

10, Ambrose Place,
Worthing.

THE GRAMOPHONE AS AN AID TO MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

SIR,—With reference to 'Ignotus' letter on the subject of 'The Gramophone as an Aid to Musical Appreciation,' published in your September issue, I am pleased to be able to supply some information which may be of interest to your correspondent.

I have before me a small catalogue, published in February, 1915, by the Pathé Gramophone Company. The catalogue describes the 'Duplex Pathéphone,' an instrument by means of which the records of a play or opera can be reproduced in uninterrupted succession, the second taking up the thread immediately the first has finished. The machine is provided with two turntables, each ten inches or twelve inches in diameter, as the case may be, and capable of playing fourteen-inch discs. On the discs themselves, which are double-sided, No. 1 is coupled with No. 3, No. 2 with No. 4, and so on, so that Nos. 1 and 2 may be placed side by side, one on each turntable, thus ensuring continuous reproduction.

At the time of the issue of the catalogue the works published in this form included 'Carmen,' 'Faust,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Roméo et Juliette,' 'La Traviata,' and

'Il Trovatore,' in addition to other operas and dramas, and Molière's 'Le Malade Imaginaire,' the sets ranging from eight to twenty-eight 14-inch double-sided discs. The works are performed in French by artists of the Paris Opéra, the Opéra-Comique, and the Comédie Française.

I am not aware of the existence of any other instrument of this nature, but I should like to endorse 'Ignotus' remarks, and to add that it would mean a great deal to the music-loving public if the invention were more extensively developed, and the works included the standard symphonies, sonatas, quartets, &c., as well as complete operas.—Yours, &c.,

CHARLES A. ADCOCK.

24, Kitchener Road,
Thornton Heath.

MEYERBEER AND HIS EXECUTORS.

SIR,—Meyerbeer left directions in his Will that, forty years after his death, certain of his MSS. should be published. As he died in 1864, his wishes should have been carried out fifteen years ago, but, as far as I know, this has not been done.

Meyerbeer may not be the fashion just now, but nevertheless he wrote some fine music, and would have written more, if he had not been obsessed by the idea of pandering to the musical taste of Paris of his day. These unpublished compositions, intended for posterity, should be free from that weakness, and ought to contain much of value.

Who were the executors I do not know, but as Meyerbeer certainly would have left money to cover the cost of publishing, it would seem that somebody is benefiting by this disregard of his directions.—Yours, &c.,

TOM S. WOTTON.

Robertsbridge,
Sussex.

STRAVINSKY AND HIS CRITICS.

SIR,—Mr. Cattley's second letter makes it plain that he is really not concerned with the elucidation of any fundamental truth, despite his pretensions, but is merely seeking to 'make points'—'get the best of the argument'—in the typical 'debater' fashion. Mr. Cattley's capacity for criticising Stravinsky is sufficiently exposed in the insensitive view of 'Petrushka' which he possesses, and which shows that he has completely failed to grasp any of the extremely humanly-expressive qualities of that work, even as his criticism of Stravinsky's comedy and satire music reveals the fact that he has not yet attained the mental standpoint which would enable him to differentiate between 'musical comedy' and comedy in music. It is also indicative of the individuality of Mr. Cattley's opinions that he cannot conceive of an appreciative criticism which is not an avowal of discipledom. Has Mr. Cattley never had an objective admiration? Is his conception of appreciation that of the suburban Miss about the art-lion?

Mr. Cattley wails: 'Where shall the truth be found?' Certainly not by shifting the burden of personal discrimination on to the shoulders of others, and deriving 'opinions' from external critical writings. I am in the habit of deciding my own opinions. Hence, with all admiration for Florent Schmitt, I cannot comprehend what his opinions have to do with mine. Also a little sympathetic reading would show Mr. Cattley that no fundamental paradox exists between the two statements quoted by him, that of M. Schmitt and that of myself. Stravinsky, whatever his faults, has a capacity of self-criticism and visualisation and of self-satire (as evinced in his new orchestral poem, 'Le Chant du Rossignol,' based on material from the earlier lyric-drama), which I recommend as a thing to be cultivated by Mr. Cattley.

Meanwhile I can only categorically and flatly contradict all Mr. Cattley's affirmations concerning Stravinsky's harmonic methods and their relationship to diatonic music as academically conceived, also in so far as they imply the lack of originality of that composer; and having arrived at this point, there is little sense in continuing this correspondence further.

Mr. Cattle is evidently unable to comprehend that the composers of a given epoch (such as the present) are all necessarily responsive to similar influences, without necessarily being plagiarists. This is the case with the comparison which he seeks to establish between Schönberg, Bartok, and others, and Stravinsky (all composers with whom I am thoroughly familiar, and on whom I wrote some of the first appreciative studies to appear in English many years ago).

Finally, it is curious that people will insist so 'profoundly' on the importance of tragedy, pathos, sorrow, &c., all of which are characteristics possessed and evinced by the lower types of animal, but persist in viewing comedy and humour, which are marks of the higher human intelligence, as something to be deprecated.—Yours, &c.,

E. HUGH HENRY.

66, Adelaide Road, N.W.-3.

[This correspondence is now closed.—ED., M.T.]

ARAB INFLUENCE ON SPANISH MUSIC.

SIR,—It is a great pleasure to see in Mr. Leigh Henry's excellent articles on 'Spanish Music,' that due stress is placed upon the 'Arab Influence,' a point which, as Draper the historian has said, has been systematically ignored by Europe. I would be glad, however, if Mr. Henry would tell us something more of the 'many theoretical works . . . written in the reign of Abd er Rahman.' There were three monarchs of this name, but I am not aware of any theoretical works written by Andalusian Arabs of that period.—Yours, &c.,

HENRY FARMER,

(Part-Author of 'Music and Musical Instruments of the Arab.')

692, Cathcart Road,
Crosshill, Glasgow.

GODOWSKY AND BRITISH MUSIC.

SIR,—I shall be grateful if you will allow me space to bring to the notice of British composers the kind offer of Mr. Leopold Godowsky, the well-known pianist, who, with a view to introducing British music abroad, is desirous of performing two British compositions throughout his coming world tour. He accordingly invites British composers to send their works to him at 626, St. Alexandria Drive, Los Angeles, California.—Yours, &c.,

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL,

(Hon. Director, British Music Society).

19, Berners Street, W.-1,
19th August, 1919.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

MR. HENRY BEAUMONT, the well-known tenor vocalist, passed peacefully away after a long illness at his residence, 11, Warwick Avenue, Maida Vale, on August 19, aged sixty-two. Born at Huddersfield, in 1857, he went to Dublin as a child, and studied under Luigi Carracciola, making his début at Huddersfield on October 22, 1881. Less than two years later he was appointed a stipendiary chorister in Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, but in 1885 he joined the Carl Rosa Opera Company, and was a great success on the operatic stage. Although since 1906 he mainly devoted himself to concert singing and teaching, yet he sang in 'Maritana' at the Wallace Centenary Celebration, at Waterford, in November, 1912. The funeral took place at Marylebone Cemetery, East Finchley, on August 23.

RUDOLF E. SCHIRMER, head of the great music publishing firm of Gustave Schirmer, of New York and Boston, and until recently of 18, Berners Street, London, on August 21. His brother, Gustave, died July 15, 1907. In June, 1915, the firm started the Musical Quarterly, edited by Mr. O. G. Sonneck, and it has been an unqualified success. The firm's headquarters are at 3, East 43rd Street, New York.

PETER P. WALSH, conductor of the Meister Singers and of other Dublin choral societies, died after a tedious illness at St. Vincent's Hospital, on September 11, aged forty-one. He was a popular and painstaking conductor, his choirs winning many successes at the Feis Ceoil. As an adjudicator at various provincial Feiseanna he was held in high esteem. His remains were interred in Glasnevin Cemetery on September 13.

W. H. G. F.

THE LATE DR. D. J. WOOD.

We regret to announce that Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral, died on August 27, having completed his seventieth year two days before. Dr. Wood had been in ill-health since the middle of July, but recovery had been confidently anticipated, and his sudden death came as a great shock to relatives and friends. His funeral service was attended by a vast representative congregation which filled the nave and aisles of the Cathedral, and all the lay-vicars returned from recently-started holidays to take part in a service which was marked by great simplicity and intense impressiveness.

Photo by

Messrs. Scott & Sons, Exeter.

It is interesting to note that Dr. Wood had held his onerous post for forty-three years, the longest period, with one exception, in the history of the Cathedral. The exception was the case of Richard Henman, organist from 1694 to 1741, who was dismissed 'for his long absence and disorderly life.' Therefore Dr. Wood's long and faithful service was a record. He was one of the youngest Cathedral organists when appointed to Chichester in 1872, at the age of twenty-three. At the time of his death he was the second senior Cathedral organist in the country in respect of tenure, his only superior being Dr. Haydn Keeton, who has been organist of Peterborough Cathedral since 1870.

Dr. Daniel J. Wood was born at Brompton, near Rochester, in 1849, and had the advantage, invaluable to an organist, of experience as a cathedral chorister. At the age of ten he became a choir boy at Rochester, where Dr. J. Hopkins was organist, and where Sir Frederick Bridge was one of his contemporaries. While still a chorister, young Wood's gifts as an organist developed, and in 1864 he was appointed organist of Holy Trinity, Brompton, still continuing as deputy at Rochester Cathedral. Two years later he was appointed to Cranbrook Parish Church; a year afterwards he was adjudged by Sir John Goss to be the successful candidate for the post of organist at Lee (S.E.) Parish Church. In the following year Mr. Wood went to the fine Parish Church at Boston, Lincs., where he established an excellent choral and orchestral society. In 1875 he was elected to Chichester Cathedral, and in 1876 succeeded Mr. Alfred Angel at Exeter Cathedral. In 1873 he had been elected F.R.C.O., and in 1874 took the degree of Mus. Bac., Oxon. In 1896 the degree of Mus. Doc. was conferred on him by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), the suggestion being made by Dr. Bickersteth, then Bishop of Exeter, supported by Dr. Varley Roberts and many other eminent men. The event was consummated in the celebration of Dr. Wood's completion of twenty-one years' service in Cathedral organistship; and in the presentation to him of his doctor's robes, with an illuminated address, by a large number of representative subscribers in Exeter and the county.

Dr. Wood was conductor of the Western Counties Musical Association from 1880 to 1907, when the Association joined forces with Exeter Oratorio Society, and Dr. Wood, continuing to act as co-conductor, was presented with a pedal pianoforte and other gifts in recognition of his services. He was also conductor of Exeter Oratorio Society until its suspension in 1914.

In the conduct of Cathedral services, Dr. Wood's aim was to preserve tradition, while introducing modern music calculated to maintain that tradition. The present organ, by Willis, was built under his direction in 1891, and his recitals have included music of every period, for while he was essentially a musician of the old school, he found much to enjoy and learn in modern music. He was remarkably clever in transposition, and regarded the most difficult feats as pastime. As an extemporiser he had few equals.

The relations between Dr. Wood and his choristers were of the most happy description, and his delight in the society of the juniors was unbounded. Their respect for him was equalled by their affection, and no greater treat did they know than frequent visits to his charming house and home, when he would participate in their interests with all the zest of unfeigned youthfulness and sympathy. Benevolence and kindness in feeling and act were prominent in his character, and went far beyond the merely negative point of never hurting a fly. His love and care for dumb animals was marvellous, and he never missed the opportunity for doing good to a fellow creature, nor used one to speak ill.

M. B.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of October, 1859:

GIDEON.—An Oratorio of the above title, composed by C. A. HORSLEY, Esq., having been announced for performance at the approaching Glasgow Musical Festival, Mr. HENRY F. SCHRÖDER, late of Windsor, and now of St. Peter's, St. Alban's, Herts, begs to inform the musical world, and the public generally, that he, upwards of nine months since, completed an Oratorio bearing the same name, the libretto of which (composed by G. R. RENWICK, Esq.) has been in his possession about three years. Mr. SCHRÖDER, therefore, in justice to himself, thinks it necessary to make the above facts public, in order that—should his Oratorio be produced subsequently to that of Mr. HORSLEY'S—he may not be accused of plagiarism.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—At the evening concert on Wednesday, Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' formed the first part, and was performed admirably. The principal solo parts were sung by Mrs. Clara Hepworth, Miss Lascelles, Mr. S. Reeves, and Mr. Thomas. Mr. Reeves, whose name was announced for a ballad, had left the concert-room, owing to indisposition, and his absence gave rise to some disturbance, of which the following account is furnished by a contemporary:—

"... When Madame Novello had sung 'Prendi per me' out of its place, and on her retiring there were no signs of Mr. Reeves, the audience began to be restive, and would not be pacified until one of the stewards came forward and addressed them. He said, 'Ladies and Gentlemen: It seems to be the principal duty of stewards to make apologies for Mr. Sims Reeves. The stewards have done all in their power, but as Mr. Sims Reeves has quietly walked off, the stewards cannot fetch him back, and I hope they will not be blamed. He has found a good friend in Madame Novello, who has kindly consented to sing a song in his stead.' This address was received with mingled applause and hisses. ... The Mayor of Gloucester then volunteered a further explanation:—'Ladies and Gentlemen: I have the pleasure to inform you that Madame Novello will give another song in the place of Mr. Sims Reeves.' Cries of 'Not enough'—'We know that already'—greeted the ears of his worship as he left the platform after having delivered himself of this weighty piece of information. ... The Mayor returned to the charge, and addressed his turbulent co-citizens afresh:—'Ladies and Gentlemen,' he said, 'I am to state that Mr. Sims Reeves, being ill, was compelled to leave.' This speech, a worthy pendant of the other, was answered by shouts of laughter. ... After a long interval, during the progress of which the Shire Hall threatened to be turned into a bear-garden, Madame Clara Novello made her appearance on the platform. ... Shouts, cheers, and plaudits greeted her from every part of the room, and when these subsided she opened her lips—but not to sing. Instead of 'Bonnie Prince Charlie,' it was 'Ladies and Gentlemen.' Calmly, unaffectedly, and yet firmly, Madame Novello, like a musical Portia, admonished her hearers. ... The tones of the nightingale had more persuasive eloquence in them than the voices of the steward and the Mayor. The fair apologist (who speaks, by the way, quite as musically as she sings) was completely overwhelmed by the demonstrations of complete satisfaction that her quiet speech had elicited, and the peace of her 'brother artist' was made with the public. We do not remember a more graceful act on the part of one artist to another—an act implying a strong sense of right, no little moral courage, and the total absence of a certain feeling of jealous rivalry from which even the most distinguished members of the profession are not invariably exempt."

THE MUSICIANS' GIFT TO H.M. FORCES.

TO PROVIDE MUSICAL ACTIVITIES AMONG THE MEN.

Committee.—The Editors of all the Musical Papers of the Country.

Hon. Treasurer.—Prof. H. Walford Davies, Mus. Doc.

Hon. Secretary.—Percy A. Scholes, Mus. Bac.

Organizing Secretary.—Madame Lily Henkel.

Offices.—Y.M.C.A., Music Section, 25, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.1.

	£	s.	d.
Total received	4,080	0	0
Total received since December 31, 1918	1,159	0	0
Receipts during the month August 11 to September 10, 1919	35	0	0

(a) THE MONTH'S PROCEEDS OF CONCERTS AND ORGAN RECITALS.

	£	s.	d.
Bexhill and Eastbourne } Miss Ethel Robjohns. Concerts	10	10	0
Georgetown, Demerara } Mr. H. Chapman Edwards, part proceeds of Concert and Dance	5	12	3
St. Stephen's Church, Walbrook, E.C.4. } Three Weeks' Organ Recitals, organized by Mr. E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. Bac.	17	16	6
	£33	18	9

(b) THE MONTH'S DONATIONS AND COLLECTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Miss E. Franklin Pike. Additional collection, Pupils' Music Circle	1	0	0
K. E. F. (per Music Student)	0	5	0
	£1	5	0

We are glad to note a slight improvement in the receipts for the past month as the result of concerts and organ recitals given on behalf of the Fund. The series of three weeks' organ recitals at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, organized by Mr. Stanley Roper, at which some of the best known organists in London kindly gave of their best, has been largely responsible for the improvement referred to above. It is a source of gratification to all concerned to know that Mr. Roper has generously offered to organize a second series of recitals on his beautiful organ in aid of the fund a little later on.

In the financial statement of the Glasgow Committee, given in our August issue (page 424), the amount credited to the pupils of Miss Agnes Millar should be £66 8s. 6d. Owing to a defect in the type, it appears to be £6 8s. 6d.

NOVELTIES AT THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Interest in these excellent concerts is well maintained, each week seeing the production of two or three new compositions.

Baron d'Erlanger's Symphonic Prelude 'Sursum Corda' was heard on August 26. It was a tuneful, quasi-religious work of no great originality in material or treatment. It was pleasant to hear, but we missed the note of aspiration the title had led us to expect.

On August 27 a Prelude by Eugène Goossens received its first concert performance. The work was written last autumn for a private performance of Emile Verhaeren's drama, 'Philip II.' Mr. Goossens's music strikes the suitable note so thoroughly that the result is a work rather too sombre for popular appreciation. But even at this first hearing it was impressive, and seemed to indicate that the composer has a decided gift for stage-music. Mr. Goossens conducted.

On the following night we had one of the best new works heard at Queen's Hall for a long time—Alfredo Casella's Suite 'Le Chouvent sur L'Eau.' The Suite is described as a 'Comédie Chorégraphique,' but apparently lost nothing in being presented as pure music. It consists of five movements—Marche de Fête (a brilliantly scored picture of a crowd), Ronde d'Enfants (a delightful little tune with some bizarre interruptions by the brass), Barcarolle and Sarabande (in the first of which a soprano solo voice, without words, takes an important part; the Sarabande is a fine piece of elegiac music), Pas des vieilles Dames (a capital piece of musical humour, with a very neat imitation of a musical box), and a brief Nocturne leading into a brilliant Dance. The Suite was splendidly played and was loudly applauded. It should be heard again soon.

Arnold Bax's 'Scherzo,' produced on September 3, proved a very attractive work. It is brilliantly scored, and its exciting rhythms and genuine good spirits gave great pleasure.

F. Balilla Pratella's 'Three War Dances,' heard on September 9, were disappointing. Each began in an arresting manner, but the promise was in no case fulfilled. Pratella gave us a few striking effects, but every composer can do that with a full orchestra to play with.

A very different verdict has to be given in regard to the novelty of September 10, a symphonic poem by Dorothy Howell based on Keats's 'Lamia.' The work illustrates the poem perhaps too faithfully to be quite satisfactory from a structural point of view. This is no pedantic objection. In the long run every work of the kind stands or falls as mere music, and formal balance and contrast are important constituents. The close following of a programme almost invariably leads to incoherence, anti-climax, or some other flaw. 'Lamia' on the whole escapes any serious fault of this kind, being in three fairly defined and well-contrasted sections. Of these the second, depicting the marriage revel, was the most successful, real power and originality being shown. Miss Howell uses a large orchestra with confidence and success. She has a genuine gift of invention, and is able to keep things going well. Her harmonic scheme will be more interesting, and not necessarily less modern, when she forgets the whole-tone scale. She gave us far too much of it in 'Lamia.' The work had an enthusiastic reception, the composer being recalled several times. In response to a general desire it was repeated on the following Saturday, when a crowded audience confirmed the previous verdict. The composer's future will be watched with more than ordinary interest.

One of the most enjoyable novelties of last season was Francesco Malipiero's 'Impressioni dal vero' (Part 1), and many of us would have welcomed a second performance. On September 10, Part 2 of the work was brought forward. It contains three movements—'Colloquy of the Bells,' 'The Cypress Tree and the Wind,' and 'Rustic Festival.' The first contained some fascinating bell-effects; but, on the whole the Suite falls slightly short of Part 1, being rather undistinguished thematically.

On September 13 we had, in addition to the second performance of 'Lamia,' a novelty in Stan Golestan's 'Rhapsodie Roumaine,' which, frankly, cut rather a poor figure beside the work of the English girl. It began and ended brilliantly, with a long and uninteresting tract between.

On September 18 it was good to find the organ put to more serious use than is customary at Queen's Hall. Our only regret was that this welcome departure should have been made with a not very attractive work—Widor's Sinfonia Sacra for organ and orchestra. It is not Widor at his best—the Widor of the 5th and 6th Symphonies for organ solo, for example. Its opening section contains too much conventional passage-work for the keyboard, and the music halts at times. The final Fugue, however, has some fine moments and an imposing ending. Dr. Stanley Marchant was at the organ, and played brilliantly. We suggest that a warm welcome would be given to Guilman's D minor Symphony. It has the advantage of being well-known in England, owing to its frequent performance in solo form. It is much less complex than the Widor work, and is based on very attractive themes. At all events, we hope the organ will be used more frequently in important solo and concerted works.

Thomas Dunhill's Dance Suite for strings was played for the first time on September 15, conducted by the composer. A bright and tuneful work, it should be a welcome addition to the repertory of amateur societies.

Another work on the unpretentious side was Roger Quilter's Children's Overture, played on September 18—a series of nursery rhyme tunes deftly scored. It was much to the taste of the audience.

'PRO PATRIA': NEW ENGLISH OPERA.

It is something to the credit of the managers of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company that the claims of British opera were not overlooked in the course of the remarkable season given at the Lyceum Theatre. Opera was presented for seven weeks with primarily an educative object. Yet little time was lost in producing some British examples in common with the répertoire of Continental works and standard home-made attractions like Balfe's 'Bohemian Girl' and Vincent Wallace's 'Maritana.' Two new British operas were given in the course of the season. The first was Mr. Reginald Somerville's 'Antoine,' which had not been heard before in the centre of London, and the second was an entirely new production entitled 'Pro Patria.' The original was a short play by Mr. George Cornwallis West, in which Mrs. Patrick Campbell appeared. For the purposes of opera an effective libretto has been made by Mr. Alfred Kalisch. The music is by Mr. Percy Colson, a new-comer to this branch of musical art. The story has a war atmosphere, with revenge as the chief motive. The material is slight, but Mr. Colson shows due appreciation of its possibilities even if his realisation of them is not always very complete. But the satisfactory feature of the work is that it is in good operatic style, which is a valuable point to establish. Too often native compositions written for the stage are but illustrated cantatas, and therefore valueless as contributions to operatic literature. With all its faults—which after all are but the result of inexperience in handling the material—Mr. Colson's writing reveals a distinct feeling for the stage. He has a command of melody and can create good dramatic climaxes. The cast included Madame Luia Jata, the South African singer, who made a first and successful appearance on the stage, and she, with Miss Mary Fleming, Mr. Albert Bond, Mr. Harrison Cook, and Mr. Albert Kirkman, gave the composer loyal assistance, particularly the last-named, a notably good actor and singer. Mr. John Cope conducted, the reception of the work being most cordial and encouraging.

FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

THE BRITISH SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

This organization made a very auspicious first appearance at the Royal Albert Hall on September 21. The words 'first appearance,' however, read oddly in connection with a band largely made up of players whose names are well known to London audiences, some of them as soloists. The 'British Symphony Orchestra' begins by claiming attention on the ground that all its members have served in the Army, mostly abroad, but it should soon take a prominent position on its musical merits. Mr. Raymond Rose conducted, and Mr. Tom Burke sang.

MUSIC AT THE FESTIVAL CONFERENCE ON CREATIVE PEACE.

The object of this Conference, held at Oxford, September 1 to 10 inclusive, was to present to its members and others who took part, the idea of peace as something living and powerful. People too often regard it as being merely a state of 'Warlessness.' With this end in view the work of the creative impulse was constantly presented to us, whether in the life-work of St. Francis of Assisi or the poetical creations of Blake and Shelley, the dramas 'Everyman' and the 'Trojan Women' (Gilbert Murray's translation), or in the masterpieces of chamber music. It is with these last that we are specially concerned.

The programmes were of such excellence and drawn from such a wide field, that their reproduction should be of interest.

The first programme consisted of 'an hour of Folk-song,' by Madame Raymonde Colignon, accompanied by Mr Harold Scott. The first half of the programme was French, the second half English. The English songs included 'The three Ravens. The concert ended with three Nursery Rhymes, charmingly set to music by Mr. Harold Scott.

SECOND CONCERT.

Sonata in G major, for Violin and Pianoforte Brahms
Mr. Ernest Whitfield and Dr. Ernest Walker.

Songs—
(a) 'I will make you brooches' Graham Peel
(b) 'Sea Fever' John Ireland
(c) 'Once at the Angelus' Arthur Somervell
(d) 'Bluebells from the clearings' Ernest Walker

Miss Marie Howes.

Pianoforte Solos—
(a) 'La Cathédrale Engloutie' Debussy
(b) 'Bruyères'
(c) 'La neige danse'
Dr. Ernest Walker.

Violin Solo—Grave and Fugue in G minor Bach
Mr. Ernest Whitfield.

Songs—
(a) 'My sweet sweetie' Frederick Keel
(b) 'There's a bower of roses' C. V. Stanford
(c) 'Linden Lea' Laughton Williams
(d) 'Silent Noon'

Miss Marie Howes.

THIRD CONCERT.

Songs—
(a) 'Passing by' Purcell
(b) 'Have you seen but a white lily grow' Anon.
(c) 'I'll sail upon the Dog-star' Purcell

Pianoforte Solos—
(a) Fantasia in C minor
(b) Prelude, Gavotte, Polonaise, and Gigue in E major Bach

Songs—
(a) 'Why dost thou move' Haverall Bryan
(b) 'Goat paths'
(c) 'The four old men' Harold Scott
(d) 'Power of May' Walford Davies

Pianoforte Solo—
The 'Waldstein' Sonata Beethoven

Folk-Songs—
(a) 'The gentle maiden' (Irish)
(b) 'The Earl of Moray' (Scotch)
(c) 'El majo discreto' (Spanish)
(d) 'Hopak' (Russian)

Singer—Mr. John Goss.

Pianoforte—Miss Elsie Hall.

FOURTH CONCERT.

Sonata for 'Cello and Pianoforte in G minor, Op. 6, No. 2. Beethoven

Songs—
(a) 'Peace' Schubert
(b) 'Mina'
(c) 'Devotion'
(d) 'He the best of all the noblest' Schumann

Sonata for 'Cello and Pianoforte in F major W. de Fesch

Songs—
(a) 'When I am laid in earth' Purcell
(b) 'Nymphs and shepherds'
(c) 'When daisies pied'
(d) 'The lass with the delicate air' Arne

Songs—
(a) 'There is no more to say' Bryceson Trehearne
(b) 'The sleep that flits on baby's eyes' J. A. Carpenter
(c) 'The land of the sky-blue waters' Cadman

Singer—Miss Clytie Hine.

'Cello—Mr. John Mundy.

Pianoforte—Miss Elsie Hall.

FIFTH CONCERT.

Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte in A minor John Ireland

Songs (Contralto)—
(a) 'God is my Shepherd'
(b) 'By the Waters of Babylon'
(c) 'Sing ye a joyful song' Dvorák

Songs (Tenor)—
'Adelaide' Beethoven

Pianoforte Solo—
Rhapsody in G minor Brahms

Violin Solo—
Andante and Gavotte Bach

Songs (Contralto)—
(a) 'Death and the maiden'
(b) 'Heliopolis' Schubert

Songs (Tenor)—
(a) 'Orpheus with his lute'
(b) 'Under the greenwood tree' E. Coates

Pianoforte Solo—
Barcarolle Chopin

Singers—Miss Sybil Cropper, Mr. John Adams

Violin—Mr. Ernest Whitfield

Pianoforte—Mr. Arthur Alexander.

SIXTH CONCERT.

Songs—
(a) 'Art thou with me?' Bach
(b) Canzonetta Haydn
(c) Zuleika's song Schubert
(d) 'The Nut Tree' Schumann
(e) 'Maiden's Curses' Brahms

Pianoforte Solos—
(a) Moment Musical in A flat Schubert
(b) Nachtstück in C major Schumann
(c) Intermezzo in E minor Brahms

Songs—
(a) 'Le Colibri' Chausson
(b) 'Romance' Debussy
(c) 'Nicolette' Ravel

Pianoforte Solos—
(a) Study, F minor
(b) Prelude, C major Chopin
(c) Nocturne, G major

Songs—
(a) 'Twilight' Rummel
(b) 'Go not, happy day' Frank Bridge
(c) 'Shieling Song' Arnold Bax
(d) 'Bluebells from the clearings' Ernest Walker

Singer—Miss Dorothy Moulton.

Pianoforte—Dr. Ernest Walker.

Also a very good anonymous accompanist.

The seventh concert was a lecture-recital on 'Modern Music' by Mr. Edward Mitchell. The programme was as international as possible. Mr. Mitchell said he was playing no modern German or Austrian music, as he had found none worth playing. We would suggest that Brahms is as modern as Grieg. Finland was unrepresented, though Palmgren in pianoforte music surely deserves a place. After hearing so much of 'Iberia' and 'Goyescas' it was rather a disappointment to learn that Debussy's Prelude 'In a Wine-shop' was more Spanish than anything by Albeniz or Granados. However, this is all the criticism that can be made. Mr. Mitchell said very little, leaving the 'moderns' to speak for themselves, which they did convincingly for some two hours. Miss Howes sang again by request.

PROGRAMME.

Pianoforte Solos—
Ballade, Op. 24 Grieg
Lotus-land Cyril Scott
Ironies Scriabin
Humoresk Balfour Gardiner
Prelude, Choral, and Fugue Franck

Songs—
(a) June R. Quilter
(b) The Cloths of Heaven T. Dunhill
(c) Sigh no more, ladies Aiken

Pianoforte Solos—
Celtic Sonata E. A. MacDonnell
The Wine-shop Debussy
Christmas Night Liapounov
Poem, 'Vers la flamme' Scriabin

Two more events should be noticed. On the morning of Sunday, September 7, Mr. Harold Spicer gave an organ recital, playing among other items the third Sonata of Mendelssohn; Passacaglia and Harmonies du soir, Karg-Elert; Vesperale, Cyril Scott; part of a Guilmant Sonata; and the Rhapsody of Harvey Grace. Mr. John Goss sang.

On Saturday afternoon in Worcester College gardens (could any surroundings have been more suitable?), Miss Nancy Neal told us a little about folk-dances and rhythms, which were illustrated by some dozen children from Walworth, London. She supplemented her lecture a few days later at Ruskin College. When the dancing was over, representative members of the audience were persuaded with more or less ease to step into the centre and learn a country-dance themselves. The accompaniments were played by a solo violin throughout.

C. HAROLD FITCH.

THE SPECIAL COURSE FOR TEACHERS OF MUSIC IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

BY ONE WHO ATTENDED.

Arranged by the Board of Education, this Course was held at the Royal College of Music from August 14 to 27, and during those days it passed from the realm of experiment to that of unequivocal success.

The Course was attended by some sixty-five teachers, selected from about three times that number of applicants. Its organization was in the hands of Mr. Percy Scholes, who had gathered round him a staff of lecturers—experts in the several tasks allotted to them—who addressed themselves to essential features in a teacher's daily work, opening up fresh points of view and explaining methods, the application of which will doubtless make such teaching work at once more fruitful and less onerous.

Mr. Scholes himself, in addition to securing the well-being of all in attendance, gave a series of lectures on 'Listening,' based in the main upon the programmes of the Promenade Concerts, attendance at these concerts being (wisely) considered a necessity during the Course.

Mr. W. G. Whittaker dealt with matters relating to school singing classes. His direct methods and practical hints were most valuable and illuminating, and he was as apt in illustrating details as in deducing principles. The sound, healthy conclusions of his wide experience were admirably stated and eagerly absorbed.

'School Orchestras and their Possibilities' formed the subject of Mr. James Brown's lecture-lessons, his many-sided ability here finding a congenial outlet. Mr. Brown's wise counsel upon the formation of a school orchestra, its progress and conduct after formation, and the choice of music, left a strong, invigorating impression, bringing out very clearly how great a factor in school life—both educationally and socially—such an organization can be made to be. Both Mr. Whittaker and Mr. Brown, by their bright, cheery outlook upon musical work in schools, were distinctly inspiring and stimulating.

'Pianoforte Teaching' was ably and very thoroughly dealt with by Miss Nancy Gilford. Her lectures contained much useful suggestiveness, and possessed the great merit of gathering in interest as they proceeded. The pianoforte recitals given by Mr. Edward Mitchell were greatly appreciated, and were a feature of high worth.

The subject of Musical Appreciation was allotted to Mr. A. Forbes Milne, and was handled by him in such convincing fashion as must have fully dispelled the doubts of all sceptics—if any such there were. Mr. Milne won a sympathetic response from his hearers that testified alike to their interest in the subject, their sense of its value, and their complete satisfaction with his method of presenting it.

The more formal discussions upon points raised by the lectures were interesting, if at times unduly discursive. Perhaps even more profitable features were the informal 'talks' which took place during the intervals and at other times, between individuals and groups of individuals, when ideas were exchanged, methods compared, and suggestions made. In these 'talks,' too, the lecturers played a prominent and helpful part. The value of such personal contact and intercourse is indisputable.

The visit of representatives of the Board of Education, and of the Teachers' Registration Council, and other bodies, was a happy thought. This, together with Mr. Scholes's practical and suggestive advice on the business side of our profession, gave proof of how thoroughly and adequately the Course was organized.

It should be said that the authorities of the Royal College of Music readily placed all their many facilities at our disposal, and the Director (Dr. Allen) looked in and gave the Course a characteristic blessing. Dr. Somervell also contributed a welcome quota to the general interest and amenities of the gathering.

On the closing day, after certain felicitous ceremonies had been engaged in, and after mentally booking our seats for next year, we left the Course with a feeling of regret that the end had come, with a realization of how much had been done for us, and with a deep sense of appreciation and gratitude for that it had been done so unsparingly and so well.

CHAMBER MUSIC FOR AMATEURS.

We are glad to observe signs of increased activity among amateur chamber-music parties. We are sometimes asked to help players desirous of getting into touch with others in their district, and it occurs to us that the time is ripe for something more definite in the way of assistance. We have therefore decided to devote a portion of our space each month to announcements of players' requirements. The announcements should state the district in which the player resides, with particulars as to time of meeting, instrument, and character of music he or she desires to take part in, and name and address, or nom-de-plume, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1. Thus:

Violin (First or Second); Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven Quartets; Streatham, or near; Weekday evenings. —CONSTANT READER, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.

Clarinet.—Modern works preferred; anywhere in N. London; Sunday afternoons.—NEMO, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.

Pianist required for Quintet; music of all schools, Wednesday evenings; Chiswick.—J. DOE; 'Chatsworth,' High Road, Bedford Park, W.

No charge will be made for the announcements. They should be addressed to THE EDITOR, Musical Times, 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

THE CHILDREN'S CONCERTS SOCIETY.

The Children's Concerts Society has arranged a series of concerts to be given in the Central Hall, Oldham Street, Manchester.

Inaugurated in 1916, the Society now enters an its fourth season with the following programme:

1919.
Oct. 25.	'What is a tune?'		Geoffrey Shaw
Nov. 8.	Music Building		C. Rawdon Briggs
Nov. 22.	'There's a jolly little tune a-liding in the rat, tat, tating of the drum'		Robert McLeod
Dec. 6.	'Music and a Peep Show'		Emmie Allen
1920.
Jan. 17.	'A Musical Family'		Walter Carroll
Jan. 31.	The 'small Orchestra'		Archie L. Camden
Feb. 14.	Concert by Children

The hon. secretary, Miss E. Allen, 113 Egerton Road, Whittington, will be pleased to answer any inquiries.

A few choral societies have sent us prospectuses in which their activities in the coming season are outlined. The Central London Philharmonic Society will perform 'Les Cloches de Corneville' and 'Hiawatha'. Dulwich Philharmonic Society has chosen 'Elijah,' 'Messiah,' 'Faust' 'A tale of Old Japan,' and Haydn's third Mass. Portsmouth Philharmonic Society promises 'Hiawatha,' 'The Hymn of Praise,' and Charles Macpherson's 'By the waters of Babylon.' The South London Philharmonic Society has selected 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' 'Messiah,' and the 'St. Matthew' Passion. The East Herts Musical Society will give 'Merrie England' and 'Elijah.' We will include these in a fuller list to be given in our next issue.

We have received the first number of the Scottish Musical Magazine. It is interesting and attractive, with articles on Scottish Folk-song, Sir Thomas Beecham (with an excellent portrait), Chamber Music, Scottish Church Music, 'The Three B's,' &c., the contributors including Messrs. Granville Bantock, J. A. Fuller Maitland, W. Saunders, and David Stephen.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

After complete musical stagnation, the months of July and August being practically devoid of music with the exception of that in the parks, we have now a promise of an extraordinary season which is likely to break all records, as will be seen by the following forecast of musical events of every calibre.

Choral music will be a notable feature, and it is a pleasure to be able to state that the Festival Choral Society will give five choral concerts, the programmes to comprise 'Elijah,' 'Messiah,' 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 'The Hound of Heaven' (repeated by special request), and Bach's great Mass in B minor. The principal artists will be Mesdames Carrie Tubb, Elsa Stralia, Olive Sturgess, Muriel Foster, Margaret Balfour, Doris Manuelle, and Elsie Chambers, and Messrs. John Coates, Walter Hyde, Alfred Heather, Norman Allin, Herbert Brown, Edward Dykes, and Horace Stevens. At one of the concerts M. de Greef will play the Grieg Concerto. Mr. C. W. Perkins will be the organist, and Sir Henry Wood the conductor in chief.

Mr. Appleby Matthews will also give five choral concerts, but it is a pity that his scheme should include three of the same works, namely, 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' and 'The Dream of Gerontius.' The other works announced in the preliminary circular are Wesley's 'In Exitu Israel,' Elgar's 'Spirit of England' and 'Go, song of mine,' and Granville Bantock's choral epilogue 'The Pageant of Human Life' (first time at Birmingham). The list of artists already secured includes Mesdames Rosina Buckman, Dorothy Silk, and Helen Anderson, and Messrs. Gervase Elwes, Arthur Jordan, William Hayle, and Norman Allin; also Miss Margaret Fairless, solo violin. The executive will be the Appleby Matthews Orchestra and a choir of three hundred voices.

The Choral and Orchestral Association has put in rehearsal 'Judas,' 'Elijah,' 'King Olaf,' and 'Tom Jones.'

New features of the season will be four 'International Celebrity Subscription Concerts,' organized by Mr. Lionel Powell, and four Quinlan Subscription Concerts. The first concert of the former series will be a Melba night, when the diva will be assisted by Mr. Tom Burke, the new Irish tenor, and Ferruccio Busoni, the great pianist. The second concert announces Kubelik, and Miss Katherine Goodson, pianist, and the veteran basso, Mr. Watkin Mills, will also appear. Madame Clara Butt is billed for the third programme, her party including Miss Rosina Buckman and Miss Adela Verne (solo pianoforte), and Mr. Kennerley Rumford and Melsa (solo violin). The fourth concert will be devoted to a Chopin recital by Pachmann.

The Quinlan series is also able to announce a dazzling array of 'stars.' Madame Tétrazini will be the great attraction at the first concert, and with her will be associated Mlle. Renée Chemet, the French violinist; Signor Lenghi Cellini, the Italian tenor, and Signor Pietro Cimara, the Italian pianist. The artists at the second concert will be Mesdames Mignon Nevada, Astra Desmond, Margaret Cooper (songs at the pianoforte), and Suggia (solo 'cello), and Mr. Albert Sammons (solo violin). The third concert is especially noteworthy on account of the great pianist, Leopold Godowsky, who has not been here since 1909. The vocalists will be Madame Miriam Licette and Mr. Clarence Whitehill, the American baritone. The fourth concert will be orchestral, at which Mr. Albert Coates will conduct the Beecham Symphony Orchestra of seventy performers.

Messrs. Boosey's London Ballad Concert party will also visit Birmingham. The vocalists will be Mesdames Carrie Tubb, Flora Woodman, and Lucy Nuttall, and Messrs. Frank Mullings and Topliss Green. Solo violin, Melsa; solo pianoforte, Mr. Harold Samuel; accompanist, Mr. Berkeley Mason.

Madame Minadieu's excellent and interesting Matinées Musicales will again be a feature. There will be three Matinées, and engagements have already been concluded for the appearance of the following eminent artists during the season, viz., M. Vladimir Rosing, Miss Clara Robson, Miss Helen Anderson, and Mr. Plunket Greene (vocalists); Miss Marjorie Hayward, Mr. Arthur Catterall, and Señor Morales (violinists); Miss Adela Verne, Miss Beatrice Hewitt, and Mr. William Murdoch (solo pianoforte); Miss Joan Willis and Mr. Felix Salmond (violincellists); Mr. Lionel Tertis (viola), Mr. C. Draper (clarinet); Miss Ellen Tuckfield, Mr. Harold Craxton, and Mr. G. H. Manton (accompanists).

Mr. Max Mossel is again to the fore with a series of four concerts. At the first Moiseiwitsch will give a pianoforte recital. At the second concert the artists will be Madame Elsa Stralia, Miss Myra Hess, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Max Mossel. At the third, Frederick Lamond will make his reappearance. The vocalist will be Miss Muriel Foster. At the last concert Mr. Landon Ronald will conduct a symphony orchestra. The solo violinist will be Mr. Albert Sammons, and the vocalist Miss Olga Haley.

The Appleby Matthews Sunday evening orchestral concerts are again carried on this season. Thirty-six concerts are projected, to be given every Sunday evening in succession. The locale has been transferred to the new 'Futurist' Cinema Theatre, a magnificent and up-to-date building. The first concert took place on September 7, in the presence of a packed audience. Evidently these excellent concerts have come to stay, and there is no doubt that there is a public for them so long as Mr. Appleby Matthews gives the music his patrons want and that appeals to them. The first programme was a mixture of the classical and modern, as also was the second, and the same rule will to a certain extent prevail throughout the season. The orchestra has been augmented, and excellent performances have been given of Mozart's E flat Symphony, Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' the Overture to 'Rosamunde,' and Dvorak's bright and spirited 'Carnaval' Overture. Mr. Alex. Cohen, an excellent solo violinist, is again the leader of the orchestra.

By the death of Mr. W. C. Stockley, Birmingham has lost its oldest musician, for he was ninety years of age. He was a hard worker in his time, and for many years conducted the Festival Choral Society. He also established his famous Orchestral Concerts which afterwards were taken up by Dr. Rowland Winn. As organist he occupied many prominent posts, and was also well known in the Midlands as a teacher of singing.

Miss Beatrice Hewitt is giving three Saturday afternoon concerts at the Repertory Theatre, having for coadjutors Miss Elma Baker, Miss Ada Forrest, Mr. Arthur Catterall, Mr. Paul Beard, and Mr. J. C. Hock. The programmes will include Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet, Sonatas for 'Cello by Rachmaninoff and Strauss, Russian songs, and pianoforte solos.

The New Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Matthew Stevenson, will give a concert in aid of the organ fund in connection with the Royal Blind Institution. The vocalist will be Miss Desirée Ellinger, of the Beecham Opera Company.

The Annual Scottish Concert will take place on November 29, when the programme will be provided by the Birmingham and Midland Scottish Society.

The Birmingham Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Richard Wassell, will give four concerts in the coming season. The works to be presented are 'Messiah,' 'A Tale of Old Japan,' 'Merrie England,' and there will be a ballad concert. Mr. Wassell will also give four popular orchestral concerts, and Mr. Cyril Scott will appear at the first.

BOURNEMOUTH.

Since the last report appeared in these columns of Bournemouth's musical activities, the Winter Gardens pavilion has undergone the process of re-seating and a thorough renovation. This general clean-up will now in part console us for the continued postponement of the new ambitious 'Pavilion' scheme, the planning of which the war abruptly disposed of for an indefinite period. Nevertheless the town's musical reputation demands a worthier home for its permanent orchestra, and it is to be hoped that conditions will shortly permit of a start being made in preparing for the erection of an entirely adequate building, where musical and musico-dramatic ventures will have all requisite facilities.

During the writer's absence from Bournemouth in the holiday month of August a musical colleague kindly undertook to supply those particulars relating to the Symphony Concerts which are necessary for the completeness of this monthly chronicle. It is thus we learn, therefore, that the concert on August 20 had for its chief attraction the 'Pathetic' Symphony of Tchaikovsky. The performance was an exceedingly fine one, and the excitement that the climax of the first movement invariably produces was once more provoked by the highly expressive orchestral playing. Prolonged plaudits from the very large assemblage greeted a performance that was notable for its perfect correctness. This work quite overshadowed Rossini's tawdry 'William Tell' Overture, splendidly played as it was, and the wishy-washy Paganini Violin Concerto, which Madame Adila Fachiri, by sheer intensity of interpretation, did her level best to render interesting. Her performance won an enthusiastic recall, to which she responded with the Bach Gavotte in E, unaccompanied. On August 27 César Franck's Symphony was given a polished performance, but the music met with a somewhat chilly reception. It cannot be denied that the work suffers from redundancy, particularly in the second and third movements, the opening section being the most prepossessing. On the other hand, one's admiration for many beautiful moments and the striking orchestration can but be wholly genuine. Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture and the frequently played excerpts from Act 3 of 'The Mastersingers' made up the remainder of the purely orchestral items. In addition to these, however, Miss Augusta Chilton Griffin played Saint-Saëns's 'Africa' fantasia for pianoforte and orchestra with much brilliance, bringing out all the good points of the composition. This rising pianist also played three solos—Debussy's 'La Cathédrale Engloutie,' Liszt's weirdly realistic Legend, 'St. Francis Walking on the Waves,' and a Chopin Mazurka. The first proved a magnificent performance, but the other compositions were handled rather too heavily and thus were less satisfactory. Miss Thelma Petersen, the possessor of an attractive voice, sang 'O don fatale' with orchestral accompaniment. Her dramatic sense is not yet developed to any extent, and consequently Graham Peel's 'The early morning,' which she sang as an encore, was much more suited to her capabilities. The following week's concert, which consisted of Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, the 'Tannhäuser' Overture, the Suite, 'From all Countries,' by Moszkowski, a Slavonic Dance of Dvořák's, and some vocal contributions by Mr. Charles Tree, we are unable to report.

The writer was present at the concert on September 11, when Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony was the principal feature of the scheme. An otherwise satisfactory performance was handicapped by some rather dull playing in the first movement, and a glaring orchestral slip which spoilt the flow of the music for a space. The rest of the programme consistently pursued the lugubrious vein opened up by the Russian composer, consisting as it did of the same master's 'Serenade Mélancolique' for violin, capably played by Mr. Bertram Lewis, the leader of the orchestra, Sibelius's 'Valse Triste' (encored), and—tragedy conceived in less poignant accents—Edward German's 'Richard III.' Overture, which pleased very much and was capitally performed. A programme of recognised popularity was submitted on September 17, such works as Beethoven's C minor Symphony and Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto never failing in their appeal to the general public. Mr. Dan Godfrey merits much commendation for the excellent results he obtained from his instrumentalists in the Symphony, and Mr. Harold Colombati's clear and artistic playing in the Concerto was distinctly praiseworthy. Sullivan's effective 'Macbeth' Overture was the only other item.

BRISTOL.

There has been no noteworthy concert at Bristol for the past three months, but musical doings have not stood still. The fine weather has tempted many patrons to the excellent open-air concerts of the Zoological Gardens band, and the Durdham Downs band concerts have been a focus of patronage. Organ recitals at St. Mary Redcliffe, the home of these functions at Bristol, have gone steadily forward, Mr. R. T. Morgan's enterprise, as organist, being well rewarded. Besides his own playing, he has secured the best of organ exponents from a wide area, one of these being Mr. Stanley Roper, assistant-organist of Westminster Abbey.

The great feature locally has been the recent revival of the Glastonbury Festival, established by Mr. Rutland Boughton and the late Mr. R. Buckley, Arthurian drama collaborators. It occurred to them in 1913 that Glastonbury was highly suitable for a 'Temple of Art' on the lines of Bayreuth, and a number of eminent musicians heartily supported the idea. Mr. P. Napier Miles, the wealthy Bristol amateur, to whom Miss Marie Hall owed her first steps, joined with Sir Edward Elgar, and Mr. Granville Bantock is promoting the idea. The war cut short the proceedings, but a summer school was organized in 1914 and annual Festivals commenced in 1916.

It was terribly uphill work to induce the musical public to support so academic a venture, but the interest in the Festivals in Bristol and the neighbourhood may be said to be slowly taking root. Glastonbury, of course, was highly interested, and Prof. Sydney Adshead, of London University, has prepared a fine design for a Bayreuth-Oberammergau Festival Theatre, with English country life features, on a most suitable site at Glastonbury; but £10,000 is needed to cover its cost and the erection of hostel, stage, &c. Glastonbury as the home of the Arthurian legends and the 'holy thorn' is peculiarly suitable for the venture, and all musicians will wish it success.

The actual Festival of the summer school extended from August 17 to August 30. The high standard of histrionic and musical ability displayed by even small children, along with the poetic grace of costumes, dresses, and staging, gave the greatest pleasure to large audiences. Notable among the plays and performances were William Morris's 'Chapel in Lyonesse,' for pianoforte, strings, and solo voices, the music by Mr. Rutland Boughton; selections from works of Percy Grainger, John Ireland, and Sir Edward Elgar; a little play, 'A Pot o' Broth'; and Shirley's masque 'Cupid and Death.' The Carnegie prize opera, 'The Immortal Hour' (Fiona Macleod), composed by Mr. Boughton, dances to the music of the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture of Mendelssohn, as a children's ballet, and Rutland Boughton's choral ballet 'The Moon Maiden,' with Clarence Raybould's 'Sumida River,' a Japanese idyll, were also presented. Miss Marie Hall and Mr. Napier Miles appeared in the same programme. The celebrated violinist played Sonatas by Eccles, Lates, and Ireland, and Mr. Miles accompanied his 'Battle' songs, sung by Mr. Arthur Jordan. The first cycle of four days concluded with the Arthurian 'Round Table,' the music-drama by the inspirers of the Festival. The second and third cycles repeated these works. Free chamber concerts and a madrigal concert, with a lecture on Elizabethan composers by the Rev. Dr. Edmund H. Fellowes, made up a notable Festival in the West Country that in its evolution will attract, we have no doubt, increasing attention from the cultivated musical amateur as the years go on.

Bristol is likely itself to have a highly successful and important musical season. The Quinlan concerts arranged by Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker will provide for four engagements at Colston Hall, with Tetrizzini, Chemet, Cellini, Cimara, Nevada, Desmond, Margaret Cooper, Suggia, Sammons, Reeves, Godowsky, Whitehill, Edna Thornton, and the Beecham Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Albert Coates, as the high 'stars.' Crichton's, Ltd., are also providing a series of Subscription Concerts at Bristol, with Melba, Clara Butt, Rosina Buckman, Rumford, Burke, Watkin Mills, Busoni, Katherine Goodson, Adela Verne, Pachmann the inimitable, Kubelik, and Melsa as the attractions. Such a galaxy as these two lists present has never before been seen on Bristol platforms in the same season. The great duet from 'La Bohème,' which created such a furore at Covent Garden in May before the King and Queen, is to be repeated by Dame Melba and Mr. Tom Burke, the Irish tenor. It needs only an enterprising entrepreneur to produce Caruso to make Bristol a centre of musical interest in the coming season. But the great point is, 'Will it pay?' Will Bristol citizens, regrettably lax, it must be conceded, in artistic enthusiasm, come forward now that they have concerts of the highest class offered them? Bristol ought to have had its own symphony orchestra long ago; but, alas! Mr. George Riseley knows why it has not. Sufficient guarantee was not forthcoming in the old city.

Bristol Choral Society has in view six concerts, with such old favourites as 'The Golden Legend,' 'Flying Dutchman,' 'Hiawatha,' 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' &c.—a conservative list, but probably a wise selection for a start after the war. It is to be hoped that next year will see some modern works produced. The artists engaged include Mesdames Agnes Nicholls, Phyllis Lett, Rosina Buckman, and Carrie Tubb, Messrs. John Coates, Maurice D'Oisly, Charles Knowles, Joseph Reed, and Robert Radford. The Society's annual report shows that the four afternoon concerts (the Society is now returning to the evening function) were highly successful in 1918-19, under the masterly direction of its indefatigable conductor, Mr. George Riseley. The work of the Society being of an educational character, it has been decided to make no increase in the charges despite increased cost of band and principals in this its thirty-first season. It is much to be hoped the strongest support will be given to Bristol's oldest and chief choral combination.

The Musical Society, under Mr. Charles Stear's judicious direction, is also giving the 'Golden Legend' this season—an unfortunate, but understandable, coincidence. The 'Stabat Mater' and 'Lobgesang' are also on the Society's list. Mr. Grahame Wills succeeds Mr. John Boyd as president after fifteen years.

The New Philharmonic Society, so ably conducted by Mr. Arnold Barter, has elected Mr. G. A. Wills, another of the great Wills family, to be its president. The concerts last season were in aid of the British Red Cross Society, and a substantial sum was handed over. Instrumental works are to be a leading attraction of this season. There is to be an additional concert, and Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony is to be a feature. Ten works by British composers will be given at the three concerts, the 'outside' works including Beethoven's Concerto in D, Grieg's A minor Pianoforte Concerto, and the Overture to 'The Meistersingers.' Rutland Boughton's 'Midnight,' for choir and orchestra, is also down for presentation.

New members are coming forward for all the Societies, and rehearsals are in full swing. It should be a wonderful year.

Weston-super-mare, Bristol's Brighton, is not behind-hand: the Operatic Society will give costume entertainments, the Philharmonic Society carrying on the concert work of opera and oratorio. The Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra, with Miss Marie Hall and Mr. Dan Godfrey, is also in the list of attractions, with the violinist playing one of the great concerted works.

Finally the D'Oyly Carte Company and the Royal Carl Rosa Company (two weeks) may be chronicled as among the successes of the Bristol musical season. In August, that splendid new musical play, 'The Maid of the East,' in Mr. Walter Neale's best style of scoring, was a magnificent success at the Prince's Theatre. London music-lovers will be well advised to hear this fascinating work.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

Miss Carrie Tubb toured Devon in August, bringing with her Mr. John Huntingdon, baritone, Mr. Berkeley Mason, pianist, and Miss Beatrice Eveline, whose delightful 'cello playing contributed largely to the success of the concerts. Miss Carrie Tubb made her chief appeal in a song by W. Cadman, 'Time and I.' Another touring party, ten days later, included Miss Margaret Cooper, most clever among concert entertainers, Mr. James Howell, a resourceful and artistic baritone singer, Mr. Thornley Dodge and Miss Gertrude Tomalin, raconteur and elocutionist, and Miss Evelyn Cooke and Miss Margaret Chisholme, whose violin and pianoforte duets were interesting. Madame Bertha Moore and her daughter, Miss Marjorie Moore, have given numerous song and story recitals in North Devon and North Cornwall, and have raised hundreds of pounds thereby for the Lord Roberts Memorial Workshops, as much as £200 being taken at a recital at Lynton on August 26.

A violin and pianoforte recital was given at Black Torrington on September 12 by Miss Naomi English and Miss Dorothy English, with songs sung by Messrs. A. and B. Dickinson and the Rev. St. U. W. Honey.

A new organ has been erected in Charles Church, Plymouth, as a Peace Memorial, and a recital was given by Mr. John Hele on September 17.

The D'Oyly Carte Opera Company has spent three weeks in Devonshire, playing at Torquay from September 1 to 6, and at Plymouth for the succeeding two weeks. Torquay Pavilion was occupied during the week beginning September 8 by the Alexandra English Opera Company in popular opera, and in the theatre 'The Geisha' and 'San Toy' were played. Plymouth Choral Society performed 'The Mikado' on August 27, conducted by Mr. T. Lavers, and supported by an orchestra led by Mr. C. J. Jane. The singing of the chorus was remarkably good.

While the local section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians remains almost inactive, and entirely so as far as musical demonstration is concerned, the committee of University College, Exeter, has arranged for a series of lectures on diverse subjects to be given weekly by Dr. Markham Lee from September 26. The lectures will deal with classical and modern composers, and will be illustrated vocally and instrumentally.

Though war conditions have caused suspension of much of the usual programme of musical work at Sidmouth, Mr. J. A. Bellamy, organist of the Parish Church since 1894—who is master of musical ceremonies in the town and district—has kept musical interest alive by means of charity concerts and organ recitals. He hopes in the coming season to reorganize the Choral Society, whose last performance—in April, 1914—was of 'Hiawatha,' and to start another series of lectures on composers (Elgar, Brahms, Wagner, and Coleridge-Taylor have been already treated). Three instrumental concerts have been arranged for the autumn season, and organ recitals have been in progress throughout the summer. This constitutes a full programme for a small and secluded town, and compares well with the prominent city of Exeter, which offers little for the coming season.

CORNWALL.

Contests for bands and choirs held at Redruth on August 30 provided much interest. The mining district has branched out considerably in recent years in culture of combined male singing, and four choirs entered the competition, first place being won by Redruth Male Choir. Mr. R. G. Evans, bandmaster of the R.G.A., Plymouth, adjudicated on the choirs and on the bands. The chief competition in the latter rested between the St. Dennis and Camborne bands, St. Dennis securing first place on account of good tempo. A smaller contest, held at St. Dennis on August 23, was adjudicated by Mr. Jesse Manley, of Aberdare. The first place was divided between Foxhole and Newlyn East. On September 9 twelve bands entered the competition for the Prince of Wales's trophy, the first Royal trophy ever offered at a band contest in the British Empire, and Camborne band was declared the winner.

Visitors from London gave an interesting vocal, violin, and pianoforte recital at Delabole on August 30. St. Ives Male Choir assisted in a concert given on August 21 by employés of Roskear Fuse Factory, and Looe Male Choir, assisted by Looe Orchestral Society, gave a concert on September 10. A successful violin and organ recital was given in St. Minver Parish Church on August 29 by Mrs. Hall Parly (Plymouth) and Mr. S. S. Martyn, the music being chosen from works of Mozart, Bach, Horsman, Saint-Saëns, Ford, Wagner, Wolstenholme, Raff, and Elgar.

DUBLIN.

During the last week of August (Horse Show week) the Gaiety Theatre attracted enormous houses to enjoy 'The Maid of the Mountains,' which some of the Dublin papers describe as 'light opera abounding in haunting melodies.' All the seats in the dress circle and parterre were booked in advance, with the result that the prices for reserved seats in the second circle were 5s. 9d. (including tax).

Dr. C. Norman Hay, who has already won fame as an instrumental composer, has written a charming lyric (words by W. J. Morrison) named 'Harriette,' which was sung during Show week by M. Constantin Stroeescu, the Russian tenor, at his two song recitals, the first on August 28, and the second at the Abbey Theatre on August 31. Mr. Weaving was a sympathetic accompanist.

Although the Dublin printers' strike (which lasted over nine weeks) was satisfactorily settled on August 22, the unfortunate dispute in the music trade lasted a few days longer. It is, however, gratifying to announce that a settlement was reached on August 26, and business was resumed as usual at the three houses principally affected—Messrs. Pigott's, Cramer's, and Crane's—on August 27.

At the consecration of Queenstown Cathedral, on August 24, the special music was mainly selected from a fourth-rate German composer (Klein), under the direction of a foreign organist, Herr Tils. As a set off, however, the magnificent carillon (see page 522)—the finest in the United Kingdom—manipulated at the clavier by a famous Belgian performer, M. Nauwelaerts, of Bruges, gave unbounded satisfaction. The carillon of forty-two bells, with clavier, has a compass of three and a half octaves chromatic, and is an admirable specimen of English workmanship, having been made by Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough, after the designs by Mr. W. W. Starmer.

Mr. John Mundy, for some years principal 'cellist in Sir Thomas Beecham's orchestra, and also a member of the Philharmonic Society's orchestra and of Mr. Landon Ronald's New Symphony Orchestra, has been appointed professor of his instrument at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, vice Mr. Clyde Twelvetees, resigned. Mr. Mundy was a student of the Royal Academy, London, and after the outbreak of the war joined up as a private, becoming subsequently Captain and Adjutant in the York and Lancaster Regiment, and being mentioned in despatches.

There has been a strike among the music-teachers at the Cork Municipal School of Music, of which Carl Gilbert Hardebeck has recently been appointed head-master.

Music-lovers are delighted at the announcement of the four forthcoming subscription concerts at the Theatre Royal, to be given on October 24, November 15, January 3, and February 17, at which will be heard Tetrizzini, Cellini, Chemet, Cimara, Nevada, Margaret Cooper, Albert Sammons, Astra Desmond, Sir Thomas Beecham's Symphony Orchestra (conducted by Mr. Albert Coates), Madame Edna Thornton, and others. Surely this enterprise of Mr. Thomas Quinlan is deserving of ample support.

Miss Florrie Ryan's benefit concert, on September 10, was an unqualified success. Mr. Vincent O'Brien was a capable accompanist. With further training more will be heard of Miss Ryan.

GLASGOW.

During August and September Mr. Herbert Walton gave his twenty-second annual series of organ recitals at the Cathedral. The crowded audiences, numbering some thousands weekly, indicated a keen interest in this special form of instrumental music, as well as being a tribute to Mr. Walton's exceptional powers as an exponent. On a smaller scale Mr. John Pulein gave similar recitals at St. Mary's Cathedral during September.

The coming musical season in Glasgow promises to be a return to even more than pre-war activity. The scheme of the Choral and Orchestral Union, now under the experienced management of Mr. James G. Mackerracher, will again be in operation, with Mr. Landon Ronald as conductor-in-chief. The works selected for performance by the Choral Union (Mr. Warren T. Clemens, conductor) are 'Pan in Arcady' (Bantock), 'The Spirit of England' (Elgar), Dances from 'Prince Igor' (Borodin), 'Hymn of Apollo' (E. Austin), 'Songs of the Fleet' (Stanford), 'Samson and Delilah' (Saint-Saëns), and 'Messiah.' The Prospectus of the Bach Choir (Mr. J. Michael Diack, conductor) includes a lecture by Prof. Walford Davies, a chamber concert directed by Mr. J. Finnie McEwen, a clavecin recital by Madame Wanda Landowska, the 'Christmas Oratorio,' the Magnificat, and one of the Church Cantatas. In addition to winter and spring series of concerts the Orpheus Choir (Mr. H. S. Robertson) has organized a week's subscription concerts by the London Quartet. The result of this new departure will be watched with interest, but knowing the Choir's excellent system of organization, one can almost with certainty vouch for success. The William Morris Choir (Mr. W. Robertson) again specialises in the best of modern unaccompanied choral music, as does also Mr. Thorpe Davies's Choir. These and some newly-formed choirs have already resumed their practisings. The old-established Abstainers' Union concerts will be limited to four, and these on the 'subscription' basis.

Hamilton Choral Union (Mr. T. S. Drummond) will give two concerts, the first presenting music by Scottish and the second by British composers. The works selected include Mackenzie's 'The Cottar's Saturday Night,' David Stephen's 'The Laird o' Cockpen,' the conductor's own setting of 'Young Lochinvar,' Parry's 'L' Allegro,' and some characteristic types of unaccompanied choral music. Stirling Choral Society, under its new conductor, Mr. Warren T. Clemens, will celebrate its jubilee by a series of attractive concerts at which the Glasgow Orpheus Choir and the Scottish Orchestra will appear, as well as the Society itself in Parry's 'Ode to Music,' Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' and Stanford's 'Songs of the Fleet.' With the return of the men students Glasgow University Choral Society will resume its pre-war usefulness. The Glasgow Grand Opera Society is taking up 'Carmen' and Goring Thomas's 'Esmeralda.' The Glasgow Presbytery of the United Free Church of Scotland has arranged a series of five Conferences, the topics for discussion being: (1) 'Congregational Praise from the point of view of the minister, the organist, and the worshipper' (led by Mr. Percy Gordon); (2) 'The Choir' (Mr. Norman Fraser); (3) 'Choir Training' (Mr. A. M. Henderson); (4) 'Organ Voluntaries and their place in Divine Service' (Mr. T. C. L. Pritchard); and (5) 'Organ Accompaniment' (Mr. J. K. Findlay).

Much musical work will proceed quietly during the winter in preparation for the steadily expanding Glasgow Choral Festival in May next. The above comprises a sketch of prospective local effort. In addition, several schemes by outside concert-managers will be in operation, among these being the Quinlan and Max Mossel concerts, the 'International Celebrity' Subscription Concerts, and a four weeks' season by the Beecham Opera Company.

LIVERPOOL.

There appears to be every prospect of an extremely busy winter musical season. Entrepreneurs realise that music is necessary to tranquillise us during those strenuous days of peace even more than in the hateful time of war; and it is a good thing that a huge community with pockets full of money should have opportunities for spending wisely. As usual the Philharmonic Society's preliminary announcements take pride of place. The first of the series of ten concerts occurs on October 28, when M. Busoni will appear as conductor and solo pianist. Succeeding conductors will include Sir Henry Wood (twice), Mr. Albert Coates (twice), Mr. Gabriel Pierné, Mr. Adrian Boult, Sir Thomas Beecham, and Mr. Geoffrey Toye. M. Cortôt will play on November 25, and the solo violinists are to include Miss Adéla D'Aranyi (Madame Fachiri, a niece of Joachim) and Miss Isolde Menges. The singers will include Madame Donalds, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Frank Mullings, and M. Lappas, the Greek tenor of Covent Garden Opera.

Few novelties appear in the list of choral works as at present outlined. Chief among them is Dr. Vaughan Williams's 'Sea Symphony,' for soprano and baritone solo with chorus and orchestra. The same composer's short choral work, 'Toward the unknown regions,' is also under consideration for performance, as is Mr. Ernest Bryson's choral setting of Whitman's 'Drum Taps.' A repeat performance of Mr. Bryson's interesting short work, 'The Stranger,' is definitely fixed, also performances of Bach's Motet, 'Come, Jesu, come,' and Brahms's Alto Rhapsody. It is noticeable that the Society will not perform either 'Messiah' or 'Elijah' this season.

The draft programmes submitted by the various conductors engaged have yet to be received before the orchestral items of the programmes are known. At least one pianoforte concerto can be stated. This is Rachmaninov's No. 3, which is to be played by M. Cortôt. The weekly choral rehearsals under Dr. A. W. Pollitt, the Society's choir-master, were resumed on September 22.

Evening dress is again to be de rigueur, for the concerts will commence at the old pre-war hour, 'a quarter to eight precisely,' and the way home will not now be so dark and perilous.

Among Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper's announcements are interesting subscription concerts to be given by Mr. Thomas Quinlan and Mr. Max Mossel in the Philharmonic Hall. There will be four concerts in each series. Mr. Quinlan needs no introduction to Liverpool, and for the first of his concerts, on October 18, he has enlisted Madame Tetrassini, Mr. Lenghi Cellini, Mlle. Renée Chemet (violin), and Mr. Pietro Cimara (solo pianoforte).

On November 13 the singers will be Miss Nevada, Miss Astra Desmond, Miss Margaret Cooper, with Mr. Albert Sammons and Madame Suggia as instrumentalists. Godowsky will play at the third concert on January 10, and on February 7 Mr. Albert Coates will conduct the Beecham Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Max Mossel has engaged Moiseiwitsch to give a recital on October 25, and at his second concert, on December 6, Madame Stralia, Mr. John Coates, and Miss Myra Hess will appear, with Mr. Mossel as solo violinist. For the third concert, on January 31, Miss Muriel Foster and Mr. Lamond are engaged, and on March 20 the series will be completed by an orchestral concert to be conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, with Mr. Albert Sammons as solo violinist. A feature of this programme will be the orchestral items played by the number of instruments for which they were originally written. Demobilised temporary Army bandmasters will especially appreciate this statement.

Mr. Lionel Powell also announces an attractive series of four concerts to be given under his direction by 'international celebrities,' who will include at the first concert, on October 2, Madame Melba, Mr. Tom Burke, and M. Busoni; M. Kubelik, Miss Katherine Goodson, and Mr. Watkin Mills are announced for November 8; Madame Clara Butt, Miss Rosina Buckman, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, Miss Adela Verne, and Melsa will appear on January 30; and on March 19 the one and only Pachmann will give a Chopin recital.

The Welsh Choral Union has made an excellent choice in definitely appointing as its conductor Mr. T. Hopkins Evans, of Neath. Members of the famous choir will find him an able musician, who speaks their language and understands their needs. Mr. Evans may be depended upon to make the most of the fine opportunity which has come his way. Three concerts will be given this season. At the first, on November 15, the programme will include Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha,' music which makes a subtle appeal to the ardent temperament of these Welsh singers. 'Messiah' will be sung on December 20, and 'Elijah' on March 13. As in past seasons Mr. Vasco Akeroyd will lead the orchestra, with Mr. Alfred Benton as organist and Mr. J. B. Jenkins as chorus-master and deputy-conductor. 'Messiah' will also be sung on December 27 by the Liverpool Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Ingram, for the benefit of St. Dunstan's Hostel.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper also announce visits from the London Ballad Concert Party (Messrs. Boosey) on October 4, and a Chappell concert on April 20, to be given by the Queen's Hall Light Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Alick MacLean. M. Cortôt will give a pianoforte recital on November 29, and it is welcome news that the Rodewald Society's chamber concerts will be resumed on October 27 and on three subsequent dates. The instrumentalists will include the Catterall String Quartet, the Liverpool Trio—Messrs. Douglas Miller (pianoforte), Sheridan (violin) and Hatton (violinello)—and on January 19 Mr. Frank Bridge, the composer, will appear.

The Crane Hall Wednesday afternoon musical recitals were resumed on September 2, when Mr. Joseph Greene—a local pianist of outstanding powers, who has achieved special distinction as an interpreter of works by native composers—played with fluency and perception in Ireland's delightful 'Island Spell' and 'Ragamuffin,' Cyril Scott's 'Pierrot Pieces,' Nos. 1 and 2, as well as in Ravel's Sonatina, Debussy's 'Jardins sous la pluie,' and the Wagner-Liszt 'Tannhäuser' Overture, of which a masterly performance was given. Songs by Miss Elizabeth Dyson, and violin solos by Miss Jo Lamb, were accompanied by Mr. Sandberg Lee.

At the recital in Crane Hall on September 9 Miss Marion K. Snowden played with great facility in items by Debussy and Six Spanish Dances (Granados). Violin solos were contributed by Miss Isobel McCullagh and songs by Miss Doxy Wilson, accompanied by Mr. G. J. Freeman. On September 15 Mr. Victor Benham sustained his high reputation as a Schumann and Chopin exponent in the 'Carnival' and six of the 'Studies.' The vocalists were Miss Myrtle Jones and Mr. Howard Vincent, accompanied by Mr. A. F. Workman.

A series of lectures on school music has been given in the Collegiate School Hall to the teachers under the Education authority by Mr. R. McLeod, director of music for Edinburgh Schools.

An inaugural meeting of the members of the Liverpool Centre of the British Music Society was held in Rushworth Hall on September 18; Mr. E. A. Behrend presided. Mr. John Brook, of Southport, was appointed hon. secretary and Mr. W. Rushworth hon. treasurer. A provisional committee was also appointed. Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, with their usual enterprise, have provided a fine club-room for members of the Society, which will play an important part in the musical activities and amenities of this flourishing Centre.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

The City Council Sites Committee is going ahead with its investigations as to necessary Town Hall and other extensions, but no word is to be heard of any inclusion of the Opera House site in its deliberations, and one is almost forced to the conclusion that it is in a state of suspended animation.

The annual meeting of the guarantors of the Hallé Society has not yet been held, and at the time of writing nothing has been published regarding the forthcoming series of concerts. The burden of conducting will be shared by Sir Thomas Beecham, Messrs. Goossens, Hamilton Harty, and Landon Ronald, with Albert Coates as the newcomer.

The September season of Promenade concerts has been discontinued this year. During August many of the players were with the Beecham Opera Company at Blackpool, the tour then being continued at Edinburgh and Glasgow.

The first week-end in September brought the publication of details of the Quinlan series of four orchestral concerts conducted by Mr. Albert Coates, and of the two important series organized by Mr. Brand Lane. These are more comprehensive in scope than in any previous winter. Launched as the Victory Season, both the orchestral and Festival series hold out prospects of good things—each provides ten concerts; all are on Saturday nights, with New Year's Day and January 2 thrown in. Always a believer in the personality of his artists, Mr. Lane associates at separate concerts, Melba, Burke, Busoni; Clara Butt, Rumford, Kubelik; Sarah Bernhardt and Cortôt; Felise Lyne, Adela Verne and Marie Hall; a Pachmann recital; orchestral nights with both Lamond and Busoni; and what is styled the 'overwhelming attraction' on January 1, 2, and 3 of the massed bands of His Majesty's Guards, under Major Mackenzie Rogan. The Free Trade Hall is big, and its acoustics glorious, but one views such an experience (in advance) with some trepidation.

Some orchestral music new to Manchester will be heard at these concerts: Debussy's 'Cathédrale Engloutie' (whose version is this, I wonder?), Corder's Elegy for twenty-four violins, O'Neill's 'Blue Bird' dances, Holbrooke's 'Three Blind Mice,' No. 1 of the Granados 'Goyescas,' Albeniz's 'Iberia,' known to the few here only in the pianoforte version; Howard Carr's 'Jovial Huntsman,' Balfour Gardiner's 'Joyful Home Coming'; a new work by Busoni (November 29), title not yet announced; Howell's 'Puck's Minuet'; a Suite of Sword Dances of Northern England and Morris Dance Tunes by Cecil J. Sharp. Cortôt plays on November 1, Saint-Saëns's C minor Concerto, No. 4; Busoni (November 29) the 'Emperor,' Beethoven; Lamond (March 22) Beethoven's No. 3, in C minor, and on January 17 Tchaikovsky's No. 1, in B flat minor. Nobody who heard that under Balling in the winter 1913-14 will ever forget it. It will be worth a journey of many miles to renew its acquaintance.

Sir Henry Wood will conduct on all the orchestral nights. The choral concerts will be 'Messiah,' 'Elijah,' 'Zadok the Priest,' and a concert performance of 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and probably various items of unaccompanied works not yet announced. Is it wise to have entirely omitted symphonies from this series, and could not such omission be remedied even now?

Further details of the Quinlan series show that very notable instrumentalists other than those already mentioned will be heard under Mr. Coates in concerted music—Renée Chemet, Suggia, Godowsky, Sammons, and Cimara. I think Clarence Whitehill will make his first appearance in Manchester, and Tetrizzini's reappearance will recall memories of other days under Mr. Percy Harrison.

The Gentlemen's Concerts Society adheres for the second year to a policy of recitals and chamber music. The players and vocalists already engaged include Misses Renée Chemet and Nora Hughes; Messrs. Cortôt, de Greef, Moiseiwitsch, Landon Ronald; Misses Rosina Buckman, Münthe-Kaas, Rasowsky; Messrs. John Coates, d'Oisy, and Rosing. The Catterall Quartet is the only instrumental combination so far announced.

With the Hallé series supplementing these, it will be at once apparent that the Manchester season will be restored, in the aspect of personal renown, to the full measure of its pre-war glory.

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

The prospects for the coming musical season exceed anything we have had for years. The Sacred Harmonic Society is relying on old favourites—'Faust,' 'Samson and Delilah,' 'Elijah,' and 'Messiah.' Mr. Bernard Johnson is not only giving his organ recitals (two a month for six months), but also a series of six People's Concerts on Wednesdays, with varied programmes, including chamber music by the London String Quartet, a violin and song recital by Mr. Albert Sammons and Miss Phyllis Lett, a pianoforte and song recital by Miss Myra Hess and Mr. Gervase Elwes, a pianoforte and organ recital by Mr. Alfred Hollins and Mr. Bernard Johnson, old ballads and songs by Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay, and finally an orchestral concert by the Hallé Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood's direction. Besides the above Mr. Johnson advertises two choral numbers to be given by the Albert Hall Choir—Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants' and his own 'Ecce Homo.'

The Nottingham Subscription Concerts issue a prospectus for four concerts, the chief attraction being M. Cortôt, the French pianist, with Mr. John Coates; Mr. Landon Ronald with the London Symphony Orchestra; M. Busoni with M. Van Lier and the Beecham Opera Quartet.

Messrs. Farmers are also having a series of Subscription Concerts and a special ballad concert party. We are also to have a further series under the direction of Mr. Thomas Quinlan, with Tetrizzini as the chief attraction.

From Derby comes the news that the Choral Union is resuming practices under Dr. Henry Coward—with no novelties, however, but a strong party of soloists for the Christmas 'Messiah,' including Mr. Robert Radford.

The Orchestral Union after two seasons' rest will resume rehearsals early in October, under the baton of Mr. F. Staton. Several new works are to be put in hand, including one by the conductor, and Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations.

For several seasons past some excellent chamber subscription concerts have been given on Friday afternoons. This season an attempt is to be made in connection with the Municipal Concerts Committee for the same artists to stay and give evening concerts at popular prices. The first of these takes place on October 31, when the Bohemian Quartet and Miss Fanny Davies will provide the programme.

Ashbourne Road Wesleyan Church, Derby, gave a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' as a continuation of their harvest festival on September 15. The choir and orchestra were ably directed by Mr. F. J. Bonas, and the solos were undertaken by Miss Annie Reader, Mr. C. Daykin Turner, and Mr. A. E. Selvey.

The season at Leicester promises to be as full as at most places, the Leicester Musical Society arranging for 'Elijah' at Christmas and Gounod's 'Redemption' in the spring. Marshall's are giving a series of six concerts, including one by the Beecham Orchestra and two by the Philharmonic Society—'The Spirit of England,' 'Hymn of Praise,' and Berlioz's 'Faust.' Russell has four 'International Celebrity' concerts, and Miss Grace Burrows is giving four chamber concerts.

A very successful performance of the 'Hymn of Praise' (Mendelssohn) took place on September 17 at Green Hill Wesleyan Chapel, Derby. The choruses were well sung by a large choir under Mr. W. H. Richardson's direction, and the solos received ample justice from Mrs. G. D. Pratt and Mr. Daykin Turner.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

A busy winter is in prospect for Sheffield musical circles. Demobilization has returned large numbers of members to the choral Societies, so that these organizations promise numerically to exceed pre-war figures.

The Amateur Musical Society has put 'Elijah' into rehearsal for the winter concert, while at the spring concert Bantock's 'Omar Khayyam' will be performed. Owing to Sir Henry Wood's acceptance of the conductorship of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society he has been compelled to resign his long connection with the old-established Sheffield choir, and both concerts will therefore be conducted by Mr. J. A. Rodgers.

The Musical Union is preparing Berlioz's 'Faust' for its first concert. At the second 'Messiah' will be given. There will also be a third concert in the spring, with probably 'The Dream of Gerontius' as the chief choral work. Dr. Coward will conduct all three concerts.

The Victoria Hall Choral Society, which gave a successful performance of 'Elijah' on September 14, is doing vigorous work under its new conductor, Mr. A. S. Burrows. Performances in connection with the Victoria Hall Mission will be given from time to time.

The Eva Rich Ladies' Choir, now a large and important choral body, will sing Harold Darke's 'As the leaves fall' at one of its forthcoming concerts in Victoria Hall. The composer will conduct.

After a period of suspension, owing to the war, the Sheffield Promenade Concerts are to be resumed. These fine orchestral concerts are somewhat misnamed. They are, properly speaking, symphony concerts. However, as 'promenade concerts' they were established ten years ago, and as such they are widely known. Four concerts are to be given, with a professional orchestra of sixty. Mr. W. H. Reed is leader, and Mr. J. A. Rodgers conductor. The Symphonies announced are Rachmaninov in E minor, Tchaikovsky's No. 6, and Beethoven's No. 2. The fourth programme is to be drawn mainly from Wagner, with the Eva Rich Ladies' Choir in the 'Spinning Chorus' scene from 'The Flying Dutchman.' The Concertos are by Mendelssohn (violin, Miss Lena Kontorovitch), W. H. Reed (violin, the composer), Moszkowski (pianoforte, Miss Helen Guest), and MacDowell's No. 2 (pianoforte, Mr. Cecil Baumer). A feature of the scheme is the cheapness of the tickets—a thousand seats at one shilling each!

Five concerts are included in the Sheffield Subscription series. Cortôt, Busoni, and Myra Hess are the pianists. Kocian and Margaret Fairless the violinists; the London Symphony Orchestra (Mr. Landon Ronald conducting), and the Beecham Opera Quartet Party (Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Frank Mullings, and Mr. Norman Allin) have been engaged, and M. Jacques Van Lier and Mr. John Coates, along with other well-known artists, appear in an attractive prospectus.

The Misses Foxon propose to continue their interesting Friday Three o'Clock Concerts. Mr. Claude Crossley is organizing some pianoforte recitals, and the University Musical Society is arranging a series of Chamber Concerts in the Firth Hall of the University.

In coming to Sheffield to take up the position of Vice-Chancellor of the University, Sir Henry Hadow will be warmly welcomed in musical circles in the city. It is expected that Sir Henry's assumption of the office will provide a stimulus to musical art in all its manifestations in the city and district. The Vice-Chancellor is to be the chief guest at the annual dinner of the Organists' Association, and will preside at the initial meeting of the Sheffield branch of the British Music Society.

The Northern Polytechnic Institute, Holloway, provides a Music Trades School as part of its educational scheme for 1919-20. Instruction is given under the following heads: The Technology of Pianoforte Construction; Experimental work in the Technology of Pianoforte Manufacture; Pneumatics and Pianoforte-players; Violin Construction and Repairs; Practical Trade-work and Drawing; French Polishing.

Country News.

BLACKHEATH.—An 'open concert' is to be given by the Blackheath branch of the British Music Society at Christ's College on October 14, the programme including a new Pianoforte Quartet by Herbert Howell. Members' concerts are also announced, with programmes of British, French, and Russian music, and lectures, &c. The secretary of this enterprising body is Miss Ethel Waddington, 42, Vanbrugh Park, Blackheath, S.E.-3.

CHELTENHAM.—In aid of local hospitals the Ucal Works Choral Society gave a concert at the Town Hall on August 27. Under the capable direction of Mr. Victor H. Burraston, the choir was heard in Adam's 'Comrades' Song of Hope,' Löhr's 'Slumber song,' and other pieces, and solos were given by Miss Hilda Blake and Mr. Ernest Flambe (vocalists), and Captain W. A. Poucher (pianoforte).

FELIXSTOWE.—The programme of the concert given by Mr. Godfrey Holbeck at the Spa Pavilion on September 4 included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Petit Suite de Concert,' a 'Pomp and Circumstance' March by Elgar, and a selection from Cowen's 'The language of flowers.'

Musical Notes from Abroad.

MILAN.

On the evening of July 27, the première of a new opera 'La via della Finestra' ('The way of the Window') of Maestro Zandonai, was given at the Rossini Theatre in Pesaro. The libretto, by Giuseppe Adami, a free adaptation of a vaudeville of Scribe, relates the world-worn story of the taming of a shrew by measures of a more or less drastic nature. The nucleus around which the narrative is built is precisely the way of the window out of which the peevish wife, in a fit of ungovernable temper, takes a flying leap and lands, of course, on to the convenient cartload of hay. The husband thereupon stipulates that, for her return, the only way this can be effected is precisely the way of the window, all other entrances being barred to her.

According to report, the music of this opera is excellent in every way, while the instrumentation is very neat and full of life. Extensive use is made of the wind instruments, even in the more sentimental pieces (such as the entry of Gabriella in Act 3), original and delicate effects being thus secured to the exclusion of the much abused violinistic outbursts. The harmony is of a rich texture, in which is interwoven a few characteristics of the composer, whose artistic sense has not been warped by the ultra-modern views so dear to budding composers to-day.

A season of opera is announced for the Dal Verme Theatre. It will commence on September 15, and go on right through Carnevale time in February next. The following operas are to be given: 'William Tell,' 'Lodoletta,' 'Fanciulla del West,' 'Amore dei Tre Re,' 'Madama Butterfly,' 'Tannhäuser,' 'Fedora,' 'Carmen,' 'La Wally,' 'Ramuntcho' (of Donaudy), 'Traviata,' 'Bohème,' 'Rigoletto,' 'Andrea Chenier,' 'Pagliacci,' 'Nave Rossa,' 'Fuochi di San Giovanni,' 'William Radcliff.' The ballets to be executed are 'Excelsior' and 'Fata delle Bambole' ('The dolls' fairy'). The conductor of the orchestra will be Maestro Angelo Ferrari.

The committee organizing the international artistic fête at Livorno next spring has requested Pietro Mascagni to accept the office of Honorary President, and the maestro has graciously acquiesced.

A direct appeal has been made to citizens, organizations, and associations generally to contribute to the projected construction of a People's Theatre at Genova. The aim of the scheme is the moral and intellectual improvement of the masses through performances of healthy lyric and dramatic works. At Milan the Teatro del Popolo is a decided success, hence the impetus given in other cities to the development of popular theatres.

During the month of August a season of grand opera was given in the old amphitheatre at Verona—or, to give it its correct name, the 'Arena'—reminiscent of events which took place some two thousand years ago. Still in a wonderful state of preservation, this old Roman building makes a remarkable theatre for open-air performances of the kind. The season was organized by the Lirica Italiana Ars, a salient feature of the performances being Ponchielli's 'Figliuol Prodigio' ('The prodigal son'). Performances of 'Aida' and 'Carmen' were, it may be mentioned, given here with great success before the war.

OSTEND.

At the Kursaal concert on August 26 success attended the first performance of a tone-poem by G. Clerici entitled 'The Triumph of Progress.'

CONTENTS.

	Page
Queenstown Cathedral. By W. Wooding Starmor
(Illustrated)	521
Modern British Composers—VI. Gustav Holst. By Edwin Evans	524
Before Breakfast Music. By Gerald Cumberland	528
The Relations of Music and Poetry. By Arthur L. Salmon	530
Interludes. By 'Feste'	531
Music in England during the first half of the Sixteenth Century. By Jeffrey Pulver (concluded)	534
Welsh Hymns and Hymn-Singing. By William Child	536
Occasional Notes	538
Brass Band Arrangements of Elgar's Symphonies	539
The Musicians of Charles II. By C. Edgar Thomas	539
The Musicians' Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	542
Capt. B. S. Green, M.V.O. (with portrait)	543
Church and Organ Music	544
James Watt as Organ Builder. By Clement Antrobus Harris	544
Reviews	552
Letters to the Editor	553
Obituary	555
The late Dr. D. J. Wood (with portrait)	555
Sixty Years Ago	556
The Musicians' Gift to H.M. Forces	556
Novelties at the Promenade Concerts	557
'Pro Patria': New English Opera	557
The British Symphony Orchestra	557
Music at the Festival Conference on Creative Peace	558
The Special Course for Teachers of Music in Secondary Schools	559
Chamber Music for Amateurs	559
The Children's Concerts Society	559
Music in the Provinces	560
Country News	566
Musical Notes from Abroad	566

MUSIC:

"Lead us, Heavenly Father." Anthem for Four Voices.
By F. W. WADELY 545

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. The Cathedral, Queenstown.
2. Vesper Hymn and Final Amen. By H. R. Couldrey.

THE MUSICAL TIMES. SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SYLVIA MITCHELL

SINGING AND VOICE-PRODUCTION.

Garcia-Santley Method. Recommendations from J. Mewburn Leven.
Wigmore Hall Studios. Mayfair 4185.

TENOR WANTED, All Saints', Devonshire Road,
South Lambeth. £12. Walter Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, West Norwood, S.E.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

- BRIDGE, SIR FREDERICK.—"Spring." Humorous Part-Song for A.T.T.B. (No. 559, "The Orpheus.") 3d.
- BUSBRIDGE, REV. VERNON A. (Edited by).—New Hymn Tunes. 1s. 6d. net.
- COULDERY, CLAUDIUS H.—"The Empire." March for Pianoforte. 2s.
- ELGAR, EDWARD.—Quintet in A minor. Op. 84. For Piano, Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello. 16s.
- GATTY, NICHOLAS C.—"Evening." Song. In D flat. 1s.
- GERMAN, EDWARD.—"Theme and Six Diversions." For Full Orchestra. Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo by the Composer. 3s. 6d.
- Ditto, Arrangement for Pianoforte Duet. 5s.
- GIBBONS, ORLANDO.—"Ah! dear heart." Madrigal, S.A.A.T.B. Transcribed by H. Elliot Button. (No. 919, The Musical Times.) 1½d.
- HOLBROOKE, JOSEF.—"Taliessin's Song," Op. 73, No. 1. Low Key. 2s. 6d.
- JOHNSON, N. F. BYNG (Arranged by).—"Oh! The Noble Duke of York." (No. 560, "The Orpheus.") 3d.
- LEITCH, J. RODGER.—"Our Heroes' Requiem." Song. 2s.
- MOORE, C. A. ST. GEORGE.—Office of the Holy Communion. 1s.
- NALA.—"Persuasion." Waltz, for Pianoforte. 2s.
- PARTON, EUGENIE.—"If I forget." Song. In E flat. 2s.
- PUBLIC SCHOOL HYMN BOOK. New Edition. Music, 4s. net; Words only, 1s. 9d. net.
- SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 328) contains the following music in both notations:—"Nobody's nigh to hear" (An old Wife's Song). Arranged for S.S.A. or Unison by G. A. MACFARREN. 1½d.
- SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo.) B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.
- No. 1234. "Fairy Echo." Unison Song.
- R. BERNARD ELLIOTT 2d. —
- No. 1289. "Daffodils and Violets." Two-part Song.
- R. BERNARD ELLIOTT 3d. —
- SHARP, CECIL J.—An Introduction to the English Country Dance. Containing the Description together with the Tunes of Twelve Dances. 3s.
- SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN. By various Composers. Set III. Paper Cover, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, 4s.
- SOWERBUTTS, J. A.—Fantasy in A. For the Organ. (Original Compositions, New Series, No. 58.) 2s.
- Carillon in A flat. For the Organ. (Original Compositions, New Series, No. 59.) 1s. 6d.
- STEGGALL, R.—Four Shakespeare Songs. Op. 28.
- | | |
|--|-----------|
| 1. "Hark! Hark! the Lark" | } 2s. 6d. |
| 2. "Who is Sylvia" | |
| 3. "Take, O take those lips away" | |
| 4. "Orpheus with his lute" | |
- TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
- No. 2299. Te Deum Laudamus, in F. Arranged for Boys' Voices. HENRY SMART. 2d.
- No. 2303. "Rolling down to Rio." S.A.T.B. EDWARD GERMAN. 2d.
- No. 2304. "Eia Mater" (Stabat Mater). Dvorák. 3d.
- WAGNER.—"The Rhinemaidens." Trio. For Female Voices. Music adapted by W. McNAUGHT. (No. 468, Novello's Trios, &c.) 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

- FERRARI, G.—"Land of Freedom." S.A.T.B. (12 cents) 6d
- WILD, WALTER.—A Lullaby. Song. (60 cents) 2s. 6d.

PIANOFORTE ALBUMS

BY

EDITH ALFORD.

EACH ALBUM CONTAINS FIVE OR SIX EASY PIECES.

Price, each, 2s. 6d. net.

- Alice in Wonderland. Little Fingers.
- Fairy Tales. Once Upon a Time.
- Happy Memories. Small Hands.
- Six Sketches (From Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales).

SOME RECENT PRESS NOTICES.

"MISS EDITH ALFORD clearly understands how to interest the youthful pianist. Teachers should make a note of these albums. They will be wildly welcomed in many a schoolroom and nursery."

"HANS ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES.—These little pieces but confirm the favourable impression we formed of this composer as a writer of educative material for the young. They should be favourites with the little ones."

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

SIR HENRY R. BISHOP.—Wanted, a REYNOLDS' ENGRAVING OF FOSTER'S PORTRAIT of Sir Henry R. Bishop; also Autograph Letters written by this English Composer and his Wife, Anna Bishop. Apply, Richard Northcott, Barton Close, Southbourne, Hants.

MR. ALFRED ALLEN, Elm Tree Cottage, Culcabock, near Inverness, wishes to obtain Walker's HISTORY OF MUSIC IN ENGLAND; THE YATTENDON HYMNAL; and either a Complete Set, or Nos. 6 and 8, of THE CATHEDRAL QUARTERLY.

A CATALOGUE OF OLD AND RARE MUSIC AND MUSICAL BOOKS, including a Selection of 18th Century Instrumental Music by the Celebrated Composers of that period, Interesting Musical Manuscripts, &c. A Collection of Old English Song Books. Post-free from Harold Reeves, 210, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W.C. 2 (New Oxford Street end next to Prince's Theatre).

ANTHEM FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS: "In my Father's House are many mansions." 2d. Sample copy free to Choirmasters. Astle, 57, Princess Street, Manchester.

TE DEUM IN F. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN F. 3d. each. By A. Toase. Novello & Co., Ltd.

SUNSET.—Vesper Hymn for Choir and Congregation. For Festival or General Use. By W. Hodson. Price 3d. London: Novello & Co., Ltd.

PIANISTS should buy Set of Two NOCTURNES (Oakley). Price 1s. 8d. the Set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

BARITONES AND BASSES should buy the Song: "TO ELLEN." (Oakley.) Compass, D to E flat. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

BLOCK CITY. SONG.

The Words by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The Music by TEMPLE P. M. BEVAN.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REVISION OF PRICES.

WEBSTER'S GROUNDWORK OF MUSIC. WEBSTER'S CHILD'S PRIMER OF THE THEORY OF MUSIC. London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THREE-MANUAL ORGAN FOR SALE.—Twenty-nine Stops, Tubular Pneumatic, Full Scale and Compass, with Case and Hydraulic Engine. Built, 1910, by Bishop & Son. For specification, write, F. E. Bullivant, Hillmorton Paddock, Rugby.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.

"Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	3d.	2d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	2d.	1d.
Two Christmas Carols	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
----------------------	-----	-----

Or, separately:—

Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
---------------------------------------	-----	-----

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
--	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.
--	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA: THE ANCIENT MARINER

30TH THOUSAND.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.
Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MÉTHODE JAUQUES - DALCROZE

(The Eurhythmics of Jaques-Dalcroze.)

A SELECT LIST OF

JAUQUES-DALCROZE'S

Most Popular Educational and Instructive

WORKS

With English and French Texts suitable for Schools (Children-Songs, Action-Songs, Eurhythmics), Family Concerts, &c., issued by JOBIN ET CIE., Lausanne, will be sent on application.

JUST PUBLISHED.

		NET
1537.	JAUQUES-DALCROZE, La Rythmique Vol. 1	4s. 6d.
1534.	" Vol. 2	5s. 6d.
1528.	" Esquisses Rythmiques	7s. 6d.
1533.	" La Plastique animée Vol. 1.	11s. 6d.
	(With numerous illustrations.)
1551.	" La Rythmique appliquée à l'étude du piano	1s. 8d.

NOTE.—Temporary advance, 40 per cent. on above prices.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

Sole Agents for Great Britain and the Colonies, and the United States of America, for the JAUQUES-DALCROZE Publications, issued by JOBIN ET CIE., Lausanne.

ORGAN MUSIC

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SET OF SIX ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS,

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

A SECOND SET OF SIX ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS,

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

	s.	d.
Twelve Short and Easy Pieces, 1st Set	2	0
Do. 2nd Set	2	0
Three Short Pieces, Larghetto, in A flat	2	0
Pastorale, in A major, and Andante, in F major	2	0
Largo, in E flat	1	0
Minuet, in D	1	0
Ave Maria, adapted from Vocal work	1	6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TEN PIÈCES NOUVELLES FOR ORGAN

By AMÉDÉE REUCHSEL.

- No. 1. PASTORALE.
- " 2. ALLEGRO SYMPHONIQUE.
- " 3. MÉDITATION.
- " 4. FANTAISIE—CHORAL.
- " 5. BERCEUSE DE NOËL.
- " 6. INTRODUCTION ET CANON.
- " 7. ÉLÉGIE.
- " 8. MARCHE TRIOMPHALE.
- " 9. PRINTEMPS.
- " 10. TOCCATINA.

EACH, TWO SHILLINGS, NET.

LAUDY & CO,

8, NEWMAN STREET, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

New and Attractive Compositions.

ORGAN MUSIC.

	NET.	s.	d.
Book 10. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN (Eight short and easy pieces). By H. W. Chuter	1	6
Book 1. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN—includes PRELUDE (Wetton), MEDITATION (Bairdston), &c.	1	6
Book 6. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN—includes PRELUDE by Alfred Hollins, &c.	1	6

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE SHORT VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN.

By H. W. Chuter.

1s. 6d.

THREE GOOD SACRED SONGS.

"OUR BLEST REDEEMER." By Charlwood Dunkley.

"HAVEN OF REST." By Noel Johnson.

"GRANT US THY PEACE." By Sydney H. Wéalé.

In Keys for All Voices, 2s. net.

"AT THE MERMAID TAVERN." An Album of Four Songs, for Bass or Baritone.

By Joseph C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

3s. 6d. net cash.

NEW CAROLS. By Wilson Manhire. (Tonic Sol-fa and Old Notation combined.)

RING, JOYOUS BELLS.

A CHRISTMAS SONG.

O'ER BETHLEHEM'S MANGER. THE GLAD REFRAIN.

1½d. each, plus postage.

COLLARD MOUTRIE,

52, SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR

PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 84).

PRICE 16s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

QUARTET

FOR

STRINGS

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(Op. 83).

Score, Price 5s. ; Parts, 8s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

REFLECTIONS
FOR
PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE ARABESQUE

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD GERMAN.

String Parts, 9s. ; Full Score and Wind Parts, in the Press.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo ... 3s. 6d.

,, ,, Pianoforte Duet ... 5s. od.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Despatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK.
2. WHO IS SYLVIA.
3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.
4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY

REGINALD STEGGALL.

Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN INTRODUCTION
TO THE
ENGLISH COUNTRY DANCE

Containing the Descriptions together with the Tunes

OF

TWELVE DANCES

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY

ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Fredrick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of the chatty, gossipy order. . . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personages with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

MUSICAL HERALD.

So long in preparation, has been worth waiting for. One would not recommend a protracted reading at one sitting; the scenes change too rapidly. But that is just the charm of the book for a busy musician. Pick it up and read a few pages at random, and you will want to repeat such pleasure again and again.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wondering whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

Within its 349 pages he has packed an infinite variety of reminiscence, told with a raciness of style and a command of expression which impart great effect to the extremely interesting events of which the volume treats, and which all types of readers will find of absorbing interest.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BIRTH OF A GREAT BRITISH INDUSTRY.

BETTER STRINGS NOW PRODUCED IN OUR COUNTRY THAN ARE MADE ANYWHERE ELSE. A BRITISH TRIUMPH!

CATHEDRAL STRINGS.

The "Cathedral" Brand represents not simply a new British Industry but a new Standard in Strings. The quality is expressed in the Tone and again in the Reliability. Such a standard of excellence has never before been attained in any country.

The "Cathedral" brand includes strings for every stringed instrument, wrapped and packed in style commensurate with their quality. All strings made by us in our own London Factory.

Of all Music Dealers.

SAMPLE STRING AND ART CATALOGUE FREE.

This offer of a Sample String is addressed to Violinists and Banjoists, and is for October only.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,

MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

CANTATAS FOR ADVENT.

By J. S. WITTY.

	NETT SALES.	OLD NOTATION.		TONIC SOL-FA.
		s.	d.	s.	d.
Manger to Cross	70,000	1	6	0	8
The Great Light	15,000	1	0	0	6
The Children's Messiah	10,000	0	8	0	5
The Children's Saviour	16,000	Both Notations		0	6

By A. J. JAMOUNEAU.

The Saviour of Men	36,000	1	6	0	6
The Prince Peace... ..	18,000	0	9	0	6

SECULAR.

By J. H. MEREDITH.

To Santa's Land	10,000	1	0	O.N. only.
Jolly Times	8,000	1	0	"

We have the largest selection of Traditional Carols in general use. Please send for lists.

JAMES BROADBENT & SON, LIMITED,
BOSTON SPA, YORKSHIRE.

Late 13, BRUNSWICK PLACE, LEEDS.

NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS.

FOLK-SONGS OF ENGLAND.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY CECIL J. SHARP.

FOLK-SONGS for Use in SCHOOLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

Sch. Songs
No.

SET I. (SOMERSET.)

- 950. AS I WALKED THROUGH THE MEADOW.
- 951. I'M SEVENTEEN COME SUNDAY.
- 952. THE CRYSTAL SPRING.
- 953. MIDSUMMER FAIR.
- 954. A FARMER'S SON SO SWEET.
- 955. ADMIRAL BENBOW.
- 956. BINGO.
- 957. THE KEYS OF CANTERBURY.
- 958. THE COASTS OF HIGH BARBARY.

SET II. (SOMERSET.)

- 959. O WALY, WALY.
- 960. THE LOVER'S TASKS.
- 961. THE SHEEP SHEARING.
- 962. THE GREEN BROOM.
- 963. THE GREENLAND FISHERY.
- 964. THE TREE IN THE WOOD.
- 965. COME, ALL YOU WORTHY CHRISTIAN MEN.
- 966. BRENNAN ON THE MOOR.
- 967. OH NO, JOHN.

SET III. (VARIOUS.)

- 984. DANCE TO YOUR DADDY.
- 985. THE FARMYARD.
- 986. AS I WAS GOING TO BANBURY
- 987. THREE LITTLE TAILORS.
- 988. THE THREE SONS.
- 989. THE POOR COUPLE.
- 990. THE RED HERRING.
- 991. DASHING AWAY WITH THE SMOOTHING IRON.
- 992. ONE MAN SHALL MOW MY MEADOW.

SET IV. (VARIOUS.)

- 993. SWEET WILLIAM.
- 994. CHESAPEAKE AND SHANNON
- 995. THE KEEPER
- 996. THE LARK IN THE MORN.
- 997. FAREWELL, NANCY.
- 998. THE SIGN OF THE BONNY BLUE-BELL.
- 999. THE WATCHET SAILOR.
- 1000. WASSAIL SONG.
- 1001. ROBIN HOOD AND THE TANNER.
- 1002. HEAVE AWAY, MY JOHNNY.

SET V. (SOMERSET.)

- 1077. THE LITTLE TURTLE DOVE.
- 1078. THE SWEET PRIMEROSSES.
- 1079. BEDLAM.
- 1080. THE BRIERY BUSH.
- 1081. GEORDIE.
- 1082. WILLIAM TAYLOR.
- 1083. THE BRISK YOUNG WIDOW.
- 1084. SPANISH LADIES.
- 1085. MY MAN JOHN.

SET VI. (VARIOUS.)

EDITED BY R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.

- 1128. THE JOLLY PLOUGH BOY.
- 1129. THE CUCKOO AND NIGHTINGALE.
- 1130. SERVANT MAN AND HUSBANDMAN
- 1131. THE FEMALE HIGHWAYMAN.
- 1132. THE CARTER.
- 1133. I WILL GIVE MY LOVE AN APPLE.
- 1134. MY BOY BILLIE.
- 1135. DOWN BY THE RIVERSIDE.
- 1136. THE FOX.
- 1137. FARMYARD SONG.
- 1138. THE PAINFUL PLOUGH.

FOLK-SONG CAROLS.

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

No.

- 1175. KING HEROD AND THE COCK.
- 1176. THE MOON SHINES BRIGHT.
- 1177. THE HOLLY AND THE IVY.
- 1178. COME, ALL YOU TRUE GOOD CHRISTIANS
- 1179. COME, ALL YOU WORTHY GENTLEMEN.
- 1180. AS I SAT ON A SUNNY BANK.
- 1181. THE VIRGIN UNSPOTTED.
- 1182. SONS OF LEVI.
- 1183. WASSAIL SONG.

BALLADS.

- 1262. LORD BATEMAN.
- 1263. LADY MAISRY.
- 1264. BARBARA ELLEN.
- 1265. THE OUTLANDISH KNIGHT.
- 1266. LITTLE SIR HUGH.
- 1267. LORD THOMAS AND FAIR ELLINOR.
- 1268. THE BLIND BEGGAR OF BETHNAL GREEN
- 1269. THE LOW, LOW LANDS OF HOLLAND.
- 1270. THE CRUEL MOTHER.

PULLING CHANTEYS.

- 1271. {HAUL ON THE BOW LINE.
PADDY DOYLE
- 1272. {KNOCK A MAN DOWN.
JOHNNY BOWKER.
- 1273. {GENERAL TAYLOR.
TOM IS GONE TO HILO.
- 1274. {POOR OLD REUBEN RANZO.
THE DEAD HORSE.
- 1275. {WON'T YOU GO MY WAY.
OLD STORMEY.
- 1276. {IN FRISCO BAY.
TIDDY I-O.
- 1277. {LOWLANDS LOW.
SHALLOW BROWN.
- 1278. {SALLY BROWN.
BLOW, BOYS, COME BLOW TOGETHER.
- 1279. {HAUL AWAY, JOE.
O I'M GOING TO LEAVE HER

CAPSTAN CHANTEYS.

- 1280. WHIP JAMBOREE.
- 1281. {SHANADAR.
THE HOG-EYED MAN.
- 1282. {GOOD MORNING, LADIES ALL.
LOWLANDS AWAY.
- 1283. {O JOHNNY, COME TO HILO.
STORMALONG JOHN
- 1284. {CLEAR THE TRACK.
THE BULLY BOAT
- 1285. {A-ROVING.
HE-BACK, SHE-BACK.
- 1286. {SANTY ANNA.
- 1287. {THE DRUNKEN SAILOR.
BLOW THE WIND WESTER.
- 1288. RIO GRAND.

Each Set, Complete, Ninepence. Voice Parts only, Threepence (In the Press).

Price in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations: Three-Halfpence each Number.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE MONTHS

TWELVE SKETCHES FOR THE PIANOFORTE

BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

IN FOUR BOOKS.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

CONTENTS:—

BOOK 1.

January.	Lullaby for the New Year.
February.	(St. Valentine) Flirtations.
March.	Boreas.

BOOK 2.

April.	In Springtime.
May.	Italian Serenade.
June.	Birds.

BOOK 3.

July.	Butterflies.
August.	Mid-day Rêverie.
September.	Harvest Hymn.

BOOK 4.

October.	Autumn Evening Song.
November.	Civic Procession in the Olden Time.
December.	Christmas Morn.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR SMALL ORCHESTRA BY THE COMPOSER.

No. 2.	February.	String Parts (5)	—	4s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 9d.
No. 5.	May.	String Parts (5)	...	1s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	1s. 6d.
No. 6.	June.	String Parts (4)	...	1s. od.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	2s. 6d.
No. 9.	September.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 6d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	5s. od.
No. 12.	December.	String Parts (5)	...	2s. 3d.	Wind Parts, &c. ...	...	...	4s. 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

- | | |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE. | 3. VALSE DE LA REINE. |
| 2. VALSE RUSTIQUE. | 4. VALSE MAURESQUE. |

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte complete	3s. od.	Full Score (Full Orchestra)	5s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte separately, each	1s. 6d.	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ...	6s. od.	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra... ..	7s. od.	Strings, each Number	2s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra... ..	12s. od.	Separate String Parts, 6d. each.
		Military Band Arrangement	15s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

THE CHORALE PRELUDES

WITH AN INTRODUCTION BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

Complete in Five Books, to which is added a Sixth Book, containing the Chorales only.

CONTENTS.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Book XV. Orgelbüchlein (Little Organ Book).	5	0	Book XVIII. Miscellaneous Preludes (Part I.) ...	3	6
Book XVI. The Six "Schübler" Preludes and the "Clavierübung" (Part III.) ...	3	6	Book XIX. Miscellaneous Preludes (Part II.) and Variations ...	3	6
Book XVII. The Eighteen Preludes ...	3	6	Book XX. The Chorales only ...	3	6

"What is needed," wrote Schweitzer, in concluding a chapter on these magnificent organ works of the great master, 'is a cheap edition of the Chorale Preludes in the original form, distinguishing the collections planned by Bach himself, from detached chorales that have come down to us.' At length, in the excellent edition before us, we find admirably fulfilled every detail of Schweitzer's ideal.

"We have no hesitation in recommending this edition of the Chorale Preludes."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"This fine series is a triumph of British music publishing, and, with clear editing and informing prefaces and annotations, it should prove of the greatest value to students of the old master."—The Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NO. 76, NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

A MANUAL OF HARMONY FOR SCHOOLS

BY

FRANCIS EDWARD GLADSTONE,

MUS. DOC., CANTAB.

CONTENTS.

Introduction—Common Chords in the Major Mode—Common Chords in the Minor Mode—The Common Chord upon the Mediant of a Major Scale—Chords of the Sixth in the Major Mode—Chords of the Sixth in the Minor Mode—The Chord of the Sixth and Fourth—The Chord of the Dominant Seventh—The Inversions of the Chord of the Dominant Seventh—Other Diatonic Chords of the Seventh, and the Chord of the Added Sixth—Tonal Sequences—Unfigured Basses—Suspensions—The Dominant Major Ninth, and the Chord of the Leading Seventh—The Dominant Minor Ninth, and the Chord of the Diminished Seventh upon the Leading Note—Modulation to Related Keys—Cadences—The Chords of the Dominant Minor and Major Thirteenth—The Harmonization of Simple Melodies—Chromatic Triads—Some Chromatic Discords—Special Supertonic Discords—The French, German, and Italian Sixths—Tonic Discords—Prohibited and Permissible Fifths—Modulating Sequences—The Pedal Point, or Point d'Orgue—Exceptional Resolutions of Diatonic Discords—Chromatic Modulation—Compound Modulation—Enharmonic Modulation—Passing Notes, Auxiliary Notes, and the Appoggiatura—The Harmonization of Florid Melodies.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

Key to the Manual, price 1s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NOVELLO'S ELEMENTARY MUSIC MANUALS

No. 1.—PART-WRITING FOR BEGINNERS, by J. W. IVIMEY.

The Rules tabulated are for the guidance of beginners in the Art of Part-writing. Many of them change from rules to recommendations, when the student becomes more advanced. Bound in linen covers. Price 6d.

No. 2.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by

CUTHBERT HARRIS. Many elementary students of harmony can satisfactorily add parts to figured basses, but are unable to harmonize even simple melodies. This book gives minute instruction which any student can understand. Part I. Price, 1s. 6d.

No. 6.—LESSONS IN HARMONIZING MELODIES, by

CUTHBERT HARRIS. Part II. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 7.—ADDITIONAL EXERCISES IN HARMONIZING

MELODIES, by CUTHBERT HARRIS. Price 6d.

No. 3.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING

COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. The Exercises are written in the Treble and Bass Clefs, in order that the Book may be used by Male and Female voices in one class. Suitable for Evening Continuation Schools. Part I. Price 6d.

No. 4.—AN ELEMENTARY MIXED-VOICE SIGHT-SINGING

COURSE (Staff Notation through Tonic Sol-fa), by GEORGE LANE. Part II. Price 6d.

No. 5.—HINTS TO YOUNG VIOLINISTS by C. EGERTON LOWE.

Price 1s.

No. 8.—HINTS ON PIANOFORTE TEACHING (chiefly to Boys).

by E. D. RENDALL. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 9.—SCHOOL CHOIR TRAINING, by MARGARET NICHOLLS.

A Practical Course of Lessons on Voice Production for the Guidance of Teachers of Class Singing. Price 2s. (The Appendix, published separately: Hints on Part-Singing and Exercises, 2d.; Sol-fa, 2d.).

No. 10.—THE COMPOSITION OF SIMPLE MELODIES by

ROBERT T. WHITE. Price 1s. 6d.

No. 11.—PHYSICAL EXERCISES IN THE INFANT SCHOOL,

by MARGARET A. HUGHES. Price 4s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWO SONGS

FROM SHAKESPEARE

1. O MISTRESS MINE, IN D AND F. EACH 2S.
2. COME AWAY, DEATH, IN D FLAT AND E. EACH 2S.

COMPOSED BY

B. J. DALE

(Op. 9).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL

SACRED SONG.

THE WORDS BY

F. W. FABER.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

IN TWO KEYS.

Price 2s. each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AFTER TUMULT REST

TENOR SOLO

FROM

WAR AND PEACE

COMPOSED BY

C. H. H. PARRY.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

DR. AIKIN'S BONE PROPS

(FOR VOICE PRODUCTION).

The Bone Prop was designed by Dr. W. A. Aikin for the purpose—suggested in his book "The Voice: An Introduction to Practical Phonology" (Longman's, 1910), pages 78 and 81—of keeping the jaws open during the practice of vowel sounds.

The length of the Prop varies from five-eighths to one inch to suit different mouths. It is lightly made with a groove for the incisor teeth at either end, and a hole for the string which passes round the neck to prevent the Prop from being swallowed or dropped on the ground.

The effect of the Prop is fully explained in the Work above referred to. Its object is mainly to preserve the resonant property of the mouth, and to demonstrate the Resonator Scale. At the same time it requires much greater movement of lips and tongue in forming the vowels, and so improves articulation.

Price 6d. each; 5s. 6d. per doz. Postage 3d.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS:

ARNOLD & SONS,

GILTSPUR STREET, LONDON, E.C.1.

Telegraphic Address:
"INSTRUMENTS," LONDON.Telephone:
City 5240 (3 lines).

NEW FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

NET.
S. d.

- BACH.—Organ Works transcribed for Pianoforte:—
Fantaisie et Fugue in A minor 3 0
Prelude et Grande Fugue in D major 3 0
Concerto in C major 6 0
Fantaisie et Grave in G major 2 6
BOURGALUT-DRUCOURAY.—Quelques esquisses et Impromptus. Annotes et doigts par E. Risler. Preface de C. Saint-Saëns 7 0
CHANSAREL, R.—En Toscane. Pianoforte Solo. Complete (1) Soir dans la plaine; (2) Un jeune pâtre sur la colline; (3) La sieste dans la hamac; (4) En carriole 6 0
DEBUSSY, C.—Pour les Agréments (from Douze Etudes) .. 2 0
— Pour les cinq doigts .. do. do. .. 2 0
— Pour les sonorités opposées .. do. do. .. 2 0
— Tierces .. do. do. .. 2 0
— Sonata for 'Cello and Pianoforte, transcribed for Pianoforte Duet (in the Press).
— Khamma. Danse extraite. Pianoforte Solo 2 0
DUCOURAU, M.—Quatre pièces pour Piano. Complete (1) Prières et cloches Nocturnes; (2) Le Torrent; (3) Le Tocsin; (4) (a) Paraphrase, (b) Fantaisie Canonique .. 4 0
FAURE, GABRIEL.—Op. 111. Fantaisie pour Piano et Orchestre 7 6
— Pianoforte Solo 13 6
— Op. 112. Masques et Bergamasques. Pianoforte Duet .. 8 0
GROVLEZ, G.—Deux études de difficulté transcendante each (1) Naiades (en double notes); (2) Kobolds (en octaves). .. 3 0
MALIPIERO, G. F.—Poemetti Lunari. Pianoforte Solo .. 6 6
OLMEDA, DON FREDERICO.—Deuxième Sonata Espagnole .. 3 6
PHILIPP, I.—Trois études de Concert en double notes .. 2 6
RACHMANINOFF.—Prelude, Op. 3, No. 2. Transcribed for two Pianofortes, 4 hands 3 6
RAVEL, M.—Introduction et Allegro. Pianoforte Solo .. 4 0
— Le Tombeau de Couperin. Suite for Pianoforte Solo. Complete .. 8 0
— Do. Minuet et Rigaudon. Separately; each .. 2 1
— Valses Nobles et Sentimentales. Transcribed for Pianoforte Duet 7 7
— Prélude et Danse du Rouet de ma mère l'Oye. Pianoforte Duet 4 0
ROGER-DUCASSE.—Rythmes pour Piano 3 6
— Arabesques .. do. .. 3 6
— Sonorités .. do. .. 3 6
ROPARTZ, J. GUY.—Croques d'été. Cinq pièces. Pianoforte Solo 6 0
SAINT-SAËNS, C.—Op. 152. Vers la Victoire. Pianoforte Duet 4 0
— Op. 156. Cyprès de Lauriers. Two Pianofortes, 4 hands .. 8 0
SAMAZEUILH, G.—Trois petites Inventions. Pianoforte Solo .. 3 0
SANTESTEBAN, J. DE.—Zapateado. Pianoforte Solo 3 0
— Hesitation. Valse de Salon .. do. .. 2 0
SATIE, E.—Avant-dernières pensées 3 0
— Les trois Valses du Précieux dégoûte 2 6
SCHMITT, FLORENT.—Op. 64. Ombres. Pianoforte Solo .. 8 0
— Rêves. Transcription de Concert .. do. .. 4 0
TURINA, T.—Album de Vieja. Pianoforte Solo 7 0
— Recuerdos de mi Rincón .. do. .. 5 0
— Contes d'Espagne. Histoire en sept Tableaux. Pianoforte Solo 6 0
VOORMOLEN, A.—1st Suite for Pianoforte 3 6
— (1) Prelude; (2) Evocation; (3) Vieux Castel; (4) Cortège chinois.
WEBER.—Sonatas. Complete (revised by L. Aubert) 5 0

CHAMBER MUSIC.

- BACHELET, A.—Ballade. Pianoforte and Violin 8 0
BLAIR, FAIRCHILD.—Op. 43. Sonata, do. 9 0
GRANDJANY, M.—Deux chansons populaires Françaises pour la Harpe each 2 0 — (1) Le bon petit roi d'Yvetôt.
— (2) Et ron ron ron, petit patapon.
GUY-ROPARTZ, J.—Trio in A minor, for Pianoforte, Violin, and 'Cello 13 0
— 2nd Sonata for 'Cello and Pianoforte 9 0
MALENGRAU, P. DE.—Sonata for 'Cello and Pianoforte .. 9 0
MASSON, F.—Petite Suite Roccoco. Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and 'Cello 6 6
MILHAUD, D.—2nd Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte 9 0
— Sonata for 2 Violins and Pianoforte 8 3
ROUSSEL, A.—Impromptu for Harp Solo 3 0
SAINT-SAËNS, C.—Op. 153. 2nd Quatuor à Cordes. Miniature Score 4 0 — Parts II 0
— Morceau de Concert pour Harpe seule 6 6
SATIE, E.—Choses vues à Droite et à gauche. Pianoforte and Violin 3 6
SCHMITT, FLORENT.—Légende for Viola and Pianoforte .. 4 6

ORGAN MUSIC.

- BARNES, E. S.—Petite Suite. Op. 23 4 0
HAILING, R. G.—Andante religioso (Sursum corda) 2 0
HURÉ, J.—La Technique de l'orgue 9 0
MALENGRAU, P. DE.—Suite 7 0
ROPARTZ, J. GUY.—Introduction et Allegro Moderato .. 3 6
— Rhapsodie sur 2 Noëls 3 0
— Trois Méditations 3 6
SAINT-SAËNS, C.—Op. 157. 3rd Fantaisie 4 0
All the above prices are subject to an increase of 40–50%.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., beg to draw the attention of Choral Societies, &c., to the undermentioned Standard Works, which are now in great demand with the resumption of performances by Choral and Dramatic Societies:—

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W. 1.
Sold also by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT AND Co., LTD., Paternoster Row, E.C. 4.—Wednesday, October 1, 1910.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 921.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

NOVEMBER 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. D.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1, AT 2.30 P.M.

ELIJAH

MENDELSSOHN.

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MADAME KIRKEY LUNN.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. HERBERT BROWN.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, AT 2.30 P.M.

A TALE OF OLD JAPAN

COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN

PARRY.

NEWS FROM WHYDAH

H. BALFOUR GARDINER.

THE SPIRIT OF PAGEANTRY

(ORCHESTRA ONLY)

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MISS DILYS JONES.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. FREDERICK RANALOW.

FULL CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ . . . Mr. H. L. BALFOUR.

Prices: Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony (Reserved), 4s. 9d.; Unreserved, 3s.; Gallery (Promenade), 1s. 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

MICHAELMAS HALF-TERM begins Monday, November 3.
CHAMBER CONCERT, Duke's Hall, Monday, November 3, at 3.
FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, November 8 and 22, at 3.
LECTURES by the PRINCIPAL, on "THE HISTORY OF MUSIC," will be given on Wednesdays, November 5, 12, and 26, at 3.30.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted, Prospectus of which is now ready.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

L.R.A.M. Examination Entries will be accepted up to November 15 on payment of a late fee of 5s.

SCHOLARSHIPS in the following Subjects will be competed for in January: SINGING (MALE), VIOLIN, and COMPOSITION.

Full particulars will be forwarded on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

A Course of FIVE LECTURES, on "TWELVE GOOD MUSICIANS; A CENTURY OF ENGLISH MUSIC, FROM JOHN BULL TO HENRY PURCELL," will be delivered by Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., Mus. Doc., King Edward Professor of Music, at the University of London, South
Kensington, S.W., at 5 p.m., on Wednesdays, Nov. 5, and Dec. 3, 1919, and Tuesdays, Feb. 3, Mar. 2, and Mar. 30, 1920.

Admission free, by ticket, to be obtained from the Academic Registrar,
University of London, South Kensington, S.W. 7.

P. J. HARTOG, ACADEMIC REGISTRAR.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens," Telephone—"1160, Western,"
London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The CHRISTMAS HALF-TERM will commence on Monday,
November 3rd.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.) For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUDE AVELING, Registrar.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC,

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

HALF-TERM COMMENCES MONDAY, NOVEMBER 3RD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING
in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects,
Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications
were again advanced on April 1, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres. In Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 11th, 1920.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 4th, 1920.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years. Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,
14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opened on Monday, October 6.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Full Orchestral Class, Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Opera, Ensemble, Elocution, Choral, and Harmony, &c., Classes. Lecture-Lessons on "Fingering: its Principles and Application," will be given by Mr. T. B. KNOTT, F.R.A.M., on November 1, 8, and 15, at 2.30.

A Six-Months' Course in "The Art of Teaching" commenced on October 7, by Mr. H. L. READ, Mus. B.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE. SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5); SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary,
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and
117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers. Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution, July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice or Church Services, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.
DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.
G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.
(For a full list of the Examiners see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in DECEMBER (last day of entry, November 15th).

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIER HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.
Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.), LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT, and KYRIE.

VICTORY BANQUET, Holborn Restaurant, Thursday, January 29, 1920.

Organist (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden.
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC. LONDON.

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.).

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W. 11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.
Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.
Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.
Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.
ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.
Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.
Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY.

(NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL)

OFFICES: 19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

For the Fostering and Encouragement of British Music at Home and Abroad.

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Secretaries for Foreign Correspondence:

MR. E. J. DENT. MR. FRANCIS TOYE.

Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

CAN YOU HELP

BY ARRANGING HOME MUSIC CIRCLES?—BY CONCERTS OR LECTURES?—BY OBTAINING NEW MEMBERS?—BY HELPING TO FOUND A BRANCH IN YOUR TOWN OR DISTRICT?—BY ASSISTING AT CENTRES (LONDON, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, ETC.) WITH LIBRARIES & CATALOGUES?

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Acting-Secretary, 19, BERNERS ST., W. 1.

SOCIETY FOR THE ASSISTANCE OF LADIES IN REDUCED CIRCUMSTANCES

UNDER ROYAL PATRONAGE.

Miss SMALLWOOD, Hon. Sec., LANCASTER HOUSE, MALVERN, Will be most grateful if anyone in the Musical or Theatrical world would give a "BENEFIT" for her Society, which is just now terribly in NEED OF HELP.

Unless £1,000 is raised before December, the outlook for the Winter will be most serious.

REPORTS UPON APPLICATION.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"An acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News"

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."

"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists. Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A.

Invented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

COPY OF TESTIMONIAL from W. H. MUNDELL, Esq., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Organist and Choirmaster, The Parish Church, Kilmacolm.

"I have now used 'The Techniquer' for eighteen months, and as a developer of the hands, fingers, and wrists, it certainly does all its inventor claims for it. It is quite amazing how quickly and easily the stretch can be increased, and a few minutes' use daily, results in a wonderful suppleness of the hands. I can heartily recommend this ingenious apparatus to all instrumentalists, be they pianists, organists, or violinists. To the busy teacher, with little time for practice, 'The Techniquer' exactly supplies a long-felt want."

"W. H. MUNDELL."

Send for particulars and testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

THE CHESTERIAN

A NEW MUSICAL MAGAZINE

EDITED BY G. JEAN-AUBRY.

EIGHT NUMBERS PER ANNUM. SUBSCRIPTION, FIVE SHILLINGS. SINGLE NUMBERS, SIXPENCE.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH ST., LONDON, W. 1.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR.

Rehearsals, Tuesdays, 6.45 p.m., in the Novello Hall, 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

VACANCIES for CONTRALTOS, TENORS, and BASSES.

Hon. Sec.:

H. A. GRIFFITH, Novello Works, Hollen Street, W. 1.

MISS

MARGUERITE SWALE

VOICE-PRODUCTION, SINGING, DICTION, AND INTERPRETATION.

GRAND OPERA AND ORATORIO COACH.

120 F, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, W. 1.

Tel.: Mayfair 1710.

CAPTAIN

CHARLES KNOWLES

For Ballad, Orchestral, and Choral Concerts.

Address usual Agents, or

IBBS & TILLET, 19, HANOVER SQUARE, W. 1.

Or Goff's Oak, Cheshunt, Herts.

Nature is a generous friend

but a very stubborn enemy, consequently the unnatural movements imposed by old-fashioned schools lead to mediocrity and despair.

THE THREE T'S OF THE SUCCESSFUL PIANIST

(Technique—Touch—Tone).

A Postal Course in Modern Piano-Playing - - - - is based on logical principles, and every movement of the fingers is a natural one.

This is ONE of the reasons why our students reach proficiency so quickly and so surely.

Pianists of all grades should write for free booklet to

THE CHAS. A. GILLETT

CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL,

Studios, 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

THE "WINDSOR CASTLE SINGERS."

FREDERICK SMITH (ALTO). EATON COOTER (BARITONE). MALCOLM BOYLE (TENOR). LEWIS STAINTON (BASS). (All direct from St. George's Chapel and H.M. Private Chapel.)

THE "WINDSOR CASTLE SINGERS"

Specialize in OLD ENGLISH PART-SONGS, and are now available for CONCERTS, AT-HOMES, RECITALS, RECEPTIONS, MASONIC FUNCTIONS, ETC.

Communications to USUAL AGENTS, or Mr. Malcolm Boyle 22, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIR,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

Principal:

MR. A. McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

GUARANTEE COURSES

For One Fee—Tuition until Successful.

ALL DEGREES AND DIPLOMAS

ARTS.
SCIENCE.
MUSIC.
LITERATURE

FROEBEL.	L.L.A.	A.C.P.	L.C.P.
L.R.A.M.	A.R.C.M.	A. MUS. T.C.L.
B.A.	B. Sc.	MUS. BAC.

209, CASTLE BOULEVARD, NOTTINGHAM.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery and wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 10,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System
of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. DONALD REID (ALTO).

(St. Paul's Cathedral.) Special Services, Oratorio, Organ Recitals, &c. Also free for Sunday Evening engagements. 64, Burlington Avenue, Kew Gardens, S.W.; or St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

J. J. MALTBY (TENOR).

(Late of Chester Cathedral)
Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin.

Open for Oratorios, Ballads, &c. For terms, apply as above.

CHARLES T. BATCHELOR (BARITONE).

Oratorio, Recitals, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
10, Roche Road, Norbury, S.W. 16.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
Address, 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD, F.R.C.O.,

For Organ Recitals.
27, Methuen Park, Muswell Hill, N. 10.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS
(TENOR).

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

ERNEST MAYHEW

(TENOR).

57, Sydenham Road, S.E. 26. 'Phone: Sydenham 841.

MR. WILLIAM SHEEN

(TENOR).

Oratorio, Concerts, &c.
62, Grosvenor Road, Ilford.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

GRADED POSTAL COURSES:—

- | | |
|---------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| (1) L.R.A.M. Course. | (3) A. and F.R.C.O. Courses. |
| (2) A.R.C.M. Course. | (4) Mus. B. and Mus. D. Courses. |
| (5) General Musical Knowledge Course. | |

"Short Revision Courses" also, for each Diploma.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSSES.

For Prospectus, Address, 48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 4 First Mus. Bac.

4 Final Mus. Bac. 2 Final Mus. Doc.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. N. SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony. Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.
Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COMPOSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Eros, Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence. Terms, &c. Radcliffe, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 144 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(formerly Mangelsdorff), of the British Expeditionary Force, France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.-11

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 369 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh Heath, 346.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL LESSONS given by MR. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.-1.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.-3

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

- HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes, L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.-1.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSSES:

- | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|
| 2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918. |
| 4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918. | 2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918. |
| 1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919. |
| 3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919. | 3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919. |

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

ALTO REQUIRED.—St. Bartholomew's, Sydenham. £20. Apply, Dr. Shiun, 4, Sydenham Park, S.E. 26.

SOLO BOY WANTED, for London Presbyterian Church. Light duties; good salary; many privileges. Apply, with photo, "Clef," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

CHOIR-BOY WANTED, to become Leader. Age, about 11. Some experience preferable. Salary, £20. Address, "Choirmaster," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

SOLO TENOR WANTED, Parish Church, Wood Green. Voluntary. Splendid experience. Full Cathedral Service every Sunday. Rendell Kenmore, Old Park Villas, Palmer's Green; or at the Church, Friday evenings or Sundays.

COUNTY BOROUGH OF STOKE-ON-TRENT.

BOROUGH ORGANIST.

APPLICATIONS ARE INVITED for the position of BOROUGH ORGANIST for the County Borough of Stoke-on-Trent, at an inclusive salary of £300 per annum, his duties to be as follows:—

- (a) The Custody of the Borough Organs.
- (b) To give Organ Recitals and organise Popular Concerts as required.
- (c) To initiate and superintend the Formation of Amateur Orchestral Societies, and generally encourage Instrumental Playing in the district.

The person appointed will be required to give the whole of his time to the duties of the office, but will be allowed to take a limited number of pupils.

Applications, with copies of two recent testimonials, to be received by the undersigned not later than first post on Monday, November 10, 1919.

E. B. SHARPLEY,
Town Hall, Stoke-on-Trent.
October 15, 1919.
Town Clerk.

ORGANIST WANTED (not Choirmaster).— Queen's Park Congregational Church, Harrow Road, W. 10. Large 3-manual organ (Noterman). Salary, £40. Write, sending copies of testimonials, to Mr. C. F. Kimble, 109, Harlesden Road, N.W. 10.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER required, for Haven Green Baptist Church, Ealing. Send full particulars of qualifications, experience, and stipend, to Secretary, 24, Woodville Road, Ealing, W. 5.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Carrs Lane Congregational Church, Birmingham. Particulars on application to Choir Secretary, The Vestry, Carrs Lane, Birmingham. Applicants must state age and experience.

ST. HILDA'S, SOUTH SHIELDS.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED. Salary for joint-office, £90, rising by annual increment of £5, to £100. Applications, stating age, past and present experience, with references and copies of three recent testimonials, to be sent not later than November 14, to Rev. J. Hudson Barker, The Vicarage, South Shields.

WANTED.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, for Parish Church of Llangollen. Salary, £60. Apply, Vicar.

WORCESTER CATHEDRAL CHOIR SCHOOL.

A Preparatory Boarding School, with about 25 boys. MASTERSHIP VACANT at Christmas; tenable by Clergyman or Layman, married or single; might be combined with Minor Canonry. Applicants must have had experience in teaching young boys, either in Preparatory or Elementary Schools. Write, for information, to The Precentor, Cathedral, Worcester.

ST. BEES SCHOOL, CUMBERLAND.—WANTED, in January, ASSISTANT MUSIC-MASTER, well qualified to teach the Violin and to Train School Orchestra. Would also have Piano Pupils, and act as Assistant-Organist. Must be unmarried and under 30 years of age. St. Bees is a Public School of 300 boarders. Apply, C. W. Kaye, Esq., St. Bees School, Cumberland.

PIANIST (Lady) requires ENGAGEMENT as ACCOMPANIST to Soloist or Small Orchestra. Good Press notices. Evelyn Winter, 10, Dunstan Road, Golders Green, N.W. 2.

LADY ACCOMPANIST, for Strings or Voices, REQUIRES WORK in London. Speciality: Sight-Reading. Miss C. Griffith, St. Michael's Vicarage, Folkestone.

EXPERIENCED ACCOMPANIST (lady) desires ENGAGEMENTS. Transposition, Sight-Reading. "O. O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

EDITOR of high-class Concert Programmes (analytical, &c.) required. c/o C. F. Holman, Norwich Rd., E. Dereham.

DEMOBILISED OFFICER (CAPTAIN), fully- qualified Professional Musician; administrative and journalistic experience, SEEKS BUSINESS POST where musical knowledge useful. "Captain," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

FOR SALE.—TWO-MANUAL ("Doherty") REED ORGAN. Pedals; 26 stops and pipes; hand-blown. Carved Oak. Perfect condition. Suitable for small church. £90 net. Jarvis, 15, Wells Road, Ilkley, Yorkshire.

FOR SALE.—CHAMBER PIPE ORGAN. Fine Instrument, by THE POSITIVE ORGAN COMPANY. Illustration and full particulars, W. Barrow, "Craigmillar," Llandudno.

CHAMBER ORGAN (Pipe).—Two Manuals and Pedals, 13 Stops; suitable for small Church, Chapel, or Studio. Norris, Hud Hey, Haslingden, Lancs.

ORGAN (Fine PARKHARD).—In handsome Oak Case, with Mirror. Eighteen Stops, including 16-feet Bourdon, and several Reed Stops, &c. Complete, with Stool. Suitable for small Church or Mission Hall. No. 146, Keith & Co., 6, Castle Street, Edinburgh.

ON SALE.—TWO ONE-MANUAL ORGANS, each containing about 300 wood and metal pipes. Address, "B. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ORGAN PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANO, with Bench, complete. Cheap. 10, Southgate Road, N. 1. Apply after 6 p.m.

BECHSTEIN PIANO.—Upright Drawing-room Grand, 7½-Octave. Quite new. £130, or near offer. 51, Stamford Hill, London, N. 16.

TO ORGANISTS AND OTHERS.—FOR SALE, ROSEWOOD PIANO (Inlaid), by Rogers, with detachable Norman & Beard Pneumatic Pedal Attachment. Savage, 52, Compton Road, Winchmore Hill, N. 21.

CORNET (ANTOINE COURTOIS), Silver-plated, rich tone; practically new. Case. Salisbury, 334, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

VIOLIN, by CAHUSAC, 1775. Excellent condition, fine tone. £16. Lacy, Baden House, Felixstowe.

MUSIC, SONGS, ETC., DESIRED.—Best terms. Stockwell, Publisher, 29, Ludgate Hill, London, E.C. 4.

TENORS should buy Set of Two Songs: "SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY," Etc. (Oakley). Compass: E flat to G. Price 1s. 8d. the Set. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy "THE HAPPIEST LAND" (Oakley). Compass: G to D. Price 1s. 8d. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

FOR SALE.

Two-Manual and Pedal Reed Organ,

By CLOUGH & WARREN.

TWENTY-SEVEN STOPS, Thirteen Sets of Reeds on Manuals, Two on Pedals (8 and 16), Two Swells, Hand and Foot Blower, Composition Pedal. Cased in American and Burr Walnut. Imitation Pipe Top, with Mirror. Splendid Tone.

Suitable either for Private House or Small Church or Chapel.

Price £140.

Inquiries to
L. BAINBOROUGH, 48, GRIMSBY ROAD, GRIMSBY.

MINIATURE FULL SCORES.

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE—		s.	d.
PIFNE AT THE FAIR	5	0
ELGAR, EDWARD—
CONCERTO. Violin and Orchestra	5	0
DREAM OF GERONTIUS	7	6
FALSTAFF	7	6
SYMPHONY NO. 1, IN A FLAT	7	6
SYMPHONY NO. 2, IN E FLAT	7	6
VARIATIONS ON AN ORIGINAL THEME	5	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

A MUSICAL MOTLEY BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

"Musicians will, of course, seize on this book with avidity. . . Its interesting pages."—Evening Standard.

"This volume of selected essays shows another aspect of this writer's work, of his appreciation of the values of music, of his originality and fancy, and his undoubted literary ability. The essays are admirably written and polished, of interest to the musical student, and valuable for the modern person who needs explanatory aids to 'Musical Appreciation,' and may be commended as the best work of its class."—Music.

"Well-equipped though he is to write seriously of music, Mr. NEWMAN has the rarer gift of humour, and he often employs that gift to advantage. . . There is a vitality about Mr. NEWMAN's pages which makes them thoroughly enjoyable."—Daily Graphic.

7s. 6d. NET.

JOHN LANE,
THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, W. 1.

DR. RALPH H. BELLAIRS' Melodic and Rhythmic Primer FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

The Aim of this Primer is to eliminate Mechanical Drudgery.

In this Primer every effort has been made, as far as possible, absolutely to avoid the unmelodious, and, by doing so, to awaken intelligent and appreciative interest from the first day of study.

All exercises, scales, and arpeggios are arranged on a Rhythmic Basis, the importance of which cannot be over-estimated.

The sense of rhythm and the sense of melody are carefully fostered from the very outset. These two factors should, in the case of a beginner, outweigh the mechanical element, which is only too often allowed to take first place in the educational scheme.

Ample provision is made for solo practice, but in order to avoid monotony, the elementary melodies, scales and exercises, all of which must be practised solo, have been arranged in duet form, so as to provide the necessary variety from mere solo practice, which is apt to become perfunctory and valueless in the early stages of musical training.

All the parts allotted to the student are designed for solo practice, but they will gain immeasurably in value by frequent recourse to the duet arrangements, in which the sympathy and experience of the teacher render such real assistance to the young beginner.

For practice in sight reading and accompaniment, the more advanced pupil should play the teacher's part.

In Two Parts, each, 2s. net. Complete, 3s. 6d. net.

ENOCH & SONS,
ENOCH HOUSE, 58, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

FOUR ENGLISH DANCES OLD ENGLISH DANCES

SET 1.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Full Score...	...	...	...	...	10s. 6d.
String Parts	...	...	...	...	6s. od.
Wind Parts	...	...	...	...	12s. od.
Ditto (small orchestra)	...	...	...	...	9s. od.
Military Band	...	...	...	...	15s. od.
Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	2s. 6d.
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	3s. od.
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings)	...	...	...	...	2s. 6d.
Extra Strings, 6d. each.

SET 2.

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Full Score...	...	...	...	...	25s. od.
String Parts	...	...	...	...	9s. 6d.
Wind Parts	...	...	...	...	21s. od.
Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	2s. 6d.
From the above: "MINUET D'AMOUR."
Pianoforte Solo, 1s. 6d. ; Violin and Pianoforte, 2s. ;
Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings, 2s. 6d.
Extra Strings, 6d. each.
Full Score...	...	...	...	...	3s. 6d.
String Parts	...	...	...	...	1s. 6d.
Wind Parts	...	...	...	...	2s. 9d.
Military Band	...	...	...	...	5s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	complete	3s. od.	Full Score (Full Orchestra)	...	...	...	5s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	separately, each	1s. 6d.	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	...	...	...	6s. od.	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra...	...	...	...	7s. od.	Strings, each Number	...	...	...	2s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra...	...	...	...	12s. od.	Separate String Parts, 6d. each.
					Military Band Arrangement	...	...	...	15s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., MUS. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, MUS. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, MUS. D.

November 5th and 10th, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concerts.

November 10th.—Half-Term begins.

November 12th, at 3 p.m.—Pianoforte Recital by Mr. CHARLTON KEITH.

November 26th, at 3 p.m.—Violin and Pianoforte Sonata Recital by MESSRS. EMILE SAURET and CHARLTON KEITH.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

Approved complete Courses for the University of London Degrees in Music under recognised Teachers of the University.

Students are prepared for the Degrees in Music of the London and other Universities, the Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, Trinity College of Music, &c.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

All modern systems of Technique (whether for the Pianoforte, Violin, or other instrument) and of Vocal Training are taught by qualified professors.

The Class for Training Boys for Cathedral Choirs is held on Saturday mornings.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University and are open only to Students who have satisfied the Matriculation requirements of that University.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

EDWARD MACDOWELL

Celebrated Studies

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

Op. 39.

In Two Books, price, each, 3s. 6d. net; or each Study may be had separately.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.

1. Hunting Song
2. Alla Tarantella
3. Romance
4. Arabesque
5. In the Forest
6. Dance of the Gnomes

BOOK II.

7. Idyll
8. Shadow Dance
9. Intermezzo
10. Melody
11. Scherzino
12. Hungarian

While each of these Studies has a definite educational aim, they contain some of MACDOWELL's most melodious work. Acquaintance with them will give as much pleasure from a recreational point of view as it will advantage to technical requirements.

Complete List, post-free, on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, W. 1.

And of all Musicsellers.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & Co., LIMITED.

The Secret of Successful Practice

(SHORT CUTS TO PIANO TECHNIC)

DOUGLAS TAYLER - - 1s. 3d.

"I have read it carefully, and find it full of wise hints put in an interesting way."—WM. TOWNSEND, Author of "Balance of Arm."

FAIRIES OF THE STREAM

KETÉLBEY.

This is a Valse Brillante of the Durand type. It is melodious, sparkling, and makes a brilliant show piece for any Pianist of moderate attainment. A British product, it should easily take the place of the imported article, and be given its chance on all School programmes and syllabuses.

NEW ALBUMS FOR THE PIANO.

LEE WILLIAMS SPRING IMPRESSIONS.

ARTHUR SOMERVELL BY THE SEA.

Both these Albums are worthy the attention of every Professor and Amateur.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR.

WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.

Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS

(Op. 84).

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS

(Op. 83)

SCORE PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.
PARTS „ EIGHT SHILLINGS.

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

(Op. 82).

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER 1, 1919.

THE LORD MAYOR-ELECT AS MUSICIAN.

The amateur in music receives a good deal less than justice unless he is in the limelight as composer, performer, or patron. If he happens to be a prominent business man, he is even less likely to be taken seriously, because we have somehow allowed ourselves to be persuaded that music and business are incompatible—an error that probably owes its origin to the absurd old-fashioned pose of the artist as having a soul above practical matters. Professional musicians of to-day are as a rule so well able to look after their financial interests that they must not be surprised if occasionally a successful business man shows himself to be possessed of an all-round knowledge and appreciation of music that would put many of them to shame. Such an one is Sir Edward Cooper, who in a few days will become London's chief magistrate. A really musical Lord Mayor being sufficiently unusual to claim the notice of our profession, we called on Sir Edward at his City office for a few particulars of the musical side of his life.

'I began with the advantage of belonging to a musical family,' said Sir Edward. 'My mother's sister married Robert Rivière, brother of Anna Rivière, Sir Henry Bishop's second wife, and a well-known singer. Through this connection I got to know a great many notable musicians. I heard no end of fine music at the house of James Howell, the famous double-bass player. He lived at Mornington Crescent, then a favourite haunt of musicians. At Howell's I heard practically everybody who was anybody, both in solo and ensemble music. Curiously enough, however, the one performance that remains the most vivid of all those boyish memories is the singing of Weiss, of "Village Blacksmith" fame. I shall never forget his thundering out (with another Boanerges whose name escapes me) Handel's duet "The Lord is a Man of War." It would have been fine in a concert hall, but in Howell's not very large drawing room the main result was to cause general anxiety as to the safety of the window and other glass!

'I used to go also to Alfred Borwick's (father of Leonard Borwick), where I saw a good deal of Reiss and Piatti, and of course heard a lot of fine chamber music. After my voice broke, however, I became very keen on singing, and had lessons from Pasquali-Goldberg, one of the first professors at the Royal Academy. My first regular singing was at the Bavarian Chapel in Warwick Street. I then sang at the Pro-Cathedral, Kensington, until Stainer appointed me a deputy tenor at St. Paul's Cathedral. There I did duty for over twenty years—a record period of service for a deputy.'

'You have no doubt taken part in a good many historic services,' we said.

'Yes. The list would take more time than either of us can spare,' Sir Edward replied (dealing swiftly with the fifth clerk who had entered in as many minutes); 'I will mention only the Diamond Jubilee Service of Queen Victoria and the Coronations of King Edward and King George. Reference to the latter reminds me that when the celebration of the three hundredth Anniversary of the Authorized Version of the Bible took place I was selected to represent Music when King George received at Buckingham Palace a deputation from the Arts and from all the Churches in which the Authorized Version was used. I remember the King's remark that the occasion was so important that he wished all the representatives to be introduced to him personally. This was not my only appearance as a representative of music. I attended the International Congress of Musicians at Berlin, Vienna, and London, and had the honour of being appointed by the Foreign Office to represent Great Britain at the Congress in Paris in 1914.'

'Lady Cooper is also a musician, is she not?' we asked.

'She is a first-rate organist and pianist,' he replied. 'She studied the organ with Richard Limpus, of St. Michael's, Cornhill—of which church, by-the-bye, I am parish clerk. The name of Limpus is honoured amongst organists, as he convened the meeting which led to the establishment, in 1864, of that excellent institution known to-day as the Royal College of Organists. My wife does no regular playing now, but she frequently deputises in our neighbourhood. As pianist she was a pupil of Sir Julius Benedict, and did a good deal of playing at concerts. At the last public appearance of Otto Goldschmidt, which happened to coincide with the centenary of Schumann's birth, he was asked to play Schumann's Variations for two pianofortes. He consented, but emphatically laid down "von con-dection," that my wife should be the other performer, which she accordingly was. Goldschmidt used to come to our house a good deal and play duets with my wife. He was of great assistance to her, because he had known Mendelssohn well, and was able to say exactly how the composer used to play his own and other composers' music.'

'Being a singer, your interests are chiefly vocal, Sir Edward?'

'Yes, and especially choral. As a young man I joined the Sacred Harmonic Society, and was one of the stewards at the opening of the Royal Albert Hall by Queen Victoria in 1871. But I had other vocal interests, and was an habitual opera-goer in my early days. I had to be satisfied with the gallery, however. No stalls or boxes for me then! I paid a half-crown, and spent hot, enthusiastic evenings among the gods. And it was hot, with the big gas chandelier just over our heads and ventilation rather primitive! I still retain my early fondness for choral music, though I have so little spare time that my enjoyment has to be passive rather than active.'

'Music is frequently cold-shouldered in official circles. May we hope that your year of office will see it given more prominence than usual?' we inquired.

'It is rather early yet to say much on that score,' he answered, 'but musicians may be certain that, so far as lies in my power, I shall do all I can to further the cause of the art which has been such a joy to me all my life, and which I hold to be our greatest educative and civilizing force. Its value as a social factor is very far from being realised by the Government. I am anxious to see in this country something corresponding to the Ministry of Fine Arts in France and other Continental countries. Musicians, I know, view the project with suspicion, but it ought not to be impossible to get the right man at the head of it, and to see that he was well served. I am sure the art and its professors would gain enormously in prestige, as well as in material ways that will be obvious on reflection. Here is one matter in which such a Ministry would be of great service. As you know, international musical amenities are very much in the air, and will be even more so in coming years. Nothing could be better for the nations or their music than such visits as that paid us recently by the Czecho-Slovak singers and players. If England takes part in any such exchanges the arrangements have to be left to private individuals. This does not mean that they will not be excellent, but it does mean that a risk is taken. Moreover, when a courtesy of the kind is extended to us by the Government of another country, we ought to have an official department qualified to make a suitable return. After all, that is merely good manners, besides being some guarantee of success in such arrangements as may have to be made. The proposed visit of the New York Symphony Society is a case in point. They are invited to France by the Government. If they come to England it will be at the request of a handful of private individuals, the convening of whom was left to the initiative of one individual. This means to say that if he had been too busy or too lazy to act, the whole thing would almost certainly have fallen through. In view of the importance of our relations with America, you will agree that any appearance of being less cordial than France would be unfortunate.*'

Certainly a list of the musical offices held by the new Lord Mayor should inspire confidence. He is the oldest member but one of the Madrigal Society, and was its president for two years. He was also a member of the old Round, Catch and Canon Club, and is the Vice-President of the Abbey Glee Club, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal College of Organists, a Fellow and a Trustee of the Foundation Fund of the Royal Philharmonic Society, and formerly the Treasurer and now the Chairman of the Royal Academy of Music. He is also on the committee of the Mendelssohn Scholarship. Last, but far from least, he is Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. It is refreshing to find a busy public man so full of enthusiasm for music. Was it surprising that as we stepped from his office into the bustle of Cornhill, a verse from Browning's 'Shop' came to mind?—

I want to know a butcher paints,
A baker rhymes for his pursuit,
Candlestick-maker much acquaints
His soul with song, or, haply mute,
Blows out his brains upon the flute.

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

During the coming year this ancient Company may be expected to achieve more prominence than usual, owing to the fact that the Master is also Lord Mayor of London. As a supplement to the preceding article, therefore, we give a short account of its origin and activities.

The Company, as at present constituted, received its charter from James I. in 1604, but it is really a continuation of similar Guilds which flourished at a much earlier period. In the year 1469, the 'beloved minstrels' of Edward IV. complained that 'certain ignorant rustics and craftsmen of various callings' were claiming to be musicians; 'although they are in that art by no means learned or skilled, they nevertheless move from place to place on festival days and collect all those profits by means of which the King's Minstrels should obtain their living . . . whereby 'much disgrace is brought upon the art or occupation of Minstrels.' Would his Majesty give the genuine artists due protection? His Majesty would, and did: he granted a charter empowering them to form a Guild for the examination, supervision, control, and correction of all minstrels throughout the kingdom, except those in the city of Chester. (That city was exempt, because its minstrels were already under local control.) The 1469 charter has been preserved by Rymer, and is of great historical value, because its text clearly shows that the musical profession had been organized and honourably regarded in this country long before. The King's Minstrels were bidden to take steps to restore the profession to the high esteem it had enjoyed in previous centuries. The guild and charter were no new things, for this 1469 document tells us that 'the brothers and sisters of the Fraternity of Minstrels' had established similar organizations 'in times past.'

The Guild chartered by Edward IV. apparently lasted only thirty years, for in 1500 we find the 'Fellowship of Minstrels and Freemen of the City of London' taking charge of the professional interests. Its members were 'England for the English' enthusiasts, and beat the patriotic drum lustily, begging the Lord Mayor and Aldermen to ordain that 'no maner of foreigner' shall be permitted to 'occupie any Ministrelsy, singyng or playyng upon any instrument' within the City or

* In this connection our readers may be interested to see a facsimile of the letter Mr. Damrosch received from the French Ministry of Fine Arts. We therefore reproduce it on p. 609.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, London.

C. H. Lloyd.

its franchises under penalty of a fine of 3s. 4d., to be paid to the Fellowship. Apparently there was some shady unprofessional conduct in those days, for we find the Fellowship asking the Lord Mayor's help in seeing that 'no minstrell shall supplate or get out another being hired or spoken to' for any musical engagement. In 1555 the Fellowship raised another protest against the alien, complaining of the 'dyverse and many foreign minstrells who exercise the scyence of Mynstrelsie within the Cytie and Lyberties thereof, to the great losse and hindrance of the gaines and profits of the poore mynstrells being fremen of the same Cytie.'

An important part of the duties of these minstrels (or 'waits,' to give them their popular title) was the provision of music at City Pageants and festivals. The Diary of Henry Machyn (1550-63), a London merchant-taylor, contains the following, with many similar entries:

The first day of September was Saint Gylles Day, and ther was a goodly processyon about the parryche with the whettes [waits] and the canepes borne, and the Sacrement, and ther was a goodly masse songe as bene hard [as goodly a mass sung as has been heard] and Master Thomas Grenelle, wax-chandler mad a grett denier for master Garter and my ladye, and master Machylye the shreffe and ys wife, and both the chamburlayns, and mony worshippful men and women at denier, and the whettes playing and dyvers odur mynsterelles, for ther was a grett denier.

The Fellowship seems to have declined steadily until its reconstruction under the charter of James I., alluded to above. It was therein described as 'The Master, Wardens, and Commonalty of the Art or Science of the Musicians of London.'

The Byelaws were comprehensive and stringent. Among other nefarious practices to come under the ban was dancing on Sundays. The Company acted also as censor, and forbade any person, under pain of fine or duress, to 'sing any ribaldry, wanton or lascivious songs or ditties' calculated to cause injury or slander to the science of music. Another rule was to prevent members going 'in any open street from house to house with an instrument encased or uncovered to be seen by any passing by.' The feeling against the alien was still strong, for musicians were prohibited from practising their art with foreigners. A strict eye was kept on the apprentices—who no doubt needed it. Members of the Company were forbidden to suffer their servants or apprentices to serve by themselves with any music at any feasts, banquets, weddings, hunts-ups, or any other assemblies, triumphs, or occasions, either to go abroad in the streets or to play at any taverns, victualling houses or any other place whatsoever, except they do go in with the company of two freemen at the least, well and sufficiently exercised and experienced in the said art or science of music.

It is unfortunate that the records of the Company for the greater part of the past three centuries have been lost. They would have shed light on some aspects of London musical life which are more or less obscure.

Like other City Companies, the Musicians no longer exercise the duties or enjoy the privileges of the early days of Guildry. They have, however, so far as possible, adapted themselves to modern needs, and so are able to do much useful work on behalf of the art. Such services are mostly of the prize or scholarship type, and are so well known as to need no more than bare mention. Perhaps the most stimulating project of the Company in recent years was the remarkable Exhibition held in the Fishmongers' Hall in 1904, when was brought together a collection of instruments, books, portraits, manuscripts, &c., that has probably never been equalled for value and interest. The Exhibition had a great popular success, and left a tangible result in a volume of the lectures delivered.

The Company now consists of 137 Liverymen. Election rests with the Court—the Master, two Wardens, and not less than thirteen assistants. The livery carries with it the Freedom of the City. The Musicians' Company is the only City Company concerned with a profession.

If it were merely a survival of mediæval England the continued existence of the Company would be amply justified on sentimental grounds. But it has far more potent claims as an institution that, so far from being moribund, is very much alive, and still able and willing to render useful service to the art and profession whose interests it protected centuries ago.

On October 14 Mr. Hugh Wyatt, on retiring from the Mastership, presented a silver two-handed cup with mask handles, chased leaves and border, and cover bearing a figure of Victory. The stand bears the following inscriptions on its four sides:

War declared August 4, 1914.

Armistice granted November 11, 1918.

Peace signed June 28, 1919.

H.W.

Under the figure of Victory is '1914-1919,' and on the base, 'Presented by Hugh Wyatt, Master, 1918-1919.'

This cup and the War Tazza presented in 1915 by Past Master Major A. C. Chamier, are likely to be regarded in future as two of the most interesting pieces of plate in the Company's possession. We reproduce a photograph of the cup on the next page.

The Annual Dinner of the Company is announced to take place at the Grocers' Hall on October 28, too late for report in this issue. In order to bring the chief particulars thereof under the same cover as the foregoing article, we add some details kindly communicated by Mr. T. C. Fenwick, clerk to the Company.

In the chair, Sir Edward Cooper, The Master, supported by the following members of the Court: Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir George Truscott, the Rev. H. C. de la Fontaine (Senior Warden), Sir Homewood Crawford, Sir William Lancaster, Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, Mr. Arthur F. Hill, Mr. T. C. Fenwick, and the Company's Chaplain, the Right Rev. The Bishop of Worcester. Among the Liverymen to be present are Sir Felix Schuster, Prebendary W. Perry, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. W. G. Alcock, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Sir Charles Sykes, and Mr. Augustus Littleton.

The long list of guests includes Field-Marshal Lord Methuen, Sir Reginald Brade, Sir

George Makins, The Lord Bishop of Buckingham, Canon Edgar Sheppard, Mr. Louis N. Parker, Mr. Sheriff Eves, Lieut.-Colonel W. S. Poë, Lieut.-Colonel G. Wilson, Bishop Taylor Smith, Vice-Admiral H. L. Fleet, Sir Herbert Nield,

The Master of the Grocers' Company (Mr. Egerton H. E. Hensley), Mr. R. V. Somers-Smith, Mr. Alderman George Briggs, Mr. Rigby-Smith, Sir George Frampton, Mr. G. A. Creighton, Mr. H. W. Brooke, and Major R. H. Barker; and among the Honorary Freemen are Sir Ernest Palmer, the Rev. Canon Galpin, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Charles Stanford, Mr. Landon Ronald, Major Mackenzie Rogan, Col. T. C. F. Somerville, and Brigadier-General Sir A. G. Balfour.

The Toasts, with their Proposers and Responders:

The King, Queen, and Royal Family.
The Master.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians.
Sir George Makins—The Master.

Music.

Mr. Clifford B. Edgar—Sir Alexander Mackenzie.

The Guests.

The Senior Warden—Field-Marshal Lord Methuen and Sir Walter Parratt.

The Worshipful Company of Grocers.

The Master of the Musicians' Company—The Master of the Grocers' Company.

PROGRAMME OF MUSIC.

Violin Solos:

(a) Aria Back
(b) Prelude and Allegro Pugnani

Miss Margaret Fairless.

(The Company's Silver Medallist for the year.)

Songs:

'To Daisies' Quiller
'Love went a-riding' Frank Bridge

Miss Marjorie Claridge.

'Sombre Woods' Lully
'King Charles' M. V. White

Mr. Arnold Stoker.

'Les Larmes' Massenet
'Les Papillons' Chausson

Miss Doris Godson.

Violin Solos:

Aria Pergolesi
'La Precieuse' Kreisler
'Tambourin' Gossec

Miss Margaret Fairless.

Songs:

'Eleanore' Coleridge-Taylor
Mr. Reginald Pickering.

'The Yeomen of England' German
Mr. Arnold Stoker.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

(Continued from October number, page 529.)

VI.—GUSTAV HOLST (continued).

The best known of Holst's early works is the Suite in E flat for orchestra, known as 'Scènes de Ballet,' which has been performed and published under the auspices of the Patron's Fund of the Royal College. It comprises a Rustic Dance, a Waltz, a Night Scene, and a concluding number entitled Carnival. The last section, which is the strongest, is occasionally performed separately. The whole Suite is buoyant, and coloured in the high tints which belong to the subject and to the theatre generally. In fact it led more than one critic, at the time, to predict for its author a successful theatrical career. There is perhaps some better music in the two 'Songs without Words' for small orchestra, which made their appearance a few years later, but these, being of a quieter character, have not attracted the same attention. The répertoire of such works being somewhat limited, the moment is opportune to bring them to the notice of conductors in search of compositions which do not demand a large array of orchestral forces.

A marked progress is shown in the setting of 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' for soprano solo and orchestra, which dates from 1904 and was first performed at a Patron's Fund Concert. It is expressively written, but the orchestration is in places too heavy for the singer. This was the first of Mr. Holst's compositions to be performed by the Royal Philharmonic Society, and the occasion is the only one on which his audience betrayed audible signs of disapproval.

In those early days, Holst was already much occupied with the two aspects of music which were destined afterwards to assume great importance in his work, namely, choral writing and the study of folk-song. His 'Ave Maria' for female voices, although nearly twenty years old, is still a representative work which retains his affection in a more marked degree than the setting for chorus and orchestra of the old English ballad 'King Estmere,' which made its appearance a little later. It is probable, however, that he made at this time many more studies in vocal polyphony, for the mastery of choral effect displayed subsequently in the Rig Veda hymns and other works is not of the kind that can be acquired in the writing of a few part-songs. This mastery has also served him well in his later treatment of folk-song, but the first outstanding works which resulted from his study of the national idiom were both orchestral. The selection of 'Songs of the West' has never attained to the same degree of popularity as the 'Somerset Rhapsody,' with which it is paired in the list of his compositions. In the Rhapsody he has woven into a poetic idyll some tunes from Mr. Cecil Sharp's well-known collection. A lover is called away from the 'Sheep-shearing Song' by the martial strains of 'High Germany,' and the leave-taking is accompanied by 'The True-Lover's Farewell.' The treatment is symphonic in outline without adhering closely to traditional form. The subject furnishes every opportunity both for musical contrast and for the combination of themes and rhythms of which the following example is illustrative:

'A SOMERSET RHAPSODY.'

Solo..... Allegro.

VIOLINS. mp

FLUTES. SOLI. a 2.

(Violins divisi play with bassoons an octave higher.)

staccato. pp

FAG. pp

Here the flutes play 'High Germany' whilst the strings continue the 'Sheep-shearing Song' which is heard at the opening. The Rhapsody has great charm, and has endeared itself to so many that the place it has taken in the répertoire of English music is now assured.

At this point a new influence made itself felt in Holst's musical career, and assumed so much importance that its advent practically closes the preceding chapter. It is not so much that there is any marked technical difference between the best of these early works and those which are to follow. On the contrary, the most personal traits of this composer can be traced continually through his works with such persistence that it would be very difficult to say at which point maturity commences in the commonly accepted sense as applied to music. The methods of the Rhapsody have their counterpart throughout, and the special features of his choral writing are the same. It is, however, indisputable that the new impulse tended to accelerate the progress of his studies, such as, notably, that of the vocal elasticity of the English language, which he has gradually learnt to apply in a manner distinct from that of any other composer. It is strange that this indirect result should be the most striking trace left by his prolonged interest in Sanskrit texts.

The search for novel material has often tempted composers to their own detriment. Some have set their discoveries with more or less appositeness, whilst others have done little more than make them impossible for their successors. Texts are too often set by the perfunctory addition of music without the preliminary saturation of the mind which alone enables a musician to sublimate, as he should, the moods of a poem. That method of procedure is completely foreign to Holst's musical nature, and it is therefore matter for congratulation that the treasure mine of Sanskrit literature had remained practically untouched, we might even say unsullied, by musicians, until it engaged the subtle sympathy he brought so wholeheartedly to bear upon it.

Sanskrit literature falls into two periods. The older, or classic phase, includes the Rig-Veda, which is the oldest work in the language. It dates back to a time when Sanskrit was a living tongue, when probably Hindus and Persians were one race, that is to say, before the Aryans settled in India. One view, which has the support of many philologists, even ascribes its substance, if not its form, to European influences of prehistoric date. The hymns of the Rig-Veda consist for the most part of simple invocations of fire, water, heaven, the sun, and other forces of nature incidental to the earlier, less sophisticated, form of religion.

The later phase of Sanskrit literature includes among a multitude of works the two great epics, the Ramayana and Maha-Bharata, and the plays of Kalidasa. When these originated Sanskrit had ceased to be the vernacular, but remained the language of the literati, much as Latin did during the interval between the fall of the Roman Empire and the birth of Romance literature. Both the epics named are aggregations from several sources and, maybe, periods, but it is doubtful whether any portion of them can claim an antiquity approaching within some centuries to that of the Rig-Veda.

This is the material which attracted Mr. Holst. It was not long before he decided that to approach it through the medium of translations was hopeless. The more faithful the translation was, the more remote it seemed from reproducing the atmosphere of the original. Sometimes it needed even much ingenuity to decide what the translation meant. By this time, however, Mr. Holst was so fired by enthusiasm that difficulties only spurred him on, and he set to work to study Sanskrit.

Most of the adaptations he has used are his own. They should, however, not be regarded as translations in the usual sense. His method has been first to study the original so closely as to be completely saturated with it, then to throw it aside and reproduce its meaning in the clearest possible terms. There is no claim to authenticity, which, in fact, would be impossible without an irksome array of footnotes. Then the thing would have become an anthropological study rather than a nature-poem. Neither are the hymns as rendered by Mr. Holst endowed with any esoteric meaning. He has no mission to add to the numerous fashionable cults of alleged exotic origin. His Vedic hymns are prose-poems set to music as concert pieces, and nothing else. It will save much misapprehension of Mr. Holst's work if that fact is consistently kept before his audiences.

The three-act opera 'Sita,' which was awarded the second place in the Ricordi competition, has little to do with this phase of Mr. Holst's music, although the subject is taken from the Ramayana. It savours too much of Wagnerian music-drama to be in any sense representative. But 'Savitri,' the chamber opera which followed, is strongly characteristic. It deals with an episode from the Maha-Bharata, and has only three characters, the accompaniment being written for two string quartets, a double-bass, two flutes, cor anglais, and a hidden choir of female voices. The following example gives a good illustration of the method in which the choir is used as background to a solo :

'SAVITRI.'

Wel - come, Lord, Thou art call - ed the 1st & 2nd TREBLES.

1st & 2nd ALTOS.

CELLO & BASS.

Just One, Thou ru - lest all by thy de - cree, Thou

The musical score is written for a chamber opera. It features a vocal soloist (Savitri) and a background choir of female voices. The instrumental accompaniment consists of two string quartets, a double bass, two flutes, and a cor anglais. The score is in G major and 4/4 time. The vocal parts are marked with 'pp' (pianissimo) and 'ppp' (pianissimissimo). The instrumental parts are marked with 'pp' and 'ppp'. The lyrics are in English, and the music is in a style that is both modern and traditional.

call-est men to-gether, Thou showest them the path That leads to thine a-bode, Our on-ly sure pos-sess-ion,

1st & 2nd TREBLES.

1st & 2nd ALTOS.
pp
FLUTES.

Solo, legato.
CELLO & BASS.

Methinks ev-en now thou hast led me thith-er, Round me.. I see pp a 2.

gen-tle fa-ces I hear voi-ces,

The air is ho-ly.

The substance of the story is simple, but lends itself admirably to dramatic treatment. Savitri hears the voice of Death announcing that he comes to claim her husband, but her piety obtains a boon on condition that she asks nothing on his behalf. She pleads for life in its fulness. That being granted, she declares that the gate of life can only be opened for her by Satyavan, her husband, and her wifely devotion is rewarded.

The settings of hymns from the Rig-Veda consist of two distinct series, each of which comprises several groups. The first series, for voice and pianoforte, originally included over a dozen songs, but critical elimination has reduced them to nine, which are grouped in threes. Considering the number of vocalists who are now giving an enhanced importance to the English section of their recital programmes, it is strange that songs of such remarkable interest should suffer neglect; but, alas! they are as yet unpublished. Among those that I have heard, that entitled 'Frogs' has left the liveliest impression. The more important series is that of the choral hymns, comprising four groups, the composition of which is spread over the five years 1908-12. In the portion of this article which appeared last month two illustrations were given from the first group, one from the 'Hymn to the Unknown God' (Ex. 4), and the other an interesting example of $7/4$ rhythm which forms the basis of the Funeral Hymn (Ex. 2). These, and the Battle Hymn, with which the series opens, are for mixed chorus and orchestra. Then followed a set of three for female voices and orchestra, including the invocation to Agni, god of fire, which is one of the most striking of the entire collection. It is in an impetuous $5/4$ rhythm, and the opening bars, which were quoted in our last issue (Ex. 1), should have had the time indication Allegro to make their spirit clear to the reader. The third group, for female voices and harp, and the fourth, for male chorus with a limited orchestra, also contain several very fine numbers, notably a hymn to Indra and another to Agni, who is here presented in his more benevolent aspect, presiding over the hearth and the sacrificial fire. But it is invidious to select separate hymns for special mention when much of their unique merit resides in their contrasted significance. Even in the most spirited chants the element of contemplation is not absent. The Hindu theogony may supply the titles, but it is Nature herself who is the subject of each in turn, and, with all due regard to Mr. Holst's Sanskrit studies, it is permissible to suspect that the inspiration of the text as well as the music owes more to a personal conception of the elements than to the actual language of the Rig-Veda. In fact, it is scarcely going too far to say that, as in most symphonic programme-music, the title is a pretext rather than a motive. Viewed collectively these Hymns are among the most characteristic personal contributions to modern British music. It is not the least remarkable circumstance about them that although one might imagine their unusual and uncompromisingly individual style as setting limits to their appeal, they have, on the contrary, made a deep impression on every kind of audience. With them may be classed also two charming 'Eastern Pictures' for female voices and harp, entitled 'Spring' and 'Summer,' based on a poem by Kalidasa. The second, in particular, is a good example of Mr. Holst's art. The texts are purely lyrical, and have not the devotional spirit that runs through the Hymns, and the music has a lighter character though retaining some affinity with that of the Hymns.

(To be continued.)

THE MUSIC OF THE CZECHO-SLOVAKS.

NATIONAL OPERA IN PRAGUE.

By ROSA NEWMARCH.

Readers of the Musical Times may remember that in the autumn of last year I contributed to its pages a series of articles upon the Music of the Czecho-Slovak races, and that I concluded with a hint that I might return to the subject at a later date. Since then, the Czecho-Slovak Festival, held at Queen's Hall this year, between May 26 and June 2, introducing to us two of the best male-voice choirs of Bohemia, and the fine orchestra from the Prague National Theatre, under their distinguished conductor, Herr Karel Kovarovic, besides a selection of national works, choral and orchestral, must have done much to convince the public that in the new, free Republic of Czecho-Slovakia music is likely to progress hand in hand with social and political expansion.

I visited the country in June this year in response to an invitation to go there as a national guest. Every facility was given me, by the Minister of Education and others, to see and judge for myself of cultural conditions in this new European State. I went at a most critical period in its young life: just when the Hungarian Bolsheviks, armed with the not-inconsiderable munitions and equipment left from Mackensen's Army, had pushed their way over the borders held only by an attenuated and wretchedly-armed Czech force. While travelling I had occasion to meet and converse with all classes, from Thomas Masaryk, first President of the Republic, to Moravian peasants bound on a great pilgrimage. My visit therefore was not entirely concerned with music, but it naturally occupied a good deal of my attention.

The Western provinces of the country had suffered much from the ceaseless requisitions of the Austrians. In the poor mountainous districts of Wallachia—which I did not visit personally—there was a great shortage of food. In the fertile localities of Moravia things were better, but they too had felt the strain of the vast influx of refugees setting westwards from the neighbouring provinces whence the inhabitants retreated more than once before Russian and German armies.

In Prague, I found that life had kept, at least externally, something of pre-war-time gaiety. 'Youth will be served,' and was beginning to demand some of its former characteristic enjoyments. The Sokols, or gymnastic clubs, sadly depleted by the long fighting, were looking up again. Though apt in middle life to grow stout, owing perhaps to the excellence of their beer from Plsen (Pilsen) and other famous breweries, the physical activity of the Czechs is remarkable. Late on those hot June afternoons one might suppose Prague to be inhabited by a race of rather solid water-sprites. Looking towards the old Karlov Bridge from the quay, the shallow water above the weir was alive with human bodies glistening pink and white in the late sunlight; in the distance it looked as though a drifting mass of rose petals was dancing and floating on the surface of Ultava. After a swim and a row came a strictly-rationed supper at some popular café.

But the true spiritual life of the city centres always in its music. Through all the long anguish of the war the Narodni Divadlo—the beautiful, medium-sized national Opera House which stands out against the warm green slope of the Petrin hill across the river—has been the sanctuary of the anxious and suffering population of Prague. Here Madame Destinnova sang night after night to cheer her compatriots in their darkest hours; and here Karel Kovarovic, resisting all attacks on his patriotic policy, has spent the best years of his life trying to keep a national opera at least partially open to the works of Czech composers. It goes without saying that Italian, and French, and even German opera have had their turn at the Narodni Divadlo. Kovarovic is no narrow-mindful Chauvinist, but he holds that an institution built and endowed by the Czech people should be guarded from becoming a dumping-ground for musical goods that have found no active market in Vienna and Berlin.

The Czechs are a young and vigorous race, and their moral outlook is on the whole healthy, as might be expected from a nation which produced a Huss and a Rokycana; it is clear that only a small minority of them have so far been influenced by the later decadent tendencies in Teutonic art, while they have openly resented the materialistic bias of German educational methods. For many years to come they will be too busy working out their political and cultural salvation on their own lines to have much leisure for dallying with intricate experiments and subtleties, wholesome and unwholesome, such as had begun to honey-comb the foundations of Russian art and literature at the outbreak of the war. I have an idea that the future art of Czechoslovakia will be compounded of simpler and healthier ingredients. Whimsical palates will pass it by. It will not be to the taste of those who label as reactionary everything in music which is based on reason and developed with method.

Undoubtedly at the present moment the Czechs in their first consciousness of a national existence are listening to the music of their own 'classic' composers with revived reverence and enthusiasm. It will not be the fault of the new régime if the children of to-day grow up in ignorance of all that Smetana, Dvorák, Fibich, and Foerster have done for the foundation of national opera in Bohemia. It was delightful to see school-children from seven years of age, gathered from all classes, accommodated in excellent places at the Narodni Divadlo for the matinées of 'The Bartered Bride' or other suitable operas. There, for a happy afternoon they forgot the long months of poor rations and the resulting languours, coughs, and earaches, forgot the gritty bread without butter, the child's natural craving for sugar and a good drink of milk. They drank in the music instead, laughed at the comic business, and were an attentive, appreciative, and by no means uncritical public. But they were much less restless and conversational than a fashionable audience at Covent Garden.

One of the obstacles to the progress of operatic music in Prague is the fact that so far the Narodni Divadlo has been the sole home of Czech drama as well as opera. This will probably soon be remedied, and the opera house used for musical purposes only. At present the three or four performances a week do not suffice to satisfy the requirements of all the opera-goers in Prague. It is always necessary to book seats long in advance, and for certain popular operas frequently more people are turned away than find accommodation in the building. The present director of the Narodni Divadlo is Mr. Gustave Schmoranz, an architect by profession. Mr. Schmoranz knows England, and is a staunch admirer of our literature. He presented me with a list of plays, chiefly modern, by British playwrights, produced under his directorate, which astonished me by its range and audacity. 'And when,' he asked me more than once, 'are we going to produce here a truly representative British opera? Something which has been accepted as such by Great Britain itself?' To which one could but reply: 'When we have a Narodni Divadlo of our own—perhaps.' Which invariably led up to a problem as difficult to solve as Alice in Wonderland's famous query: 'Do cats eat bats? Do bats eat cats?' Or in musical terms: Do Opera Houses make operas, or do operas raise Opera Houses?

On the evening of my arrival in Prague I was fortunate enough to hear a good performance of Smetana's epic opera 'Libusa,' a work composed originally for the opening of the National Theatre, in 1881. The libretto is based on the oldest of Czech legends, which tells how Libusa, the Virgin Queen and Prophetess, holds her Court at the Vysehrad, the castle situated on a rock overhanging Ultava. Libusa is called upon to judge a quarrel between two brothers, the elder of whom, the haughty warrior Chrudos, refuses the jurisdiction of a mere woman. Realising her weakness, the Queen accepts the advice of her counsellors and consents to take a consort. She chooses the handsome and noble-hearted peasant Premysl, and founds the first dynasty of Bohemian kings. The story is interwoven also with the love-tale of Krasava and Chrudos, who is exiled for his discourtesy to the Queen. In the last Act is solemnized the marriage of Libusa and Premysl. The peasant-king pardons the rebel on condition that he pays homage to the Queen, and all ends happily. Then follows the ecstasy of Libusa, in which she sees visions of her country's future, shown in a series of tableaux at the back of the stage, and concluding with a picture of a free Bohemia, which naturally evoked an enthusiastic demonstration from the public. The scenery, which depicts the old Slavonic palace at Vysehrad, the homestead of Premysl, and the tumulus in the dark forest where the ancestors of Chrudos are buried, and the costumes, which are traditional, were in their way as interesting as those of the Russian historical operas. The music of 'Libusa' is Wagnerian only in so far that it is built on distinctive leit-motifs many of which have the character of fanfares, giving to the whole tissue of the score a quality of primitive splendour and force appropriate to the story. The overture is a succinct epitome of the entire opera, and the opening phrase, caught up first by one group of brass instruments and then by another, seems to evoke immediately a picture of the heroic past. There is, however, plenty of variety in the music. With the serene, strong love-theme of Premysl is contrasted the fiery passion of Chrudos, and the pastoral music which introduces the scene on Premysl's farm; the graceful nuptial hymn, sung by twelve maidens attired in white, acts as a foil to the great chorus in which the people bless the Queen, which immediately precedes her evocation of the visions. The opera as a whole leaves a vivid memory, and is an ideal introduction to the national repertory of the Narodni Divadlo.

I heard also two other operas by Smetana: the famous 'Bartered Bride,' and that much less familiar work 'The Two Widows.' The former is saved by the ready wit and sparkle of the music from the reproach of having dropped behind the age. The love-scenes and the comic business are much the same in peasant operas all the world over. 'The Bartered Bride' certainly gains by the interpretation of Czech artists; the spirited tempi, the vigorous dancing, the scenery (which at the Narodni Divadlo is genuinely Bohemian, and not a kind of spurious Tyrolean landscape)—all these details gave freshness and interest to the long familiar music. The part of the stuttering clodhopper, Vasek, a mixture of fatuity and rustic cunning, was admirably played by M. Mirko Stork.

'The Two Widows' is supposed to be particularly pleasing to foreigners because it is more cosmopolitan in character. It is almost a drawing-room opera, based on an adaptation from a French comedy by Malleville. The leading rôles—the merry widow, rapidly convalescent in white array, and the inconsolable relict, who clings to her weeds, but is the first to lose her heart a second time—offer a charming opportunity for two rival prima donnas to become reconciled on the stage. A tiresome comic element is supplied by an old gamekeeper who arrests the hero as a poacher and brings him into the presence of the two ladies whose acquaintance he is dying to make. Smetana himself confessed to a special weakness for his share of 'The Two Widows,' and the music is certainly on a higher level than the libretto. It is a pleasant little opera which could easily be given in any country, but it has no distinctive characteristics. My lack of enthusiasm disappointed my friends. With other operas by Smetana they sometimes attributed my non-chalance—rather naively—to my failure to enter into the local spirit. In reality, I fear it must be attributed to my conviction that, for me at least, much of Smetana's operatic music has become 'out of date and out of using.'

The strongest musical impression of my visit to Prague was undoubtedly a fine performance of Karel Kovarovic's great historical opera, 'Psohlavci'—the 'Dog-headed Folk'; or, to give it a more explicit title, 'The Peasants' Charter.' Kovarovic, whose acquaintance we have recently made in England, had already gained some reputation as a composer of light opera, and as first conductor at the Prague National Theatre, when at the age of thirty-seven he sprang upon the public this astonishingly strong and original work. Everything in 'Psohlavci' is out of the conventional mould of opera. As in Moussorgsky's music-dramas, the women's rôles are comparatively insignificant, because there are no love-scenes in the ordinary sense of the word. The libretto, based on a popular historical novel by the Czech author, Jirasek, deals with the story of the Chods (pronounce Khods), a small race who in return for their vigilant guardianship of the S.W. frontier of Bohemia had been granted many privileges by the earlier rulers of the country, among others the right to bear a watch-dog's head on their banner. In 1695, after the Battle of the White Mountain, the Austrians, anxious to curtail the liberty of this people, appointed Laminger von Albenreuth governor of the district. When the curtain rises, Kozina, a leading Chod farmer, is lamenting to his friend, Pribek the Piper, that the folk think him a half-hearted supporter of their cause, and that even his own mother does not trust him. Kozina appears at first in the light of a conciliator rather than a hero; his great love for his timid wife and his young children tending to weaken his will. But when Laminger—Slavonized by the people into Lomikar—comes on the scene with his soldiers and ransacks Kozina's house for documents, the Chod, though anxious to avert bloodshed, shows that he is not lacking in courage. The Austrians depart in triumph, carrying with them a chest of papers, but ignorant of the fact that the most important charter of all has been safely hidden on the person of Kozina's intrepid old mother. Kozina and Pribek are arrested. Later on they are released and summoned before the Court of Appeal in Prague. Trustfully they bear with them the precious charter, secure in the justice of their cause. But the judge, with withering contempt, tears the document in two, tosses it back to them, and pronounces it to be 'merely a scrap of paper.' Thus does this opera of 1898 foreshadow the events of 1914. Lomikar, entering the court at this juncture, announces that the Chods have risen in rebellion, and demands that Kozina, as the instigator of the rising, shall be condemned to death. Kozina protests in vain that he has done his best to avoid violence. In the next Act we see him in prison, where the devoted Pribek comes to say farewell, and presently his mother, wife, and children take a heartrending leave of him. Lomikar offers at the last to pardon Kozina if he will make a public recantation of his belief in the justice of the peasants' claims. But Kozina, now risen to true heroism, refuses. Proudly he turns from the entreaties of his family and follows the priest to the scaffold. On the threshold of the cell he warns Lomikar: 'A year to day we shall meet before the judgment seat of God.' The last Act shows a brilliant banquet scene in Lomikar's house. It is the anniversary of Kozina's execution. The haughty and sardonic Austrian recalls his victim's last words, and sneers at him for a false prophet. Nevertheless his pallor and agitation arouse his wife's anxiety. Laughingly he says that a drink of wine will put him right. As he raises the cup to his lips a mysterious gust of wind extinguishes the lights in the hall, and Lomikar is dimly seen to stagger and fall dead, but not before he has caught a flashing vision of Kozina reminding him of their tryst.

Although the setting of this story is local, its psychology is universal. The exasperation of a deeply-injured people, the craftiness and political bias of the time-serving lawyers, the arrogance of the ruling race, embodied in the personality of Lomikar, the gradual bracing of a naturally easy-going temperament to a heroic resolution, maternal pride, the tenderness of a devoted husband and father—all these emotional elements belong not merely to the Chods but to humanity at large. At the same time the customs and quaint costumes of this conservative race add to the picturesqueness of the setting.

The libretto seems to me of far higher literary value than the books of the majority of operas. And the music? It would be too little to say that it is obviously the work of a most accomplished musician well versed by years of experience in the technique and requirements of opera; for this might imply that it lacked inspiration, which is certainly not the case.

The first impression the music left on me was of its complete oneness with the drama. It follows the powerful play of emotions, and colours the words so satisfactorily that at times one loses sight of it, since it becomes, as it were, an atmosphere in which the drama floats and the protagonists breathe and move. It is now twenty-one years old, and yet it cannot be regarded as old-fashioned. The choruses equal in vigour and realism those to which the Russian opera has accustomed us. The music of the leading rôles of Kozina and Lomikar picks out the two figures in clear and convincing contrast from end to end of the opera. The music of the prison scene is intensely poignant, but never hysterical. The whole Act is as truly felt as the parting scene between Boris Godunov and his son, and it never fails to move the audience to tears.

When first Kovarovic's opera appeared, it met with a good deal of superficial hostile criticism on account of the unconventionality of the subject. How, it was asked, could an audience be expected to interest itself in the fate of a document? The odour of musty parchment pervaded the whole work—and so on. But the public was not to be misled. It immediately recognised 'Psohlavci' as something large, forceful, and passionately human; something true and lasting of which it would not easily tire. Every time the opera is announced the Narodni Divadlo is packed from stalls to gallery. Had the work emanated from Russia or Italy we should have heard it in England by now. But we have to remember that Bohemian music has had to force its way through a cheveux-de-frise of German prejudice before it could reach to other lands. That accounts for the fact that such an excellent opera should have been restricted for so many years to its native town. Mahler, to do him justice, valued 'Psohlavci' very highly, and would have worked for its production in Vienna had he lived a few months longer. I am of opinion that, of all the operas I have recently heard in Prague, this one would be best worth the trouble and expense involved in transplantation.

A few days later I heard Kovarovic's second opera, 'At the old Bleaching-house,' which at first hearing seems so much more like an early work than 'Psohlavci.' It is not, strictly speaking, an opera, but a chain of scenes of national life, which bears the same relation to 'The Peasants' Charter' that a series of delicate water-colours might bear to a strongly-drawn, sombrely-tinted, crowded, but unified canvas. The subject has been adapted from a very popular novel dealing with rural life, 'Grannie' (Babicka), by Madame B. Nemcova. It is a charming study of ideal old age. The years and sorrows that have passed over Grannie's head have left her sound and sweet and mellow as a winter-pippin. Life has taught her so much tact and sympathy that she unconsciously breaks down all barriers of class and age. She reads the secrets of the young generation, and the one romance of her girlhood, which remains embalmed in her heart, is as fresh and green at eighty as at eighteen. In each Act we see her as a kind of fairy godmother, divining and smoothing away the troubles of rich and poor. The scenes reflect the country life of Bohemia nearly a century ago: a simple birthday party outside the picturesque old bleaching-house; the farewell of the conscripts; a charming winter scene which shows the girls of the village spinning in the firelight while Grannie tells them tales of her youth. 'How tame!' cry the votaries of 'Salome.' I answer, No. Homely, perhaps, but not in the least tame to those who can still be moved by normal emotions, by natural laughter and tears. In the music that is woven around these idyllic scenes there is plenty of vivacity, and not a touch of sickly sentimentality. In the art of colouring words Kovarovic is a master. Into this picture of a tranquil autumn, declining to cheerful winter, he has put a breath of spring. It might have proved insipid in the hands of a novice; but the composer combines with the heart of a poet, a vast experience of what will, or will not, pass muster on the stage.

It is difficult to say which of these two operas—'Psohlavci' or 'The old Bleaching-house'—draws the biggest audience in Bohemia; difficult, because on every occasion when one or the other is announced the house is crowded out, and relief performances have to be given within a few days to satisfy the demands of the public.

Kovarovic's operas stand midway between the old and new development of Czech dramatic music. There is a later tendency to pronounced naturalism and localism, best represented in a very striking work by Leos Janacek, 'Její Pastorkyna' ('Her Stepdaughter'), first produced at the Narodni Divadlo in May, 1916. This much-discussed drama of Moravian peasant-life I hope to describe in a later article.

On Saturday, November 15, a Purcell concert will be given by the Ashburton Choir and Orchestra, at 28, Red Lion Square, W.C. The programme will include a performance of 'Dido and Æneas' (concert version), choral and orchestral selections from 'King Arthur' and 'The Fairy Queen,' the 'Golden Sonata,' and songs with orchestra. The performance is one of several illustrative of Mr. Percy Scholes's lectures on British music, which take place in Red Lion Square on Thursday evenings.

ELGAR'S QUINTET FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS (OP. 84).

By H. C. COLLES.

The analyst, whether in chemistry or music, examines his substance to find out what it is made of, but in the latter case he must never lose sight of what it is; for it is the art and not the science of the thing which gives it value. And the musical analyst must also be an advocate; he must try to bring conviction that the thing exists apart from its ingredients. That is what makes it difficult to analyse the latest and greatest of Elgar's chamber works, the Quintet for pianoforte and strings in A, Op. 84. Not that there is any doubt about it. For my own part, when I first heard the Quintet at the end of a concert which had contained both Elgar's Violin Sonata and his String Quartet (Opp. 82 and 83) it brought a flood of new life to the senses. I felt that despite the beauties of the other two, here was something infinitely stronger, something which said what neither Elgar nor anyone else had said before, and said it right.

Then the score was published, and I sat down to the study of it. After all, what can one say? The features lie clear upon the page. There are no rhythmic intricacies to unravel, no strange harmonies to the appreciation of which the eye may help the ear. The strings are used for no 'curious effects'; the pianoforte technique is such that any decent player will master it in an hour or two. Here lies the difficulty: to separate the elements of its composition and examine each minutely in its own test-tube may be to send the reader away with the impression that after all 'there is nothing much in it,' it can all be made to look so very obvious.

The Quintet is essentially a work in which the things which count are not the things which one can quote. It is a work of relationships, not one of epigrams. The words which here connect the quotation of its salient features can give only the poorest suggestion of its main content. But that is only another way of saying that it is a work to play, not to talk about—in fact, that it is music.

The whole is contained in a framework of three movements, the middle one being an Adagio, so that all that bundle of subtle sensibilities which the greatest composers, and Elgar with them, have expressed under the label Scherzo find no place here. Apart from the actual connection of the movements by the use of the same subject-matter, one mood pervades and unifies the whole work, and the Adagio—which never actually uses subject-matter from either of the two other movements—both carries on emotional suggestions from the first movement and prefigures what is to come in the Finale. With this unity of feeling there is also a progress of expression. The Finale enriches and amplifies all that we have passed through in the earlier stages.

There is a sense of reserved power, of hidden possibilities, in the first sounds that we hear. The pianoforte propounds its theme softly in three octaves, while the detached figures of the strings mutter impatiently against it. (In this quotation and elsewhere the score is compressed):

Ex. 1. Moderato. ♩ = 76.
STRINGS.

Ex. 1. Moderato. ♩ = 76. STRINGS. The notation shows a string quartet with a piano accompaniment. The strings play a rhythmic pattern of eighth notes, while the piano provides harmonic support with chords and single notes. Dynamics include pp, mf, p, and pp. A cres. marking is present at the end.

In contrast with this idea is set a phrase for strings, the delicate chromaticism of which is like a plaintive question to the positive statement of the other:

Ex. 2. Str. espress.

Ex. 2. Str. espress. The notation shows a string quartet with a piano accompaniment. The strings play a chromatic phrase, while the piano provides harmonic support. Dynamics include p, f, and pp.

Without any expansion of these primary ideas the composer plunges straight into a vigorous Allegro with the following:

Ex. 3.
Strings.
Allegro.

Ex. 3. Strings. Allegro. ♩ = 132. The notation shows a string quartet with a piano accompaniment. The strings play a rhythmic pattern, while the piano provides harmonic support. Dynamics include f and pp.

The strings are massed in octaves on the broad rising theme, and the features given here are immediately developed at some length.

It has been remarked—and with some truth—that this theme is not a particularly powerful one. If one regards the movement as an Introduction and Allegro, and this as the official first subject of the latter, it is at least legitimate to suggest that it is hardly strong enough to bear the stress which its position gives it. But the context goes to show that this is not Elgar's view. He does not, in point of fact, throw his weight heavily on this idea. It is merely one in a chain of ideas which belong to a first subject group, including the Moderato themes (Exx. 1 and 2), both of which are equally important in the highly-developed movement before us. This theme (Ex. 3) rises to a passion of energy in a string passage con fuoco, above which the pianoforte declaims the six chords with which it opened, and the whole breaks off on an abrupt cadence (A minor), succeeded by a prolonged silence.

Next, the first phrase of Ex. 2 steals in again on the strings—moderato, molto espressivo. Its question cannot be disposed of by an explosion of energy; it begins to answer itself in what follows, a subdued episode (A major) in which the two violins lead, over a pianoforte accompaniment:

Ex. 4. VI. and Pfte. This musical example shows a string passage for Violins (VI.) and a piano accompaniment (Pfte.). The VI. part is in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 4/4 time signature. It features a series of chords and moving lines. The Pfte. part is in bass clef with the same key signature and time signature, providing a harmonic foundation with chords and a steady eighth-note accompaniment.

It is clear that the harmony here owes something to the suggestion of Ex. 2, and the broken rhythm to that of the string parts in Ex. 1. The threads of the moderato are already beginning to be drawn together. It sways to and fro with a feminine waywardness, heightened presently by the pizzicato chords which the lower strings add to the accompaniment. Presently with an inconspicuous modulation into E major the rhythm hardens, as it were, and a tune emerges which, if one may be forgiven an antiquated term, is the true 'second subject':

Ex. 5. This musical example shows a string passage in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 4/4 time signature. It features a series of chords and moving lines, representing the 'second subject' mentioned in the text.

All parts sink their identities in the expression of this peculiarly 'Elgarian' theme, with that 6th rising and falling again which has been Elgar's own ever since the days of 'Caractacus.' Hesitation and questioning give way before it; for the time being he revels in a wealth of tone—now fortissimo, now pianissimo—but always dwelling with fervour on this one feature.

However, the sense of disquiet comes again as the strings begin to break their rhythm into the detached phrases of Ex. 1, and the whole of that idea proposes itself for development in the key of B minor. The parts are reversed. The strings give out the cold plain-song melody while the pianoforte takes up the commentary. It assumes a more lyrical character in a form of which the pianoforte part is quoted here:

Ex. 6. This musical example shows a string passage and a piano accompaniment. The string part is in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 4/4 time signature, featuring a series of chords and moving lines. The piano accompaniment is in bass clef with the same key signature and time signature, providing a harmonic foundation with chords and a steady eighth-note accompaniment.

the strings sustaining the melody and enriching the harmony. After repetition and expansion the violoncello also introduces: which comes from the pianoforte part of Ex. 3, and each of the strings enters separately with this above the arpeggio accompaniment of the pianoforte. The plot thickens when again the impatient semiquavers are added above this in the form of:

Ex. 7. This musical example shows a string passage in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 4/4 time signature. It features a series of chords and moving lines, representing the introduction by the violoncello.

Ex. 8. This musical example shows a string passage in treble clef with a key signature of one sharp (F#) and a 4/4 time signature. It features a series of chords and moving lines, representing the addition of semiquavers to the previous theme.

and rises to an intense climax giusto dominated by these two features. The pianoforte again comes into a position of leadership with its theme from Ex. 3 (and Ex. 7) in bold chords. The strings break off as it marches in, grandioso; they renew their clamour in an agitated crescendo of the triplet quavers (see Ex. 3). Three times the pianoforte makes its assertion, each time in a more aggressive statement of a new harmonic sequence. The strings respond with increasingly vigorous passages until, with a deliberate ritenuto, they mount the scale to restore the theme (Ex. 3) in its entirety.

We are now technically at the return of the first subject heralding the recapitulation; emotionally what follows is the very crown and zenith of the development. The exuberant spirit of Ex. 3 is carried on and wonderfully expanded. Great use is made of the triplet figures in sequential passages begun thus :

and ranging widely over various keys, till at last the triplets get intensified into the form of the semiquaver figures in Ex. 1, and then Ex. 4 makes its reappearance. But its second coming is quite different from its first. There is no sudden cessation of energy, no interpolation of the questioning Ex. 2. On the contrary, Ex. 4 strikes in with bold chords in the pianoforte part, arriving on the crest of the wave. There is a pause, a sort of stoppage of the breath as its presence is recognised, and then strings and pianoforte alike burst into a strenuous presentation of it, fortissimo, con fuoco, as far as possible in mood from the hesitancy of its original statement. The climax is reached and the energy wanes, so that when Ex. 5 ultimately succeeds in its place it comes in a tender and reflective mood. Though sequences of key are comparatively unimportant in modern sonata-form we may note in passing that in this recapitulation Ex. 4 is mainly in E and Ex. 5 mainly in B, that is to say, avoiding the conventional return to the prevailing tonality (A).

The return is left for the Coda, which is concerned with the moderato themes (Exx. 1 and 2), gradually returning them to their elementary forms after all the powerful crises of the movement are past. The Coda begins with a version of Ex. 6, the rhythmic movement of which gradually subsides until over a tremolo A on the pianoforte Ex. 2 makes itself heard in its original form on the strings. When the pianoforte answers this with Ex. 1, also in its original form, the strings burst in with a dramatic sforzando of the semiquaver passages. But the protest fails; their murmurs die away as the melody sinks to a perfect cadence and the movement ends pianissimo.

The music is resumed in the Adagio (E major, 3-4 time) by the strings alone, in a calmer atmosphere than any which the first movement suggested. The viola leads with the principal melody here given, the two violins and violoncello harmonizing it very simply :

When the pianoforte enters it is to add an embroidery of quavers to the outline of the strings, and the tune is developed, more especially the features of its second phrase, at considerable length but without any departure from its principal key. A second thought is found in the next quotation, where the new departure of the pianoforte is checked by the more impulsive entry of the strings, in which something of the mood, though not the form, of Ex. 2 obtrudes upon and breaks the placid surface of the music :

(Compare the violoncello arpeggio in Exx. 11 and 2.)

From this arises a fresh tune in the first violin part which, while rhythmically connected with the principal melody (Ex. 10), has lost the serenity of its original :

It is taken up by the violoncello and leads to some development of the arpeggio figure from Ex. 11, and from these elements and more especially the syncopated rhythms of Ex. 11 the music flows in emotional complexity. Presently the viola again introduces the melody of Ex. 10, now in the key of F major and over an elaborate pianoforte accompaniment in triplet quavers. It is the first phrase of the tune which now bears the stress, and its character is heightened by a new harmonization which induces modulation through the flat keys. The tune soars aloft on one instrument after another, while the bass is constantly impelled downwards, giving a great expansion of view; presently the syncopated rhythms of Ex. 11 are joined to its features and a passionate climax is reached. At the culminating moment the rhythm tightens into a new figure of drooping paired quavers, the strings coinciding with the right-hand pianoforte part (here quoted):

Tempo giusto.

Ex. 13.

PIANO.

8va

and the strength ebbs through a long sinking sequence, poco a poco più tranquillo al Tempo primo.

From this point to the end of the movement there is no new material, though the old is treated in the light of past experience and the recapitulation is very far from being a repetition. The Tempo 1^{mo} is of course the full return of Ex. 10 with its first harmony played broadly by the strings over a pianoforte accompaniment in triplet quavers. The discussion of Exx. 11 and 12 with the ideas arising from them is very much condensed, the latter being limited to one emphatic statement. The principal theme (Ex. 10) has so burnt itself into the composer's imagination that he cannot bear to be parted from it for very long, and he seems in haste to reach the Coda, where he can ruminate over its features with affectionate recollection. In the course of the Coda the violoncello arpeggio from Ex. 11 mingles with the dreams of the principal tune, and just before the end features from Exx. 11 and 10, the beginning of the one and the cadence of the other, are merged together in a final reconciliation.

It is significant that the Finale opens Andante with the subject-matter of Ex. 2; thus not only carrying us back to an important aspect of the first movement, but also strengthening the impression of an identity, already hinted at, existing between that theme and the passage with which the Adagio ended (Ex. 11).

Its question is again propounded, first gently, then forcibly by the strings, and the pianoforte, taking up the sinuous arpeggio of the violoncello, sweeps it into a semiquaver figure which rushes through an accelerando of four bars to an emphatic chord. A rhetorical pause is followed by the bold entry of the idea which now takes possession of the course of events, and is 'the conclusion of the whole matter':

Ex. 14. STRINGS. Allegro. ♩ = 126. Con dignita.

PIANO.

8ves.

cres.

Played in octaves by the strings, with the bald support of detached phrases of chords on the pianoforte, its strong major character is at once unmistakable. Immediately upon this plain statement follows an expansion in which the melody leaps by ever-widening intervals, and the prevalent rhythm of the first bar becomes more and more insistent. A whirling figure of arpeggio grows up in the pianoforte part as the strings expound this rhythm. The idea is driven home by a firmly-knit re-statement of the tune (Ex. 14), leading to a climax at which Elgar's favourite Nobilmente makes its appearance as a direction for the first time in this score. From this point the tide of energy again recedes, and passing through a diminuendo in which the melodic contours become less precipitous, the theme at last evaporates in the upper registers of the strings. The pianoforte now enters with a new subject:

Ex. 15.

simile.

Pfte. p

Str.

less determined in character than the last, but impelled by a nervous, restless motion. The strings join in, and the chromatic sequence of its later bars is developed until the strings brush it aside with running arpeggio figures in triplet quavers leading to a resolute passage in which the two forces, strings and pianoforte, answer one another antiphonally :

This recalls something of the latter part of the first movement (compare Ex. 9), and combining with features from Ex. 15 brings presently a resumption of the principal theme (Ex. 14), now in the dominant key, E major. It is only a brief reference; the composer turns from it almost petulantly with an impulsive new figure :

and the cadence in the key of F sharp minor, towards which the music takes its course, is reached by a passage which includes a noteworthy figure in the viola part :

We now reach the middle section where development of the main material would normally be expected, but this is refused. All of what follows until the definite return of the principal subject is in the nature of a big parenthesis. It might be compared to the middle subject of the old Rondo form, but its ideas are definitely reminiscent of the course which has been traversed in the earlier movements. A long mysterious passage over a sustained C sharp in which the parts move about in shadowy arpeggio figures of varying shapes prepares the way. Then a version of Ex. 1 appears in hollow-sounding chords. It is dismissed with a reference to Ex. 17, and the viola figure of Ex. 18, and then the two violins con sordino suggest the ghost of Ex. 5 with a tenderness that marks the composer's special love for its outline. It too is interrupted by the viola figure (Ex. 18) running up the scale and shifting the tonality, but it persists till a passage of strong declamatory chords dispels it. The vision of the past is driven away by the return of Ex. 14 with its broad daylight character banishing the night, for though it enters softly in the lower strings it takes complete possession at once and passes direct to further development of its own features. Nevertheless, save for one spasmodic fortissimo the general colour of the recapitulation is subdued. As in the first movement, Elgar refuses to repeat the same music in the same mood; he shows us all the time fresh aspects of his thought. He has a long course before him; from this point onwards he continually gathers an accumulating strength until the work ends in a blaze of light. Thematically he passes in review all the aspects of the first part of the movement, included in the quotations Exx. 14, 15, and 16, finally reaching an apotheosis of them in the reappearance of Ex. 15 grandioso and a last triumphant reference to Ex. 14.

The difference of workmanship between this movement and the first have by now been made sufficiently clear. While the first takes a number of extraneous ideas of more or less equal importance, draws them into relation with one another and shows their cohesion, the Finale is dominated by the overmastering personality of one idea, to which all others not only in its immediate environment, but in what has gone before, are made tributary. In order to bring out this fact it has been necessary to pass over many details on which it would be interesting to dwell. I must hope that this sketch of the structural outline of the whole Quintet has shown that, far from being a fortuitous patch-work in sonata form, the work is sustained by a single emotional impulse, multiform in its expression but constant in its aim. Often we find the composer looking about him, sometimes we have seen him look back. But always he presses forward, and keeping always the end in view he leads us on till at last, the end reached, he leaves us with the sense of a great and satisfying experience.

Interludes.

Here are three recent utterances on a fact so familiar that most of us have long since forgotten it :

The mention of singers, by the way, reminds me that they are, generally speaking, the least musically educated of all executants.—(Sir Henry Wood, in the Sunday Evening Telegram of August 17.)

My own objection to the prima donna is that, as a rule, she represents merely tone and technique without intelligence. I am sure that some day an American genius will invent an instrument that will be to singing what the pianola is to the piano; and then the prima donna's occupation will be gone.—(Mr. Ernest Newman, in 'A Musical Motley'.)

All the great song-writers of the world have laboured in vain so far as the diva is concerned.—(Mr. Edwin Evans, quoted in the Observer of October 5.)

To Mr. Newman's prophecy I venture to add a rider to the effect that the automatic prima donna ('The Divaphone') will have but a short life. The public performance of vocal gymnastics is an absurdity that dies hard simply because a large section of the public will swallow anything given them by a star whose Press agent knows his job. A string of meaningless roulades emitted by a well boomed, beaming prima donna has the advantage of the personal appeal. The star-worshipper, herded with a few thousand of his kind, all radiating enthusiasm, and with their slender critical faculties in abeyance, will swallow these roulades, and open his mouth for more. The same series of notes, produced (in the drawing-room of 'The Laburnums') by the most faultless mechanical process, will leave him unmoved: for the first time he will know them for what they are—a super-Concone study, set to a shred of Italian text. To the musician there can be no more depressing phenomenon than the recent London success of Tetrizzini. Her arrival from abroad was heralded in the usual way. The daily Press broke out into a kind of laudatory rash with paragraphic eruptions informing us of Madame's delight at being once more among her English friends after five years' absence abroad.

She was met at Victoria by a military band, like a returning conqueror, bouquets were presented, and everybody was photographed, smiling widely. An amusing feature in connection with this railway station function was the invitation to music critics,—at least we may assume that it was issued to critics in general. In an entertaining article in the Evening Standard of September 18, Mr. Ernest Newman told us that he had been invited, and it is difficult to imagine an agent desiring the presence of a solitary critic. If he did, he could not easily find one less susceptible to the prima donna fetish than Mr. Newman. The critics, then, received a special pass for admission to the reserved platform at which the Great One was to arrive from the Continent. 'Many notabilities' said the covering letter, 'English and Italian, will be there, also Major Mackenzie Rogan, with the band of the Coldstream Guards The band will play at the Savoy Hotel, and if you are able to be present at the Savoy also, an informal reception will be held there, at which we shall be very pleased to see you.' As Mr. Newman was (wisely) not able to be present at the Savoy, the informal reception presumably fell through. But perhaps the letter didn't mean exactly what it said.

The paragraphs then took a new turn, and an anxious world was told that Madame would rest her voice for a whole week before her great Albert Hall concert, speaking only when necessary, and then in a whisper—a plan worth the attention of a good many people known to you and me. This period of self-denial was later extended to cover her provincial tour. Of the concert itself, of the brilliance and fluency of Madame's twiddling, of her 'floral tributes,' of her taking a bloom from one of them and graciously bestowing it on her accompanist, of her encores—were not these things written, at far greater length than they deserved, in the daily and other Press? 'She came tripping on,' says one, 'with all those pretty gestures of innocent surprise which only your great diva knows how to use, and her little gasp of pleasure when she saw the multitude of faces upturned towards her drew a responsive gasp of sympathy from her admirers'—Oh, la! la! la!

Meanwhile, we have to remind ourselves that the finest orchestra imaginable, playing the finest music in the same Hall that afternoon, would have created very little stir in or out of the Press, and would have drawn an audience not of ten thousand but of considerably less than half that number. There would have been few, if any, encores, no 'floral tributes,' and no gush.

It is a platitude to say that all this is somehow wrong. The question is, Can it be put right? In the long run, of course, such an anomalous state of things can never be altered save by an improvement in public taste. But a few things might be done to hasten that improvement, and the first and most important step should be taken by the music critics. The programme, so far as Madame was concerned, consisted of items of little or no musical value—'Fors è lui' from 'Traviata' and the Mad Scene from Ambroise Thomas's 'Hamlet,' with, for encores, about half-a-dozen more or less banal ballads, including 'Somewhere a voice is calling.'

A concert with such poor stuff as the main dish deserved to be dismissed with bare mention. If the critics felt moved to add comment, they should have spoken of the choice of songs with the candour they would have used had the same piffle been sung by a débutante. But so tender are we to established favourites, that a few notices of the following type would have provoked an outcry, perhaps a libel action, and not improbably some assault and battery:

At the Albert Hall, yesterday, Madame Tetrizzini gave a concert to a huge audience. She was in brilliant form, but is apparently unaware that a fine voice cannot transmute rubbish into good music. Much more enjoyable were the violin-playing of Madame Renée Chemet, the pianoforte solos and accompanying of M. Pietro Cimara, and the singing of Mr. Frank Mullings.

A vast audience yesterday heard Meyerbeer's 'O Paradiso,' admirably sung by Mr. Frank Mullings, and Pugnani's 'Prelude and Allegro' and 'Rhapsody Piedmontaise' for violin, beautifully played by Madame Renée Chemet. Mr. Pietro Cimara gave some enjoyable pianoforte solos, and discreetly accompanied Madame Tetrizzini, who also ran.

Madame Tetrizzini has kindly returned to England, after five years' absence. Since her last appearance here she has apparently learned nothing, and forgotten nothing. Either her own musical taste is deplorable or (what is worse still) she thinks ours is. On no other grounds can we account for her choice of songs, especially of such a thing as 'Somewhere a voice is calling'—an all-too-successful ballad that even our own tenth-rate singers dare no longer inflict on us. We must frankly express our resentment at a choice which is an insult to English music.

If we want to realise how far famous singers are inferior in culture to other soloists, we have only to draw up a few instrumental programmes of similar calibre to that of Madame. What should we say if Moiseiwitsch asked us to come to Queen's Hall to hear him play the following? :

Variations on 'Home, sweet Home'	Thalberg
'Sparkling Dewdrops'	... Brinley Richards
Variations on 'Alice, where art thou'	Ascher
Three 'Etudes de la Velocite'	... Czerny
'The Maiden's Prayer'	... Badarzewska
'The Sleigh Bells'	... Ezra Read

Our music critics should have treated Madame's programme as they would the above, if played by a pianist of repute. At present, a prima donna may steal a horse, while an instrumentalist dare not look over the hedge.

A further step in the direction of putting the diva in the background, which is her rightful place, will be taken every time a choral or orchestral conductor shows the public that a fine and attractive programme can be carried through without her. This can be done by offering her an engagement, and then censoring her songs, suggesting in the place of ballads and worn-out operatic fireworks a group of fine modern examples. There will be 'nothing doing,' and the engagement will then go to a singer who is something more than a bundle of vanity with an ingenious vocal attachment. The result will be better music at about a quarter the cost, and the two singers will receive exactly what they are worth.

Sir Henry Wood's finding will be endorsed by any of us who have frequently been in a mixed company of musicians. We have almost invariably found the narrowest outlook, the least educated taste, and the greatest pretensions amongst the singers. Their sight-reading powers have long since been a byword.

As musicians presumably start fair, we must assume that these deficiencies are a result of the vocalists' training. Sir Henry Wood, in the article quoted above, went on to say what he demanded of his singing pupils in the way of attendance at chamber and orchestral concerts. This kind of training is necessary to all students, but none need it quite so much as the singers. Very early in their career, the budding pianists, violinists, and organists get in touch with a great deal of fine music in the ordinary course of study. They are soon busy with Bach and Beethoven, and for the recreative side of their work there is a wealth of excellent music by Grieg, Chopin, and the minor tone-poets generally. But at an early stage in the singer's pupillage his or her (especially her) thoughts lightly turn, not to the vocal equivalent of the lyrical pieces of Grieg, or the jolly little dances of Bach, but to the royalty ballads, and there they stay, unless the pupil aspires to coloratura singing, in which case she acquires a few threadbare operatic extracts of due floridity, and of no human or musical interest, and there she stays. Armed with these, and a Press agent skilful and shameless in his use of the big drum, she pervades the larger centres of population, a rolling stone that disproves the proverb by gathering a great deal of moss.

Where would the art be to-day if we had to adapt Mr. Evans's remark, and say of instrumentalists and conductors that all the great composers have laboured in vain so far as they are concerned? We may reasonably complain that many of them show a lack of enterprise in their programmes, but we must credit them with choosing fine music in the bulk. Nor are they so eaten up with vanity as the singer: if they are, they manage to hide the fact. In spite of constant public adulation, they are able to come on to the platform like level-headed men and women. I have not so far seen them enter 'with pretty innocent gestures of surprise,' and even Pachmann doesn't give a 'little gasp of pleasure' when he sees our upturned faces. Like a practical man, he cuts that, and sets to work making sure the piano-stool is the right height, and that the arrangements generally are all that can be desired.

Nor do singers with a big repertory of fine songs make much fuss. In acquiring the repertory they have learned something of the relative importance of the singer and the composer, and the more they study the more modest they become. No military band salutes them when they arrive or depart, and their floral tributes make a poor show beside Madame's. But they don't worry. They know that if such gifts went to the best all-round artists the diva would get the surprise of her life. She would see herself passed over in favour of players in the orchestra, and in a good choral concert a representative of each section of the chorus would be called on to receive tokens. These players and singers of the rank and file have got at the very heart and marrow of more fine music than the diva has ever dreamt of.

The entertaining memoirs of Colonel Mapleson give us many examples of the colossal vanity of the vocal star. The Colonel declares that he could get his singers to work only by treating them as children. Sopranos and tenors seem to have been always the vainest and least reliable—so much so, that one wonders if there is any physical connection between a high voice and a swelled head. Read Mapleson's book and you will be astounded. If I had more space at my disposal I would give a few extracts as samples. I will end with one—not the worst, but the funniest. Fancelli was a tenor with even more than a tenor's share of vanity. He called himself 'the absolute first tenor,' setting special store by the 'absolute.' He once saw his rival Campanini's name on a poster, followed by the words 'Primo Tenore Assoluto,' and promptly attacked the bill with his walking-stick, endeavouring to efface the 'assoluto.' On this adjective hangs another tale. He was so illiterate that he could little more than write his own name in a large, childish hand. His correspondence and autographing in admirers' albums was done for him by a member of the chorus. Being asked to sign the album of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, he managed his name, making only two mistakes—omitting the c and one l. He then added 'Primo Tenore,' which he had also learned to write. He should have stopped there, but, being a tenor, how could he be expected to realise his limitations? Greatly daring, he attempted to add his favourite 'Assoluto.' Down went a capital A, followed by sss. This looked wrong, somehow, so he obliterated the third s, lost his head, upset the ink over the page, and gave up the job. His signature stands to-day, for all the world to see :

FANELI PRIMO TENORE ASS.

Well, there's many a true word spoken in earnest.
'FESTE.'

ADELINA PATTI, 1843-1919.

BY HERMAN KLEIN.

The Age of Great Singers closed with the 19th century. Let there be no mistake about that. It is gone, never to revive or return; and the last of the race disappeared when Adelina Patti, Baroness Cederström, died at Craig-y-Nos Castle, South Wales, at the ripe age of seventy-six, on Saturday morning, September 27. She died, as the lawyers say, 'without issue,' leaving as sole heir her husband, whose hand she clasped as she breathed her last. But in her art she left no successor, nor is it possible to perceive how or by whom another link can be forged to continue the chain.

The story of her life* would require far more space than these columns hold at my disposal, and I shall make no attempt to tell it. It is not so much the story that matters as the consideration of the artist herself—what she was, what she embodied and stood for in the final decades of the school which acknowledged her as its greatest surviving exemplar. To understand her pre-eminence certain things must be remembered, and, as everyone has not the necessary time to explore the files of the Musical Times for the past sixty years and verify the praises sung therein (never mind who might be the editor or the critic of the moment) concerning Adelina Patti, I propose to recall briefly some of the facts for the benefit of the present reader.

Let us remember to begin with that it needed something quite hors ligne in the way of a singer to take Covent Garden by storm and start a London craze in the year 1861. The vogue of Italian opera, nurtured by fashion at home and the most brilliant vocal stars to be had from abroad, had then attained its highest pitch. Jenny Lind had retired long before, and it so happened that in that very year Grisi, the diva of the period, was to bid her last farewell to the stage, which she did. Who would be gifted enough to step into the shoes of women like these? The question was the harder to answer because those were the days of great singing, and the public and the critics of the metropolis were more difficult to please than any other in the world. The public paid the price; the critics could 'handle' vocalists as those of to-day handle orchestras, symphonies, and the Russian ballet—that is, they knew something about them. The ordeal would be a tremendous one for whomsoever might attempt it.

Of course it was the unexpected that happened. Just as all eyes were turned towards the Continent, America was sending us over an obscure little prima donna of eighteen summers, whose name had caught the ear of James Henry Mapleson (acting for E. T. Smith, of Drury Lane), but who on arrival was to be diverted by her brother-in-law, Maurice Strackosch, to the more aristocratic Bow Street establishment of Mr. Frederick Gye. A more marvellous stroke of luck never fell to the lot of operatic impresario! We all know how on the 14th May, 1861, Adelina Patti made her début here as Amina in 'La Sonnambula,' and forthwith turned the head of the entire population. Unheralded in any shape or form, she won her public—and her critics—by sheer force of very rare and precious gifts, and bowled over every rival (and there were one or two dangerous ones) alike then and for ever afterwards.

The preparatory process antecedent to this event always calls to my mind that which attends the rearing of a queen bee. It was a case of special feeding from the outset. Born of Italian parents, both opera singers, and very nearly born in the Madrid opera-house itself, Adelina Patti spent all her child life in New York amidst a family of operatic workers and the undiluted atmosphere of the Italian lyric stage. She sang arias almost as soon as she could babble words. A vocal prodigy at the age of seven; touring the United States as such until she was fourteen; resting and studying until she was within three months of seventeen, she then came out at the Academy of Music (May 24, 1859) a fully-equipped and delightful artist, mistress already of some fourteen rôles of various calibres, and quickly won an American reputation as the most brilliant and remarkable young prima donna of the day.

Fourteen rôles at the age of seventeen! Imagine such a thing! Among them, too, the heavy as well as the light, Leonora and Valentina no less than Zerlina, Gilda, and Linda. Such a tour de force had never been done before. Yet it was no miracle. It was simply the most amazing instance on record of concentrated operatic nutrition working upon a precocious musical organization of the rarest kind, plus a beautiful voice so directed by nature that it required little or no teaching to make it accomplish all that a human voice could do. Ordinary 'coaching,' stage training (a mere trifle to the born actress), and sheer experience acquired like a flash—these things did the rest.

* She was born at Madrid, February 10, 1843, and brought up and trained in New York.

Thus it was that the Adelina Patti who suddenly dazzled London nearly sixty years ago came here a ready-developed genius, a petite but exquisitely-moulded and perfect specimen of the 'prima donna assoluta' of the period. But she quickly began another upward scale of progress. Unspoiled by success, she profited by criticism, improved the parts that she knew, added others to them, grew in artistic strength and stature, and having once inherited the title of 'La Diva' (or, as her humbler English admirers preferred to call her, 'The Queen of Song'), took excellent care that no one else, whether it were Tietjens or Christine Nilsson, or Pauline Lucca, should be allowed to deprive her of it. Her triumphs extended to every operatic centre in Europe, as well as, in course of time, those of North and South America, where she earned unprecedented fees and became a very wealthy woman.

Wherein lay the greatness that lifted her head and shoulders above all the other operatic sopranos of her time, that constituted her the legitimate successor of Catalani, Malibran, Pasta, Sontag, Jenny Lind, and Grisi? Perhaps it was that she combined in herself some of the qualities—the best qualities—of them all. Never, assuredly, was talent or supremacy more unquestioned; never were personal fascination and charm, coupled with the utmost beauty of voice and technical perfection, more universally recognised. Her versatility was extraordinary. Long before she became a convincing interpreter of serious or tragic parts, her wonderful aptitude and sense of dramatic fitness enabled her to act them effectively. Eduard Hanslick, the Viennese critic, considered her a born comédienne, and credited her with a marvellous intuition for the right accent and gesture. He agreed that Rossini, Meyerbeer, and Gounod were absolutely justified in thinking her the perfect Rosina, the ideal Dinorah, the wholly exquisite Marguerite. Yet these were but a tithe of the rôles wherein she was incomparable.

I heard Patti first at Covent Garden in 1872 as Zerlina in 'Don Giovanni'; later on in 'Lucia,' 'Martha,' 'La Traviata,' 'Linda di Chamouni,' 'Romeo,' and 'Rigoletto'; then on her benefit nights in 'Les Huguenots' and 'Il Trovatore'; later still in 'Dinorah,' 'L'Etoile du Nord,' 'Faust,' 'Semiramide,' and 'Aïda,' which last she created in this country in 1876. (I cannot recollect hearing her as Amina, the part in which she made her début here). She had at this period an organ of unexampled loveliness; her vocalization was the perfection of animated grace, elegance, brilliancy, and artistic refinement; every note, every phrase was infused with a quality at once individual and inimitable. Her suave Mozart singing was a miracle of unaffected simplicity; her Rossinian rousades and her cadenzas were as remarkable for their clearness as their ease of execution, and—strange fact—they were always poured forth with an élan that made them sound as if extemporized. Unapproached and unrivalled, she continued to sing regularly at Covent Garden until 1884.

It was after this that the character of her career underwent a change. The era of American tours set in; her fees and her earnings rose to proportions hitherto unknown. Gye at Covent Garden had for years paid her only £200 a night. Mapleson and Abbey in the United States now paid her £1,000 a night and even more. In the Argentine her fee and share of profits rose to £1,500. From December till April she sang abroad; the rest of the year she lived quietly at Craig-y-Nos Castle or else gave concerts in London and the provinces, receiving £500 for each of the latter and 800 guineas when she sang at the Albert Hall. This kind of thing went on for twenty years. She made her last appearance in opera at Covent Garden in 1895, her final trip to America in 1903-04, and her farewell to public life at the Albert Hall in December, 1906. Practically speaking, the younger musical generation of to-day never heard her. But it knows that her voice, despite her sixty years' hard work, remained a marvel of freshness to the end.

Thus, when Patti sang in the concert-room there was always good reason for going to hear her; for she was a genuine survival of the last and the fittest. An exceptionally delightful concert artist—she sang Handelian airs with plenty of bravura, appearing at the Birmingham Festival in 1861 and at the Handel Festivals frequently—she could here exhibit her amazing all-round talent in everything, from a big operatic air down to a Scottish ballad, and her own unique delivery of 'Home, sweet home.' She was the first singer to draw crowds by thousands to the Albert Hall. The huge place had never been used for vocal stars and Labour meetings before, and might with advantage be left unused for such purposes now. It was built with an artistic aim, and to listen to Patti, even at the last, was like taking a lesson in the highest manifestations of the vocal art. That can scarcely be said of the prime donne and others who have since sought to imitate her methods, even down to those personal mannerisms which were charming and natural in Patti, but which no one else can copy with success.

Adelina Patti never sang in an opera by Wagner, but she loved his music with a real and fervent love, went frequently to Bayreuth, and sang his 'Träume' on the concert-platform. She came of the Italian stock whose pupils the master expressly chose as the right kind of singers to create his later music-dramas. One of the most gifted and distinguished of these was Lilli Lehmann, and in her book, 'How to Sing,' she writes of Patti as follows:

Although she was a Spaniard by birth and an American by early adoption, she was, so to speak, the greatest Italian singer of my time. All was absolutely good, correct, and flawless, the voice like a bell that you seemed to hear long after its singing had ceased.

Yet she could give no explanation of her art, and answered all her colleagues' questions concerning it with an 'Ah, je n'en sais rien!'

She possessed, unconsciously, as a gift of nature, a union of all those qualities that all other singers must attain and possess consciously. Her vocal organs stood in the most favourable relations to each other.

Her talent, and her remarkably trained ear, maintained control over the beauty of her singing and of her voice. The fortunate circumstances of her life preserved her from all injury. The purity and flawlessness of her tone, the beautiful equalization of her whole voice, constituted the magic by which she held her listeners entranced. Moreover, she was beautiful and gracious in appearance.

The accent of great dramatic power she did not possess; yet I ascribe this more to her intellectual indolence than to her lack of ability.

Such a tribute to Patti's genius, from such a source, is worth recalling at this moment.

DEBUSSY AS CRITIC.*

A CONCERT OF SPANISH MUSIC.

On October 29 last we listened to some Spanish music played by real Spaniards. For a large majority of people this was of the nature of a revelation, as with the exception of some vague memories of performances of it at exhibitions the music of Spain is very little known in France. The public had gone out of curiosity to 'La Feria'; the names of 'La Macorona,' 'La Soledad,' &c., had sufficed to keep up a taste for things Iberian which had not however been directed solely to the music. And yet on these occasions one heard that admirable folk-music which, by reason of a wealth of imagination combined with a variety of rhythm, is the finest in the world. This opulence seems even to have accounted for the tardy development of that 'other' music. A certain delicacy restrained the professional musicians from enclosing so many beautiful improvisations within iron-bound formulæ. For a long time they contented themselves composing those popular 'Zarzuelas' in which the sound of guitars ascends almost unaltered from the street to the stage. But the rugged beauty of the old Moorish cantilenas remained unforgettable while the fine traditions of such men as Escobada, Morales, teachers both of them of the great Vittoria, famous names all three of the Spanish Renaissance, were unremembered.

There seemed no reason for any change. What more was needed in a land where the very stones on the highways dazzle the eyes with a voluptuous glitter and where the voices of the muleteers are instinct with accents of the sincerest passion? Why need one be astonished by last century's decadence, and should it even be designated as decadent when folk-music still retained its beauty! Wise and blest will be the nations that shall jealously keep these wild flowers protected from classic depredators.

It was at a period in our own epoch that a pleiad of composers grouped themselves together and formed the resolution to exploit the great treasures lying dormant within the folk-music of Ancient Spain.

Among these let us retain the memory of Isaac Albeniz. At first an incomparable virtuoso, he acquired later a wonderful knowledge of the métier of a composer. Without in any way resembling Liszt he yet recalls him by the abundant wealth of his ideas. He was the first to turn to account the varied melancholy and the special wit and humour of his native province. He was born in Catalonia. There are few pieces of music that excel 'El Albaicin' from the fifth book of 'Iberia.' It evokes the perfumed atmosphere of Spanish evenings redolent of the scent of carnations and aguardiente It recalls a memory of muffled sounds of a guitar, with its nervous tremors and brusque accessions of sound. Without any exact reproduction of folk-melodies, it is the work of one who had absorbed and assimilated them until they had filtered into his music leaving no distinct traces of their passage.

'Eritana,' from the fourth book of 'Iberia,' reproduces the joy of early morning, the chance discovering of an inn where the wine is fresh and good. A varying stream of people passes along; the merry peals of laughter are punctuated by the sound of Basque trumpet calls. Music has never recorded such a diversity of brilliantly-coloured images; one feels one's eyes closing as if dimmed from having looked at too many pictures.

There is a great deal more in these books of 'Iberia.' Albeniz poured all that was best of himself into them. They manifest an attention for detail carried to exaggeration and prompted by those generous impulses that caused him almost to squander his ideas. The other composers followed the same paths without overtaking Albeniz; only his influence was very plainly French while theirs seemed inclined to be German,—at any rate, in form.

'La Procession del Rocio,' a symphonic poem by Turina, is apportioned like a beautiful fresco. Ingenious alternations of light and shade render it easy of comprehension in spite of its dimensions. Turina's work, like that of Albeniz, is strongly impregnated with folk-music. The methods of development he uses are still dubious, and he finds it useful to borrow from illustrious dealers in these wares. It is certain that Turina could do very well without them, and might listen to more familiar voices nearer home.

'Ami tierra' ('To my country'), a poetical Murcian suite of Perez Casas, saturated with Eastern languor, contains some novel orchestral combinations in which a persistent seeking after colour is nearly always justified by the sincerity of the impressions.

'La Divina Comedia,' of Conrado del Campo, approximates itself to Strauss's symphonic poems on account of its strength of construction. It is to be regretted that we were only able to hear the concluding parts. . . .

S.I.M. (December 1, 1913).

MOUSSORGSKY'S 'THE CHILDREN'S NURSERY.'

This title is given to a series of seven songs, each of which depicts a scene of child-life. The whole is a chef-d'œuvre.

Moussorgsky is not well-known in France. We can, of course, excuse ourselves by saying that he is not any better known in Russia. He was born at Karevo (Central Russia) in 1839; he died in the Nicolas Military Hospital at Petersburg, in 1881. It can be seen by these dates that he had little time to lose in order to become a genius; he did not lose any, and he has left indelible traces in the memories of those who love him or who will love him some day. No one has addressed himself to what is best in us with tenderer or more penetrating accents; he is unique, and on account of his unaffected art, devoid of all withering formulæ, he will continue to remain unique. Never has such a refined sensibility used such simple means for revealing itself. It resembles the art of a strange savage discovering music by the tracks of his own impressions; there is never any question either of any particular kind of form, or at any rate the form is so many-sided that it is impossible to connect it with any authenticated, or what one might call administrative forms. It is held together by, and composed of, a succession of little touches bound by mysterious fetters and by a gift of luminous clairvoyance; occasionally Moussorgsky evokes a vision of restless, shuddering spectres which takes possession of one's being and almost wrings the heart with anguish. 'The Children's Nursery' contains the prayer said by the little girl before going to sleep, in which the actions, the tender perplexity of a child's mind, and even the charming way little girls have of showing off before grown-ups, are recorded in a tone of feverish accuracy that is peculiar to this song. Every word of the 'Doll's Lullaby' seems to have been divined. It is a wonderful assimilation of the special faculty possessed by children of imagining scenes out of fairyland; the termination of this lullaby is so soothingly soporific that the little raconteuse is lulled to sleep by her own stories. There is also the terrible little boy astride a stick, who transforms the room into a battlefield, breaking here an arm and there a leg of the poor defenceless chairs. These deeds are not done without a certain amount of personal injury! And then there are screams, tears, and a good-bye to happiness! But the injuries are not serious two seconds on his mother's lap, kisses that make him well again, and—the battle recommences and the chairs once more know not where to hide themselves. All these little dramas, I repeat, are set to music of an extreme simplicity; a chord suffices to Moussorgsky that would seem commonplace to Monsieur (I cannot remember his name!), or such a perfectly natural modulation as would appear strange to Monsieur (as above). We shall have more to say another time about Moussorgsky; he has numerous claims to our regard.

* Other contributions to this series have appeared in the July, August, and November, 1918, issues of the Musical Times.

Madame Marie Olenine sang these songs at the last concert of the Société Nationale in a manner that would have satisfied Moussorgsky himself, if I may be permitted to make this affirmation in his name.

Revue Blanche (April 15, 1901).

Translated by Mrs. L. Shirley Liebich (Copyright).

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS.

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

I.—WILLIAM NEWARK.

Notwithstanding the researches of many painstaking historians of English music, the biographical data to be found recorded in regard to the great English masters of the period 1485-1545 may be regarded as meagre in the extreme. For instance, the details of the lives of Newark, Burton, Cornish, Crane, Aston, Pigot, Ludford, Taverner, Farthing, Gwinneth, Redford, Sturton, Whytbrooke, and others, have eluded previous investigators, and hence musical readers will, I am sure, be glad to learn new facts as to these worthies. Although it is only by the properly-organized help of a band of skilful investigators that we may reasonably expect to pierce the obscurity which has so long veiled the personalities of many of those early Tudor composers, yet it is to be hoped that the present series of articles will be helpful, especially as the information is gleaned at first hand from Patent Rolls, State Papers, and other official sources. Fortunately, much of the music of those old English masters has escaped the ravages of time, and not a little of it has been edited by careful musicologists like Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, Mr. Barclay Squire, Dr. R. R. Terry, Mr. H. B. Collins, Mr. Royle Shore, and others. But as to their biographies, as Dr. Ernest Walker well puts it in his commendable 'History of Music in England' (1907), 'the information we possess is but scanty, and dates have often to be supplied approximately, if at all.'

Let us commence with William Newark, who was Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal from 1493 till his resignation in September, 1509. Seven of his vocal compositions are included in the Fayrfax volume preserved in the British Museum, one of which—for three voices—has been printed by Burney, while another ('Thus musing in my mind') has been published by Messrs. Novello.

William Newark was a native of Newark-on-Trent, where he was born circa 1450. He became a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in 1477, and served as such under Edward IV., Edward V., Richard III., Henry VII., and the first year of Henry VIII. He must soon have got into favour, for in 1479 we find him in possession of a corrody* in the monastery of St. Mary, Thetford, a fact made known by an entry on the Patent Rolls of November 28, 1480. Four years later his services were recognized in a more substantial form, and he was given a grant for life of a yearly rent of £20 accruing from the King's manor of Bletchingly, Surrey. This grant is entered on the Patent Rolls, 2 Richard III., and is dated April 6, 1485.

Gilbert Banestre, Master of the Children, resigned his office on September 29, 1486, but retained three valuable corrodies till his death on August 19, 1487. One of these corrodies was that in the Monastery of St. Benet, Holme, Norfolk; and on September 1, 1487, King Henry VII. granted it to Newark for life. Meantime, Laurence Squire, Chaplain to the King, and Canon of the Collegiate Church of St. Mary, Warwick, was appointed Master of the Children at a salary of forty marks a year, on September 29, 1486. This, however, was only a temporary arrangement, and on the death of Squire, May 30, 1493, William Newark was given the Mastership—the patent for which was formally enrolled on September 17. On

* A corrody was a right of sustenance, or a certain refection of victual and provision for one's maintenance, in an Abbey or Monastery, and frequently compounded for by a yearly pension to the recipient.

From a Photograph by Arthur Weston, 16 & 17, Poultry, E.C. 2.

Very truly yours
E. E. Cooper

the previous New Year's Day (January 1, 1493), Newark was given the then not inconsiderable sum of twenty shillings 'for making of a song,' as is recorded in the Household Book of Henry VII., 1491-1505, under date of January 6 (B. Mus., Add. MSS., 7099, folio 7).

During the Christmas festivities of 1505-6, and again in 1506-7 and 1507-8, Newark had to superintend and devise the musical entertainments at Court. His patent as Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal was renewed under Henry VIII. on June 4, 1509, but he fell seriously ill in the early autumn of the same year, and died in the second week of November. His will is dated November 5, 1509, and it was proved on December 13 (Rochester Wills, Book 6, folio 262). His body was laid at rest in the porch of Greenwich Church.

The titles of Newark's vocal compositions in the Fairfax volume in the British Museum are as follows: 'The farther I go, the more behind' (2 voices); 'What causeth me woful thoughts?' (2 voices); 'So far, I trow, from remedy' (2 voices); 'O my desire, what aileth thee?' (2 voices); 'But why am I so abused?' (3 voices); 'Your counterfeiting with double dealing' (3 voices); 'Thus musing in my mind' (3 voices).

II.—DAVID BURTON.

Among the many eminent English composers of the early Tudor period David Burton occupies a high place—and yet up to the present his biography has presented little more than conjecture. In the dozen lines accorded to him in the new edition of Grove's Dictionary of Music (vol. i., p. 425) his name appears as 'Avery Burton.' Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, one of the best living authorities on early English music, says that 'he may be identified with the Avarie whom Morley names in his list of authorities ('Plaine and Easie Introduction,' 1597), whose name appears as composer of a piece for the organ in B.M. Add. MS. 29976.' He also adds that a five-part Mass by him ('Ut Ra Mi Fa Sol La') is in the Oxford Music School Collection (MS. Mus. Sch. E. 376-381), and notes that 'the name of "Davy" Burton appears in the list of Henry VIII.'s Chapel, 1520.'

From a close search of the State Papers the following entries throw new light on the high estimation in which David Burton was held; no doubt testifying to his powers as a musician and composer.

Mr. Arkwright's surmise as to the identity of 'Davy' Burton with 'Aubree' or Avery Burton is amply substantiated by official records; in fact his name appears in four varying forms, namely, David Burton, Davy Burton, Avery Burton, and Avery Burnett—also as 'Davy,' 'Avery' and 'Burton.'

The first notice of this distinguished musician is in 1494, when we find him as the recipient of the then respectable douceur of twenty shillings for composing a Mass. This record appears in the Privy Purse expenses of Henry VII., in which the brief entry is chronicled as follows: 'To Burton, for making a Mass, 20s.,' under date of November 29, 1494.

Fifteen years later, in November, 1509, David Burton was appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, filling the vacancy created by the promotion of William Cornish as Master of the Children, in succession to William Newark, deceased. He received livery for the funeral of Prince Henry, on February 22, 1511. Not long afterwards, on August 16, he received a lucrative emolument as Keeper of Chestenwood, Kent, vice John Pender, deceased. This office was confirmed to him on April 1, 1512, when an order was made that he was to be paid '2*d.* a day and arrears from 16 August last.'

On June 20, 1513, Burton went overseas with the rest of the Chapel Royal in the train of King Henry VIII., and we read that on September 17, after the High Mass was sung at Tournai, the Te Deum was performed by the English singers, followed by a sermon by Edmund Birkhead, Bishop of St. Asaph. A fortnight previously the English Chapel Royal sang in Terouenne Cathedral, the items including 'An Anthem of Our Lady and another of St. George.' On October 21, the English monarch embarked from Calais, 'the Chapel Royal being with the Middle Ward.'

Burton, on promise of further preferment, resigned his Keepership of Chestenwood, Kent, on April 16, 1518, and on May 12 he surrendered a monastic corrody. Two years later, in June, 1520, 'Davy' Burton took part in the magnificent ceremonies of the Field of the Cloth of Gold.

In the list of salaries of the King's household for the year 1526, Burton appears as Gentleman of the Chapel at 7½*d.* a day, but his name is disguised as 'Avery Burnett.' On February 20 of same year he was leased valuable lands in Lewisham and Lee, Kent, for sixty years, at the rent of 50*s.* A year later, on April 5, 1527, Burton and a fellow-singer of the Chapel Royal, John Till, were leased the fee farms of the manor of Camberwell and Peckham, at £7 per annum.

Among the entries in the 'King's Book of Payments for half-yearly wages due at Lady Day' (25 March), 1529, is that of John Till and David Burton, 70*s.*

On October 31, 1538, an annuity of twenty marks was granted in survivorship to Burton and another member of the King's Household called Haryington. In this grant the name is given as 'Avery Burnet, a Gentleman of the King's Chapel,' while Haryington had replaced John Till, then recently deceased.

The dissolution of the monasteries gave an opening to Henry VIII. to distribute royal favours among the Court officials, and hence we are not surprised to read that an old servant of the King's Chapel, David Burton, had a lease of monastic lands. From the Books of the Court of Augmentations, there is an entry under date of March 16, 1541, in which 'Avery Burnet of the Household' was granted a lease for twenty-one years of the cell of Fenkeloo and St. Oswald's, parish of Durham.

However, Burton was now advanced in years, and not likely to live much longer, so there is nothing very unusual in the entry among the Royal grants of 1542 of a reversionary interest in Burton's Crown lease of February 20, 1526, to Henry Byrd, 'yeoman of the chamber.' In this grant, which is on the Patent Rolls, the composer is correctly described as 'David Burton, Gentleman of the King's Chapel.' The date of the patent is October 25, 1542.

I have not succeeded in tracing the exact date of Burton's death, but it probably occurred at the close of the year 1542 or early in 1543.

III.—WILLIAM CORNISH.

The career of William Cornish as a dramatist, actor, and producer of Interludes, Pageants, &c., has been admirably dealt with by Professor Wallace in his 'Evolution of the English Drama up to Shakespeare' (Berlin, 1912). In the present article his musical activities and the details of his life will occupy our attention. The extraordinary blunder of the late Mr. W. H. Husk in making two individuals out of the one and of actually contributing memoirs of the two to Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians—in fact the two memoirs appear in the current edition of Grove—renders it particularly necessary to set forth the actual biographical data of William Cornish. We have read no doubt of 'the two single gentlemen rolled into one,' but in the present case we have to deal with one single gentleman who has been expanded into two!

William Cornish was born circa 1465 and was a contemporary of Newark and Burton. The first record of him is under date of November 12, 1493, when we find him as the recipient of 13s. 4d. 'for a prophecy,' written for Henry VII.—as entered in the Household Book of Henry VII., 1491-1505. A short time previously he had been paid a hundred shillings, as a present from the King; and on July 13, 1494, he was granted by the King the keeping of a brewhouse and four other messuages at Charing Cross—a grant unnoticed by Professor Wallace. It is quite evident that he must have been a member of the King's Household from 1492, but it is not till 1496 (September 1) that we meet with an entry implying that he was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. This entry reads: 'Item, to Cornish of the King's Chapel, 26s. 8d.' Four months later, on January 24, 1497, he was given a commission to impress sailors to go to Scotland.

There was a grand performance at Court on November 18, 1501, to celebrate the marriage of Arthur, Prince of Wales to Katharine of Aragon, in which the Gentlemen of the Chapel Royal took part, while the Children of the Chapel appeared as mermaids and 'sang most sweetly and harmoniously.' (Harl. MSS. 69). This performance was a pantomime or disguising, and was probably prepared by Newark, assisted by Cornish. A year later he was paid 13s. 4d. 'for setting of a carol upon Christmas Day.'

Evidently Cornish's pen was not sufficiently guarded as a satirical writer, because he was confined to the Fleet prison in January, 1504, for penning a satire on Sir Richard Empson (Stowe's 'Annales,' 1615). While in prison, in July, he wrote a poem entitled 'A Treatise between Truth and Information,' and was very soon after released.

The Fayrfax MS. (Add. MSS. 31922) contains sixty-three vocal items and forty-nine instrumental—a hundred and twelve in all, and of these thirteen pieces are from the pen of Cornish—amply evidencing his musical powers. The pieces are twelve vocal and one instrumental—the latter being a setting for three instruments—folio 63b. A 'Salve Regina' for five voices, by him, is among the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum, while an 'Ave Maria,' also for five voices, is in the Library of the Royal College of Music. Other sacred music by Cornish is to be found in the Eton MSS. and at Caius College, Cambridge.

Among his songs in the Fayrfax MS. are 'Ah! the sighs that come from my heart,' 'Blow thy horn, hunter,' 'Trolly lolly lolly lo,' 'While life or breath is in my breast,' 'My love she mourneth for me,' and 'Adieu, courage, adieu.' He composed also the music for three of Skelton's songs, namely, 'Manerly Margery Mylk and Ale,' 'Wofully Araid,' and 'Hayde jolly Rutter-Kyn,' as well as 'Pleasure it is,' and 'Concord as Musical,' and probably 'By a bank as I lay.'

Owing to the continued ill-health of William Newark much of the work of training the Children of the Chapel Royal devolved on Cornish, and at length on September 29, 1509, he took over the mastership formally. Between the years 1510-16 Cornish, Crane, and Kite were the principal performers in the Court plays. Of course the master accompanied Henry VIII. with the Chapel Royal, and arranged the musical performances at Terouenne and Tournai in September, 1513. We are given an interesting tribute to the Chapel Royal choir in a letter from Nic. Sagudino to Alf. Foscari, dated May 3, 1515: 'Mass was sung by his Majesty's choir, whose voices were more divine than human; never heard such counter basses. After dinner was a concert where the writer was desired to play upon the clavichords and organ; among the audience was a Brescian [Peter Carmelianus] to whom the King gives 300 ducats annually for playing the lute.'

Perhaps the greatest spectacular triumph of Cornish as Master of the Children was at the Field of the Cloth of Gold in June, 1520; and we have an entry in the King's Book of Payments of the sum of 103s. 4d. paid him 'for the diets of ten children at 2d. a day for 62 days, from 29 May to 22 July.'

Evidently in 1521 Cornish became invalided, but the King continued to favour him, and on August 20, 1523, he was granted the manor of Hylden, Kent, the grant being made in survivorship to 'Wm. Cornish, Jane, his wife, and Henry, his son.' Not long afterwards he died, probably at the end of October. One thing is certain, his will was proved on December 14, 1523.

Occasional Notes.

It was unfortunate that the performance of Elgar's first Symphony at the Promenade Concerts took place during the railway strike. The result was a meagre attendance. The Symphony was splendidly played, and the applause was loud and long. We hope the work will be performed again soon under more normal conditions. We note with pleasure that it is announced for performance in Paris on October 26 at a Lamoureux concert, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald. The Symphony thus comes to a first hearing in the French capital, and we wait the verdict with interest.

Owing to the success of the opera 'Pro Patria,' the librettist and composer—Mr. Alfred Kalisch and Mr. Percy Colson—have been commissioned by the Carl Rosa Company to write a work based on 'She Stoops to Conquer.'

We sympathise with Mr. Kalisch, by the way, on being made to say in a recent issue of the Daily News that the works to be added to the repertory of the Beecham Opera Company are 'Parsifal and Delius,' 'Village,' 'Romeo and Juliet,' and 'several others.' We wish the printer had kept up his brilliant start by giving us the titles of the 'others.'

On page 393 of the August Musical Times we gave some particulars of the projected European visit of the New York Symphony Society in May, 1920. The tour will, it is hoped, include a visit to London in June,—not July, as was erroneously stated in our article. In view of the interest shown in the matter, we reproduce on the following page a facsimile and translation of the invitation from the French Government. We give also extracts (translations) from letters received by Mr. Damrosch from Belgium and Italy in reference to the Society's visit to those countries. We think there will be no disputing the weight such invitations carry when issued, as these are, through Government channels.

Ministère de l'Instruction Publique et des Beaux-Arts

Beaux-Arts

République Française

Palais Royal, le 13 MAR 1919

Le Ministre de l'Instruction Publique et des
Beaux-Arts a Monsieur Walter DAMROSCH, Chef d'Orchestre de la "Symphony Society of NEW-YORK.

Monsieur

J'ai appris avec une extrême satisfaction que les grands orchestres américains ont fait à la Société des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris un accueil vraiment enthousiaste et fraternel. En votre qualité de doyen des chefs-d'orchestre des Etats-Unis, je tiens à vous remercier très sincèrement et je vous prie de transmettre également à vos collègues l'expression de ma haute sympathie.

Désireux de vous donner une preuve des sentiments qui m'animent, je saisis cette occasion pour vous demander de venir en France avec votre magnifique orchestre de la Symphony Society of New-York, à une époque choisie par vous.

Je puis vous assurer que vous y serez accueillis avec la plus chaude amitié et je n'ai pas besoin d'ajouter que les Beaux-Arts vous apporteront un concours entier et bien sincère.

Veuillez agréer, Monsieur, l'expression de ma haute considération.

[Translation.]

RÉPUBLIQUE FRANÇAISE, Palais Royal, le 13 Mar., 1919.

Le Ministre de l'Instruction Publique et des Beaux-Arts a Monsieur Walter DAMROSCH, Chef d'Orchestre de la "Symphony Society of NEW-YORK."

MONSIEUR :

I have heard with great satisfaction of the enthusiastic and fraternal welcome which the great American orchestras have given to the "Société des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris." As you are the dean of orchestral conductors in the United States, I beg to thank you most heartily and at the same time to ask you to transmit equally to your colleagues this expression of my gratitude.

Desirous of giving you a proof of our sentiments I take this opportunity to invite you to visit France with your magnificent orchestra of the Symphony Society of New York at a time to be selected by you.

I can assure you that you will be received with the warmest friendship, and it is not necessary for me to add that the Beaux-Arts will give you every possible co-operation. Please accept the expression of my esteem. LAFERE.

Excerpt from a letter of M. A. Harmigne, Ministre des Sciences et des Arts, Brussels.

MONSIEUR :

July 4, 1919.

I hear with great pleasure that you intend to visit Belgium in June, 1920, with the celebrated Orchestra of the Symphony Society of New York.

I do not doubt that the concerts which will be given under your direction will offer the most vivid artistic interest.

It is with great pleasure that I authorize you to place these concerts under the high patronage of the Ministre des Sciences et des Arts de Belgique, &c., &c.

Excerpt from a letter of Signor Tommasini, Member of the Academy of Rome, &c., &c.,

DEAR MONSIEUR DAMROSCH :

July 5, 1919.

You will receive a few days after this letter the official invitation of the Italian Government through the direction of the Beaux-Arts.

The Count San Martino, President of the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome, has promised in the name of the Academy to take charge of the organization of the concerts.

As a Member of the Academy I will supervise and take charge of the forming of committees in Genoa, Florence, Bologna, Milan, and Turin, in order to assure your concerts the welcome and the success which everybody wishes for them; &c., &c.

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS.

BY HARVEY GRACE.

When the supply of questions for the F.R.C.O. examination papers begins to run short, I suggest the following as one which would yield some interesting data as to the taste of the candidates: 'What, in your opinion, is the most important contribution to the repertory of the organ since Bach's day? Give critical reasons in about three hundred words.'

A few years ago the answer in most cases would have been 'The Sonatas of Mendelssohn,' and in a sense this might truly be said to-day. Apart from its intrinsic merits, Mendelssohn's organ music was of vital importance. So far as really great composers were concerned, the organ had been neglected since Bach's death. The instrument was woefully behind its orchestral rivals in development. Only fourth-rate composers wrote organ music. Of course they tried to write like Bach, and (equally of course) they were fatally successful so far as the letter was concerned. Mendelssohn broke this tradition with works which are not only among the very best of those written for the organ, but which also seem destined to be the longest-lived of his efforts. Much the same thing happened in France when Saint-Saëns and Franck found the organ given over to the superficialities of Lefébure-Wély and Batiste, and in a few years raised its prestige and established a vital school.

In the matter of historical importance, then, our question might be answered by the names of either Mendelssohn, Saint-Saëns, or Franck.* But the output of all three men is comparatively small, and on the whole we must look elsewhere for the answer. I believe most organists familiar with the works will agree that the twenty Sonatas and the hundred detached pieces of Rheinberger are second in importance only to Bach's organ music. This view was by no means widely held even so recently as ten or fifteen years ago. There was in many quarters a curious disposition to place Merkel above Rheinberger. In a most interesting lecture on Rheinberger's Sonatas, given by Dr. G. J. Bennett, at Edinburgh, in 1911, he quoted the following from Mr. Fuller Maitland's 'Masters of German Music':

The whole series of [Rheinberger's] organ Sonatas, covering as they do a period of over twenty years, has a richness of colouring, a mastery of effect, and a constant flow of beautiful ideas that are by no means always found in his other works. If we except the works of Gustav Merkel, these Sonatas are by far the most valuable additions to the literature of the instrument since the Sonatas of Mendelssohn.

The more one sees of Rheinberger's work all round, and so is able to make comparisons, the more one agrees with the first half of this judgment. The second half, however, is staggering. Where in Merkel's organ music do we find 'richness of colouring, mastery of effect, and a constant flow of beautiful ideas?' In only one Sonata—that in E minor—is there any emotional impulse worth mentioning. Merkel's organ music is usually effective, because well-written polyphony can hardly be otherwise. But of real invention and harmonic interest it contains very little. If we want proof of this deficiency we shall find it easily in his slow movements. Here, where no amount of contrapuntal ingenuity can take the place of inspiration, he is rarely capable of anything better than the placid 'Andante' of which the organ repertory has long had too liberal a supply. His smoothly-running fugues are likely to be esteemed for a long time, being excellent technical work, and, in their clear way, enjoyable to hear so long as we demand of a fugue nothing more than mere fugality, so to speak. When we want invention and expression—even passion—we must go to Bach and Rheinberger, Karg-Elert, Reger (in a few cases), and a handful of others.

In mere bulk, Rheinberger's twenty Sonatas are an impressive output. Has any composer save Beethoven written so many, of such all-round excellence, for any other instrument?

A glance at the complete list of Rheinberger's works—they run to Op. 197—explains the smallness of the proportion of unsuccessful movements in his organ music. He was an experienced all-round composer before he began to write for the instrument, and even then he gave little attention to it for some years. Thus, his first organ work—the C minor Sonata—is numbered Op. 27; his second—Ten Trios—Op. 49; his third, fourth, and fifth—the Sonatas in A flat, G, and A minor—Opp. 65, 88, and 98. From Op. 111 onwards the organ works appear much more frequently, sometimes hard on one another's heels (e.g., Opp. 154, 156, 161, 162, 165, 167, and 168), so that in his ripest period he wrote sixteen of the Sonatas, the Twenty-four Fughettas, the Characteristic Pieces, (12) the Monologues, (12) the Meditations, (12) a Set of Twelve Pieces, and a dozen Trios, besides two Organ Concertos, two Suites for Strings and Organ, and numerous vocal works with organ accompaniment. The bulk of his Church music (twelve Masses, and many sacred songs and short choral works) also dates from the later years of his life.

Rheinberger having acquired the Sonata habit with his fifth (F sharp) evidently intended to write twenty-four, giving all the major and minor keys a turn. This supposition is based on the fact of the twenty being all in different keys. The keys yet to be employed were B flat, C sharp minor, F sharp minor, and E.

Why did Mendelssohn carefully avoid Sonata form when writing his organ works? We are often told that he considered the form unfit for organ purposes, and therefore chose that of the old English voluntary. But it is probable that many of the movements of his Sonatas were improvisations, afterwards written down and then touched up. This would account for their looseness, not only in construction but in regard to laying-out generally. There are probably no other works so fine in material and so badly put on paper, in spite of Mendelssohn's assertion that he set great store by them, and was anxious about the revision of the proof-sheets. If he rejected the Sonata form, however, he had good grounds. Lengthy development can be made effective on a modern organ, but on that of Mendelssohn's time such writing would merely show the limitations of the instrument. This danger seems to have been recognized by Rheinberger, whose use of the Sonata form is very free. All his modifications are in the direction of avoiding monotony. He usually shortens his recapitulations, and shuns lengthy working-out. His subject-matter is far more plentiful than is usual in the classical pianoforte sonata, and the various themes follow-on so naturally that we get full measure with very little repetition, and with the minimum of passage-work and padding. He makes a great feature of the Coda, and much of the success of his splendid fugues is due to his rounding them off with a sonorous statement of the subject rather than with a stretto or conventional pedal-point.

As a good example of his liberal supply of thematic material, and of his methods of constructing a first movement, let us glance at the Preludio of No. 7 (F minor). It is not in the first flight of Rheinberger's Sonata movements, but is convenient for the purposes of exposition, because its themes are clearly defined and its form is simple. Moreover, it is one that most readers are likely to have at hand for reference. Here are the beginnings of the five subjects of the movement we are considering, with the number of bars they fill added in brackets:

* Had there been more good organs in England a century ago, we should almost certainly have been able to add the name of Samuel Wesley to the list.

Ex. 1. 1. - 108.

(a)  (30 bars.)

(b)  (15 bars.)

(c)  (10 bars.)

(d)  (20 bars.)

(e)  (34 bars.)

The construction of the movement is as follows: a-b-c-d-e-b (shortened to 9 bars), c-d-e (6 bars), a (15 bars)—b (9 bars)—followed by 12 bars of Coda based on a. The whole runs along with vigour and spontaneity, and the Coda is particularly fine.

The amount of structural variety in the first movements is remarkable. For example, that of the C major Sonata has for middle section an elaborate fugue, with a quiet, simple section in E, which, after a resumption of the fugue, reappears in C, and leads back to a two-page Coda based on the opening theme and the fugue subject. Form = a-b-c-b-c-Coda on a and b. This splendid movement fills eleven pages, and is modestly called 'Präludium.'

Sometimes his first movements are double-barrelled affairs. The Phantasie of the D flat Sonata, for example, opens and closes with a Maestoso lento of 50 and 55 bars respectively, between which is an Allegro agitato in the tonic minor running to 105 bars, a movement quite complete and independent save for its final phrase, which gradually leads into a resumption of the Lento. Another striking example is the Phantasie of No. 16 (D major), which gives us first a Pastoral movement (Andante amabile) of 44 bars, leading into a fiery Agitato (D minor), 165 bars in length, a movement much more definitely in sonata form than most of its companions. The opening pastoral theme is heard no more until the end of the Finale, where it appears maestoso, full organ, and makes an imposing Coda.

As early as his second Sonata he obtains unity by introducing into the Finale matter from the first movement. As we shall see later, this quotation is sometimes worked afresh into the texture of a fugue. At other times a broad statement of a first movement theme is used as a Coda to the Finale. This is effective when the whole work is played at a sitting, but is a drawback when one wishes to play the Finale alone.

Enough has been said to show the great variety and resource of Rheinberger's constructional methods. Hardly one of the twenty Sonatas is without interest in this respect, and an examination of the works should remove any idea that the composer was at all pedantic or as dry-as-dust. He was a born writer of tunes, with strongly-marked characteristics, too, both in his melody and harmony. His themes cover a good deal of ground, frequently following a big leap by further movement in the same direction. They are usually broad in character, and the best of them have a soaring quality that gives them an expressiveness far more noble than can be obtained by any dynamics or tremolo—e.g., from Sonata No. 17 :

Ex. 2. Grave. ♩ = 72.

ff

&c.

and so on for about thirty more bars.

Perhaps the difference between Rheinberger's organ music and that of Merkel and (still more) of earlier German writers other than Bach, may be shown by a single bar from this movement. Given a bar of $\frac{4}{4}$ and bidden to add an embellishment for the right hand, we may be sure that Merkel, Hesse, or Rinck would have been content to add a conventional scale or Arpeggio. Here is Rheinberger's way :

Ex. 5.

The musical score for Example 5 consists of three staves. The top staff begins with a treble clef and contains a series of notes, some beamed together, and rests. The middle staff starts with a bass clef and features a mix of notes and rests, including a measure with a double bar line. The bottom staff also begins with a bass clef and contains notes and rests. Dynamic markings 'f' and 'p' are present throughout the score, indicating changes in volume. The notation includes various note values, rests, and bar lines, typical of a musical manuscript.

The Sonatas abound in touches of the kind we should expect from one who brought to organ composition a technique perfected by years of successful writing of orchestral and chamber music. The first Sonata once left behind, we rarely find him using the conventional German organ idiom. He shows his originality and fertility in his ability to dispense with the scraps of fugal writing with which his predecessors and contemporaries (and even successors, such as Reger) vainly tried to keep things going in a long movement. Rheinberger gives us themes of genuine musical value, and often of striking power and originality. Had the best of his organ movements been written for orchestra, they could hardly have failed to be popular. As it is, they are heard by a comparative handful of people, though (as any player who gives the works a fair chance will testify) it is a handful of the enthusiastic type that counts.

Rheinberger's harmony is rich without being luscious, and his use of auxiliary notes is free and interesting. There are many passages at which the player feels disposed to linger and warm his hands, so to speak. Here is one of the most quotable, from the Toccata in No. 14, an episode based on the first three notes of the main theme :

Ex. 4. $\text{♩} = 66$.

a simple passage in essentials, but made wonderfully effective by its auxiliary notes and its laying out.

Among the many little touches which make his organ music very easily identifiable, one of the most frequent is this type of false relation :

(Sonata xviii.)

Ex. 5.

to which I have heard purists object ! Here we have it twice in two bars.

Another mannerism is to be met with in his final cadences, a favourite form consisting of a plain 13th—without the 7th—followed by a dominant 7th resolving, not on the tonic chord, but on a six-four—a broad and ecclesiastical effect. He gives us a great variety of treatments of this formula :

Ex. 6.

The slow movements are notable because they were undoubtedly the first extended pieces of the romantic and expressive kind in organ sonatas. Mendelssohn's only two fairly long ones are in song form. Rheinberger uses this form with delightful effect in the Cantilene of No. 11 and the Canzona of No. 13. In many of the other Sonatas, the slow movement has an important middle section, and is a highly-organized affair. Occasionally, as in the Idyll of No. 14, and the Adagio of No. 15, there is even a touch of the dramatic. The variation form is used in Nos. 10 and 19—two of the best slow movements, the second very Beethovenian in breadth. It is a truism that such movements are the test of a composer. Rheinberger comes well out of the ordeal. In all the twenty Sonatas only three of these movements are insignificant—the Adagio of No. 1 and the Intermezzo of No. 3, and (possibly) the Intermezzo of No. 4.

Although it cannot be said that the Sonatas lack appreciation in this country, there is a disposition to overplay a few of the earlier ones at the expense of the rest. There is some excuse for this. If we divide the composer's work into periods, I think we may say that he really found himself with No. 5, and began to decline slightly after No. 15. The first four, and Nos. 16, 18, 19, and 20, all contain long stretches, and sometimes complete movements, as fine as anything in the rest, but they are less successful as wholes. In Nos. 16, 18, 19, and 20 there is occasional turgidity, and some of the old vigour and driving power is missing—not unnaturally, as the composer's health was poor during his later years.

If we overlook a little dryness in the middle of the fugue of No. 16, we might except this Sonata from the list of partial failures. The other fugues are so fine that Rheinberger may be pardoned for dropping from his own standard for a page or so.

The four which are unqualified successes, but which are apparently played less than they deserve to be, are Nos. 5 (F sharp), 13 (E flat), 15 (D major), and 17 (B major). In the last few Sonatas, movements of outstanding interest are the Allegro moderato and Skandinavisch of No. 16 (G sharp minor), the Phantasie and Capriccio of No. 18 (A major), the Provençalish of No. 19 (G minor), and the noble first movement of No. 20 (F major).

I have purposely said little about the Fugues, because they call for a separate article, and I refrain from more comments on the many merits of the other movements, in order to find space for consideration of the Sonatas from the player's point of view.

As a whole the works are badly in need of a new edition. There are many slips in the matter of wrong notes and accidentals, and some of the metronome marks are absurd. Marks of expression and registration are too scanty—an unusual fault in modern music. The deficiency has done the composer a good deal of harm, because many players follow Rheinberger's few marks only too faithfully. When this is done some of the finest movements lack relief. For example, the

(Continued on page 617.)

Inscribed to his old friend the Rev. WILLIAM JAMES FOXELL, M. A., Mus. B., Rector of S. Swithin's, London Stone, E.C.

Carols of Bethlehem

WORDS BY

ELLA D. FARRAR

MUSIC BY

CHARLES W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

No. 1.

No room in the Inn.

ELLA D. FARRAR.

CHARLES W. PEARCE.

Tempo di Bourrée.

mf

1. In Beth - le - hem there was an inn, A fair inn with a sta - ble.
2. But ox and ass were wi - ser far; They knew the Roy - al Stran - ger,
3. The heavens were filled with mirth and song, For God was born man's bro - ther,

mf

And at the cen - sus - time the host took all folks he was a - ble.
And lout - ed low His throne be - fore - His throne that was their man - ger.
But on the Babe's ear sweet - er - fell The croon - ing of His Mo - ther.

He knew the great ones of the land, Stern He - rod and the priests all,
A won - drous star flamed high a - bove The door .. of this poor pal - ace,
Oh, long a - go all this .. be - fell And yet .. 'tis new this morn - ing, rall. Verses 1 & 2. Last Verse only.

And yet he .. made his Lord and King Find birth with - in the beasts' stall.
It led the .. Shepherds and Wise .. Men, But roused dark He - rod's mal - ice.
Take heart, good souls, through clouds of war The Star of Peace is dawn - ing.

rall.

Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

No. 2.

The heavenly host.

ELLA D. FARRAR.

CHARLES W. PEARCE.

Tempo di Giga.Verses 1, 3, 4, 6 for Full Choir.

1. CHRIST JE - sus lay on Ma - ry's breast, O se - des Sa - pi - en - ti - ae,
 3. Then straight the heaven - ly choir out-break With in ex - cel - sis glo - ri - a!
 4. The sim - ple folk re - joic - ing go, Red - den - tes lau - des Do - mi - no,
 6. Then, Chris - tian souls, a - rise and sing, With laus and be - ne - dic - ti - o,

Saint Jo - seph guard - ed well His rest, . . . And ox and ass their Lord con -
 Their sweet an - gel - ick noise doth wake . . . Man - kind to hear the song they
 And en - ter in, all lout - ing low, . . . For in this Babe their God they
 For Ma - ry's arms en - shrine our King, . . . And we with Jo - seph hom - age

- fest, . . . Sing Chris - tus na - tus . . . ho - di - e!
 make, . . . Je - su dul - cis me - mo - ri - a!
 know, . . . In ma - tris ei - us grem - i - o.
 bring, . . . Ad Je - sum in prae - se - pi - o!

FINE.

Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Verses 2 and 5, Boys only.

2. All in the fields the shep - herds lay, Sing ter - ra pax ho - mi - ni - bus,
 5. All bright be - seems the poor mean stall, O Na - ta Lux de Lu - mi - ne, ORGAN.Sw. soft 8 ft. & 4 ft.

The mid - night grows as clear as day, . . And lo, they heard an an - gel
 As on our La - dy sweet they call, . . Her ten - der Babe to show them

Sw.Gt. soft 8 ft. (Sw. coupled.)

say . . . Sal - ca - tor na - tus ho - - di - e. . .
 all, . . . O dul - cis Fi - li Ma - - ri - ae. . .

No. 3.

Our "House of Bread."

ELLA D. FARRAR.

CHARLES W. PEARCE.

Andante espressivo.

1. Draw nigh, O man, in fear, . . . Bend knee . . . and head : Its lin - tel is full
 2. See as high al - tar meet, . . . For Love's . . . ar - ray, She takes the kine's rough
 3. The ta - ber - na - cle stands . . . With wide - flung door, And, as a lamp, His Più mosso.

low, . . . Our House . . . of Bread. . . Though fair the hou - sel cloth, . . . Its straw, . . . A lock . . . of hay. . . And till the roy - al Mage, . . . His Star . . . Flames white . . . be - fore. . . Rud - dy as Sha - ron's Rose, . . . As web is mean : . . . Yet she who spun and spread, . . . Is hea - ven's queen. . .

 cen - ser bring, . . . The beasts with harm - less breath, . . . Sa - lute . . . their King. . .
 li - ly white, . . . Lo here ex - posed the Host . . . To mor - tal sight. . .

Refrain after each Verse.

Ye hum - ble men of heart, . . . Souls gone be - fore ; . . . Green earth, yea all His works, . . . Be - hold ! . . . a - dore ! . . .

(Continued from page 612.)

Allegro agitato section of the Phantasie of the D flat Sonata begins ff (by which Rheinberger means 'full organ'), and contains no other indication until after the resumption of the Maestoso lento—about 112 bars later. As the opening and closing sections of the movement are slow and massive, and mainly ff, the effect of the whole (ten pages) is wearisome. And yet the music is magnificent. It merely needs a little dynamic variety. I suggest a reduction to mf and clear stops with the three quavers at the end of bar 20 of the Agitato, an increase at the end of bar 37, a reduction at bar 46 (or at 58), a slight increase at 66, and a gradual crescendo up to the climax at bar 90. Something should still be kept in reserve for the return of the opening theme at bar 106. Most of the loud movements will well repay treatment of this kind. We organists are apt to forget that the very qualities which make the organ so impressive—its gravity and ability to sustain—are just those that soonest tire the ear. The line that divides the impressive from the oppressive is apt to be more quickly reached than we case-hardened players realise. We should bear in mind, too, that all the tendencies in modern music are towards constant variety in force. There is surely no need to make the organ and its repertory seem out of touch with musical taste of to-day. Rheinberger's sparing use of expression marks was evidently due to two causes. The average German organ of his time was lacking in mechanical aids to registration. Until recent years the swell pedal was by no means a common object of the seashore so far as Germany was concerned. Rheinberger evidently wrote with no swell pedal in view, for the crescendo mark < appears but once in the whole of the Sonatas—at the end of page 6 of No. 19—and there the composer apparently intended the increase to be made by stops gradually added, the left-hand being left free for the purpose. Moreover, it is clear that he thought more of the music than of its medium, for he arranged all the Sonatas (except the first, I think) for pianoforte duet.

No doubt the Sonatas suffer from this indifference of the composer as to the expressive and other details of performance. Too many people are influenced by a casual glance at the printed page. Seeing few expression marks and an almost entire absence of Italian admonitions to be soulful, they come to the conclusion that the music is dry. We are so often defrauded by works whose passion and poetry are almost entirely in the label and expression marks that the other extreme should be refreshing. As a matter of fact, too, Rheinberger's organ music is so purely musical that all but a handful of it can be played effectively with one stop drawn, or on the pedal pianoforte. Fine as it can be made on an organ of ample resource, it shares with a good proportion of Bach the great merit of being as nearly independent of the organ-builder as any organ music can be. (I found this out when for some months I had nothing to play on but a temporary organ of one manual and four stops [unenclosed]. Only Bach and Rheinberger rose to the occasion.)

Apart from the desirability of some suggestions as to variety of power, there are not a few cases where the composer's intentions could have been made clearer by careful revision and editing. For the benefit of students, I mention a few cases, with suggested modifications.

In the Adagio of No. 2 (A flat), at bar 13 the melody is given to a solo stop and played by the right-hand; four bars later a part of the accompaniment is added to this solo voice, with ugly effect. As the left-hand cannot take over these notes, the whole passage is better played on one keyboard. The melody being at the top stands out quite well. Note, too, that the balance suggested by Rheinberger is wrong. He marks the solo mf, the left-hand part p, and the pedal pp. The pedal part lies very low and will not be distinct; the solo being at the top and rather high should be very little louder than the accompaniment if the figuration of the latter is to be heard. As we have seen, performance as written is out of the question, but I mention this matter of balance because it is not the only example of its kind.

In the Intermezzo of the Pastoral Sonata the composer evidently intends the top part from bars 38-47 to be soloed, but he does not confine the higher of the two accompanying manual parts to the left-hand stave, as he does at the beginning, and the minim A flat at the beginning of bar 37 has to become a quaver, unless the left-hand can dodge up in time to take it over. The E major section of the brilliant fugue—where the Psalm tone appears—gains, I think, by a slight quickening of time. After the brilliant semiquaver fugal work, the dotted crotchets seem a little too slow. If this quicker pace is adopted, a natural rallentando at the bar before the return of the fugue subject in E minor removes any impression that the time has been changed.

In the beautiful Adagio of No. 5 (F sharp) we find a soloed theme suddenly clogged with other notes. The passage is possible as written, but is much improved if the intruding notes are taken by the left-hand, which can easily be done. The student who, on buying a copy of the sixth Sonata, adds a sharp to the A's in the pedal and right-hand parts in the first bar of page 16 will save himself a shock later. It is one of the deadliest of engravers' errors, and its correction should not be left to memory, as it comes at a turnover of the page. The fugue which follows—one of the finest of Rheinberger's—is marked ff at the opening, and no further indication is given! Several good, simple methods of treatment will readily suggest themselves. Only one way is wrong—that of slavishly following the composer's solitary mark.

The Andante of No. 7 (F minor) has a metronome mark which conveys nothing. The movement is in 3-8, and the mark is $\text{♩} = 80$. If a dotted crotchet is intended, the pace is much too fast. Evidently it should be $\text{♩} = 80$, but even then the Poco animato middle section, with its demisemiquavers, is rather a hustle. The tempo primo mark at the return of the opening theme has been forgotten.

The fugue is marked ff throughout—a fatal mistake. Whatever scheme of registration is adopted, the player should have something up his sleeve for the magnificent peroration on the last page. If he has a lot of stops to play with he might well (being already ff, of course) add at the fourth bar, opening the Swell at bar 8 (either suddenly, or using it for a gradual crescendo up to bar 12), adding solo Tuba coupled to Great for the four final chords. If there are half a dozen finer organ fugues than this, I shall be glad to hear of them.

In the Scherzo of No. 8 (E minor) the two chords at the end of page 17 should be played only when the Passacaglia follows. This seems obvious, but I have heard them played with a faked cadence added. The Scherzo (which makes a first-rate recital item) should end with the A minor chord sustained for four bars, in order to complete the rhythmical scheme of four-bar phrases.

The Romance of No. 10 (B flat minor) needs a natural to the D in bar 14 of page 12, though the D flat is possible, and is sometimes played. The final section of this melodious movement is much improved by the soloing of the melody. Only the last bar of page 12 needs slight modification. Note that the phrasing of the melody was obviously put in haphazard. It is as bad as some of the passages in Mendelssohn's Sonatas.

Dr. Bennett tells us that Rheinberger gave him the proof sheets of No. 10 (B minor) to read at sight. We may well imagine the pupil was too busy to note one or two slips. An E is missing from the alto on the first beat of page 5. It is the final note of the phrase B A G F, and should be taken with the left-hand. The two pairs of consecutive 5ths on page 8 sound well, and were probably intentional. The final Allegro is marked $\text{♩} = 63$. This is obviously wrong, though $\text{♩} = 63$ is perhaps a trifle too fast.

In the Pastorale of No. 12 (D flat), Rheinberger directed the melody to be played as a solo, but apparently forgot the fact at the fourth bar. The middle notes should be played on the lower (accompanying) manual, thus:

If the hang of the keyboard is not convenient, the first E in the bass may be played as a quaver, and the whole played with the left-hand. The next few bars present no difficulty, but bars 12-15 must be played with the solo part becoming a duet for the time being. As the under part is melodious the effect is quite good, provided there is less disparity in the power of the two manuals than is indicated by the composer's mf and p. The two keyboards should be almost equal in power, but of different character.

Similar examples of Rheinberger's forgetfulness will be found in the Canzone of No. 13 (E flat). Here again we must play the passages as written, and minimise the bad effect by our choice of stops. At the end of the Fugue occurs a passage which seems to call for antiphonal effect:

Where a solo reed is available I have found the above a great improvement on the original version for Great organ throughout.

One of the worst examples of the composer's carelessness is on page 11 of No. 14 (C major), where the theme is marked p and the accompaniment mf:

The passage is best played on one manual. Any attempt to solo the treble leads to hopeless difficulties a few bars later.

There are many other points calling for discretion on the part of the player. I have mentioned only some of the less obvious, and one or two over which I have found even experienced performers at sea.

And now for the cream of the Sonatas—the seventeen Fugues and the Passacaglia.

(To be continued.)

A VISIT TO AN OLD ORGAN.

BY SIDNEY W. HARVEY.

Photograph by

S. W. Harvey.

THE FRAMLINGHAM ORGAN.

Passing through Framlingham recently, I seized the opportunity of inspecting the very beautiful church and the historic and charming organ-case. The organ stands under an arch on the north side of the chancel. The case varies but little from the careful drawing by the Rev. F. H. Sutton, which forms one of the plates in his 'Church Organs.' The little medallion which is there shown over the centre tower has now disappeared, and I am sorry to say that the beautiful little case which formerly served to screen the organist has been removed from its proper position. It can now be seen nailed on the back of the organ.

By the courtesy of the Vicar, the Rev. H. C. O. Lanchester, I was permitted to take photographs of this gem among organ-cases. It is in a very fair state of preservation, considering its great age, dating back as it does to 1674, if not to an even earlier year. The pipes which stand in front of the case are now almost black with age, so that it is difficult to distinguish the pattern of the handsome diaper with which they are covered. The specification of the organ at the present time is as follows:

Left.	Right.
Oboe, 8-ft.	Bourdon, 8-ft. tone.
(Space for knob.)	Tremulant.
Principal, 4-ft.	Gamba, 8-ft.
Lieblich Gedact, 8-ft. tone.	Flute Harmonique, 4-ft.
Open Diapason, 8-ft.	Fifteenth, 2-ft.
Dulciana, 8-ft.	(Knob without label.)
Swell to Great.	Principal, 4-ft.
(Space for knob.)	Open Diapason, 8-ft.
Great to Pedal.	Stop Diapason, 8-ft. tone.
The compass of the Manuals is from CC to F, and of the pedals from CCC to E. There are no composition pedals.

The organ was built in 1674 for Pembroke College, Cambridge, by Thamar, of Peterborough, who, it will be remembered, was one of the four 'tolerable organ builders' remaining in this country at the Restoration. The organ then consisted of one manual with white sharps and black naturals and the following eight stops:

Open Diapason.	Fifteenth.
Stop Diapason (oak).	Sesquialtera.
Principal	Cornet.
Twelfth.	Trumpet.

Compass GG to D.

At a later period a Swell of four stops was added, the compass of which was from Tenor F to D, viz.:

Stop Diapason.	Open Diapason.
Principal	Oboe.

According to the Rev. F. H. Sutton, the organ was originally placed in the chancel, but was apparently removed to the West Gallery, where it was situated at the time that Mr. Sutton saw it. Later it was returned to the chancel, for in the Musical Standard of November 30, 1889, we read that the organ was dismantled to allow of the necessary alterations to the chancel. It was intended then to be restored and replaced, and at the same time to be enlarged, so as to consist of some 40 stops, together with three manuals and pedal. The organ was certainly replaced in the position it occupies to-day, but only a slight enlargement was carried out, a Dulciana 8-ft. being added to the Swell and the Stop Diapason renamed Lieblich Gedact, 8-ft. tone, while on the Great organ the Sesquialtera, Cornet, and Trumpet were taken out and a Flute Harmonique 4-ft. and Gamba 8-ft. inserted in their place. Other additions at this time were the Tremulant, the pedal board, the two couplers Swell to Great and Great to Pedal, and the Bourdon 8-ft. tone.

The stop knob which has lost its label is apparently the Twelfth.

The little case, which was formerly used to screen the organist, is evidently part of a former organ in this church. This, together with its dummy pipes, is entirely of wood and is in a fine state of preservation. It is to be regretted that it does not continue to occupy the position it once held, where besides being of use as a screen it was also an object of beauty and added considerable charm to the organ itself.

A very excellent account of this pre-Reformation case is contained in the valuable article on 'English Organ Cases,' by the Rev. Andrew Freeman, which was published in the 'Dictionary of Organs and Organists,' 1912, and which merits careful study.

Mr. Freeman thinks that the case is considerably older than 1674—probably circa 1550. 'Here again,' he says, 'there is some reason to believe that an old case was used up to contain Thamar's new instrument, for its style led both Mr. Sutton and Mr. Hill to ascribe it to the reign of Henry VIII., though it is only fair to add that Mr. Hill withdrew from this position upon learning the dates given above.'

The Musician's Bookshelf.

By 'FESTE.'

One of the best auguries for the future of music is the increasing amount of space given to the subject in the non-musical Press. The leading London and provincial dailies, and many of the weekly and monthly journals, contain regular musical articles by writers of repute. A huge public, outside the influence of the musical periodicals, is thus kept in more or less regular touch with the art. The best of these musical writers are far more attractive than were the old-time critics. They are less pompous in diction, and their work is clearly the product of brains well-stored with a good deal beside music. It often shows real literary distinction, and many of us must have regretted when some specially good article had to be cast aside with the newspaper in which it appeared or be kept in the inconvenient form of a cutting. I can think off-hand of half-a-dozen musical scribes whose file of past articles deserves to be overhauled with a view to republication in book form. Here is one of them, Mr. Ernest Newman, showing the way with a collection containing about fifty papers under the title of 'A Musical Motley' (John Lane). It goes without saying that the essays cover a wide field, and that the book is thoroughly entertaining and stimulating. A few of the articles were hardly worth rescuing, we shall all venture to think, but as we shall mostly disagree as to which ones are below par, Mr. Newman's choice is sufficiently vindicated. A book of this kind is like an anthology: the readers are never unanimous about more than two-thirds of the selection. I fancy, however, that there will be a general feeling that the paper on 'Composers and Obituary Notices' is an uncomfortable piece of jesting that never would be missed. Here are a few sentences that might pass well enough as banter in conversation (aided by facial play and tone of voice, and a free-and-easy atmosphere), but which come off much less well in print—and especially in reprint:

In common with other journalists, I have a grievance against the ordinary musician. Death comes to all men sooner or later; but no man of eminence who is living quietly and safely at home, and can more or less choose the time of his own dying, has a right to depart this life without remembering his obligations of honour to his biographers. I speak feelingly on this subject, for some of these gentlemen have put me to a good deal of inconvenience by their irregular and inconsiderate way of dying. Many of those who still survive are very decent fellows, and I feel I have only to make my grievance known to them to recognise the necessity for a little kindly forethought on their part.

And, speaking of the obituary notices of public men, which are written and kept up-to-date ready for use:

I warn my friends that I have said some horrible things about them in their obituaries, things that would make them dislike me for the rest of their days if I were to publish them now. I see no reason to show these people any consideration when they show me so little. A decent man would recognize that an obituary notice costs the conscientious writer of it a good deal of time and trouble, and he would recognize that the least he can do is to see that all this labour of love is not in vain. Instead of which, most of these people persist in living an unconscionable time after their obituaries have been done, with the result that the critic has to keep adding to them, and in some cases revising his point of view. . . . But in even worse taste than living on after your obituary is written, is dying before it is written. I myself had left Scriabin and Max Reger over because I thought there was no hurry in the case of youngish men like these. They both seized their opportunity when I was off my guard, and died at me without a moment's warning. The moral concept of duty to your biographer is only rudimentarily developed, I am afraid, in musicians.

This kind of humour is tolerable only when it can be carried out with the right solemnity. Swift did it a few times (in 'A Modest Proposal,' for example), and Belloc's 'Emmanuel Burden' is full of it. It is a ticklish species that has no half-success. It either comes off, or—

We could spare, too, a good deal of Mr. Newman's talk about the unpopularity of critics. If he is right, the musical world is one vast pitched battle, with wrong-headed and vain composers and performers arrayed against a tiny force of critics whose only fault is an excess of honesty and frankness. But when we go into the matter we find that this tiny force is even smaller than it appears to be. It consists of Mr. Newman, on his wild lone, sea-green and incorruptible, marching round and round like a stage army. The three open letters to a young musical critic are, of course, satirical, but they leave us in no doubt as to Mr. Newman's views on the relations between artists and critics. Moreover, here—and in many other parts of the book—we find him making the matter a personal one, and giving us more or less playful variations on the well-known theme, 'Nobody loves me.' Logically, his views may be expressed thus:

Music critics are unpopular:
I am a music critic:
Therefore I am unpopular.

But there are other music critics—men as frank, on occasion, as Mr. Newman. As they are certainly not unpopular, another syllogism is called for:

Music critics are unpopular:
Evans, Colles, Legge, Kalisch, and others are not unpopular:
Therefore they are not critics.

Which is manifest nonsense.

Mr. Newman apparently thinks that the hand of every composer and performer is against him. More, he would have us believe he is proud of the fact. It is not for the likes of me to contradict him, or to grudge him any pleasure he derives from the rôle of Ishmael. I will only put it to him that such a state of things, if it exists, limits his usefulness as a critic. Nobody wants him to gild the pill, but even that is better than dipping it in vinegar. He spoils many a wholesome dose by his unnecessary acidity. Moreover, his method of distributing his favours is unfortunate. Such tolerance as he can spare goes to composers long since dead: his contemporaries have the other qualities. The essay on 'Putting the classics in their places' gives us his own attitude far more faithfully than he realises. Thus he says:

It is inevitable that, our critical criteria being derived mainly from the classics, we should be continually loading the dice against the moderns. In these it is the obvious faults that are the easiest to detect, and so we are apt to lay too much stress on them. In the classics we tolerantly accept the faults as so much inevitable grit in a dish of generally fine strawberries. Against the moderns we are too much inclined to count only their misses: for the classics we count only their hits.

The most ultra-modern, I think, will not object to our counting the classical hits, when they really are hits: the trouble is that so many performers and conductors give us the misses, and describe them as hits. Then the critic's duty is plain. He has to say in unmistakable terms that injustice has been done to two composers, that is, to (a) the dead classic whose failure was taken down from the shelf, and (b) some living composer of a far better work that ought to have had a hearing instead.

Like everybody else, I have read Mr. Newman's work for years, but I do not recall any concert notice in which he has made anything like a serious protest against this injustice. The 'loading of the dice against the moderns' may be a habit of half-educated musicians, or of pedantic professors: it ought to be the last thing a critic should do, or even tolerate in others. He should be up in arms at once, doing his utmost to put things right. Here is a case in point. Speaking of Beethoven's Rondino for wind instruments, Mr. Newman says it is a dull work, and adds:

If one of our young British composers were to produce such a work at Queen's Hall, the critics would with one accord say such things about him that would make his ears tingle for a year after. Yet very few of us say, the morning after a concert, that we think the Rondino dull, and if we do drop a hint to that effect, it is in a half-apologetic way, as if we knew we were doing the wrong thing in supposing that so great a man as Beethoven could ever be third-rate.

'Very few of us': Mr. Newman has no doubt sat through the Rondino. Has he ever been one of these outspoken 'very few'? Is he not too often bent on making the young British composer's ears tingle? It would be interesting to collect his utterances on such music as the Rondino, and compare them with the scathing and contemptuous terms in which he has waved aside certain works of Vaughan Williams for example. No: in this matter Mr. Newman speaks for himself. There are plenty of us, with no pretensions to his brilliance, who manage somehow to avoid 'loading the dice against the moderns'; indeed, we are not ashamed to plead guilty to working things sometimes so that the living composer gets an extra pip, just to encourage him, and as a set-off against the pedants and others who have homage and open ears for the dead, and the cold shoulder and the back of the hand and the sole of the foot for the living.

I have said a good deal on this point, because it is far more than a merely personal one. There are more writers on music than there ever were, and they have hosts of readers among the average public. The attitude of these writers towards living composers is therefore too important a matter to be passed over lightly. As Mr. Newman himself says, 'Professional criticism should be an affair not of politeness, but of ideal justice. It should not condone a failing in the aged that it chastises in the young.' An admirable precept: when the preacher puts it into practice he will double his value as a critic.

Shall I be accused of lacking a sense of humour if I say that the best of 'A Musical Motley's' papers are the more serious ones? Probably; but I risk it. It is more and more borne in on me that Mr. Newman is a wit rather than a humorist. The keen, illuminating sentence is constantly to the fore in his best critical work. He sends out sparks as he goes, and they are the natural result of his progress. When he sits down to write an amusing paper, he succeeds; but somehow he is just a little less amusing than we expect him to be. Perhaps this is because of a decided lack of geniality. One feels that the avowedly humorous papers (like the passages on obituary notices, quoted above) would score if delivered orally, with all the advantages of such a presentation: they do almost as well in a newspaper, but are several degrees less effective in a book containing brilliant and suggestive work of another character. I have a sort of impression at times that Mr. Newman wishes to be Rabelaisian, but so neat and cool-blooded a writer would be lost in the mantle of that sprawling genius. And when he is not neat he is comparatively ineffective. It should be possible, for example, to deal critically with Rachmaninov and Tchaikovsky without calling them 'The Weary Willies of Music.' Mr. Newman, of all critics, can make us see the weak sides of these composers without drawing on the nomenclature of the errand-boy's favourite journals.

A friend of mine who runs a big choir marks only the absences at rehearsal: they are a small minority, and so he keeps the register the easiest way. I have done the same sort of thing with 'A Musical Motley,' dwelling on its faults rather than its merits in order to save space. I could have filled a few pages with eulogy, and with quotations from the best articles. It would have been an easy but quite unnecessary task, because nobody needs telling that Mr. Newman is a brilliant and entertaining writer. 'A Musical Motley' will be a big success. Few books of the kind give us so complete a revelation of personality. It is the essence of Newman—a pungent brew.

'The Life of Liza Lehmann, by Herself' (Fisher Unwin, 10s. 6d. net), revives pleasant memories of one of the most attractive and popular composers of recent times. She is a striking example of the importance of realising one's limitations. She made the most of her gifts by not trying to do too much with them. Which of us would exchange 'In a Persian Garden' and 'The Cautionary Tales' for the Symphony and Quartet she wisely refrained from writing? How these song-cycles and other delightful things came into being she tells us at considerable length and with great enjoyment. It is the part of the book that will have most interest for all those who did not know her personally. The more intimate and trifling reminiscences are for the family rather than for the public. The reviewer is at a loss in dealing with a work of this kind: there is no call for any critical consideration of Liza Lehmann's music, and the purely personal side of the book, especially the poignant final chapter, written a few days before her death, is not matter for discussion. One can only say that the record leaves a vivid impression of a singularly gifted and attractive woman.

'The Four Tests: a Touchstone for Teachers and Lovers of Music,' by T. E. Workman (Methuen & Co., 2s. 6d. net), is a tiny, paper-covered booklet of thirty-six pages. Its slender bulk would be no fault if it were filled with highly-condensed original thought, or with truisms expressed in a fresh, and therefore in a helpful way. But I regret to have to say that I can find nothing that would not be more fitly published as an article in a journal devoted to elementary pianoforte-teaching. As a half-crown book it is dear. A half-crown goes but a little way in these hard times, we know, but it ought to go farther than this. Probably the price was fixed before the anti-profiteering Act was passed. Anyway, if the author sells a few thousand copies, he must not be surprised if his local Star Chamber begins to take an interest in him.

A tone-poem, 'Lights out,' by Julian Clifford, was performed under the composer's direction by the Harrogate Municipal Orchestra on September 17. It was written in memory of Ernest Farrar, whose 'Variations in G for pianoforte and orchestra on an old British sea-song' were also in the programme.

Church and Organ Music.

CHARLES HARFORD LLOYD.

BORN OCTOBER 16, 1849:

DIED OCTOBER 16, 1919.

We regret to announce the death of Dr. Charles Harford Lloyd, which took place at Slough, on his seventieth birthday. He was a native of Thornbury, in Gloucestershire. His bent towards the organ was shown so early that at ten years of age he was officiating at the neighbouring church of Rangeworthy, and while still a boy played also at Falfield. His regular study of music began at the age of thirteen, when he was taught pianoforte and harmony by Mr. John Barrett, of Bristol. He turned again to the organ while at Rossall (1865-68), taking some lessons from Charles Handel Tovey, the school organist and music-master. As with so many English organ students of that period, his staple musical diet was inferior to that of the young pianist. When Lloyd was working at the pianoforte under Barrett, his daily bread was Bach and Beethoven: the organ music given him at Rossall was chiefly by Batiste and Lefébure-Wély. Fortunately the youth soon after obtained an open scholarship at Magdalen Hall (now Hertford College), Oxford, where he came under the influence of Stainer, who gave him a term's lessons in harmony, and, even more important, the freedom of the organ loft. 'I gained an experience of untold value to me in watching him as he played the organ,' said Lloyd in after years.

At this time he had a leaning towards ordination, and attended the Divinity lectures of Liddon and Payne Smith. He took his Mus. Bac. in 1871, and his B.A. degree in 1872, with a second-class in Classical Mods. and also in theology. But although his studies were pointing to a clerical career, music was more and more getting a hold on him. He did a good deal of all-round practical musical work while at the University, among other activities playing the harmonium and conducting the Glee Club at Pembroke College. An important factor, too, was his friendship with two other young musicians marked out for future eminence—Parry, then an undergraduate at Exeter College, and Walter Parratt, who succeeded Stainer at Magdalen at this period.

The world of music was very near losing Lloyd during his latter days at Oxford. Discussing this in after years, he said: 'I was hanging on at Oxford, not knowing what to do. I coached fellows in various subjects—Political Economy amongst them. There was some idea of my becoming Inspector of Schools, and, mirabile dictu, an Inspector of Factories! But I became a private tutor—first to one of the Vernon Harcourts at Nuneham, and afterwards to the sons of Lord Inverclyde (then Mr. John Burns), of Cunard fame, at Castle Wemyss. . . . At Skelmorlie, on the Clyde, I sometimes played the organ in the Presbyterian Church.' Previously he had travelled as tutor to a pupil in France and Italy, and had made the most of his chances of becoming familiar with opera, attending almost nightly.

The year 1876 was a turning point in his career. During negotiations with a view to his appointment to the classical mastership of the Cathedral Choir School at Gloucester, Samuel Sebastian Wesley, then organist at the Cathedral, died. Lloyd had visited Gloucester during the previous year, and had played both pianoforte and organ to Wesley, who was much impressed, saying to Mrs. Ellicott during the organ performance, 'You prepared me for hearing a very fine pianist, but you never told me he was an organist; I haven't heard such playing as this for years.'

When Wesley died—April 19, 1876—the Dean and Chapter at once gave the vacant post to Lloyd. The appointment of a young and unknown man was much criticised, but the new organist speedily vindicated his selection.

The Gloucester organistship carries with it the office of conductor of the Three Choirs Festival, held at Gloucester every third year. Though inexperienced, Lloyd carried out the duties in 1877 and 1880 with conspicuous success. He remained at Gloucester for six years, two of his articulated pupils being G. R. Sinclair and Herbert Brewer, the latter succeeding his master.

From Gloucester Lloyd went to Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, on the invitation of Dean Liddell. During this second spell at Oxford (1882-92) he took his Mus. Doc. degree, and played a very active part in the musical life of the University. In 1892 Barnby left Eton for the Guildhall School of Music, and Lloyd was invited to fill his place as Precentor and Instructor of Music. Here he worked with great and far-reaching success until his retirement in 1914. But retirement meant change of occupation rather than rest, for he was still active as a composer, and as an examiner for various public bodies, and in 1914 he resumed the cares of office by becoming organist at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, a post which he held until his death.

Lloyd's compositions were chiefly choral, his works in this field ranging from songs for school and choral classes to festival cantatas. Among the latter were 'Hero and Leander' (Worcester Festival, 1884) 'The Song of Balder' (Hereford, 1885), 'Andromeda' (Gloucester, 1886), 'Alcesteis' (Oxford, 1887), 'A Song of Judgment' (Hereford, 1891), 'Ballad of Sir Ogie and the Lady Elsie' (1894), &c., &c. Among the part-songs some of the most successful are those written for two-part and three-part female-voice choirs, a small form in which his vein of tunefulness was shown to great advantage. His instrumental works include an Organ Concerto (Gloucester, 1895), and a Festival Overture (Gloucester, 1898), some chamber music, an admirable Organ Sonata, and various short pieces of attractive character.

As a Church composer he was prolific and successful, his numerous anthems and services being distinguished by excellent matter treated with unfailing skill.

His death will be widely regretted, both as an accomplished and earnest musician and as a genial man who made many friends wherever he went.

The funeral took place at Eton, on October 21, when the following were among the mourners: Sir Walter Parratt, Sir Frederick Bridge, the Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal, the Dean of Christ Church, the Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Dr. A. H. Brewer, Dr. C. Lee Williams, Prof. Buck, Mr. Oscar Street, representing the Madrigal Society, Mr. Claude Aveling, on behalf of the Royal College of Music, and Mr. Henry King, representing Messrs. Novello. Prof. Allen was unavoidably absent.

The following music was beautifully sung by the Eton College Chapel Choir: Croft's Sentences; Ps. xc. to Lloyd's chant in G flat; Anthem, 'Christ was delivered for our offences,' Lloyd. Hymns, 'Rock of Ages,' to Redhead's tune (with Lloyd's harmonization of verses 3 and 4), and 'Let saints on earth in concert sing,' to 'Dundee.' Mr. Basil Johnson was at the organ during the service, and Dr. Brewer played the 'Dead March' at the end.

A Quartet by Cyril Scott will be played at the Salle Gaveau, in Paris, on November 26, by the Philharmonic String Quartet.

QUEENSTOWN CATHEDRAL.

A POSTSCRIPT.

W.A.R. writes :

Mr. W. W. Starmer's admirable article in the October Musical Times on St. Colman's Cathedral, Queenstown, does justice to every point in detail, and to every person concerned, with one notable exception, viz., Mr. Starmer himself; for it is entirely due to him that Ireland leads the way in possessing the finest carillon of perfectly-tuned bells not only in the United Kingdom but also in the world. In a sense it is his own. He is its fons et origo. He advised its provision, drew up its specification, and supervised its erection. It represents to him the materialisation in a splendid way of a lifetime's study of bells and of bell acoustics. It is certain that he has done more than any other English musician to promote a better understanding of bells and carillons as instruments of music—unlimited in their mysterious and potent influences on human minds and lives. Until quite recent times the secrets of bell-harmonics were not known. Thanks to Mr. Starmer's writings and lectures, public interest in bells has been gradually awakened, and bell-founders have adopted the formula he has preached for so many years, viz., that 'A bell must be in tune with itself before it can be in tune with others.' Taylor's famous foundry at Loughborough has perfected the method of tuning bells scientifically, and it is in this direction that English bells are now pre-eminent in their absolutely exact intonations throughout the scale.

Mr. Starmer's practical knowledge of organ building has also been usefully applied to the improvement of the mechanical action between the clavier and the clappers of the bells, and M. Nauwelaerts, the Bruges carillonneur, was lost in admiration at the responsive action at Queenstown which enabled him to obtain all grades of expression, and the greatest rapidity of execution with the minimum of exertion. His famous carillon at Bruges is far less perfect in this respect. Listening to his three concerts in the sky one was impressed with the superiority of the perfected carillon, as a musical instrument, over the mechanical and mathematical processes of change-ringing, which, while an estimable and peculiarly English institution, has little or no musical significance. Its cadences are those of arithmetical progressions, but on a chromatic series of bells such as Queenstown possesses all things are possible. Not so with the far-renowned Shandon bells, which Mahony idealized as 'sounding so grand on the pleasant waters of the River Lee.' Fifteen miles away, their superb rival at Queenstown awaits its own poet.

Of course carillons are no new things. They are indeed very old and familiar institutions in the Low Countries. Dr. Burney was enlivened on his journey in 1773 by their sounds, and a hundred years later another well-known Englishman, the Rev. H. R. Haweis, was greatly impressed by their—in his opinion—superiority to chimes. Mr. Starmer has been their able advocate in later years, and to him indeed is due the credit of what would appear to be the commencement in earnest of a movement which in this country should have far-reaching development, not only in the manufacture of carillons, but also in the evolution of carillon-players and carillon-composers. Of the five carillons with claviers at present in this Kingdom, the last and greatest example in every respect is to be heard at Queenstown. Its fame will go out into all lands, sounding as it does so melodiously in one of the best-known gates to the New World. And in the orisons of all true bell-lovers should also be remembered the name of the present good Bishop of Cloyne, Dr. Browne, whose far-seeing enterprise has completed in Queenstown Cathedral with its wonderful carillon so magnificent a symbol of a living faith. Sunday, August 24, was therefore a day of ineffaceable memories. It was a day unsurpassed in the history of great religious ceremonials in Ireland.

When at last the evening came and the balm and benediction of the bells ceased, one final memory is of the great white building on the heights suddenly silhouetted in lines of lights which illuminated the outlines of the tower, spire, and pointed arches seaward. And surely the message of the bells was finely completed by this compline of the lights, shining upwards through the darkness.

NEW ORGANIST OF EXETER CATHEDRAL.

Dr. Ernest Bullock has been appointed organist of Exeter Cathedral in succession to the late Dr. D. J. Wood. He was educated at Wigan Grammar School, is a young man, still under thirty, and is regarded as a musician of high attainments and brilliant promise. Trained under Dr. E. C. Bairstow—then organist of Leeds Parish Church, now organist of York Minster—Mr. Bullock, acting as assistant to his tutor during the years 1906-12, gained an insight into Dr. Bairstow's successful methods of choir training and achieved fame as an organist. He took his Mus. Bac. degree in 1908, and secured the post of sub-organist of Manchester Cathedral, under Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson (now organist of Westminster Abbey), which post was thrown open to competition on the resignation of Mr. Coleman in 1912. At the early age of twenty-four, Mr. Bullock took the degree of Mus. Doc. at Durham. He joined the Army, and became captain in his regiment. Demobilised only in February of this year, he was a few months later appointed to St. Michael's College, Tenbury.

M. B.

YORK MINSTER CHOIR SCHOOL.

Joseph Laurence Slater, age sixteen, senior chorister in the York Minster Choir, has successfully matriculated as a student in music at Durham University; and Edward Leslie Wright, age fourteen, solo-boy in the Minster Choir, has gained the third place in 'Honours' in the College of Preceptors' Preliminary Certificate examination on a list of 436 candidates, with distinction in six subjects. Since Easter, 1903, 245 pupils of the above School have successfully passed examinations of Durham University; the College of Preceptors, London; Trinity College of Music, London; and the Civil Service, including one 'National Prize,' and twelve 'Exhibitions' in the Theory of Music.

Mr. Christopher E. Rowley has resigned from the post of organist of St. Augustine's, Pendlebury, which he has held for thirty-four years. He began his musical career as a choir-boy at Christ Church, Harphurey, where he subsequently became organist and choirmaster, and also acted in a similar capacity at various other churches, before taking up his duties at Pendlebury. A prolific and versatile composer, he from time to time issued contributions to Church music, cantatas, operettas, and songs, amongst the latter being twelve songs by Heine and others, and settings of the lyrics of the Lancashire poet Edwin Waugh. He is, however, best known to the older generation of music-lovers as the founder of the Musical Union which flourished in the 'eighties and 'nineties—giving its concerts in the Old Gentlemen's Concert Hall—an organization which helped to develop not only the vocal, but the histrionic talent of its members by the production of several operettas and burlesque-operas, including 'Eulalie,' 'The Early English Ring,' 'The Dragon of Wantley,' and 'Tilburnia, or The Spanish Armada,' from Mr. Rowley's facile pen.

Mr. Edwin Stephenson is now giving a series of recitals at St. Margaret's, Westminster, on Saturdays, at 5.30. The programmes from October 4 to December 13 are published as a four-page leaflet, and show many features of interest. There is a good sprinkling of unfamiliar modern works, especially by Franck, Vierne, Widor, Barie, and other French composers. Perhaps the most unusual part of the scheme is the inclusion of the whole of the 'Little Organ Book' of Bach. The forty-five pieces are played in groups of four or five, the groups having to do with a season of the Church's year. Reference is made to the pages in the Novello Edition of the 'Little Organ Book,' so that students and others interested may be aided in their understanding of these beautiful miniatures. Such systematic playing of the whole series is an admirable piece of educational work of which organists should take full advantage.

Julius Harrison's 'Harvest Cantata' received its first performance at Norwich at Unthank Road Baptist Church, on Thursday evening, October 2. The choir was augmented, and the singing throughout was well balanced. The soloists were Miss Gertrude E. Crotch and Mr. Allan Thompson. Mr. Fred F. Golden presided at the organ, and the organist (Mr. Cyril Pearce) conducted. Mendelssohn's 'Hear my Prayer' also received a very sympathetic performance. A collection in aid of the Church Restoration Fund amounted to £6 2s. 3d.

Three organ recitals of British music have been arranged for Saturday afternoons, November 22, December 6, and December 20, at St. Stephen's, Walbrook, at 3 p.m. The first will be given by Mr. F. W. Holloway, the second by Mr. E. Stanley Roper, and the third by Mr. F. W. Sutton. Collections will be taken for the Y.M.C.A. Musicians' Fund. The recitals are in connection with the University Extension Lectures on 'The Story of British Music,' now being given by Mr. Percy Scholes, at 28, Red Lion Square, on Thursday evenings.

At the invitation of the Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard a Hymn Festival will be held at St. Martin-in-the-Fields, on Saturday, November 29, at 3.0, under the direction of Mr. Martin Shaw, with Mr. W. J. Kipps at the organ. Church choirs, clergy, and people are cordially invited, and are asked to communicate with the Precursor of St. Martin's (the Rev. A. H. R. Robinson), giving numbers expected to attend, and stating if possible how many of each voice, in order that seats may be reserved.

After a lapse of five years the amalgamated choirs of St. Andrew's, St. Edward's, St. John's, All Saints', Romford, and Hornchurch Parish Church, assisted at the Dedication Festival of St. Edward's Parish Church, Romford, on October 16, 1919. Stanford's Evening Service in B flat and Mendelssohn's 'O come, let us worship' were sung. The soloist was Mr. Fred. P. Hammond (late solo-tenor of St. Michael's, Cornhill). Mr. Henry Disney was at the organ, and Mr. A. C. Chappell-Haverson conducted.

Old friends of Mr. Jesse Timson will be interested to hear of his retirement from the post of organist at the First Church of Otago, Dunedin, New Zealand, after thirty-one years' service. Mr. Timson's laying aside the cares of office was made the occasion of a handsome presentation from congregation, choir, and presbytery, with many cordial expressions of appreciation and goodwill.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson has recently given his five-hundredth recital at the Nottingham Central Mission. The occasion was celebrated by a programme consisting of pieces written for the occasion—Festal March, A. G. Colborn; Allegretto Scherzando, C. E. Blyton Dobson; and a Fantasy by E. A. Ireland.

Mr. Arnold Goldsbrough, who has made a name for himself by his playing at the Manchester Tuesday Mid-day Concerts, has vacated his position as assistant-organist of Manchester Cathedral, to take up the post of organist at St. Anne's, Soho.

Under the auspices of the Church Music Society, Mr. Harvey Grace will give a lecture-recital at St. Mary Magdalene's, Munster Square, N.W., on Saturday, November 1, at 3.30, on 'Organ music based on ecclesiastical themes.'

Mr. Harold E. Darke took his Mus. Doc. degree at Oxford on October 16.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Allegro Maestoso and Cantilène from Symphony No. 3, Louis Vierne; Romance, Lemare; Two Sketches, Schumann; Prelude on 'Hanover,' Parry.

Mr. J. A. Meale, Central Hall, Westminster—Theme with variations, Faalkes; Concert Overture, Hollins; Gothic Suite, Boëllmann; Sonata No. 1 (first movement), Rheinberger.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport (two recitals)—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Canzonet and Caprice, Bernard Johnson; Finale, 'Sonata Britannica,' Stanford; Prelude on 'Martyrdom,' Parry.

Mr. Herbert Walton, Glasgow Cathedral—Concert Fugue, Krebs; Passacaglia, Rheinberger; Scherzo (Symphony No. 4) and Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Funeral March ('Twilight of the Gods'), Wagner.

Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. Thomas's, Regent Street (four recitals)—Concert Overture in F, D'Eury; Matin Provençal, Bonnet; Marche Sérieuse, Selby; Allegro and Romance, Schumann; Prelude on 'A Stronghold Sure,' Faulkes; Minuet, Borowski; March for a Church Festival, Best; Intermezzo, Rheinberger.

Mr. Maughan Barnett, Town Hall, Auckland, N.Z. (six recitals)—Scherzo, Barnett; Symphony in D minor, Guilmant; Theme with variations, Faulkes; Andante Espressivo, Elgar; Symphony No. 1, Vienne; Pastoral, Franck; Dithyramb, Harwood; Impromptu, Lyon; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; 'Oak Pageant' ('Forest Studies'), Rideout; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Overture in F, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Herbert Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (four recitals)—Grand chœur Dialogue, Gigout; Dithyramb, Harwood; Finale (Symphony No. 4), Widor; Andantino in modo di canzona, Tchaikovsky; 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' Parts 5 and 6, Ernest Austin; Adagio and Allegro (Sonata No. 4), Bach; Fantasia and Fugue, Parry; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Londonderry Air, arranged by L. Hamand; Shepherd's Hey, Grainger; Prelude to 'Colombo,' Mackenzie.

Mr. Albert Orton, Newport Parish Church, Isle of Wight, (two recitals)—Sonata in F, Silas; Finale in D, Lemmens; Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor), Sterndale Bennett; Andante in F, Wesley.

Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Melody, York Bowen; 'Elves,' Bonnet; Berceuse and Finale (Suite No. 2), Driffill.

Mr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory Church (two recitals)—Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; Fuga alla Giga, Bach; Allegretto from a Concerto, Handel; Choral Song and Fugue, Wesley; Improvisation on 'Now thank we all our God,' Karg-Elert; Finale from Symphony No. 6, Tchaikovsky.

Mr. B. Langdale, St. George's, Barnsley—Sonata Eroica, Stanford; Serenata, Moszkowski; Nocturne, D'Eury; Caprice, Faulkes; Toccata, Widor.

APPOINTMENTS.

Captain P. W. de Courcy Smale, organist of Wigan Parish Church.

Mr. G. F. Robertson, organist and choirmaster, Parish Church, Hinckley.

London Concerts.

BY ALFRED KALISCH.

The month of October saw the beginning of a concert-season of unusual vigour, and, on the whole, of great prosperity. The result has justified neither the optimists who foretold an unexampled boom, nor the pessimists who feared a doleful slump. Except for the absence of artists from enemy countries, everything connected with London concert-giving has once more assumed its pre-war physiognomy. A very remarkable feature, however, is the great change in Saturday afternoon concerts. The bigger artists used to avoid this day. Now they scramble for it, with results distracting to the chronicler who thinks it his duty to deal with everything. Here a word should be said about the Sunday evening concerts organized by Mr. Bliss and his committee at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith, a previously obscure district recently discovered by artistic London. Decentralization is a very good thing in that it fosters a concert-going habit. There have been thousands of people in Greater London who after their day's work would gladly go to concerts within easy reach of their homes, but who shun a journey to Central London, or do not want to stay in town and return home after midnight.

PROMENADE NOVELTIES.

The Promenade Concerts have supplied us with a good many new works of all schools and all degrees of merit. The first in order of time after the close of last month's record was Tcherepnin's Quartet for four horns (September 23), which is pleasant, extremely well written for the instruments, and not at all advanced. In quite a different category is Lord Berners's 'Spanish Fantasy' (September 24). It is undeniably clever, and shows a real instinct for handling piquant rhythms, and a complete knowledge of the most modern idiom. Half the audience insisted on treating it as a musical joke. Whether the composer intends it as such or not there is no evidence to show. On September 25 an orchestral Rhapsody, 'The Culpit Fay,' by Henry Hadley, the American composer, was much applauded. It is a solid piece of work, not without fancy, but not greatly original. Perhaps originality on such a theme is impossible.

Mr. J. R. Heath had aroused pleasant anticipations by some of his smaller works inspired by his experiences in the Balkans. His orchestral Rhapsody, 'The Slopes of Kaimatchalem' (October 8), did not quite fulfil them. It is ingenious enough, but lacked the distinctive note. Mr. Eric Coates's Suite, 'Summer Days' (October 9), is extremely pleasant, adroitly put together, and delicately scored. One other new work of British origin has to be chronicled, and one quasi-novelty. On October 17 Sir Henry Wood handed over the orchestra for a few minutes to Mr. Howard Carr, who conducted his new orchestral piece, 'The Jovial Huntsmen.' Mr. Carr was the great friend of Mr. Randolph Caldicott, whose pictures illustrating this old song have become famous. In his new piece Mr. Carr shows the same talent for pleasing, easily intelligible musical description as his 'Three Heroes,' which was so popular last year, and the music flows as readily, while at the same time it is of more solid texture. The sections that deal with the grunting pigs and the 'Lunnon Aldermen' are very happy bits of humour, and there is more real fancy in the description of the scarecrow. On the same evening Mr. Ranalow sang admirably three West Country folk-songs collected by Mr. Cecil Sharp ('Come, all ye Christian men,' 'Bingo,' and 'Admiral Benbow'), scored by Dr. Vaughan Williams.

The last novelty, not last in point of time, to be mentioned is Florent Schmitt's orchestral piece, 'Rêves' No. 1 (October 16). It is interesting chiefly because it shows that Mr. Schmitt has now sworn allegiance to the modern French School, from which he had held aloof, preferring more solidity of structure and melodic outline. He has learned all that can be taught about the idiom, but he hardly seems to talk it with conviction yet. As a man who speaks a foreign language perfectly yet generally betrays an accent when he gets excited, so Mr. Schmitt reverts to his old ways in his climaxes. It is to be hoped, too, that his subsequent dreams may be more comfortable.

Before leaving the Promenade Concerts it is well to call attention to the wise policy of those concerned in arranging repetitions of works which have been successful. Unique in this respect is Miss Howell's 'Lamia,' which has been heard no fewer than five times. It was played at the first Symphony Concert on October 11, and Casella's 'Le Couvent sur l'Eau' has been in the programme of a Sunday Concert and a Symphony Concert.

NEW FEATURES.

Considerable success has attended the experiment of repeating the Sunday afternoon programme on Sunday evenings. It is pointed out, too, that there is now a special rehearsal for the Sunday concerts, so that there is reasonable expectation of hearing exceptionally finished performances on Sunday night.

In this connection it is worth mentioning that, according to the best authority, extra rehearsals and the raising of orchestral salaries have increased the cost of the Queen's Hall Orchestra by, roughly, £120 a week. This is sufficient justification, if any is needed, for increasing the price of the Promenade to 2s.

OTHER CONCERTS.

At the first Queen's Hall Symphony Concert on October 11, the programme included, besides the repetition of 'Lamia' already referred to, Berlioz's 'Fantastic' Symphony and Tchernepin's Concerto (with M. Moiseiwitsch playing the solopart wonderfully), and solos by Madame Kirkby Lunn. The novelty was the 'Ditrambo Tragico' of Malipiero. It is not remarkable for any quality except that of creating an intensive effect by relentless insistence of rather brutal rhythms, which justifies the title 'Dithyramb'—but it was difficult to discover any element of tragedy, unless the composer meant to imply that people who danced so wildly are bound to come to a bad end. Perhaps a warning to Jazzers!

The Ballad Concerts of Messrs. Chappell at Queen's Hall, of Messrs. Boosey at the Albert Hall, and of Messrs. Enoch at the Central Hall, Westminster, have begun, and prosper. Their standard is higher than it was. The Albert Hall Sunday Concerts are now varied—Madame Melba appeared at one (September 28) and had a crowded hall. At another there was a Wagner Concert by the Albert Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Landon Ronald.

The first appearance after a long interval of Madame Tetrassini at the Albert Hall (September 21) was a huge popular success. Madame Clara Butt gave a Saturday concert on October 4, and in spite of the strike there was a very large audience.

RECITALS.

It is impossible to attempt even a bare record of all the recitals of the month. Among pianists who have played the most important have been M. Moiseiwitsch, Mr. Lamond, and Signor Busoni. The last-named had not been heard here since 1914. At his rentrée at Wigmore Hall (on October 15) he was in a cloud-compelling mood—less vehement than of old, but really stronger, with more tenderness. His own 'arrangement' of some of the 'Goldberg' Variations of Bach opens up the whole question of the justification for such treatment of the classics. Be that as it may, there can be no doubt that his playing was amazing. Such virtuosity in part-playing is almost incredible, and in spite of the modern technique the Bach spirit was not violated. His playing of Beethoven's 'Hammerklavier' Sonata was also bewildering. One has seldom heard more tenderness and beauty (and less obscurity) in the slow movement. But has any artist ever succeeded in convincing us that it is not too long?

At her recital Miss Myra Hess, besides playing Mozart flawlessly, introduced an effective and characteristic 'Phantasy' by Bax, composed some time ago. Mr. York Bowen gave his first recital since the war, and played with admirable lucidity and strong technique. His own Studies are interesting, but not all suited for the concert room. His 'Serious Dances' are charming—especially the second—and should find a place in the répertoire of pianists who want British works. Mr. York Bowen's offer of a prize for a pianoforte work by a native composer is interesting too.

Among new-comers, Miss Helen Guest, a young pianist from Sheffield, deserves mention. She has a tone of remarkable volume for a young lady, and a broad healthy style. With more restraint she will go far. Miss Margaret Izzard, a young violinist, made an excellent impression by reason of her strength of temperament.

VOCAL RECITALS.

M. Mischa Léon had an exceedingly interesting programme at his recital at Æolian Hall on October 16. He is among the most musicianly and versatile singers now before the public, and knows how to gain the sympathies of his hearers. Some of the Scandinavian songs he sang deserve special attention from singers, as does Mr. Julius Harrison's new song, 'When Fiammetta sings.' Miss Dora Gibson, who made her reappearance (on the 14th ultimo), has returned after operatic success in America, and has developed into an effective concert singer. She proved her wide range of expression by being equally good in John Ireland's new song, 'The Adoration,' and Frank Bridge's 'Love goes a-riding,' which are respectively at the extreme ends of the emotional gamut.

The series of revivals of Gilbert and Sullivan's operas at Princes Theatre is one of the striking features of the season. So far 'The Gondoliers' and 'Iolanthe' have been drawing crowded houses, and no doubt the remaining pieces will do equally well. Their vitality is really one of the wonders of musical history. London playgoers—who are as a rule, it seems, born with a narrow mental outlook, extending only a mile or so in each direction from Charing Cross—talk as if these operas had just been dug out again, forgetting that they have never ceased to be popular in the Provinces, the Colonies, and even suburban London for thirty years at least.

It may be that in some other planet a better form of light opera exists, but it is impossible to think of any in this world. The music is still fresher than that of any musical comedy (or kindred work) produced since Sullivan wrote, and Gilbert's humour—even though the recipe now seems fairly obvious—still moves us to laughter. The works are not all perfect, naturally, but it is hard to see what good is done by belittling them, especially as those who scoff cannot even pretend to suggest a substitute.

The fact that owing to the railway strike the D'Oyly Carte Company had to fly from Bristol to London, in order to appear in London in 'The Gondoliers' on September 29, deserves mention as establishing a precedent in musical history.

The principal parts fall to Mr. Henry Lytton, the most experienced of Savoyards, and as the Grand Duke in the 'Gondoliers' and the Lord Chancellor in 'Iolanthe' (which was revived on October 20) he struck the right keynote. Mr. Sheffield (as the Grand Inquisitor and Private Willis) and Mr. Sydney Granville (Duke's Drummer and Strephon) are valuable recruits to the Company, and Mr. Derek Oldham and Mr. Frederick Hobbs are very capable singers and actors. Miss Bertha Lewis (Duchess and Queen of the Fairies) ably keeps up the old Savoy tradition, and Miss Helen Gilliland, Miss Nelly Briercliffe (a particularly dainty Iolanthe), and Miss Elsie Griffin have all the charm (so different from the odious airs and graces of the musical comedy leading lady) which Gilbert and Sullivan requires. Miss Briercliffe's singing of the pathetic appeal to the Chancellor in the second act of 'Iolanthe' should be specially praised.

Mr. Geoffrey Toye is doing his work as conductor conspicuously well. He has made many of us realise afresh how beautifully the operas are scored. He has never-failing vivacity and the right sense of musical humour. The chorus is certainly among the very best heard on any London stage for many years. The singing of the Peers' Chorus in Iolanthe, for instance, would have done credit to any Grand Opera performance anywhere.

GUILHERMINA SUGGIA.

Among the outstanding recitals announced for the autumn season are three by Madame Suggia, the famous 'cellist', whose portrait we give below.

Photograph by

Sydney J. Loeb.

New Music.

BY WILLIAM CHILD.

SONGS.

- It was a lover and his lass.* By Edward German.
A Daffodil Wedding. By W. G. Ross.
The Raiders. By Bromley Derry.
Four Shakespeare Songs. By Reginald Steggall.
Folk-Songs of English origin. Collected in the Appalachian Mountains. By Cecil Sharp.
 [Novello & Co.]
Songs of a Roving Celt. By C. Villiers Stanford.
 [Enoch & Sons.]
My Gostly Fader; As ever I saw; The Bayley berith the bell away. By Peter Warlock.
 [Winthrop Rogers.]

Mr. Edward German's incidental music for the production of 'As You Like It' at St. James's Theatre in 1896 contained among other good things a delightful duet for soprano and contralto, 'It was a lover and his lass.' This has now been arranged as a solo, and a first-rate solo it is, with the lilting vocal part and dainty accompaniment that we have learned to expect from the composer at his best. The solo version is published in two keys, for mezzo-soprano and soprano.

There is a hint of Edward German in Mr. Ross's 'A Daffodil Wedding.' The material is tuneful, the rhythm bright, and the whole moves in neat and fluent style. It is suitable for a high voice. Baritones and basses with a taste for the bellicose should be able to make a great effect with 'The Raiders' (a song of the Norsemen). It is duly fierce, and thoroughly martial without the conventional martial figures. Both singer and pianist are well served with music which is rousing but not difficult.

Shakespeare is still a fount of inspiration to composers, and it is safe to say that the best of his lyrics will always be appearing in fresh musical dress. Mr. Steggall is a composer from whom we expect complex works of pronounced modern flavour. Here we have him in simple mood. The vocal part of his four Shakespearean songs has much of the character of the old English ditty. The accompaniments are also on simple lines, but are made interesting and effective by many happy little touches. The lyrics set are 'Hark! hark! the lark,' 'Who is Sylvia?', 'Take, O take those lips away,' and 'Orpheus with his lute.' All are on the brief side, with very little repetition of words. 'Hark! hark! the lark' is an animated little song, with a slight but telling accompaniment. It contains no accidentals. 'Who is Sylvia?' is also diatonic—indeed, it has a strong modal flavour—and again the composer shows his ability to obtain a great deal of effect with very slight means. 'Take, O take those lips away' strikes a more expressive note. It is in 5-4 and 4-4 time, with feeling expressed in a reticent manner, but certainly expressed. Perhaps the most attractive of the set is the last, 'Orpheus with his lute.' The change from G major to B flat and back again for verse 2 is as effective as it is surprising. The only blemish in this charming song, it seems to me, is the pause after 'heart' towards the end. A common misreading of the line is to regard the word 'killing' as a verb instead of an adjective. A musical setting should make the meaning clear by being phrased thus:

'In sweet music is such art;
 Killing care and grief of heart
 Fall asleep—or, hearing, die.'

This fault apart, these simple and pleasant settings call for nothing but praise.

The first result of Mr. Cecil Sharp's recent visit was a volume of songs and letterpress, written in conjunction with Olive Dame Campbell, and published in 1917 by Putnam's. From this volume of 122 songs and 323 tunes he has now selected a dozen, and provided them with pianoforte accompaniments full of interest, but well in keeping. The melodies of the ballads are of the straightforward type suitable for singing to narratives consisting of a good many verses. The modern ear demands variety, and Mr. Sharp has wisely provided accompaniments for sets of two or three verses, instead of making one setting serve for a number of consecutive verses. The song-tunes are more highly developed and expressive. Particularly fine melodies are those of 'The false young man,' and 'Now once I did court.' The tonality of the latter is striking—F major with some unexpectedly flattened E's and A's. The 'Riddle Song' is very quaint and bright. The whole collection is worth attention by all who can appreciate fine melodies and deftly written accompaniments. As a witness to the purely musical interest it may be mentioned that I recently heard the set played straight through as a pianoforte duet, the voice part in the higher reaches of the keyboard, to the great delight of the assembled company—all musicians of a rather critical type. It should be added that the songs are mostly for medium voice, and that Mr. Sharp has added an interesting preface and notes.

Sir Charles Stanford is as prolific as ever, and this set of songs show him in his best vein. There are five, the words being from a collection of poems by Murdoch Maclean, and it follows that the Celtic flavour is very pronounced throughout both in words and music. In 'The Pibroch' a fragment of a pipe tune plays an important part, but nothing is more impressive than the simple ending. 'The Pibroch' is one of the most successful songs the composer has written. Less obviously striking but equally good are 'The sobbing of the Spey,' and 'No More,' the latter a wild lament in which harp passages are a prime feature. In 'Assynt of the Shadows' there are some subtle harmonic effects, especially in the close juxtaposition of B flat minor and D minor. The set is one more reminder of Stanford's high position among the great song-writers.

Peter Warlock is a composer new to me. His three songs are remarkable pieces of work. The words of the first are from a 15th century Rondel attributed to Charles d'Orléans. Those of the second and third come from early English sources, viâ the Harleian MSS. All are very quaint, so much so that it seems inadvisable to print them in their archaic form—a form which calls for explanatory footnotes, and so is suitable for the reader rather than for the hearer.

Mr. Warlock (is it a nom de plume?—if not, it ought to be) has caught the spirit of the words perfectly. All three are first-rate, but the palm must go to 'As ever I saw,' which is as delightful a modern-antique as ever I heard.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Theme and Six Diversions. For pianoforte duet and pianoforte solo. By Edward German.

Valse Lyrique. By Percy E. Fletcher.
[Novello & Co.]

The Good-humoured Ladies. By Scarlatti-Tommasini.
[J. & W. Chester.]

The Joyful Homecoming. By H. Balfour Gardiner.
[Forsyth Brothers.]

First Bagatelle, Pastoral (No. 1). By Cyril Scott.
[Elkin & Co.]

Among recent orchestral novelties, one of the most successful has been Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions. The composer has been well advised in arranging them for pianoforte solo and pianoforte duet, in which forms they will surely make a wide appeal. The solo version is fairly difficult, needing a brilliant style. As a duet, the music is well within the powers of moderately endowed players. Has German ever written two more attractive movements than the Gipsy Dance and the Waltz of this work? I doubt it. Nothing is more surprising than the ease and naturalness with which the somewhat ecclesiastical theme is developed into a couple of piquant dances. Readers who have heard the work played by an orchestra may fancy that its success was due largely to the glittering brilliance of its instrumentation. These pianoforte versions prove that the dress matters very little. The music's the thing. Here it is so fresh and tuneful that it will make friends, whatever the medium of its performance.

Mr. Fletcher's 'Valse Lyrique' is a transcription of his popular song 'The Smile of Spring,' and is a pleasing piece of salon music, of moderate difficulty.

The music of 'The Good-humoured Ladies' needs no introduction to the numerous Londoners who have enjoyed it at the Russian Ballet. They will be glad to have a pianoforte edition. It consists of about twenty of Scarlatti's best harpsichord pieces, and so needs no further recommendation.

Mr. Balfour Gardiner's 'Joyful Homecoming' is a piece which was so successful on its first performance at the Promenades that it received the rare honour of an encore. The composer has arranged it as a pianoforte solo, in which form its cheerful strains should reach a wide circle. It presents no difficulties save in the matter of chord playing, a good accommodating grasp being needed to obtain the right sonority.

Mr. Cyril Scott's 'Bagatelle' and 'Pastoral' are easier to play than most of his pieces. They contain a good deal of wayward charm, and not a little that is merely perverse. The best feature in the 'Bagatelle' is its fluid rhythm. I wish Mr. Scott would write some pieces minus shifting sevenths, ninths, and thirteenths. They were so surprising once upon a time, but they have long since become a convention, and a cloying one at that.

ORGAN MUSIC.

Fantasy in A. Carillon in A flat. By J. A. Sowerbutts.
[Novello & Co.]

Two very bright and tuneful pieces. The Fantasy is the longer and more ambitious, with three capital themes, not too well contrasted perhaps, as they have all much the same gait. The first and third are combined with excellent results on page 9. Mr. Sowerbutts is at his best in writing of this kind. It has much of the quality of chamber music. There is some neat canonic treatment here and there, an especially effective bit being that over the dominant pedal at the end. Here a good tuba can be made the most of. The Fantasy is moderately difficult, and is suitable for voluntary and recital purposes.

The Carillon is a recital piece pure and simple. It is an ingenious treatment of a tiny ostinato consisting of the notes E flat, D natural, and F—really an ornamented E flat, the dominant of the piece. This chiming figure is played on the choir with 8-ft., 4-ft., and 2-ft. stops, while the right hand and pedals discourse fluently and melodiously. The three notes are invested with great variety and interest, but there is nothing farfetched. Relief is provided by a middle section in B major, wherein the chime has a rest. The 'Carillon' should be popular. Mr. Sowerbutts is an organ composer of whom a good deal more will be heard, unless I am mistaken. The only fault to find with him at present is a tendency to suspend animation before the entry of a new theme. Such halts are convenient for registration purposes, and are unobjectionable so long as they do not make themselves felt as halts. It is possible to 'carry on' over such points, just as a good singer appears to be singing through rests, and even interludes. When he is over these danger points, and well under way, Mr. Sowerbutts's writing is so excellent that his future work will be looked for with interest.

Letters to the Editor.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY SPECIAL CHOIR.

SIR,—The response to the appeal for members of the above choir, which was made known through the courtesy of the Press, has been most gratifying as regards both the number and the capacity of those who have come forward. The choir is nearly complete, and rehearsals are commencing forthwith. Arrangements are being made for the following performances: Monday, December 8, at 8 o., 'Israel in Egypt'; Monday, March 22, 1920, at 8 o., 'St. Matthew' Passion; Monday, June 7, at 8 o., Unaccompanied Motets.

It is now exigent to appeal to music-lovers, who may not themselves be performers, for an equally encouraging support on the financial side. In a venture such as this there are necessarily certain heavy expenses which will not again recur; but if the music is to be performed in the best possible way, it is hardly to be expected that even the current expenses will regularly be met by the collections alone. We therefore ask, first of all, for donations; but in order that we may be able adequately to meet the initial expenses, these should amount to at least £300. Secondly, we ask for annual subscriptions, in order that we may have a reserve fund to cover current expenses; annual subscribers will be entitled to three tickets for each performance in respect of each guinea subscribed. Thirdly, we ask for a guarantee fund; guarantors will be entitled to one ticket for each performance in respect of each half-guinea guaranteed. In the event of a deficit, the loss will be divided amongst the guarantors pro rata.

Donations, subscriptions, or offers to guarantee, should be sent to The Receiver-General of Westminster Abbey, The Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.-1. Cheques should be made payable to the 'Westminster Abbey Special Choir Fund.'—Yours, &c.,

SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON

(Organist and Master of the Choristers, Westminster Abbey).

MR. NEWMAN AND Scriabin.

SIR,—After succumbing to an uncontrollable fit of laughter during a recent performance of Scriabin's 'Prometheus,' I feel myself entitled to the honour of belonging to the species known as the 'plain man' (who rises in revolt) referred to in Mr. Newman's criticism in the Evening Standard of September 24. I am told that I do not listen with my imagination and that my ear will tolerate any discord so long as it is the necessary and natural medium of an idea. Be that as it may, I am certain that as long as I am equipped with the brace of ears that I have at present I shall come no nearer toleration than laughter when a theme on the trumpets leaps out at a tangent, as it were, and cocks a snook at me from mid-air, or when a combination of cymbals and dinner gongs proclaim the 'ardours and ecstasies of realised and unrealised desire.'

But is not Mr. Newman somewhat inconsistent, or is it merely that he has turned a complete mental somersault during the last ten years? In his book on Strauss, written in 1908, he says à propos the 'Don Juan' dying shudder and the 'Don Quixote' dying sigh: 'But it is one thing to extend the scope of musical speech in this legitimate way and quite another to make a bogus extension by merely tacking a literary label on to a handful of notes that cannot possibly be made to mean what the label says they mean' (italics are mine). He then goes on to point out that 'when Strauss writes a sequence of notes and tells us that it is meant to signify a feeling of satiety in Don Juan's heart, we are bound to tell him that it does nothing of the kind—there is no congruity between the literary label and the musical phrase.' Further: 'So again with the theme of "disgust" that blares out in the trombones at the end of the section descriptive of Delights and Passions in "Also sprach Zarathustra." In the first place this no more suggests disgust than it does toothache; and when at a later stage he brings in the theme in diminution and asks us to see in this the partly convalescent Zarathustra making sport of his previous depression of spirits, we can only say that we are unable to oblige him. All we are conscious of is that a sequence of notes that had very little meaning to begin with is now being made unnecessarily ugly and ridiculous.'

After this we can only conclude that in those prehistoric days Mr. Newman had not yet learned to listen with his imagination. But nothing can stem the tide of Mr. Newman's greedy intellect once it gets going, and now he 'wonders that the ordinary language of music should ever have been so transformed as to make it capable of saying the things Scriabin makes it say—of suggesting these primitive depths and ethereal heights, of finding a voice for the growing pains of the cosmos,' &c., &c. In other words, Scriabin's music apparently presents an exception to the otherwise immutable basis of the most enlightened culinary research: what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. Newman is so fond of pulling other people's legs that I am sure he will not mind my making his nether extremities undergo a respectful process of telescopic haulage, as he knows quite well that no one admires and recognizes more than this particular 'plain man' the immense spiritual services which he has rendered to the cause of music. It is just another instance of the exception proving the rule.—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT E. LORENZ.

14, Craven Hill, W. 2.
September 25, 1919.

ITALY'S VOCAL TRADITION.

SIR,—May I be permitted to express my appreciation for the truth and insight displayed in Mr. Cesari's article 'Italy's Vocal Tradition,' and at the same time to give a few facts which may interest the student of things musical?

After one has studied—say in Germany—for many years, the first thing that strikes the new student in Italy is the ease with which all singers, both male and female, take their top-notes. Every tenor has a 'high C,' whatever else he has not, and every coloratura of the humblest calibre sings E in Alt in Gilda's aria 'Caro nome,' with a security and facility which puzzles the newcomer.

The public has been fed on these ambitious soarings, as well as on the falling into chest notes of the dramatic soprano, for instance, at the end of Santuzza's aria 'Voi lo sapete, o Mamma.' They expect these things, in fact they demand them of the artists, and no one dreams of refusing such luxuries. Therefore, to the smallest provincial opera-house, tenors and sopranos go armed with these accessories, knowing full well that whistling or ridicule will follow if Manrico does not deliver a long sustained Doh in 'La Pirra' of 'Il Trovatore,' or Lucia fails finally to go mad on the E in Alt in the wonderful cadenza.

To us, trained in the ideal that an even voice and equal quality throughout are the chief requisites, these spasmodic outbursts come almost as vulgarities, after a very mediocre performance of an aria. But, with time, one's ear becomes accustomed to these points or rather finesses in art, and then like the rest of the people we wait through long, badly sung operas for just these two or three stunts, actually counting the bars of 'Spirito Gentil' ('La Favorita') to see if the tenor can do the traditional four lines in one breath. 'To such base uses . . .'

Thus, on the surface, it seems that limitation or difficulty of range is quite eliminated from the Italian vocal vocabulary. But all this is very far from constituting 'bel canto,' though it certainly helps when other qualities are present.

I have never heard more indifferent singing than at Milan, during the years 1915-18. There were great exceptions—but not Italian ones—namely, two beautiful tenor voices, Hockett (United States) and Di Giovanni (Johnson) from Canada—men whose names will soon become world wide as true exponents of the real Italian school of singing.

Just before his death, Sabbatini himself said to an English pupil, that Italy had long since lost the art of imparting the 'bel canto,' and pointed out that within the last decade this great land of song and story had produced only one singer of any note, namely Rosina Storchio, and she herself could not be counted among the stars of the very first magnitude—that is, she does not twinkle in the same sphere as Patti, Melba, Sembrich, or Hempel.

Another fact worth pondering over, physiologically, is the undeniable luscious beauty and extra superiority of the Italian male voice in contrast with the white, hard quality of the female. It seems incredible, but it is nevertheless true, that Signorina Muzio, in 1916, was the first Italian woman to sing in a Puccini opera at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York, where the stars of every nationality shine forth in dazzling splendour.

She appeared in 'Tosca' then, war conditions preventing Destinn and others from leaving Europe, and the American manager himself, discussing this phenomenon with me, said that the Italian men were peerless where voice was concerned, but the women were very indifferent. Look at your opera programmes before the war. The prime donne were Melba, Destinn, Hempel, Von der Osten, Dux, Matzenauer, Schumann Heink, ad infinitum—not one Italian name. The men, however, ran thuswise: Caruso, Martinelli, Scotti, Tito Ruffo, Zenatello, Sammarco, &c.

It is a very curious thing—perhaps some one can explain this to us.

The cult of Wagner naturally hindered the Italian in competing outside his own shores, for there was the bar of language, Germany being a pons asinorum for these warm, sunny Southerners. But Puccini, Verdi, &c., had no such obstacle. And though modern music, such as Wagner, may be easier to sing, being more declamatory and abrupt than the old Italian style, it is infinitely more difficult to learn. And here again Italy fails, as the training in general is not severe enough on the purely musical side. Months instead of years are lightly devoted to acquiring the necessary artistic equipment, with the result that, before the war, one looked in vain for serious exponents of modern music among the Italian school.—Yours, &c.,

LUTE DRUMMOND.

Australia House, Strand, W.C.2.

MEYERBEER AND HIS EXECUTORS.

SIR,—I am glad that Mr. Wotton has called attention to the unpublished compositions of Meyerbeer. These include music to a play by Blaze de Bury entitled 'La Jeunesse de Goethe,' which contains a setting of the Church scene from 'Faust.' The great composer is said to have left also an unfinished opera entitled 'Judith,' as well as a quantity of other works of different kinds. These compositions should have been published long ago, and even now they could not fail to prove highly interesting. Meyerbeer's operas have unfortunately been much neglected of late, and it is probable that many people are unaware of their beauties. The mangled version of 'Les Huguenots' known to Covent Garden audiences gives but a poor idea of a masterpiece which commanded the enthusiastic admiration of Berlioz, Wagner, and Liszt. The enormous influence exercised by Meyerbeer over his contemporaries and successors, including Wagner, Verdi, Gounod, and Bizet, is I think scarcely realised.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR HERVEY.

1, Norfolk Crescent, Hyde Park, W. 2.

October 20, 1919.

The Capetown Municipal Choral Society and Orchestra took part in a concert given at the City Hall by Mr. Theo. Wendt on August 19. The chief item in the programme was Elgar's 'The Spirit of England,' heard in its complete form for the first time in Capetown. Familiar numbers, largely of solo music, made up the remainder. Mrs. F. Magers was the soprano soloist in Elgar's work. The same choir and orchestra repeated 'The Spirit of England,' under Mr. Wendt, on September 4, when the programme also included the 'Enigma' variations. The Funeral March from 'Götterdämmerung' was played in memory of General Botha.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths :

BRENDAN J. ROGERS, of Queenstown, on October 10, aged forty-eight. Born at Kingstown, Co. Dublin, of a musical family, the third son of Brendan J. Rogers, organist of the Pro-Cathedral, Dublin, the late Mr. Rogers held successively several organ appointments, including Clarendon Street Carmelite Church, Dublin, and Monaghan Cathedral. In 1900 he was appointed organist of Queenstown Cathedral, but ill-health obliged him to resign in 1917. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather were organists, and he himself was not only a fine executant, but he published many sacred pieces of more than average merit. He leaves a widow and two sons.

H. J. BAKER, for thirty years organist and choir-master of Hornsey Parish Church. For some years he presided over the Alexandra Palace organ until the closing in 1889. In 1898 he organized a large choir for the re-opening, and conducted throughout that season. He was a member of Henry Leslie's choir, sang under Sir Joseph Barnby, and took part in the first performance in the country of Bach's 'Passion' and in every succeeding performance at St. Paul's Cathedral down to the present year. For thirty years he was an associate of the Philharmonic Society.

JOHN SAUNDERS, the well-known violinist. Though familiar to the public chiefly as leader of the Philharmonic Society's orchestra and the new Symphony Orchestra, he was a musician of all-round attainment, and had executive powers that could have brought him fame as a soloist. From musicians he won most esteem as first violinist in chamber music. At the South Place Sunday Chamber Concerts he took part in over two hundred programmes in the course of twenty-eight years.

WILLIAM GRIFFIN, on October 4, aged seventy-one. He was a well-known musician in the Midlands, and was for many years chairman of the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra. His funeral took place from the Catholic Church of Balsall Heath, and the remains were interred in the Franciscan Capuchin Monastery at Olton.

ALFRED J. EYRE, F.R.C.O., in his sixty-sixth year. He was for many years organist at the Crystal Palace, and afterwards professor at the Royal Normal College for the Blind and organist at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Norwood.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of November, 1859 :

TESTIMONIAL TO CIPRIANI POTTER, Esq., on his resignation as Principal of the Royal Academy of Music. At a Meeting of the Profession, 26th Sept., it was resolved that the Professors and past and present Students of the Academy be invited to contribute to this expression of professional admiration and personal regard. Committee: Dr. W. S. Bennett, Messrs. R. Barnett, H. Blagrove, W. Dorrell, J. Goss, Lucas (Treasurer), G. A. Macfarren (Secretary), Walter Macfarren, and Brinley Richards, by whom subscriptions will be received.

Holiday Present. Cloth, 8vo, gilt edges, price 2s. 6d.

A MUSICAL GIFT FROM AN OLD FRIEND, containing 24 new songs for the young. By W. E. HICKSON. Including "The Omnibus" and "Hope and Sunshine," sung with great applause at the late Crystal Palace Festival of the Tonic Sol-fa Association. (The music in the common staff notation.) London: J. A. Novello, 69, Dean-Street, Soho.

Many produce tone, particularly when vocalizing a and o, too deep in the throat, which sounds ugly, and which I qualify, on these occasions, as "bacon tone."

[From an article on singing, by F. Silcher.]

DERBY.—The first of a series of Concerts for the People took place at the Temperance Hall, on the 21st of October, under the management of Mr. T. A. Johnson. The performers were Miss Dolby, Mr. Sinton (violin), M. Paque (violin-cello), and Herr Meyer Lutz (pianist). The series will consist of ten concerts, and the terms of subscription are so low that a large attendance may be expected.

The 1919-20 Season.

Although there are signs of abundant musical activity in preparation throughout the country, comparatively little definite information is yet to hand as to the plans of choral societies and orchestral organizations. We are glad to make known such particulars as have been sent to us up to the time of going to press.

LONDON.

The Royal Choral Society, with Sir Frederick Bridge still in charge, offers a typical programme such as musical people in the West-End delight in. With the exception of 'Messiah' on Good Friday all the concerts take place on Saturday afternoons. 'Elijah' is chosen for the opening concert of the season on November 1, with Miss Agnes Nicholls, Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. Ben Davies and Mr. Herbert Brown. On November 29 the programme is built of Coleridge-Taylor's 'A tale of Old Japan,' Parry's humorous 'Pied Piper of Hamelin'—an excellent choice—Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah,' and an orchestral piece by Percy Fletcher entitled 'The Spirit of Pageantry.' Following a now established custom the Christmas-time concert (on December 20) is devoted to carols. 'Messiah' is to be given on January 3; 'Hiawatha' on February 14, and 'The Dream of Gerontius' on March 13. The last programme on April 24, consists of Stanford's 'The voyage of Maeldune' and 'Songs of the Fleet,' Hamilton Harty's 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' and Hubert Bath's 'The Visions of Hannele' (for orchestra). Mr. H. L. Balfour continues his work as organist.

The London Symphony Orchestra offers six symphony concerts of unusual interest. The first was announced for October 27, with Mr. Felix Salmond as soloist in the first performance of Elgar's new Violoncello Concerto. There is a novel attractiveness in the title of the next programme (November 24)—'An Evening of Fairy Tales'—which is heightened by the names of Ravel, Liadov, Moussorgsky, Holbrooke, and Stravinsky ('L'Oiseau de Feu'). December 15 is a 'Faust' evening—without Gounod. On January 19 we are promised Holst's 'Beni Mora' and the first performance of a lyrical symphonic poem by Flamma Artis. These four concerts are to be conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. On February 16 Sir Thomas Beecham takes charge of a classical programme. On March 8 Mr. Coates is to conduct Delius's 'Pagan Requiem' and Scriabin's 'Poem of Fire.'

Among the smaller London musical societies we hear that the Battersea, Clapham and Wandsworth Choral Union (conducted by Mr. George Lane) has Elgar's 'The Black Knight' and Bridge's 'Ballad of the Clampheddown' in preparation; the Great Western Railway Musical Society (Mr. Henry A. Hughes) is rehearsing Parts 2 and 3 of 'Hiawatha.'

There is ample provision of chamber-music during the autumn. The chief credit is due to the Classical Concert Society, whose prospectus announces eight concerts, the dates being October 22, 29, November 5, 12, 19, 26, December 3, 10. Modern names in the list of chamber works promised are Ravel, Frank Bridge, Fauré, and Delius. The programme for November 26 is entirely Bach.

The London Chamber Concert Society has also an interesting scheme. The famous Bohemian String Quartet was due on October 28, Miss Adila d'Aranyi's Quartet is to play on November 11, and on November 25 Elgar's Quartet and Quintet are to be played by Mr. W. H. Reed's party.

THE PROVINCES.

On other pages of this issue our country correspondents chronicle coming events in their various districts. We have also had the following information :

At Cambridge performances of Purcell's 'Fairy Queen' will be given at the Theatre, from February 9 to 14, by the University Musical Society, conducted by Dr. Cyril Rootham.

The Woking Musical Society resumed work at the beginning of October, the orchestral section under Mr. Patrick H. White, the choral under Mr. H. Scott-Baker. German's 'Merrie England' is in preparation for December; and the Society is in a position to announce, for a later concert, the performance of a new work by Sir Edward Elgar. The experiment of a 'Woking Festival of British Composers,' which was highly successful in March this year, is to be repeated.

Stockport Vocal Union, conducted by Dr. Keighley, will give Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah' on November 3, 'Il Trovatore' on February 9, and Hubert Bath's 'Wedding of Shon MacLean' on March 22.

Bishop Auckland Musical Society, whose musical director is Dr. N. Kilburn, has secured the services of Sir Edward Elgar to conduct 'The Music-Makers' on December 2. The Leeds Symphony Orchestra will take part.

Perth Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Stephen Richardson, has Bath's 'Wedding of Shon MacLean' in preparation, and Ludlow Choral Society has selected 'Judas Maccabæus.'

DR. H. J. EDWARDS'S 'HYMN OF VICTORY AND PEACE.'

Apparently the only choral work which has been published in celebration of Peace is 'A Hymn of Victory and Peace,' composed by Dr. H. J. Edwards, which was produced on October 22 by the Exeter Oratorio Society. The work is laid out for chorus, four solo voices, orchestra and organ ad lib. The words are from Scriptural sources, and the scheme falls into four parts—Praise, Lament, Peace, Victory, with an extended Amen.

The first section is solely choral, and after a fortissimo entry, the tenors lead in a fugal exposition, with unusual succession of keys. An unaccompanied passage, pianissimo, gives the words 'Yet, Thou art merciful' with beautiful effect, following the fugal work, and is succeeded by vigorous work for chorus and strings. Many enharmonic changes bring the music to a broad diatonic passage approaching the final cadence of this section.

The Lament is in the Dorian mode, a mode of martial tradition, which thus allies the work with its raison d'être. The chorus enters unaccompanied in the chief theme of the Lament, 'O that my head were waters,' and before long a soprano solo is heard above with reassuring words, 'Be of good cheer,' the effect of which is strikingly beautiful. A dirge, 'For the slain,' is supplemented with a pp drum-roll.

Chords for trombones and horns continue the Dorian mode at the opening of the Peace section, but modern tonality is restored with wood-wind and strings. This section constitutes an effective quartet for solo voices, chief responsibility resting on the soprano. Effective accompaniment by wood-wind and horn solo heightens the charm of this movement. The Lament and Peace sections are perhaps the most striking parts of the work.

The Victory section opens with a trumpet and drum fanfare, and the chorus at first sings in solid harmony unaccompanied with interluding arpeggi and chords on the strings. Voices and trumpets achieve a fine climax on the words 'With His own right hand.' Key, rhythm, and tempo suddenly change for a soprano solo, followed by quartet for solo voices, which leads into a chorus with organ and drums in the original tempo and rhythm. The last portion of this striking section is a stirring peroration, fugal in construction, with novel use of keys, the entry in D being answered in the submediant. The original theme of the work and the fugal subject are used contrapuntally, and a climax is reached with unaccompanied voices in the principal theme, and, unexpectedly, a beautiful cadence is approached by a pp passage of 5ths.

The Amen is very full in harmony, the parts frequently dividing, and chromatic contrary motion and an extended tonic pedal give strength to the structure. A climax is reached by the soprano solo on the high B, supported by chorus and brass. An unusual cadence closes the work, the penultimate chord being the ninth on the supertonic without the root.

Dr. Edwards's choral Hymn is scored for full orchestra. It is difficult, but a competent choir will find the hard work required in preparation thoroughly worth while.

It was successfully produced by the Exeter Oratorio Society on October 22 by two performances at Exeter Cathedral, under the baton of the composer. Dr. Edwards also conducted the 'Hymn of Praise,' and Mr. Allan Allen conducted 'Blest Pair of Sirens' and selections from 'Messiah.' The principal vocalists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss May Keene, Mr. Herbert Teale, and Mr. S. J. Bishop. The orchestra, led by Mr. Percy Parish, played in addition Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture, conducted by Dr. Edwards, in memory of the late Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of the Cathedral and co-conductor of the Society. M.B.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A series of lectures upon 'The History of Music' is being given in the Duke's Hall on Wednesday afternoons by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. The lectures deal with the 'Evolution of Music up to the time of Bach.' The first lecture was given on October 29. This series of lectures forms part of the Teachers' Training Course which has started this term at the Royal Academy of Music. In connection with this scheme, which has been arranged for the special training of music teachers and to meet the requirements of the Registration Council which come into force at the end of next year, the following lectures are being given during the present term: 'Psychology in its application to Music Teaching,' by Mrs. Curwen; 'The Teaching of the Pianoforte to Children,' by Miss Scott Gardner; 'Voice-Culture and School Class Singing,' by Mr. James Bates; and 'The Teaching of Sight-singing and Aural Training,' Dr. Frederick G. Shinn. In the latter subjects, classes of children are present at the lectures and are taught by the student-teachers under the supervision of the lecturer.

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Captain Henry E. Lidiard, R.M., Assistant-Superintendent of the Royal Naval School of Music, Eastney Barracks, Portsmouth, retired on October 17, and it is difficult to estimate the great loss that is felt in musical circles, his retirement following so closely upon that of Capt. B. S. Green, M.V.O., Director of Music, R.M.A. Band, and the death of Major C. Franklin, R.M.L.I. (Director at the R.N. School of Music).

Capt. Lidiard, an extremely popular and talented officer who has rendered excellent services with the Forces of the Crown, comes from a gifted family of musicians, and has met with success as a bandmaster, being what is termed an exceptionally capable 'double-handed' musician. He is also an accomplished violin player.

Joining the Navy as a bandboy in 1877, his first ship was the old Boadicea, in which vessel he saw service in the South African campaign of 1879. Transferring to the Revenge, he was promoted band-sergeant in 1883, and four years later became chief bandmaster of the Naval Training Service while serving in the Impregnable. In 1900 his rank advanced to inspector-bandmaster of the Navy, and his duties in this capacity embraced the inspection of every ship's band in the senior service twice a year.

In July, 1903, he went with a Naval band from Devonport to Portsmouth to form a nucleus of the present Royal Naval School of Music there, and at the same time transferred from the Royal Navy to the Royal Marines to become bandmaster (warrant officer).

In October, 1910, he became Hon. Lieut.-Quartermaster of the Royal Naval School of Music Stores, and seven years later he was appointed Assistant-Superintendent of the School. He was gazetted captain the same year—April, 1917.

The post of Director at the Royal Naval School of Music, Eastney Barracks, Portsmouth, rendered vacant through the death of Major Charles Franklin, O.B.E., R.M.L.I., is to be filled by the appointment of Mr. S. P. G. O'Donnell, Mus. Bac. (Oxon.), L.R.A.M., Bandmaster of the Plymouth Division R.M.L.I. Bandmaster O'Donnell is now serving in H.M.S. Rencown.

Dr. E. W. Naylor's lectures at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, for the present term are on 'Verdi and Wagner,' and are a sequel to the Wagner lectures of the two past Lent terms.

CHAMBER MUSIC FOR AMATEURS.

Our scheme for bringing together amateur chamber-music players has met with a good response, and we gladly publish the following 'wants':

'Cellist wishes to join good amateur quartet for study of standard chamber works; can give access to large library of compositions; Dulwich or neighbouring districts; evenings.—W.F., c/o Novello & Co.

Pianist wishes to join small party (South London preferred) for performance of good music, not too difficult.—FRESA, c/o Novello & Co.

Baritone.—For quartet and glee-singing, or similar small choral forms.—FRESA, c/o Novello & Co.

Viola.—Classical or modern quartets; Finchley or North London; any evening.—E.S.H., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd. Vacancies for viola, 'cello, and bass in orchestra of musical society.—B.M.S., 2, Little Ebury Street, S.W. 1.

Pianist wishes to play with chamber-music parties; Sutton, Surrey, or in London, West End.—QUINTETT, c/o Novello & Co.

Young pianist wishes to join good players for classical and modern music.—F. FORTE, 56, Mayall Road, S.E. 24.

Pianist wishes to form trio for practice of chamber-music with violinist and 'cellist, or would join violinist only; afternoon, weekly or fortnightly; S.W. district.—C., c/o Novello & Co.

Flautist, duets and trios, for Flutes concertante. West Hampstead; Sunday afternoons.—FLAUTIST, c/o Novello & Co.

[It will be noticed that two of the above are slightly outside the scope of the scheme, but we include them as they qualify by being concerned with amateur music-makings.—ED., M.T.]

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BIRMINGHAM.

The present musical season began with the first Appleby Matthews Sunday evening orchestral concert at the Futurist Cinema House on September 7. The first Town Hall vocal concert was given on September 29 by the Wolseley Male-Voice Choir so ably trained and conducted by Mr. W. E. Robinson, already known for the results he has achieved in the rendering of well-known part songs. The selections were again of a familiar kind, but special praise is due to the singing of Sullivan's 'The Beleaguered' and 'O Peaceful Night.' Mr. John Coates received a most enthusiastic reception, creating a perfect furor with his captivating singing of 'Eleanore,' given in a voice of infinite lyrical charm. Miss Helen Anderton, who is now a great favourite here, is gifted with a sympathetic contralto voice of exquisite timbre which she uses with perfect art. Mr. Arthur Hytch contributed violin solos, Mr. C. W. Perkins organ solos, and Dr. Rowland Winn accompanied in musicianly manner.

The first of a series of three Saturday afternoon concerts was given at the Repertory Theatre, on September 27, by Miss Beatrice Hewitt, an accomplished local pianist, who had for her coadjutors Mr. Catterall (violin), Mr. Paul Beard (viola), and Mr. J. C. Hock (violoncello) in Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, Op. 25, given with intelligence and fine tone balance. The programme also contained Beethoven's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello, in E flat, Op. 70, and Grieg's third Sonata for pianoforte and violin, Op. 45, excellently interpreted by Miss Hewitt and Mr. Catterall.

The New Philharmonic Society's first orchestral concert of the season was given at the Town Hall on September 25, in aid of a fund for a new organ for the Birmingham Royal Institution for the Blind. It was conducted by Mr. Matthew Stevenson, who gave a pleasing, if not perfect, reading of Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony and Wagner's 'Vorspiel und Liebestod' from 'Tristan and Isolde.' Miss Desirée Ellinger, of the Beecham Opera Company, was the star of the concert, achieving a triumphant success with her fine singing and flute-like soprano voice. Organ solos were played by the blind organist, Mr. F. W. Priest, and Miss Bessie Clarke ably discharged the duties of accompanist.

The Appleby Matthews Sunday orchestral concerts at the Futurist Theatre which opened on September 7 are now firmly established, and constantly attract large audiences. It is a movement in the right direction, and the programmes are framed with a view to please all tastes. Symphonies by the classical masters, overtures, symphonic poems, Sullivan excerpts, and a sprinkling of novelties by English composers help to make the programmes attractive. The orchestra now numbers about forty players, and will probably be augmented, for there is still need to strengthen the strings. Some excellent progress has already been made in the way of rhythmical accent and phrasing and in gradation of light and shade. Mr. J. R. Heath, a native of this city, conducted recently his 'Balkan Sketch' No. 3, heard for the first time, and his 'Three Characteristic Dances,' composed in 1913. The 'Balkan Sketches' are based on impressions gathered by him while serving in the near East. Mr. Heath shows originality of treatment and a decided gift for tone-colouring.

The Birmingham Choral Union gave its first concert of the present season at the Town Hall on October 4, with a programme largely of ballad concert pattern. The Choral Union's selected choir of two hundred and fifty singers, especially rich in female voices—which are, and always have been, of an exceptionally fine timbre—gave part-songs as usual with brilliant effect, a noteworthy presentation being that of Bantock's 'The Death of Morar.' Mr. Wassell, an exacting choirmaster and an admirable conductor, is one of our foremost accompanists. In the latter capacity he had to work very hard at this concert, and proved himself to be a master in this branch of musical art. The solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Alice Vaughan, and Mr. Alfred Askey, all of whom materially contributed to the artistic success of the concert. Miss Sybil Eaton, the highly gifted violinist, once more showed that she is an artist of temperament and musicianly attainments. Miss Pattie Dyer contributed pianoforte solos, including Chopin's Valse in A flat, displaying a well-schooled technique.

Mr. Appleby Matthews inaugurated his series of choral concerts at the Town Hall on October 7, and a very successful event it proved. How thoroughly in sympathy Mr. Matthews is with Elgar's soul-stirring 'Spirit of England,' comprising the three sections, 'The Fourth of August,' 'To Women,' and 'For the Fallen,' was proved by the poignant and graphic singing of this well-trained choir. A completely satisfactory performance would have been realised had the orchestra been better served in the string department. The solo part was delivered by Miss Rosina Buckman with much dramatic and vocal excellence. She also achieved a brilliant success with Verdi's aria, 'May laurels crown thy brows,' from 'Aida.' A welcome inclusion in the programme was Bantock's part-song, 'On Himalay,' and Brahms's Trio for ladies' voices, 'The Gardener,' in which the choir excelled. The instrumental items comprised the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' Overture and a triad of minor pieces.

A copious selection from Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' was given at the Town Hall on October 11, by the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's painstaking conductorship. The choir was present in full force, and there was no lack of tone-power, but greater variety of tone-colour would have been acceptable. The orchestra was not quite up to its usual form, probably owing to insufficient rehearsal. The principals were Madame Walter Aston, an established favourite with Saturday night audiences; Mr. Todd Jones, a prize-winning tenor at the Welsh Eisteddfod of 1919, who made his first appearance here, creating an excellent impression with his pleasant voice and artistic delivery; and Mr. James Coleman, a vicar-choral of Lichfield Cathedral, who is also an old-established favourite at these concerts. The miscellaneous part of the programme included, besides solos by the principals, an orchestral performance of Massenet's ballet, 'Le Cid'; and the choir gave a praiseworthy reading of Parry's fine choral work 'Blest Pair of Sirens.' The organist was Mr. C. W. Perkins.

A great audience filled the Town Hall on Sunday night, October 12, on the occasion of the opening of the Sunday Lecture Society's season. It was a concert at which many vocalists appeared. For Miss Desirée Ellinger, absent through indisposition, a substitute was found in Miss Clara Simons, from the Carl Rosa Opera Company, an excellent soprano. Miss Tessie Thomas, the talented vocalist, played several solos with marked ability. The concert was arranged by Mr. Edmund Edwards.

On Monday evening, October 13, the Town Hall was crowded to its utmost limit at the 'Celebrity Concert,' for everyone wished to hear Dame Melba, Tom Burke, and Ferruccio Busoni, a trio of artists of première force.

Mr. Richard Wassell at his first orchestral concert, given at the Town Hall on October 18, presented an excellent and popular programme which included two movements from the 'Pathetic' Symphony, Bantock's Comedy Overture 'The Pierrot of the Minute,' Weingartner's orchestral arrangement of Weber's 'Invitation à la Valse,' Massenet's 'Scènes Pittoresques,' and Selim Palmgren's 'Lullaby' for strings. Mr. Cyril Scott played, in intimate fashion, a number of his own pianoforte compositions, revealing originality and creative gifts. The vocalist was Miss Mary Foster, one of the most charming contraltos in the Midlands. Mr. Richard Wassell has made wonderful strides as an orchestral conductor, not only in the arts of phrasing and rhythm; but also in attaining the right orchestral colouring.

BOURNEMOUTH.

An unusual event for Bournemouth occurred during the week ending October 11, viz., the absence of Mr. Dan Godfrey and the Municipal Orchestra, who had left for the fulfilment of an engagement in South Wales. The circumstance leads in a roundabout way to the inquiry whether London and the big provincial centres have any conception of the extent of the musical activity that Bournemouth so steadfastly maintains. The exceptional nature of its expedition into other latitudes makes only more apparent the Orchestra's actual permanency. Week in, week out—year in, year out—it occupies the Winter Gardens platform, the sole break in this continuity being the fortnight's annual holiday in the month of July. If every other city or large town were in a position to provide orchestral music for fifty weeks out of the fifty-two there would not be much force in the cry that the British are an unmusical people. But unfortunately such a state of affairs is not yet in the region of practicability. Before its departure for South Wales the Orchestra gave the two concluding concerts of the summer symphony series, both of which were thoroughly enjoyable. The programme on September 24 was an attractive one, consisting on the purely orchestral side of the 'Carnival Romain' Overture by Berlioz, Glazounov's Symphony No. 4, in E flat, Tchaikovsky's 'Casse Noisette' Suite, and a novelty, 'Danse des quadrupèdes à pieds fourchus,' from the pen of a talented young lady, Miss Bruno d'Arba. From the interpretative point of view, the chief feature was the fine performance of the Overture, which went with a rare swing. In the Symphony, too, there was some first-rate playing, but the Tchaikovsky Suite was rough, and generally unsatisfactory. Miss d'Arba's composition is very brief and decidedly entertaining. The effects aimed at are quaint, even bizarre, but they are never strained or designedly cacophonous. The composer has evident gifts which we anticipate will be turned to good account. The programme was completed by Meyerbeer's hackneyed aria, 'Robert, tu que j'aime,' sung very pleasingly by Miss Nora Read.

On October 1, following the well-worn analogy of 'Hamlet' and the Prince of Denmark, the symphony concert contained no symphony, the afternoon being devoted to the works of Wagner. The selection of extracts ranged from the early 'Rienzi' Overture to the culminating masterpiece 'Parsifal,' from which was taken the beautiful Good Friday music. This last excerpt was charmingly played, though undoubtedly the finest performance of the afternoon was that of the 'Mastersingers' Overture, which was splendidly majestic in effect. The other extracts in the programme were the March from 'Tannhäuser,' the Prelude and Love Death from 'Tristan,' 'Entry of the Gods into Walhalla,' the Prize Song from the 'Mastersingers'—a very undesirable version—and 'The Ride of the Valkyries.'

By the time these notes appear in print we shall be once more in the thick of the winter season concerts. The symphony concerts (twenty-fifth series) promise to be as interesting and progressive as in former years.

BRISTOL.

The outstanding event of the month has been the Royal Carl Rosa Company's fortnight of grand opera at the Prince's Theatre, which has been crowded to hear familiar and unfamiliar works. The question has been asked, Why cannot Bristol have more than a two weeks' visit when other large cities get anything from eight to nineteen weeks? 'Mignon,' 'The Merry Wives,' and 'Rigoletto' were fresh again to us, the Shakespearean story providing a most delightful evening. Full of sparkle and humour, and splendidly done by the principals—Miss Beatrice Miranda as Mistress Ford, and Mr. Arthur Winckworth as a six-foot-waisted Falstaff—it was a notable performance. 'Cavalleria' and 'Pagliacci' were marked by their dramatic intensity, Miss Eva Turner scoring a great success as Santuzza, and Mr. Hebden Foster, as Tonio, revealing fine artistry in the Prologue to 'Pagliacci.' 'The Tales of Hoffmann,' too, gave Mr. William Boland, the star tenor, a great opportunity. But the bonne bouche of the series was Mr. Reginald Somerville's 'The Miracle,' a work pregnant in promise and masterly in performance. The composer, a Bristol man, or practically so, had a flattering reception, the opera being followed with the greatest attention and achieving whole-hearted applause. Mr. Somerville thanked the Company for their performance (as well he might), and for giving him, an Englishman, the opportunity for bringing his work before the public. 'The Miracle' appealed very convincingly to those who came 'prepared to scoff,' for in it the composer reveals much artistic taste and skill, going hand in hand with an engaging unconventionality that is never bizarre. We shall hope to hear this work again while also looking forward to the new opera Mr. Somerville has upon the stocks. In Mr. Fuente the Company has a conductor whose orchestral mastery is a sheer delight.

At the time of writing all musical Bristol is looking forward to three big concerts—the Choral Society's 'Golden Legend,' and the Tetrassini and Melba (with Mr. Tom Burke) concerts, a trio of events all within a ten days' interval. Mr. Riseley has got his choir back to its old pre-war perfection. Choir and band will number over five hundred performers, and the body of tone is better than ever. Rehearsals have shown that the conductor still lavishes all the care and pride of pre-war days on details of the chorus work. Bookings are good; as surely they ought to be, seeing that for 25s. 6d., an honorary member's subscription, the subscriber gets one 'first division' ticket for each of the six concerts of the season. The two great 'star' concerts are also being well booked up.

The question of a symphony orchestra for Bristol is arousing some comment in a Bristol paper. Thirty years ago Mr. Riseley conducted a fine band of musicians, the Bristol Society of Instrumentalists, which, however, languished for lack of effective support. Since those days there have been several attempts to provide an orchestra for Bristol, but the sinews of war have proved too weak to sustain its feeble knees, so to speak. Local musicians, professional and amateur, are in full accord with the new attempt to resuscitate musical life in Bristol by establishing an orchestra, but in view of the crowded programme now before our concert-goers, the present is not the occasion to propound a definite scheme.

Bristol is noticeably one-sided in the matter of music. The city's choral performances are strong, very strong, but its instrumental concerts are far to seek. If the idea of a permanent orchestra could be favourably launched, it might bear fruit next year, if we could only get some influential Bristolians to put their hands to a guarantee fund. There is plenty of scope in Bristol for good executants and teachers, who surely would be attracted to the city if its artistic life were stabilised.

Our Bristol veteran, Mr. George Riseley, celebrates his fifty years' connection with Colston Hall with the first concert of the Royal Choral Society, that is timed to the identical day, October 25. The Bristol papers have been full of his history. It is a notable Jubilee, for Bristol owes a large debt to his energy—chorally, at the organ, and in the realm of the unaccompanied male voice, the Royal Orpheus Glee Society, &c. And what a host of great singers, from Sims Reeves, Maas, Santley, Patti, and Albani down to the most modern of concert artists, have 'passed under the rod' so firmly and uncompromisingly wielded by this great conductor. It is pleasing to note that the veteran composer, Mr. Joseph Roedel, is urging the formation of a representative Bristol committee to promote a proper and substantial presentation to Mr. Riseley to mark the unique occasion. 'I am sure,' says Mr. Roedel, 'that all our citizens would, like myself, wish to testify their appreciation of the great work Mr. Riseley has done, and is still doing, in the cause of music in Bristol'—a message that will find a response in all Bristol music-lovers.

During the month the weekly organ recitals at St. Mary Redcliff, under the direction of Mr. Ralph Morgan, the efficient organist of this fine old church, have continued to draw large congregations. Mr. H. G. Ley, the organist of Christ Church, Oxford, has been one of the visiting players, whose varied programme was compiled from Franck, Debussy, Bach, Beethoven, and Elgar. At a recital by Mr. Morgan, the entire collection was for a memorial for members of the choir fallen in the war.

Bristol Musical Club has commenced its session with some excellent examples of chamber music, Heath's 'Macedonian Sketches' and two Elgar pieces—the first Romance No. 1 and his new String Quintet—being in the programme. Mr. Maurice Alexander, perhaps our best-known local violinist—a player who plays with his heart as well as his brain and fingers—has given a recital before the Literary Society of Cotham Grove Baptist Church. Miss Imogene Hawkins, a prominent Bristol pianist, gave an evening recital at Victoria Rooms for the benefit of St. Dunstan's Hostel, and played with taste and a nice skill in phrasing. Songs were given by Miss Langrish-Stephens.

Carl Rosa artists and the Theatre Royal orchestra collaborated in a successful sacred concert, attended by the Lord Mayor, given on behalf of the Federation of Discharged Soldiers and Sailors.

Along with other Bristol choral bodies, the Cecilian Choral Society has restarted its work, suspended during the war. Its rehearsals are going strong, with Mr. Charles Read again conducting, and at the two concerts arranged Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' Stanford's 'Last Post,' and 'Messiah' are to be given.

The Bristol Dolphin Male-Voice Choir, which for thirty-five years has been in existence (except during the war) under its present and its former title, 'The Æolian,' is also going vigorously forward. The Æolian was formed when male-voice music was very little known outside the Orpheus Glee, Madrigal, and Gleemen Societies. Mr. F. H. Simpson is hon. conductor, Mr. A. H. Trotman deputy-conductor, and Mr. W. Bartlett secretary.

Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society engaged Mr. Dan Godfrey and the Bournemouth Municipal Orchestra for its opening concert, and although railway difficulties postponed the advertised hour of the concert, the Pavilion was packed. Brahms's 'Hungarian dances,' the Overture to Weber's 'Oberon,' Sibelius's 'Valse Triste,' part of the 'Symphonie Pathétique,' also two beautiful short pieces by Janet Salisbury, a coming English composer, were given with the perfection of ensemble for which the orchestra is noted. The famous British violinist, Miss Marie Hall, played Lalo's 'Spanish Symphony,' Bach's Aria, and Hubay's 'Czardas' with her usual mastery of technique and sympathy of execution. Mr. Frederick W. Taylor completed the programme with several vigorous songs.

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

The music season started brilliantly at Plymouth on September 24 with a concert in which the Orpheus Choir (Mr. David Parkes, conductor) was assisted by Madame Rosina Buckman, Mr. Tom Burke, and Melsa. It is difficult to conceive anything more beautiful in male choral singing than that given by the Choir of an imaginative and difficult piece by E. T. Davies, 'The Winds.' The Orpheus Choir has by great enthusiasm, long and skilful training, and a deep feeling of loyalty to its gifted conductor, achieved a very high artistic standard. The singers made a long weekend tour in Cornwall in October, and we hear rumours that they will before long visit the Royal Albert Hall. At Plymouth they sang also Fletcher's 'Lorraine Lorrée,' a clever but rather morbid piece, and songs by Bantock and Bishop.

Mr. Tom Burke contributed operatic numbers and ballads with Italian warmth and ease, and rich fulness of tone.

The Orpheus Choir has not only raised the standard of choral singing at Plymouth, but has for several years done valuable entrepreneur work in securing visits from distinguished artists. It would seem that the Choir has inspired other Societies to do likewise, for Dr. Weekes's Choral Society and Plymouth Madrigal Society are launching out as never before. The former announces the appearance of Madame Donald and her husband, M. Mischa-Leon, Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Cyril Scott, and Mr. Harold Craxton on December 3; and the Madrigal Society will be assisted in its concert in the following week by M. Vladimir Rosing. With the exception of Messrs. Radford and Craxton, none of these artists have previously visited Plymouth.

The opening of the Plymouth Guildhall concerts was delayed by the railway strike, but they were in full swing before the end of October. The Co-operative Concerts commenced on October 11. Comrades of the War, Plymouth Branch, organized a visit of the Eclipse Welsh choir, extending over several days, during the week ending October 11. We are glad to learn that St. Andrew's Quartet of male voices has been reorganized, and has already made a semi-public first appearance.

Such season as promises to develop at Exeter was opened by a concert given by the Isca Glee Singers on October 2. Their best achievement was a presentation of 'What, shepherd, ho!' a delightful madrigal by William Beale. Most of their other numbers were on the humorous side. Mr. Lancelot Holden announces several interesting events to take place at the Mint Wesleyan Chapel, the first of which will be an organ recital by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. Exeter Operatic Society, conducted by Mr. Allan Allen, has 'Tom Jones' in rehearsal for performance in February; and we may hope to hear something during the season from two re-formed male choirs, that conducted by Mr. W. J. Cotton and that associated with St. Luke's Training College, which was reopened in September.

At Torquay, on September 18, a pianoforte recital by Moisiejewitch was chiefly noteworthy for his fine interpretations of two Intermezzi, a Capriccio, and a Rhapsodie by Brahms, and for his wonderful variety and contrast of tone-colour in a Chopin group.

Barnstaple Operatic Society has been resuscitated through the efforts of Mr. Edwin Tucker, and the assistance of Miss Margaret Cooper as stage-manager has been secured for a week previous to the initial performance.

Barnstaple Musical Festival Society and Exeter Oratorio Society are at the moment of writing busily engaged in preparing for the production of Dr. Edwards's new work, 'Hymn of Victory and Peace.' A report of the Exeter performance appears in another column, and the Barnstaple event will take place in November.

CORNWALL.

Male-voice choirs are coming to life again throughout the country. The Marazion party, an old-established organization that was disbanded during the war, has been reorganized with forty members, with Mr. J. H. Trudgen again as conductor, assisted by Mr. E. Round. At their inaugural meeting they sang choruses and songs from their former repertory. Callington Male Choir, also suspended during the war, has been revived with Mr. J. Jenkin as conductor. Concerts given by Stithian's Male Choir at Mabe, on September 22, and Wendron on October 4, were conducted by Mr. J. H. Bowden, and conspicuously good were performances of 'To arms,' 'Away to the forest,' and 'Row, boatman, row.'

Singing competitions at Stenalees on September 25 and at St. Austell on October 8, sustain the Cornish love for musical contests, which resembles that of the Welsh. The respective adjudicators were Mr. E. A. Ru-sell (Lostwithiel), and Mr. J. Pulman (St. Columb). At Stenalees the standard was high, ninety-nine per cent. of marks being awarded to Miss Rose Higman, of Bugle, in the soprano solo class, the test-piece being 'Come, for it is June.' At St. Austell there were twenty-four competitors, and the local male choir won first place for singing 'Good-night, beloved.'

Gaul's 'Ruth' was sung by Gulval Wesleyan Choir, conducted by Mr. Farley, on September 22. A new organ, subscribed for by the parishioners as a war memorial, has been erected in Countisbury Parish Church. The instrument, which replaces an ancient harmonium, was opened by the vicar, the Rev. F. W. Bodger, with a short recital.

At Bodmin, on October 1 and 2, Mr. H. M. Lamerton conducted performances of 'The Daughter of the Regiment,' and of the operetta 'Flowerland,' by the Young Leaguers' Union party. A programme of old English and French music and dances was given in costume at Falmouth on September 26.

DUBLIN.

Madame Kirkby Lunn was the principal attraction at Mr. Walter McNally's 'Celebrity' concert at the Theatre Royal, on September 27. The great Manchester mezzo-soprano was in grand voice, and met with a remarkable ovation. Mr. Vincent O'Brien was at the pianoforte.

The Fitzgerald Opera Company presented twice nightly at the Empire Theatre a version of 'The Chocolate Soldier' during the week ending October 4, the artists including Miss Kathleen McCully, Miss B. Coplin, Madame Haige, Messrs. Jones, Lynch, Jackson, Lacey, and Stack. During the succeeding week they gave Sidney Jones's 'My Lady Molly.'

From the regulations for courses of study in the National University of Ireland, for the session of 1919-20, it appears that for the Degree of Bachelor of Music, the analysis includes the scores of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony and Dukas's 'L'Apprenti Sorcier.' For Irish Music, the textbook recommended is Dr. Grattan-Flood's 'History of Irish Music.' The practical examination includes organ, pianoforte, violin, violoncello, or harp.

At a meeting at the Central Hall, Exchequer Street, Dublin, under the presidency of Mr. Raymond Revell, on October 7, the Leinster Society of Organists and Choirmasters was finally launched as a Society 'for mutual help and social intercourse,' with Mr. Sydney H. Lovett as hon. secretary and Mr. C. L. Murray as hon. treasurer. A representative committee was formed.

The strike at the Cork School of Music has resulted in the resignation of five of the staff. Two others who 'went out' have resumed work, but under protest at the inadequate remuneration. Evidently the new Musical Director, Carl Hardebeck, has not a bed of roses.

There is much comment on the action of the new Provost of Trinity College, Archbishop Bernard, who has made a drastic change in the services of the College Chapel by reverting to the old 17th century arrangement of plain choral worship. Since March 21, 1762, the choirs of Christ Church and St. Patrick's Cathedrals have been accustomed to the College Chapel, and a cathedral service was maintained through all the stress of a hundred and fifty-seven years. Now the boys have received notice to quit, and the gentlemen's services are optional. Old-time frequenters of the College Chapel during the years that the late Provost (Rev. Sir John P. Mahaffy, Mus. D.) was Precentor, will recall the high standard of sacred music which was invariably performed—a standard set by Doctor of Music the Earl of Mornington, who was Professor of Music in Dublin University from 1764 to 1774.

So successful has been the magnificent carillon of forty-two bells, supplied by Messrs. Taylor, of Loughborough, at Queenstown Cathedral (see Mr. W. W. Starmers article in the October issue), that the authorities of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh, have entrusted the same eminent English firm with an order for a carillon of thirty-nine bells. This new peal of bells is expected to be ready for next Easter. Messrs. Taylor (who have recently cast a carillon for Rotterdam City Hall, the heaviest bell weighing five-and-a-half tons) are to be congratulated on this further recognition of the excellent work identified with their foundry.

The dearth of Irish organists is amply evidenced by no fewer than six recent advertisements within a month seeking the services of an organist, at salaries varying from £40 to £120 a year in various churches in Ireland. However, under present conditions of living, the lure of £40 a year will not make a forcible appeal.

There is brisk booking for the Quinlan Subscription Concert, announced to take place at the Theatre Royal on October 24. Of course, Tetrizzini is the bright particular star, but the other artists include Madame Renée Chemet, Signor Cellini, and Signor Pietro Cimara, the last mentioned being announced as 'the best known accompanist pianist in the world.'

EDINBURGH.

Edinburgh may contemplate a season of unprecedented activity. Societies on all hands are putting forth efforts not only to reach, but to excel, the standard of pre-war days. Instead of occupying space with a list of prospective engagements, it will be well to note the more important events as they take place. Last month any probable Edinburgh notes might have devoted considerable space to the programme of the Pan-Celtic scheme of lectures and concerts; but none of these occurred—owing to the railway strike. In spite, however, of travelling restrictions, the Gaelic Mod took place on October 9 and 10, when Prof. Bantock and Mr. Hugh S. Robertson were adjudicators in the vocal classes.

The first of the Quinlan Concerts was held on October 11, Madame Tetrizzini proving as great an attraction as ever, and being accompanied on this occasion by Madame Chemet (violin), Lergli Cellini (tenor), and Pietro Cimara, pianist.

Prof. Tovey, who, during the war, kept things going in a most remarkable manner, has resumed his activities, and on October 14 opened a new campaign in connection with the Workers' Educational Union. He has undertaken to deliver twenty lectures on Musical Appreciation to members of this Union, whose opening meeting attracted an excellent audience. These University Courses are organized by the Education Authority, students being required to pay only the handsome sum of three shillings for the whole course. It is worthy of note that it is not a case of 'attend when you please.' A record of attendances is kept, the class being only part of a larger educational scheme.

Dr. W. B. Ross, whose name is now well known as an organist, has embarked on an enterprise to popularise the organ. He has taken the Usher Hall for four consecutive Saturday nights, and is presenting popular programmes which ought to have a wide appeal. Dr. Ross is by no means playing down to his audiences, and is including in his programmes some good overtures and selections from the well-known operas. His first recital, on October 11, drew a fine audience, and it is to be hoped that we have here the beginning of a regular series.

On October 15 a Trio recital was given by Messrs. Albert Dobson, Watt Jupp, and Bernard Beers, assisted by Miss Marie Thomson. This combination is a valuable addition to the musical assets of the city.

LIVERPOOL.

Conducted by Mr. R. J. Forbes a first performance here of Puccini's Opera 'Manon Lescaut' was given by the O'Mara Opera Company in the Shakespeare Theatre on October 10. It was a performance which was highly creditable and generally adequate. The orchestral part was especially well done, and the principal vocal parts were in safe hands with Miss Dorothy Phillips (Manon), Mr. Wilfrid Davies (Lescaut), Mr. Charles Neville (Chevalier des Grieux), and Mr. J. C. Browner (de Ravoir). As regards the music, which is dramatic and melodramatic by turns, there is point in the opinion that a modern Italian composer, genius though he be, cannot be completely successful in his presentation of such an essentially French subject as is afforded in Prevost's famous story. The opera is typical Puccini music, highly wrought, emotional, and cleverly scored. Its lyrical features are subordinate to its descriptive force, in the manner Puccini has developed and elaborated in his later and better known 'Bohème,' 'Tosca,' and 'Madame Butterfly.' The O'Mara Company's performance of 'Manon' certainly sustained interest and found favour.

Dr. James Lyon has been the recipient of a handsome presentation from the congregation of Wallasey Parish Church, to mark their high appreciation of his work as organist of St. Hilary's during a period of twenty years. Since the days when Dr. Lyon was organist at Ouseley's exquisite church at St. Michael's College, Tenbury, he has made a definite mark in music. Not only as a composer of organ music, including two notable Sonatas and an Organ Suite, Dr. Lyon has found distinction in a wider field as an orchestral writer, and his success as an operetta composer has been the prelude to a highly-wrought grand opera, 'Stormwrack,' which was produced at Liverpool by the H. B. Phillips Company. In its courageous disregard of the usual operatic conventionalities, whether in discarding the chorus, or the least suspicion of a set vocal air, duet, trio, or quartet, the opera is not only an essay but an undoubted achievement. The presentation is all the more gratifying as marking not only a sense of the congregation's satisfaction at the eminence of their organist, but also as a recognition of his personal qualities. Continuous and successful occupancy for twenty years of the arduous post of a church-organist, in addition to the exacting work of professional life, to say nothing of composition, is surely an honourable record.

Another organ happening is the appointment of Mr. E. C. Robins to the positions at Walton Parish Church and assistant at the Lady Chapel of the Cathedral which were vacated by Mr. Albert Orton on his appointment as organist to Newport Parish Church, Isle of Wight. Mr. Robinson will no doubt find scope here for the musical abilities he displayed as organist of Wigan Parish Church. It is satisfactory to hear that Mr. Orton is finding interesting and congenial opportunities in his new sphere of work at Newport.

The Lord Bishop of Liverpool—probably unwittingly—supplied a theme for discussion in the local Press which has been followed with a good deal of attention by Church and musical people. In dedicating a new organ at St. Leonard's, Bootle, the Bishop said that it was remarkable that organs were regarded in the Early Church as so essentially pagan that Christian people were not allowed to use them. This statement was called into question by Mr. Edward Watson, the able organist of West Derby Parish Church (a post once occupied by Mr. Best), as not borne out by the writings of the greatest authorities on early ecclesiastical music. Mr. Watson was followed by the Rev. Mr. Price, of St. Paul's, Liverpool, who supported the Bishop by quoting Bingham's 'Origines Ecclesiasticae' in confirmation of the statement that organs were regarded in the early Church as pagan—i.e., they were not considered appropriate to the ethos of Christianity. To this Mr. Watson replied that a writer on Church history is not necessarily an authority on ecclesiastical musical art. Bingham's knowledge of the Fathers is not doubted, but his acquaintance with the history of Church music is superficial and valueless. In reply to this Mr. Price 'ventured' to say 'that neither Dr. E. J. Hopkins nor Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley had the necessary acquaintance with the great body of the writings of the Greek and Latin Fathers, nor the expert training in historical criticism necessary to make their opinion of any value as "historians."' To quote Dr. Hopkins and Sir Gore Ouseley against Bingham is vain. But Mr. Watson sturdily contends that when one wants to arrive at the true facts of musical history, as such, one does not instinctively consult a divine, however learned, but if he is already a divine as Ouseley was, and a profound musician as well, the survey of his knowledge of ecclesiastical music is necessarily more complete. So that Bingham and his surmises (on music) can be of no value whatever against the reasoned judgment of the true experts in such a case as that under discussion. While the matter is apparently one for a choice of authorities and periods, Mr. Watson is left with the last word. He may be thanked for opening a controversy which has been so historically informing. Proceeding from the Early Church and its use of 'organs,' so-called, the question of the use by modern Christians of modern Church organs is inferentially raised—their 'use and abuse.' But that is another story. Anyhow, the Bishop has blessed the colossal organ for the new Cathedral.

The correspondence has since widened out into irrelevant matter. One writer pleads for the combination of organ and harp in public worship, on the strength of having once attended worship in an Episcopal Church in New York which was provided with a very fine organ and a very richly-gilt harp placed conspicuously in the chancel.

The local Association of Organists and Choirmasters, of which Sir Charles Villiers Stanford is patron and Mr. H. Goss Custard president, held their opening meeting in Rushworth Hall on October 6. During the session addresses will be given by the Rev. H. Dams ('A Talk on Elocution'), Mr. W. A. Roberts ('English Organ Music of To-day'),

Mr. H. Goss Custard ('The Modern Organ: its Tonal Equipment'), and Mr. Albert Orton ('Interpretation').

The Crane Hall Musical Wednesday afternoons continue to provide attractive programmes. Outstanding occasions were the recitals given by Mr. Anderson Tyrer and Mr. Joseph Holbrooke. Mr. Holbrooke as usual was most attractive as an exponent of his own individual music, including the Nocturne, 'Night by the Sea,' and a Study in D. At this recital M. Mischa Leon, accompanied by Mr. Harold Craxton, gave some fine vocal interpretations, notably of Holbrooke's setting of Tennyson's 'Come not when I am dead.' On October 15, Miss Una Truman played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 27, No. 2, Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 10, and pieces by Carpenter, Quilter, and Ireland, with abounding executive skill and interpretative vision. At these recitals the vocalists included Miss Amy Horrocks, Mr. Charles Wade, Miss Raymonde Amy, Miss Rita Landi, and Mr. W. H. Atkinson. On October 8 the programme was sustained by the Manchester Trio, Mr. J. S. Bridge (violin), Mr. Walter Hatton (violin), and Miss Ethel Midgley (pianoforte). Excellent performances were given of Arensky's D minor Trio, with its exquisite slow movement, and of a Dvorák Trio.

At his pianoforte recital in Rushworth Hall on October 10 Mr. Edward Isaacs gave a masterly performance of an attractive scheme, features of which were Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's C major Sonata Op. 2, No. 3, Debussy's Toccata, and Liszt's 'Venezia e Napoli,' which exploited the player's virtuosity to the full. No less interesting from a musical point of view were Mr. Isaacs's own three pieces, 'Hunting Song,' 'Nocturne,' and Staccato-Caprice.

The first of a course of ten lectures on 'Appreciation' was given on October 16 in the Arts Theatre of the University of Liverpool by Dr. A. W. Pollitt, the newly appointed Lecturer in Music to the University. The lectures are given on Thursdays at 5.30, and are open to the public without fee. At Dr. Pollitt's first lecture he discoursed upon 'How to listen,' and subjects to be subsequently dealt with include 'The Construction of Melodies,' 'The Growth of Harmony,' 'The Suite of Dances,' 'Sonata Form,' 'The Sonata as a whole,' 'The Symphony,' 'Fugue,' 'Opera,' and 'Choral Music.'

Mr. Quinlan has reason to be satisfied with the success—material and musical—of his first concert, on October 18. But this indeed was assured, as Madame Tetrassini sang. In her violin solos, Madame Renée Chemet was equally successful, and the programme was completed by M. Lenghi Cellini, tenor, and M. Pietro Cimara, solo pianist and fine accompanist.

MANCHESTER AND DISTRICT.

At the inaugural meeting of the Manchester Centre of the British Music Society, on October 13, held at the Town Hall, Mr. Eaglefield Hull put forward the aims of the Society in such a convincing way that if it fulfils only a part of what it sets out to do, its organization will have been worth the labour of foundation and maintenance. Although everyone may not share Dr. Hull's enthusiasm concerning English music, yet all would agree that the English works we do possess are not heard as frequently as they might be, even in so notably musical a city as Manchester.

It has been suggested that we are in need of an operatic council to organize the support of opera and other musical performances, also to arrange programmes so that a reputable orchestral standard, with a less hackneyed routine of works, should be possible. Apparently the British Music Society has been formed at the right moment.

The Hallé concerts prospectus promises some interesting evenings under the conductorship of Sir Thomas Beecham, Messrs. Albert Coates, Eugène Goossens, jun., Hamilton Harty, and Landon Ronald. At the opening concert, on October 30, Sir Thomas will conduct, and Moiseiwitsch (who is making a final appearance before his tour in America and Australia) will play the 'Emperor' Concerto. On November 8, Mr. Albert Coates will make his first appearance here, and will conduct among other things Scriabin's 'Poem de l'Extasé,' one of the works which is supreme in its revelation of the potentialities of modern harmony.

At this concert M. Vladimir Rosing is the vocalist. The soloists for the rest of the series include Mesdames Myra Hess, Sylvia Nelis, Agnes Nicholls, and Edna Thornton, and Messrs. Norman Allin, Frank Mullings, Felix Salmond, Albert Sammons, Robert Radford, and Cyril Scott.

On November 22 we are to have Berlioz's 'Damnation of Faust,' on December 6 Elgar's 'Gerontius,' and on December 26 'Messiah.' In the fifteen concerts, nine British composers are represented by works including Hamilton Harty's 'Mystic Trumpeter,' Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions, and the late George Butterworth's 'The Banks of Green Willow,' the last of which alone is worth going far to hear.

At the time of writing, concerts come thick and fast. The Mid-day Recitals, to judge by the size of the audiences, are much appreciated. For chamber music, in addition to the Brodsky, Catterall, and Edith Robinson Quartets, two newly-formed Trios are to be heard—the Midgley Trio, first concert of the fourth series on October 31, and the Manchester Ladies' Trio, whose performances are to be announced later.

The Informal Concert Society gave its first concert on October 7. This is to be followed by a dozen more in or near Manchester. The Society should do much to give local artists a chance of being heard under favourable conditions.

The Children's Concerts, as announced in our last issue, begin on October 25 with a lecture by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw on 'What is a tune.' This is to be followed by a series of lectures, of which it would seem, for the educationist as well as the child, a pity to miss one.

The forty-third year of the Ancoats Sunday Lectures and Music began on October 5, and in addition to these, Wednesday music appreciation evenings will be given again—these, after a break of four years, commencing with Mr. Frederick Dawson's pianoforte recital.

The Brand Lane concerts opened their season with Melba, Burke, and Una Bourne—the last-named in place of Busoni, who was unable to appear.

An exhibition by the Manchester branch of the Folk-Dance Society attracted a large and appreciative crowd in Platt Fields on the afternoon of October 27. A space had been reserved for the dancers near the band-stand, and the onlookers were invited to join in the dances, with the result that from twenty to thirty girls of ages from four upwards took part in the display. The beauty of the dances was much enhanced by the natural setting of trees and fields. We understand that these exhibitions are to be held frequently in the parks of this city.

There has been a good deal of controversy over the question of Sunday concerts. Application was made for a license for concerts to be held in the Regent Theatre, Salford, each Sunday until the end of December. There was no opposition to the application, which was granted till the end of October only. The proceeds of these concerts will be given to charity.

Mr. Tom Burke, the tenor singer, has, in a manner which will enlist the sympathies of all, most generously offered to raise £5,000 provided that another £5,000 is subscribed, in order to found a scholarship of £500 a year to give Lancashire singers, not possessed of the means, the opportunity of studying in Italy for three years. He proposes to give one concert in the Free Trade Hall and another at Liverpool with the object of establishing the nucleus of the fund. He suggests 'that each student shall go for the first year to Milan under Ernesto Colli, who would lay a firm groundwork of instruction; the second, under Martino, at Rome, where the student would be surrounded by an environment in which the finest Italian is spoken; and the third in Naples, under Fernando de Lucia, the greatest teacher of classic singing in Europe. The final trials for the scholarship should take place in public, and the first student should start work next spring.' To continue in Mr. Burke's own words, 'I want my fellow-Lancastrians to have the chance that might easily have been denied me.'

Mr. Burke is the best immediate example of the advantage to be gained by his proposal, and we feel sure that the public will support him generously.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

The Misses Foxon have resumed their Friday afternoon concerts at the Victoria Lecture Hall, a feature of the programmes being the introduction of fresh and unfamiliar songs and pianoforte music. A certain proportion of chamber music will also be heard at the twelve concerts announced. At the first concert Mr. Stanley Kaye played MacDowell's 'Tragic' Sonata. A strong young player, he energizes the forte passages with boyish enthusiasm, and though he is less happy in passages calling for great tenderness or emotion, he has assimilated all the formulæ of expression and only needs to absorb them to become a well-equipped, picturesque player. Mr. Ernest Platts sang some spirited baritone songs, the best of which was Schubert's 'Speed along, Kronos,' Miss Parker Machon sang songs by Parry, Mackenzie, and Rimsky-Korsakov, and Miss Ethel Cook accompanied.

At the first Promenade Concert a large audience welcomed the revival of these excellent orchestral music-makings. The Symphony was Beethoven's No. 2, in which the orchestra revealed qualities of neatness and refined tone, the slow movement being particularly well done. Stirring performances of Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' Overture and a selection of numbers from the piquant ballet suite, 'The Good-humoured Ladies' (Scarlatti-Tommasini), were also given. Miss Lena Kontorovitch was the soloist in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto. A new work, Nocturne and Rondo, by Frank H. Shera proved to be music of great imagination and harmonic interest. Tinged, yet not unduly, with modern feeling, these two pieces are significant additions to new British orchestral music. Conductors in search of fresh, interesting, and playable numbers should make the acquaintance of such striking works. Mr. J. A. Rodgers, who conducted, secured a sympathetic performance.

YORKSHIRE.

Concerts are to be thicker on the ground during the coming season than at any time since the war began. The chief choral societies have never dropped their work, but are in some cases renewing their energy. Particularly is this the case with the Leeds Philharmonic Society, which is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary, and is marking the occasion by an exceptionally good programme. At its head is Beethoven's great Mass in D, a work of just the monumental character suitable to a great event, Berlioz's 'Faust,' which is having a curious 'run' in the North of England just now, selections from 'Meistersinger' and 'Parsifal,' Dear's 'Songs of the Open Air,' and the customary 'Messiah' concert at Christmas, are the choral works to be given, and in addition we are promised two concerts by the Hallé Orchestra, conducted respectively by Sir Henry Wood and Mr. Albert Coates. Dr. Bairstow is to conduct the choral concerts, and he may be relied upon to maintain the technical efficiency of the choir. The Leeds Choral Union is not attempting anything it has not given in previous seasons, but a special interest is imparted to the prospectus by the promised appearance of Sir Edward Elgar, who will conduct on two consecutive dates in March, his 'Dream of Gerontius' and 'The Apostles,' with the Hallé Orchestra and a first-rate cast of soloists. The other works in preparation are 'Messiah' and 'Samson and Delilah'—the composer of which would seem to have received canonization, since he is twice styled in the prospectus 'St. Saëns.' Dr. Coward remains at his post as conductor of the Society.

The Bradford Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Bairstow, is this season to give Berlioz's 'Faust,' 'Messiah,' and a miscellaneous choral concert, at which Bach's Motet 'Sing ye to the Lord' will be presented. The Bradford O'd Choral Society, under Mr. Wilfrid Knight, is giving, in addition to 'Messiah,' 'Elijah' and 'Merrie England'—the last being under the composer's direction. Berlioz's 'Faust' is also chosen for the Halifax Society, which this year is following very familiar lines, the other works announced being 'Elijah' and 'Messiah.' Mr. C. H. Moody is the conductor. The Huddersfield Society also promises nothing fresh, but Bach's B minor Mass gives distinction to the programme, which includes also Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch,' Parry's 'Blest Pair of Sirens,' and 'Messiah.' Dr. Coward is the Society's conductor.

Mr. T. Morrison, of Mount St. Mary's College, Chesterfield, has been appointed conductor of Chapelton and District Sacred Harmonic Society.

The Leeds Saturday Orchestral Concerts are this year to be under the conductorship of Mr. Hamilton Harty and Mr. Eugène Goossens, junr. The programmes are on the familiar lines which have proved attractive in the past, but one cannot resist a wish that the committee had shown as much confidence in their supporters as in the case of the Bradford Permanent Orchestra, which also appeals to a 'popular' Saturday night audience, but has none the less ventured to insinuate among pieces whose popularity is assured a considerable number of less familiar works, including a fairly representative series by contemporary native composers, such as Arnold Trowell, Percy Pitt, Coleridge-Taylor, Sullivan, Stanford, Elgar, Vaughan Williams, Holbrooke, Reynolds, Hamilton Harty, and Grainger. The conductors are, as in the case of the Leeds concerts, both new-comers, Mr. Godfrey Brown and Mr. Geoffrey Toye.

Though the season has at the time of writing only just begun, a considerable number of concert have already to be recorded. The Harrogate season is, of course, a thing of the past, the last of an excellent series of weekly symphony concerts having taken place on October 15, when Miss Fanny Davies gave a fine reading of Beethoven's fifth Piano-forte Concerto. During the season a long series of Symphonies and Concertos has been heard, worthily performed by the small, but complete and efficient orchestra under Mr. Julian Clifford. Among the more noteworthy features of the latter half of the season were Fauré's suite, 'Pelléas et Mélisande,' Pierné's Harp Concerto (Miss Hilda Atkinson) Rachmaninov's second Piano-forte Concerto (Mr. Anderson Tyrer), and the late Ernest B. Farrar's Variations for piano-forte and orchestra on an old sea-song, 'Hark, the Boatswain,' a very pleasing work, which accentuated one's sense of his premature death in action a year ago. At the same concert Mr. Clifford introduced an orchestral work, written in memory of his friend and colleague, entitled 'Lights out,' a graceful and sincere tribute, showing a more distinct creative power than any of his previous compositions. And at a recent concert Miss Bertha Vanner introduced Stanford's second Piano-forte Concerto in C minor, which was new to the North of England, and made a most favourable impression, being virile, effective, and sincere music, with a more obvious vein of feeling than usual.

At Leeds we have had Tetrizzini and Melba concerts which require no description or criticism. On October 18 the first of the Saturday Orchestral Concerts took place, Mr. Hamilton Harty conducting a typical programme, whose chief features were the 'Unfinished' Symphony, Rachmaninov's second Piano-forte Concerto (Mr. Anderson Tyrer), the 'Britannia' and 'Freischütz' Overtures, Bizet's 'L'Arlesienne' Suite, and such tit-bits as Jarnefelt's 'Praeludium,' Berlioz's 'Hungarian March,' and an orchestral arrangement of Bach's Toccata in F. On October 10 Miss Lily Simms, with the co-operation of Mr. Lloyd Hartley as pianist, gave a sonata recital at which Violin Sonatas by Brahms (in A), Elgar, and Debussy were very artistically interpreted, and an admirable vocalist appeared in Miss Muriel Robinson. On October 1 Mr. Frederick Dawson gave a piano-forte recital at Leeds which was not only an artistic success but was a veritable tour de force, as he never left the piano-forte whilst playing with unflagging vigour a long succession of pieces ranging over the whole area of piano-forte music, from Bach and Beethoven (the 'Funeral March' Sonata) to Debussy, Ravel, Cyril Scott, and Holbrooke. He held a great audience to the end by his masterly performance. On October 18 the pilgrims who are going round the country to make known the claims of the British Music Society visited Leeds, when Lord Howard de Walden, Dr. Eaglefield Hull (the founder), Dr. E. H. Fellowes, and Mr. Francis Toye spoke from various stand-points of the aims and work of the Society, which, if well backed, should be influential in helping forward the cause of native art.

On October 3 the Bradford Subscription Concert season began with a concert by Madame Tetrizzini's party, of whom the very gifted violinist, Madame Renée Chemet, was perhaps the most interesting member. On October 9, Mr. Charles Stott began a series of organ recitals of more than ordinary interest at All Saints', Bradford, at each of which some instrumental soloist or vocalist is to be a special feature. On this occasion it was the violinist, Mr. John Bridge, who introduced a Suite by Rheinberger for violin and organ, a piece of equal musicianship but greater musical charm than the majority of that erudite composer's works. Mr. Stott also played Elgar's Sonata in G.

At Huddersfield the second season of the Music Club began on October 8, when Mr. Gervase Elwes, with Mr. Kiddle at the piano-forte, gave a delightful recital of British songs. Future concerts of this admirable series will introduce the Catterall Quartet, the Russian vocalist M. Vladimir Rosing, Mr. and Mrs. Vork Bowen, and Mr. William Murdoch. Another interesting Huddersfield enterprise is that of an orchestra formed by Mr. A. W. Kaye, a local violinist, who has for some years trained a string orchestra of his pupils, and has now completed it by the addition of professional wind, and demonstrated its efficiency at the first of a series of four concerts, on October 11, when remarkably good and finished performances were given of familiar works like the 'Unfinished' Symphony, the 'William Tell' and 'Tannhäuser' Overtures, together with a brief novelty in Balfour Gardiner's charming little piece, 'The Home-coming.' Mr. Laurence Turner proved to be a very capable executant in Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto, but the outstanding feature of the concert was the wonderfully good ensemble achieved by the large body of strings, many of whom were very young players, but had been so thoroughly drilled that there was little or none of the raggedness associated with amateur work. On October 14 the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society gave a programme of which the chief feature was Elgar's fascinating 'Bavarian Highlands' Suite, which went very smoothly under Mr. C. H. Moody's direction. Mr. Clifford brought the Yorkshire Permanent Orchestra, which was heard in Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Elgar's 'In the South,' and Mr. Clifford's own work, 'Lights out,' to which attention has already been directed.

Miscellaneous.

THE VIOLS IN ENGLAND.

One of the rare opportunities for hearing some of the members of the viol family was provided by Mr. Jeffrey Pulver on October 15, when he lectured to the Amherst Musical Club on 'Viol and Violin in Merry England.' The lecturer played compositions by Henry VIII. and Orlando Gibbons, besides short tunes from Playford's 'Introduction to the skill of Musick,' on a tenor viol by William Turner, London, 1652. An example of music on the viola d'amore was also provided. Treating of the period that lies between the reigns of Henry VIII. and Charles II., Mr. Pulver closed his remarks with some early English music for the violin, including a fine Sonata by Thomas Vincent. The tenor viol is heard all too seldom, the quality of its tone is exquisite, and its possibilities, especially for vocal accompaniment, very great.

Music is awakening in the districts that centre upon Peterborough, where the following programmes have been decided upon by the various Societies. The Choral Union will open its season with the concert version of German's 'Tom Jones' on December 4. The Orchestral Society's first open evening will be in January, when Mendelssohn's 'Scotch Symphony,' Mozart's Piano-forte Concerto in D minor, Nicolai's Overture 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'Shepherd Fennel's Dance' will be presented. Both Societies will combine for 'Messiah' performances on December 18 in the Cathedral. At the annual Festival in May, in the Cathedral, it is proposed to give 'The Dream of Gerontius' in the afternoon and Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in the evening. The Operatic Society is preparing 'The Gondoliers' for performance in the spring.

The National Carol League, organized by the National Institute for the Blind, has issued a booklet in which are set forth the aims of the League and an appeal for co-operation that deserves a ready response. It is proposed to organize united carol services arranged by local choirs at Christmas-time, special carol services, carol parties for the open air, massed carol parties on Christmas morning or afternoon, carol concerts, Christmas plays, fairs, bazaars, school entertainments, envelope collections from house to house; and at the New Year, organ recitals, concerts, &c. All who are willing to give their assistance are invited to communicate with Sir Arthur Pearson, 226, Great Portland Street, London, W. 1. The ultimate aim throughout all this music-making is to help the work of the National Institute for the Blind.

The Autumn Meeting of the South London Society of Organists was held at Beckenham in the afternoon of October 18. After an organ recital in the Parish Church of St. George, by Mr. G. J. Hall, Sir Frederick Bridge delivered a lecture entitled 'A Great Elizabethan Organ-builder, Thomas Dallam.' A warm welcome was extended to the Society by the rector of Beckenham, the Rev. J. Plowden-Wardlaw. The large and increasing membership of this Society having for some time pointed to an extension of its purview, on the proposition of the hon. secretary, Dr. J. Warriner, seconded by the president for the year, Mr. F. Leeds, it was unanimously resolved to omit the word 'South' from its title, and the Society will therefore in future be known as the 'London Society of Organists.'

An Anglo-French concert will be given by the Blackheath Branch of the British Music Society on December 11. The programme includes the names of John Ireland, R. Tradgett, M. A. Lucas, W. G. Whittaker, Bantock, Ravel, Debussy, Duparc, and Renard.

CONTENTS.

	Page
The Lord Mayor-Elect as Musician	585
The Musicians' Company (with Illustration of Presentation Cup)	586
Modern British Composers—VI. Gustav Holst (continued). By Edwin Evans	588
The Music of the Czecho-Slovaks—National Opera in Prague. By Rosa Newmarch	592
Elgar's Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings (Op. 84). An Analysis. By H. C. Colles	596
Interludes. By 'Feste'	600
Adelina Patti. By Herman Klein	603
Debussy as Critic: Translations by Mrs. L. Shirley Liebich	605
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. By W. H. Grattan Flood	606
Occasional Notes	608
Facsimile Letter of Invitation of the French Ministre des Beaux-Arts to Mr. W. Damrosch	909
Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By Harvey Grace	610
A Visit to an Old Organ. By Sidney W. Harvey	618
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	619
Church and Organ Music	621
Charles Harford Lloyd	621
Queenstown Cathedral—A Postscript	622
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	624
Guilhermina Suggia (with Portrait)	626
New Music. By William Child	626
Letters to the Editor	627
Obituary	629
Sixty Years Ago	629
The 1919-20 Season	629
Dr. H. J. Edwards's 'Hymn of Victory and Peace'	630
The Royal Academy of Music	630
The Royal Naval School of Music	630
Chamber Music for Amateurs	631
Music in the Provinces	631
Miscellaneous	637

MUSIC:

Carols of Bethlehem. By CHARLES W. PEARCE	613
--	-----

THREE EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this number:—

1. Portrait of the Lord Mayor-Elect, Sir E. E. Cooper.
2. Portrait of the late C. Harford Lloyd.
3. "O praise God in His Holiness." Anthem for Four Voices. By Robert White (circa 1530-74).

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

- A. H.—"Sweet and low." Duet for Soprano and Contralto. 2s.
- ALLOTEY-PAPPOE, J. E.—Hymn Tune, "Freeman Choir" ("Take my life and let it be"). 1d.
- COLBORN, A. G.—"Slumber Song." For Violin and Pianoforte. 1s. 6d.
- "There's a kiss in the heart of the rose." Song. 1s. 3d.
- DERRY, BROMLEY.—"The Raiders" (A Song of the Norsemen). Song for Baritone. 2s.
- FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Valse Lyrique" ("The Smile of Spring"). Arranged for Pianoforte Solo. 1s. 6d.
- GERMAN, EDWARD.—"It was a lover and his lass." Arranged as a Song. In G. For medium voice. 2s.
- HOLBROOKE, J.—"Taliessin's Song." High Key. 2s. 6d.
- HOWELL, HAROLD—Te Deum laudamus. In E. (No. 963. Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 3d.
- MACPHERSON, CHARLES.—"Sing unto God." First chorus from Anthem "Sing unto God." Composed for the Annual Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, 1919. (No. 1073. Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.
- MUDD, JOHN.—"O God, Who hast prepared." Edited by H. ELLIOT BUTTON. (No. 1072, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 2d.
- PATTESON, L. J.—"Victory." Waltz for Pianoforte. 2s.
- PEARCE, C. W.—"Carols of Bethlehem." (No. 921, The Musical Times.) 1½d.
- PINSUTI, C.—"In this hour of softened splendour." Arranged as a Trio by JOHN E. WEST. (No. 469, Novello's Trios, &c., for Female Voices.) 3d.
- RHODES, H.—"I would I were the glow-worm." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 561, "The Orpheus.") 3d.
- "The Nativity." (No. 387, Novello's Christmas Carols.) 1d.
- "The Voice of Spring." Two-part Song. (No. 188, Novello's Two-part Songs.) 3d.
- ROSS, W. G.—"A Daffodil Wedding." Song. In C. For Mezzo. 2s.
- SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 329) contains the following music in both notations:—"Mary had a little lamb." Solo and Two-part Canon. By ARTHUR RICHARDS; "Ding, dong bell." Canon (in the third below), with Solo Voice (unaccompanied). By ARTHUR RICHARDS. 1½d.
- SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo.) B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.
- No. 1290. "The Laughing Waves." 2-part Song. GEORGE RATHBONE 3d. —
- No. 1291. "God sends the night." 2-part Song. GEORGE RATHBONE 3d. —
- SHARP, CECIL J.—Folk-Songs of English Origin collected in the Appalachian Mountains. 3s. 6d.
- SMALLMAN, C. S.—"Lands of Joy and Liberty." For Chorus and Orchestra. 6d.
- SMART, G. R.—"My old white horse and I." Song. 2s.
- TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:
- JONES, J. OWEN.—"The God of Dreams" (Yr hyfryd wlad). Part-Song for S.A.T.B. 6d.
- TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
- No. 2305. "Ballade." Chorus for T.T.B.B. GRANVILLE BANTOCK. 3d.
- No. 2306. "The Beacon." Four-part Song. ADAM CARSE. 1½d.
- No. 2307. "Lovely appear." From "The Redemption." Arranged for Soprano Solo and Three-part chorus of Female Voices, by JOHN E. WEST. C. GOUNOD 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

WADELY, F. W.—“Lead us, Heavenly Father.” Anthem. (No. 920, The Musical Times.) 1½d.
 WARNEFORD, H. L.—The Cadet's Hymn (“We are soldiers of Christ”). Tune, “Lilford, No. 3.” 1d.
 WEST, JOHN E.—“The bonnie banks of Loch Lomond. Arranged for T.T.B.B. (No. 563, “The Orpheus.”) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

DICKINSON, C.—“O Israel, how great is the House of God.” Anthem. (No. 546, Church Music Review.) 20 cents. (1s.).

FERRARI, GUSTAVE.—“Land of Freedom.” A National Anthem. 60 cents. (2s. 6d.).

HELD, PAUL.—“Introspection.” Tone-Poem for Organ. 50 cents. (2s.).

OETTING, W.—Prelude and Fugue for Organ. 50 cents. (2s.).

MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD.—LAY-CLERK REQUIRED. TENOR (not high Baritone). Stipend begins at £110. Pension of £50 after 25 years. Two daily Services eight months in year. Soloist; Cathedral experience. Testimonials to cover last three years. Preference given under thirty years of age. Forms of application, obtained from Dean of Divinity, Magdalen College, Oxford, to be sent in not later than December 1.

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—The position of ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER will be VACANT at the end of December. Commencing Salary, £200 per annum. Applications, with not more than three testimonials, should be sent before Nov. 15, to The Secretary, Churchwardens, 11, Church Row, Kirkgate, Leeds, from whom all particulars of duties, &c., may be obtained.

VACANT, the position of ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER at the Romford Road Congregational Church, Forest Gate. Applications, with full particulars, should be sent to H. J. Jones, 87, Ham Park Road, E. 15, before November 10.

MALE SOPRANO, ten years' experience Cathedral Music as a boy, VACANT NOW FOR CATHEDRAL APPOINTMENT. Age 24. Apply to A. J. Potts, 45, George Street, Hull.

CHOIR VACANCY.—SOPRANO LEADER WANTED in St. John's Road Presbyterian Church Choir, Marlborough Place, N.W. Two Services Sunday and Choir Practice Wednesday. £20. Apply, by letter, to Mr. Starling, 70, Boundary Rd., N.W.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, TENOR. £110, with additional £50 if qualified as Assistant-Teacher in Choir School. Apply, with references and testimonials, Precentor, Ely Cathedral.

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH, Wells Street, W.—TENOR WANTED. £40. Also ALTO (Male), £30. First-class Readers, with experience of Church Work, essential. Apply, Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Andrew's Vestry. Silence negative.

ORGAN PEDALS, for Piano, FOR SALE. Almost new. Radiating and Concave. Fine Mahogany Stool. £8 10s. “B. J.” c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED.—TWO- or THREE-MANUAL ORGAN, by good maker. Claude Bishop, Stanton Prior, Eastbourne.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SCALE OF TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	..	..	0 3 0
Three Lines	..	..	0 3 4
For every additional Line	..	..	0 0 10
One inch (displayed)	..	..	0 10 0
Half a Column	..	..	2 0 0
A Column	..	..	4 0 0
A Page	..	..	7 10 0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W. 1, not later than WEDNESDAY, NOV. 19 (FIRST POST).

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

ROMANCE MENUET ANTIQUE ALLA MARCIA

BY ROBERT ELKIN.

PRICE, EACH, 2s. NET.

From the Daily Telegraph:

“The grace and freshness of these pieces should win them a warm welcome. . . . They are wisely kept well within the powers of pianists of modest attainments. The ‘Menuet’ is a particularly attractive specimen of its class. It has rhythm and vigour, and its archaism is by no means obtrusive.”

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, W. 1.

AND OF ALL MUSICSELLERS.

New and Attractive Compositions.

ORGAN MUSIC.

	NET.	s.	d.
Book 10. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN (Eight short and easy pieces). By H. W. Chuter	1	6
Book 1. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN—includes PRELUDE (Wetton), MEDITATION (Bairdston), &c.	1	6
Book 6. VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN—includes PRELUDE by Alfred Hollins, &c.	1	6

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWELVE SHORT VOLUNTARIES FOR ORGAN.

By H. W. Chuter.

1s. 6d.

THREE GOOD SACRED SONGS.

“OUR BLEST REDEEMER.” By Charwood Dunkley.

“HAVEN OF REST.” By Noel Johnson.

“GRANT US THY PEACE.” By Sydney H. Wéalé.

In Keys for All Voices, 2s. net.

“AT THE MERMAID TAVERN.” An Album of Four Songs, for Bass or Baritone.

By Joseph C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. Doc. Oxon.

3s. 6d. net cash.

NEW CAROLS. By Wilson Manhire. (Tonic Sol-fa and Old Notation combined.)

RING, JOYOUS BELLS. A CHRISTMAS SONG.

O’ER BETHLEHEM’S MANGER. THE GLAD REFRAIN.

1½d. each, plus postage.

COLLARD MOUTRIE,

52, SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C. 1.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.

"Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.

Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.				Staff	Tonic
				Notation.	Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	3d.	2d.
Carol Once in Bethlehem	2d.	1d.
Two Christmas Carols	3d.	2d.
SERVICES.
SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	3d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.
ORGAN.
Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
CHURCH CANTATA
Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, Mus. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

CHANT TE DEUM, IN E	3d.
" BENEDICITE, IN E	2d.
" BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN E	3d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, IN E	3d.
CANTATE AND DEUS, IN E	3d.
COMMUNION SERVICE, IN E	6d.

ANTHEMS.

O LORD, THOU ART MY GOD—ADVENT	3d.
IN THE BEGINNING—CHRISTMAS	3d.
BEHOLD, I BRING YOU GOOD TIDINGS	3d.
IN THE BEGINNING—TONIC S L-FA	1½d.

FIVE SETS OF CHRISTMAS CAROLS, In Books. 6d. each.
 All numbers printed separately, 1d. each.

The Composer will be pleased to send Specimens.

Address: 36, CHRIST CHURCH ROAD, NORWICH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS & CAROLS

By CALEB SIMPER.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE. Just Published	4d.
One of the most fascinating and attractive Anthems.
AND ON EARTH, PEACE. New	4d.
An easy, melodious, and very effective Anthem.
NEW CAROLS:—"O Carol exultant,"—"Goodwill and Peace,"—"Joyful Carols singing,"—"Ring out, merry bells,"—"All very pretty varied, and interest ing.
Specimens: Anthems, 6d.; Carols, 4d. Also in Sol-fa.
CALEB SIMPER, "Kilbirnie," Barnstaple.

JOSEF HOLBROOKE'S WORKS.

JUST ISSUED.

		Price
		net.
		£ s. d.
NOVELLO & Co.
THREE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 69), for Tenor Voice
and Piano, with String Qua tet Accompaniment	0 5 0
TALIESIN'S SONG, for Soprano and Tenor	0 2 6
REELS AND STRATHSPEYS, for Strings and Wind
each	0 1 0
"BRONWEN" (Overture)—Full Score (in the Press)	1 1 0
"THE CURSE OF MATH" (Orchestral Fantasia), Score	0 15 0
"DYLAN" (Drama)—Vocal Score	1 1 0
Full Score	5 5 0
"DÖN" (Drama)—Vocal Score	5 5 0
Full Score	5 5 0
"PIERROT" (Operetta)	0 8 0
"BYRON" (Orchestral and Choral Poem)	0 1 6
Full Score	0 15 0
FIVE DRAMATIC SONGS (Op. 59)	each, net	0 2 6
CHESTER & Co.
BRONWEN'S SONG, Sop ano and Tenor	0 2 0
CHAMBER WORKS (see full list)	1 1 0
BRONWEN PRELUDE—Piano	0 2 6
SIX ROMANTIC SONGS (Op. 30)	0 3 0
JOHN COATES'S RECITAL (QUEEN'S HALL), 1919
"The Second Romantic Song of Holbrooke was repeated Three times—owing to prolonged encores"— Liverpool Post .
"THE PICKWICK CLUB" (Humoreske), String Quartet
Score	0 6 6
"THE RAVEN"—Poem. Full Score	0 15 0
" " Piano	0 5 0
" " (London Symphony Concert, 1919.)
"THE VIKING"—Poem. Full score	0 15 0
Piano	0 5 0
"LES HOMMAGES"—Suite. Full Score	1 1 0
" " Piano	0 6 0
" (Royal Philharmonic Society, 1919.)
DRAMATIC CHORAL SYMPHONY (Op. 48)	0 3 0
Full Score	2 0 0
RICORDI & Co.
VIOLIN CONCERTO (in the Press)	0 8 6
TEN PIAN ETUDES	each 0 2 0
THREE VIOLIN AND PIANO "Mezzotints"	each 0 2 6
SIX STRING QUARTET (No. 5, 10 Folk-songs of Great Britain
PIANO SOLO (Arr.)	0 3 0
SEXTET FOR PIANO AND STRINGS (Op. 20)	0 8 6
" ARRANGED FOR PIANO DUET	0 6 0
CARY & Co.
"EILEAN SHONA"—Organ	0 1 6
FOUR MEZZOTINTS—Violin and Piano, Clarinet and
Piano	0 3 0
STRING QUARTET (No. 4), Songs and Dances	0 5 0
SUITE MODERNE—Piano (Op. 18)	0 3 0
BOOSEY & Co.
"ANNABEL LEE"	0 2 6
SIX CHARACTER SONGS	0 2 6
FIVE BOHEMIAN SONGS	0 2 6
ENOCH & SONS.
THREE SONGS (Op. 71), for Voice, String Quartet, and
Piano	0 6 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

EDWYN A. CLARE'S FAVOURITE CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

Highly effective without being difficult.

BEHOLD I BRING. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 30th 1000	4d.
CHOIRS OF ANGELS. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 10th 1000	4d.
SING, O HRAVENS. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 2nd 1000	4d.
GOODWILL TO MEN. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 18th 1000	4d.
WE HAVE SEEN HIS STAR. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 16th 1000	4d.
THE PRINCE OF PEACE. 17th 1000	4d.
BLESSED BE THE KING. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 7th 1000	4d.
A SAVIOUR CHRIST THE LORD. 7th 1000	4d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D. 29th 1000	6d.
Full of flowing melody and effect.
PRaise THE LORD, O JERUSALEM. 44th 1000	4d.
THE LORD REIGNETH. (Sol-fa, 3d.) 18th 10 0	4d.
Two general Anthems of great popularity.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
 New York: THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA: THE ANCIENT MARINER

30TH THOUSAND.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.
 Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

BRITISH MUSIC

IT has often been stated and with truth that the British Composer of serious music had not the same opportunity of publication as his foreign competitor.

THE REPERTOIRE SERIES of Pianoforte Pieces is destined to remove this reproach on British music. It is a beautifully produced edition of works by native composers, with a sound business organization behind it, and it is gratifying to be able to state that the advance trade orders signify a very enthusiastic reception. It will be noted that the edition includes works by all our best Modern British Writers, issued under the editorship of G. H. Clutsam, the well-known musical critic, and Thomas F. Dunhill, R.C.M. The first 12 numbers are now on sale at all Music Dealers. Other sets of 12 numbers will be issued at intervals.

In the selection of works the considerable diversity of style admitted should prove an interesting feature. English music is not necessarily confined to one or a limited number of idioms. It has many moods and many expressions all worthy of recognition in their essential characteristics.

The Series is issued in uniform covers with portraits of the Composers.

NUMBERS READY NOW.

No.	Composed by	No.	Composed by
1. BALLADE - - -	C. V. Stanford	7. NYMPH DANCE -	Joseph Speaight
2. MERRY-ANDREW -	John Ireland	8. ON A MAY EVENING	Arnold Bax
3. THREE SERIOUS DANCES	York Bowen	9. RHAPSODY - -	Herbert Howells
4. TWO DIVERSIONS -	Percival Garratt	10. A ROMANCE - -	Arnold Bax
5. IMPROVISATION - -	Percy Pitt	11. BERCEUSE - -	G. H. Clutsam
6. CARIILLON - - -	Norman O'Neill	12. THREE ROMANTIC PRELUDES	T. F. Dunhill

In the first selection the classical formula is finely represented by Sir Charles Stanford's ingenious and clear-cut "Ballade." John Ireland's virile and jolly "Merry-Andrew" should prove one of this distinguished Composer's most popular pieces. York Bowen's "Three Serious Dances" reveal the strongest side to this fertile Composer's art.

In a lighter technical vein, with imaginative, poetical, or romantic trends, the pieces provided by Percival Garratt ("Two Diversions"), Norman O'Neill ("Carillon"), Joseph Speaight ("Nymph Dance") and Percy Pitt ("Improvisation") are excellently designed, in their various degrees of difficulty, for the attention of all Pianists.

Works that exhibit modern tendencies in exemplary fashion are those of Herbert Howells and Arnold Bax. The "Rhapsody" of the former is a strikingly original composition, the elusive harmonic characteristics being strongly sustained on their own strictly individual formal basis. The "On a May Evening" and "Romance" of Arnold Bax provide fascinating studies in modern expression.

Finally the Editors, G. H. Clutsam and T. F. Dunhill, have contributed numbers that are thoroughly characteristic of their individual pens.

FURTHER NUMBERS IN THE PRESS.

Price 2s. each, of all Music Dealers
Or 2s. 1½d., post-free, from the Publishers,

ASCHERBERG, HOPWOOD & CREW LTD.,
16, MORTIMER STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings ; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR CHRISTMAS SERVICES, ETC.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC FOR SOPRANO, TENOR AND BASS SOLI,
CHORUS AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 6s. 6d. ; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS AND

ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

NIELS W. GADE.

(Op. 40.)

Price One Shilling ; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.

CHRISTMAS SCENES

FOR FEMALE VOICES

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

Price Two Shillings ; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday,
and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Vocal Score, Two Shillings ; Vocal Parts, One Shilling each.

Parts 1 and 2, 1s. ; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. ; Parts 5 and 6, 1s.

Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 6d.

Books of Words (per 100), 10s. Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 5s.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND THE MUSIC

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling ; Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, Five Shillings per Hundred.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI,

CHORUS AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling ; Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.

Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

YULE-TIDE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ANDERTON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 2s. 6d. ; cloth, gilt, 3s.

BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

BY

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

SET TO MUSIC FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA

BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling.

ANTHEMS FOR CHRISTMAS.

*A song of joy	John E. West	3d.	*Nazareth	Ch. Gounod	2d.
And the Angel said unto them	J. P. Sweetlink	4d.	*Now is come Salvation	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
Angels from the realms of glory, F. H. Cowen	3d.; *E. Vine Hall	3d.	*Now when Jesus	Joseph Holbrooke	3d.
*Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Geo. Elvey	14d.	O come, all ye faithful (Adeste Fideles) Arr. by G. J. Tredaway		2d.
*Arise, shine, for thy light is come	F. Cobb	14d.	O come hither	W. Jackson	3d.
*Arise, shine, O Jerusalem	Thomas Adams	3d.	O come, Redeemer of mankind	Arthur W. Marchant	3d.
*Awake, put on thy strength	F. R. Greenish	4d.	O come, Redeemer of mankind	John E. West	14d.
Before the heavens were spread abroad	Horatio W. Parker	3d.	O Holy Babe	A. C. Mackenzie	14d.
Behold, all the earth lieth still	G. F. Huntley	3d.	O Holy Night	Adolphe Adam	2d.
Behold, a star appeareth	Niels W. Gade	4d.	O Jerusalem! look about thee	E. W. Naylor	4d.
*Behold, a star appeareth	B. Luard-Selby	14d.	O Jerusalem! look about thee	John E. West	14d.
Behold, I bring	*J. Barnby and E. V. Hall, ea.	3d.	O sing to God (Noël). (Female Voices)	Ch. Gounod	6d.
Behold, I bring you glad tidings	Giovanni Croce	14d.	O sing to God (Noël). (Arranged for S.A.T.B.)	Ch. Gounod	14d.
Behold, I bring you glad tidings	*C. W. Smith and Vittoria, ea.	14d.	O Thou that tellest	Handel	14d.
Behold, I bring you good tidings	J. M. Crament	14d.	O Zion, that bringest good tidings	J. Stainer	14d.
*Behold, I bring you good tidings	J. Goss	14d.	Of the Father's love begotten	E. C. Bairstow	3d.
*Behold my servant	J. Frederick Bridge	3d.	Rejoice in the Lord	J. B. Calkin	3d.
Behold, the name of the Lord	Percy Pitt	4d.	Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous	Alfred Hollins	3d.
*Behold the Tabernacle (Two-part Anthem)	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	Rejoice greatly, O Daughter of Zion	Charles H. Lloyd	3d.
Be peace on earth	W. Crotch	2d.	Rejoice, O ye people	Mendelssohn	14d.
Beside Thy Cradle	J. S. Bach	14d.	*Rest, weary earth	A. M. Goodhart	3d.
*Bethlehem	Ch. Gounod	14d.	*Ring out, wild bells	P. E. Fletcher	3d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel S.S. Wesley & The Earl of Mar, ea.		14d.	Say, where is He born (Trio)	Mendelssohn	2d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel	C. L. Williams	4d.	*See, amid the winter's snow	John E. West	14d.
*Blessed be the Lord God of Israel	E. Vine Hall	3d.	*Silent Night (Melody by F. Grüber)	Arr. by John E. West	14d.
Born to-day (Motet. S.S.A.T.B.)	J. P. Sweetlink	3d.	*Sing and rejoice	J. Barnby and John E. West, each	14d.
Break forth into joy	*H. A. Matthews and W. G. Alcock, ea.	3d.	*Sing and rejoice	Basil Harwood	4d.
*Break forth into joy	T. Ridley Prentice	6d.	Sing a song of praise	Oliver King	3d.
*Break forth into joy	S. Coleridge-Taylor and Bruce Steane, ea.	3d.	*Sing, O Daughter of Zion H. W. Wareing and W. G. Alcock, ea.		3d.
*Break forth	J. S. Bach	14d.	Sing, O Daughter of Zion	H. Gadsby	14d.
*Brightest and best	E. Vine Hall	4d.	Sing, O heavens *H. Davan Wetton, Kent & T. T. Trimell, ea.		4d.
*Calin on the list'ning ear of night	Horatio W. Parker	3d.	Sing, O heavens	A. C. Mackenzie	6d.
*Christ's Incarnation	Myles B. Foster	14d.	*Sing, O heavens	J. H. Maunders and B. Tours, each	14d.
*Christians, awake	J. Barnby, 3d.; *H. M. Higgs	4d.	*Sing, O heavens	Bruce Steane, 3d.; *Arthur S. Sullivan	1d.
Christians, be joyful	Bach	3d.	*Sing, O heavens, and be joyful, O earth	A. Gaul	14d.
*Christmas Day (Choral Fantasy on Old Carols)	G. von Holst	3d.	*Sing unto the Lord	Vincent Novello	14d.
Come and thank Him	Bach	3d.	*That God doth love the world	Bach	3d.
Come and worship the Lord	Thomas Adams	14d.	*The Angel Gabriel was sent from God	H. Smart	2d.
*Come hither, ye faithful	H. Hofmann	4d.	*The Angel said unto them (Two-part. Sop. and Bass)	Brown	2d.
Come, ye Gentles, hear the story	Edward C. Bairstow	14d.	*The first Christmas (Words only, 3s. per 100)	J. Barnby	3d.
*Come, ye lofty	H. Elliot Button	14d.	*The Grace of God which bringeth salvation	J. Barnby	14d.
*Crown Him, the Virgin's Son	B. Luard-Selby	2d.	*The hallowed day hath shined	B. Luard-Selby	3d.
Dawns the day, the natal day	Robin H. Legge	3d.	*The hallowed day hath shined upon us	J. Stainer	14d.
Drop down, ye heavens	J. Barnby, 14d.; J. Stainer	4d.	*The Hymn of the Angels	John E. West	4d.
*For unto us a Child is born	Handel	2d.	The light hath shined	E. Silas and C. G. Verrinder, ea.	14d.
*Give the king Thy judgments, O Lord	A. H. Brown	14d.	*The Lord our Righteousness	Hugh Blair	3d.
Glory be to God	Bach	3d.	*The morning stars sang together	J. Stainer	6d.
*Glory to God	Bach, 2d.; Handel	14d.	The morning stars sang together	G. A. A. West	4d.
Glory to God in the highest	*Clowes Bayley and Pergolesi, ea.	14d.	*The New-Born King	Percy E. Fletcher	3d.
*Glory to God in the highest	E. Markham Lee	3d.	The star that now is shining	Oliver King	14d.
*God so loved the world	J. Goss and M. Kingston, ea.	14d.	The whole earth is at rest	J. Varley Roberts	4d.
*God so loved the world	J. Varley Roberts	2d.	*The Word is flesh become	Ch. Gounod	6d.
*God so loved the world	J. Stainer	14d.	*The Word is made Incarnate	Thomas Adams	2d.
*God, Who at sundry times	Edward C. Bairstow	14d.	There shall a star	Mendelssohn	6d.
*God, Who at sundry times	J. H. Mee	4d.	There shall come a star	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
*Good King Wenceslas	Arr. by W. G. Ross	2d.	There shall come forth a Rod	Ferris Tozer	3d.
Hail! thou that art highly favoured	Arthur Carnall	4d.	There shall come forth a star	O. A. Mansfield	3d.
*Hail to the Christ (Carol-Anthem)	J. Barnby	3d.	There shall be silence in Bethlehem's fields	J. Stainer	14d.
Hallelujah! for unto us a Child is born	W. H. Monk	14d.	*Ditto (Unison)	J. Stainer	14d.
Hallelujah! the light hath shined	Oliver King	3d.	There were shepherds	Myles B. Foster and B. Tours, ea.	14d.
Hark! the glad sound	*Myles B. Foster and E. V. Hall, ea.	3d.	Ditto (Two-part Anthem)	Myles B. Foster	3d.
*Hark! the herald angels sing	E. V. Hall	3d.	There were shepherds	Edgar Pettman and H. W. Wareing, ea.	3d.
Hark! what news the angels bring	Oliver King	3d.	*There were shepherds	Charles Vincent	4d.
Hear, King of Angels	Bach	14d.	There were shepherds	E. A. Sydenham and Healey Willan, ea.	3d.
He cometh forth	G. A. Macfarren	2d.	This day Christ is born (Men's Voices)	Basil Harwood	3d.
How beautiful are the feet Appendix to the "Messiah"	Handel	3d.	(This is the day which the Lord hath made	J. Turle	3d.
I desired wisdom	J. Stainer	6d.	*This is the month	E. W. Naylor	14d.
I will set His dominion in the sea	Horatio W. Parker	4d.	*Thou art My Son	Thomas Adams	3d.
*In a stable lowly (Carol-Anthem)	Oliver King	14d.	*Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling	Berlioz	14d.
In that day	J. F. Bridge	3d.	*Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts	J. Stainer	14d.
*In the beginning	G. B. Allen and B. Luard-Selby, ea.	4d.	Unto us a Child is born	F. Adlam	4d.
*In the beginning	Charles Macpherson	14d.	Unto us was born (Two-part Anthem)	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
*In the beginning was the Word	E. H. Thorne	14d.	What sweeter music can we bring	H. Walford Davies	6d.
*In the beginning was the Word	Ferris Tozer	4d.	When Christ was born to earth	H. Walford Davies	4d.
In this was manifested	F. E. Gladstone	3d.	*When Jesus was born in Bethlehem	W. A. C. Cruickshank	3d.
*It came upon the midnight clear	J. Stainer	14d.	*While all things were in quiet silence	Henry J. King	3d.
*Jesus, Who from Thy Father's throne	F. C. Woods	3d.	*While all things were in quiet silence	Oliver King	14d.
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem J. T. Field & E. J. Hopkins, ea.		14d.	While all things were in quiet silence	G. A. Macfarren	14d.
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	Bruce Steane	14d.	While all things were in quiet silence	Healey Willan	3d.
*Like silver lamps	J. Barnby	14d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks	Geo. Elvey & E. V. Hall, ea.	3d.
*Lo, God, our God has come	Battison Haynes	2d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks	J. Barnby	4d.
Lo, star-led chiefs	W. Crotch	2d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks	W. T. Best	14d.
*Love Divine, all love excelling	E. V. Hall	3d.	*With all Thy Hosts	John E. West	14d.
*Mercy and truth are met together (Words, 3s. per 100) J. Stainer		3d.	With all Thy Hosts	A. W. Wilson	14d.

THE "LUTE" SERIES OF CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

*72 Arise, shine	T. W. Stephenson	3d.	*71 Fear not; for behold	F. J. Sawyer	3d.
*95 Arise, shine	F. C. Maker	3d.	*12 Hark! what mean (Carol Anthem)	Arthur Sullivan	3d.
179 Behold! He cometh	Albert W. Ketelbey	3d.	How beautiful are the feet	W. A. C. Cruickshank	3d.
216 Behold, I bring	F. Aubrey Owen	3d.	Let us now go	A. Kempton	3d.
94 Behold, I bring you good tidings	Fredk. Peel	3d.	Rejoice ye with Jerusalem	Arthur Page	3d.
225 Behold, my Servant	C. Harris	3d.	Sing, O Daughter of Zion	H. Elliot Button	3d.
*108 Behold, my Servant	Ebenezer Prout	3d.	Sing, O Daughter of Zion	Arthur Page	3d.
166 Behold, upon the mountains	A. W. Ketelbey	3d.	Sing, O Heavens	Coldham Hall	3d.
*59 Blessed be the Lord	J. Barnby	3d.	*48 Sing, O sing	Henry Leslie	3d.
204 Break forth into joy	F. Aubrey Owen	3d.	*83 There were shepherds	A. R. Gaul	3d.
155 Break forth into joy	J. C. Bridge	3d.	Unto us a Child is born	H. E. Nichol	3d.
*119 Break forth into joy	Seymour Smith	3d.	While all things	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
*23 Come near, ye nations	Michael Watson	3d.	*118 While shepherds watched	G. C. Martin	3d.
*35 Daughter of Zion	F. C. Maker	3d.

Anthems marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1d., 14d., and 2d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Fredrick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of the chatty, gossipy order. . . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personages with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

MUSICAL HERALD.

So long in preparation, has been worth waiting for. One would not recommend a protracted reading at one sitting; the scenes change too rapidly. But that is just the charm of the book for a busy musician. Pick it up and read a few pages at random, and you will want to repeat such pleasure again and again.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wondering whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

Within its 349 pages he has packed an infinite variety of reminiscence, told with a raciness of style and a command of expression which impart great effect to the extremely interesting events of which the volume treats, and which all types of readers will find of absorbing interest.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

BIRTH OF A GREAT BRITISH INDUSTRY.

BETTER STRINGS NOW PRODUCED IN OUR COUNTRY THAN ARE MADE ANYWHERE ELSE. A BRITISH TRIUMPH!

CATHEDRAL STRINGS.

The "Cathedral" Brand represents not simply a new British Industry but a new Standard in Strings. The quality is expressed in the Tone and again in the Reliability. Such a standard of excellence has never before been attained in any country.

The "Cathedral" brand includes strings for every stringed instrument, wrapped and packed in style commensurate with their quality. All strings made by us in our own London Factory.

Of all Music Dealers.

SAMPLE STRING AND ART CATALOGUE FREE.

This offer of a Sample String is addressed to Violinists and Banjoists, and is for November only.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,

MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

CANTATAS FOR ADVENT.

By J. S. WITTY.

						NETT SALES.	OLD NOTATION.		TONIC SOL-FA.
							s.	d.	s.	d.
Manger to Cross	...	...	...	...	...	70,000	1	6	0	8
The Great Light	...	...	...	...	...	15,000	1	0	0	6
The Children's Messiah	...	...	...	...	...	10,000	0	8	0	5
The Children's Saviour	...	...	...	...	...	16,000	Both Notations		0	6

By A. J. JAMOUNEAU.

The Saviour of Men	...	...	...	...	...	36,000	1	6	0	6
The Prince of Peace	...	...	...	...	...	18,000	0	9	0	6

SECULAR.

By J. H. MEREDITH.

To Santa's Land	...	...	...	...	...	10,000	1	0	O.N. only.
Jolly Times	...	...	...	...	...	8,000	1	0	"

We have the largest selection of Traditional Carols in general use. Please send for lists.

JAMES BROADBENT & SON, LIMITED,
BOSTON SPA, YORKSHIRE.

Late 13, BRUNSWICK PLACE, LEEDS.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY EDWARD GERMAN.

String Parts, 9s. ; Wind Parts, 23s. ; Full Score, In the Press.

JUST PUBLISHED.
Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo ... 3s. 6d.
,, ,, Pianoforte Duet ... 5s. 0d.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Divisions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Division, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Division is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Division is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Despatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Divisions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK.
2. WHO IS SYLVIA.
3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.
4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY REGINALD STEGGALL.
Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE ENGLISH COUNTRY DANCE

Containing the Descriptions together with the Tunes

OF TWELVE DANCES

BY
CECIL J. SHARP.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALSE IMPROMPTU FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

COMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORGAN MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS.

NOVELLO'S ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN.

No. 8.

- | | | | |
|-----|---|-------|-------------------|
| No. | | | |
| 1. | CHORALE PRELUDE, "In dulci júbilo" | | J. S. Bach |
| 2. | PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("Christmas Oratorio") | | J. S. Bach |
| 3. | QUEM VIDISTES, PASTORES | | W. T. Best |
| 4. | VENITE IN BETHLEHEM | | W. T. Best |
| 5. | DECEMBER—Christmas Morn | | Frederic H. Cowen |
| 6. | FANTASIA ON OLD CHRISTMAS CAROLS | | William Faulkes |
| 7. | FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN ("Messiah") | | Handel |
| 8. | PASTORALE | | Theodore Kullak |
| 9. | CHORUS OF SHEPHERDS | | J. Lemmens |
| 10. | CHRISTMAS PASTORALE | | Gustav Merkel |
| 11. | A CHRISTMAS PASTORAL | | B. Luard-Selby |
| 12. | FANTASY ON TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS | | John E. West |
| | ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") | | |

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE;
CLOTH, FIVE SHILLINGS.

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST.

BOOK 48.

- | | | | |
|-----|-----------------------------------|-------|-------------------|
| No. | | | |
| 1. | FANTASY on Old Christmas Carols | | Hugh Blair |
| 2. | PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("The Messiah") | | Handel |
| 3. | "IN DULCI JUBILO"—Ancient Carol | | R. L. de Pearsall |
| 4. | PASTORALE (8th Concerto) | | Corelli |
| 5. | CHRISTMAS (Op. 205, No. 1) | | Max Oesten |
| 6. | CHORAL ("Christmas Oratorio") | | J. S. Bach |

PRICE ONE SHILLING NET.

- | | | | |
|-------------------------|--|------------------------|-------|
| | | | s. d. |
| A | CHRISTMAS PASTORALE on the Introit "Hodie Christus Natus est" and the Hymns "Corde Natus" and "Adeste Fideles" | | |
| | | B. Luard-Selby | 1 6 |
| SIX | PIECES (Book 5 of Collection of Pieces) | W. T. Best | 2 0 |
| POSTLUDE | ("Good King Wenceslas") | G. M. Garrett | 1 6 |
| OFFERTOIRE | (Air with Variations). (Modern Organist. No. 9) | Léfebure-Wély | 2 6 |
| OFFERTORIUM | (Four Pieces, No. 2) | J. Lemmens | 1 6 |
| VOLUNTARY | for Christmas-tide | F. Ouseley | 1 0 |
| CHRISTMAS SONATA | No. 4, in D (Op. 32) | Otto Dienel | 3 6 |
| CHRISTMAS BELLS | | G. J. Elvey | 0 9 |
| FANTA-IA | on Old English Carols | W. Faulkes | 1 6 |
| RHAPSODIE | on an Ancient Christmas Carol | W. Faulkes | 2 |
| TWO CHORAL PRELUDES: 1. | In dulci júbilo; 2. Puer Natus est in Bethlehem | D. Buxtehude | 1 0 |
| CHRISTMAS CAROL | (In dulci júbilo). (Young Organist, No. 5) | Pearsall | 1 0 |
| OFFERTOIRE | for Christmas Day (Church Organist, Book 8) | C. Collin | 2 6 |
| CHORAL IMPROVISATION | on "In dulci júbilo." | Sigfrid Karg-Elert | 2 0 |
| THE CARAVAN OF THE MAGI | (Approach and Departure). March from the Cantata Bethlehem (Mauder). | Arranged by E. C. Nunn | 1 6 |
| PHANTASIE | on "Adeste Fideles (Violin, Bells, and Organ) | T. Lea Southgate | 1 6 |
| FANTASIA | on "In dulci júbilo" | J. Matthews | 2 6 |
| POSTLUDIUM FESTIVUM | | C. W. Pearce | 1 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR'S INCIDENTAL MUSIC TO STEPHEN PHILLIPS'S DRAMA NERO.

PRELUDE:		s. d.
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
String Parts	3	0
Wind Parts MS.
PROCESSIONAL MARCH:
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
String Parts	2	6
FIRST ENTR'ACTE ("NERO"):
Pianoforte Solo	2	6
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	1	6
String Parts	3	0
Wind Parts	9	9
SECOND ENTR'ACTE ("POPPÆA"):
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	2	0
String Parts	2	6
Wind Parts	9	6
INTERMEZZO ("Singing Girls' Chorus"):
Pianoforte Solo	1	6
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	0	6
String Parts	2	3
Wind Parts	3	3
EASTERN DANCE:
Pianoforte Solo	2	0
Violin and Pianoforte	2	0
Pianoforte Conductor	1	0
String Parts	2	6
Wind Parts	6	3
SUITE OF FOUR PIECES:
Pianoforte Solo	4	0
String Parts	8	0
Wind Parts	28	9

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SUNSET.—Vesper Hymn for Choir and Congregation. For Festival or General Use. By W. HODSON. Price 3d. London: Novello & Co., Ltd.

BLOCK CITY. SONG.

The Words by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.
The Music by TEMPLE P. M. BEVAN.
Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REVISION OF PRICES.

WEBSTER'S GROUNDWORK OF MUSIC.
WEBSTER'S CHILD'S PRIMER OF THE THEORY
OF MUSIC. London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

DR. AIKIN'S BONE PROPS (FOR VOICE PRODUCTION).

The Bone Prop was designed by Dr. W. A. Aikin for the purpose—suggested in his book "The Voice: An Introduction to Practical Phonology" (Longman's, 1910), pages 78 and 81—of keeping the jaws open during the practice of vowel sounds.

The length of the Prop varies from five-eighths to one inch to suit different mouths. It is lightly made with a groove for the incisor teeth at either end, and a hole for the string which passes round the neck to prevent the Prop from being swallowed or dropped on the ground.

The effect of the Prop is fully explained in the Work above referred to. Its object is mainly to preserve the resonant property of the mouth, and to demonstrate the Resonator Scale. At the same time it requires much greater movement of lips and tongue in forming the vowels, and so improves articulation.

Price 6d. each; 5s. 6d. per doz. Postage 3d.

SOLE MANUFACTURERS:

ARNOLD & SONS,

GILTSUR STREET, LONDON, E.C.1.

Telegraphic Address:
"INSTRUMENTS," LONDON.

Telephone:
City 5240 (3 lines).

NEW FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

		NET. s. d.
AUBERT, L.—Habañera. Pianoforte Duet	4	0
BORDES, C.—Rapsodie basque pour Piano et Orchestre. Reduction de l'orchestre au second Piano par J. Samazeuil	6	6
FAURÉ, J.—Papillon. Pièce pour Violoncelle. Transcribed for Pianoforte Solo	2	6
INDY, VINCENT D'.—Sept chants de Terroir, sur des thèmes populaires de divers pays. Pianoforte Duet. Complete (1) Noël novellet; (2) Rigaudon; (3) Seguidilla; (4) Yonkina; (5) Chanson de plein vent; (6) Aubade; (7) Tarentelle.	6	6
MALIPIERO, J. F.—Armenia Pianoforte Solo	3	0
MOZART—Six Concertos. (Revised by J. Guy-Ropartz)	4	0
PESSE, M.—Chavon des Abeilles. Pianoforte Solo.	2	8
— Habanera. Pian forte Solo	2	8
PHILIPP, I.—Trois études de concert en double notes.	2	6
PIERNE, J.—Variations en Ut mineur. Pianoforte Solo	6	6
RAFF, J.—Op. 159. Humoresque. Transcribed for Pianoforte Solo by C. Debussy	4	0
ROPARTZ, J. GUY.—Dans l'ombre de la montagne. Pianoforte Solo. (1) Sur la Route, 2s.; (2) Paysage, 2s. 2d.; (3) Vieille Eglise, 2s.; (4) Ronde, 2s. 8d.; (5) Quand la lumière s'en est allée, 2s. 8d.
SCARLATTI.—Esercizi per gravicembalo. (Sonatas for Pianoforte. Revised by Paul Dukas) 1st volume	5	6
SEVERAC, DEODAT DE.—Cerdana. Etudes pittoresques. Pianoforte Solo Complete	9	0
(1) En Tartane; (2) Les Fêtes; (3) Ménestriers et glaiveuses; (4) Les Muletiers devant le Christ de Livlia; (5) Le Retour des Muletiers.
TAILLEFERRE, J.—Jeu de plein air. 2 Pianofortes, 4 hands	4	6

ORGAN MUSIC.

BARNES, E. S.—Petite Suite. Op. 23	4	0
DUPARC.—Aux étoiles	2	0
HAILING, R. G.—Andante religioso (Sursum corda)	2	0
HURÉ, J.—La Technique de l'orgue	9	0
MALEINGRAU, P. DE.—Suite	7	0
ROPARTZ, J. GUY.—Introduction et Allegro Moderato	3	6
— Rhapsodie sur 2 Noëls	3	0
— Trois Méditations	3	6
SAINT-SAËNS, C.—Op. 157. 3rd Fantaisie	4	0

VOCAL MUSIC.

AUBERT, A.—Six poèmes arabes (voix moyennes). (1) Le mariage, 2s.; (2) Le vaincu, 3s.; (3) La visage penché, 2s.; (4) Le sommeil des Colombes, 2s. 2d.; (5) L'Adieu, 3s.; (6) Le Destin, 2s. 2d.
CAPLET, A.—Détresse. Chant et Piano	2	8
— Prière normande. Chant et Piano	2	8
HÜE, G.—Esquisses marocaines. Two Songs Complete	4	0
(1) Paresse, 2s. 2d.; (2) Le charge du Spahi, 3s.
JAQUES-DALCROZE.—Chantons, Dansons. Enfantines pour soli, duo, ou chœurs, avec accomp. de Piano. Complete	6	0
MORET, E.—Sous le ciel de l'Islam. Songs d'exil. 12 Songs Complete, ...	8	6
PESSE, M.—O ma chère maison. Chant et Piano	2	2
RAVEL, M.—La Flûte enchantée. Chant, Flute, et Piano	2	2

ORCHESTRAL MUSIC.

BEETHOVEN—String Quartets. Op. 18, Nos. 1–6. Miniature scores each	1	6
ROGER-DUCASSE.—Romance for 'Cello and Orchestra Full score	5	0
Orchestral parts	6	0
— Suite for Orchestra Full score	10	6
Orchestral parts	22	6

LITERATURE.

BOUCHOR, M.—Anthologie de la chanson populaire. Française, Anglaise, et Russe	15	0
SELVA, BLANCHE.—L'Enseignement musical de la Technique du Piano: TOME PREMIER.—Principes de la Sonorité au Piano. Travail élémentaire du Toucher	6	6
TOME SECOND.—La Simultanéité des sons au Piano. Travail élémentaire des double notes, Fondements. Harmoniques de la polyphonie et du Trait	11	6
TIERSON, JULIEN.—Histoire de la Marseillaise	13	6
VER, J.—Le Psautier Huguenot Harmonisé	30	0
(Mélodies du XVII ^e Siècle.) Paroles choisies et révisées, accompagnement d'orgue- harmonium.
VILLERMIN, LOUIS.—Traité d'Harmonie. Ultra moderne	7	6

All the above prices are subject to an increase of 40–50%.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" consists of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on, and the appropriate pairs are now issued bound together in cloth (see Cloth Bindings below).

1A. TECHNICAL PRACTICE (1st Position)	2s. od.	1B. STUDIES (1st Position)	2s. od.
2A. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	2B. DITTO (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. 6d.
3A. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.	3B. DITTO ... (1st to 5th Position)	3s. od.
4A. DITTO ... (all Positions)	2s. 6d.	4B. DITTO ... (all Positions)	3s. od.
5A. DITTO ... Do.	2s. 6d.	5B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.
6A. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.	6B. DITTO ... Do.	3s. od.

CLOTH BINDINGS.

Book 1. (1A and 1B, bound together) in Cloth	 5s. od.
" 2. (2A and 2B, bound together) Do.	 5s. 6d.
" 3. (3A and 3B, bound together) Do.	 7s. od.
" 4. (4A and 4B, bound together) Do.	 6s. 6d.
" 5. (5A and 5B, bound together) Do.	 6s. 6d.
" 6. (6A and 6B, bound together) Do.	 7s. od.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a number of Pieces are published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part is furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

No. 13. TWELVE FOLK DANCES FROM DENMARK (1st Position)	2s. od.	No. 21. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. J. S. BACH (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.
No. 14. SONATA IN G MINOR. G. TARTINI (All Positions)	2s. od.	No. 22. CONCERTO IN A MINOR. PIERRE RODE (Op. 9). (All Positions)	2s. 6d.
No. 15. OVERTURE TO SAMSON. G. F. HANDEL (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 23. TWELVE CAROLS ... (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 16. SONATINA IN D. FRANZ SCHUBERT (1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions)	2s. od.	No. 24. SONATA IN A (KÜCHEL, No. 305). W. A. MOZART (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 17. EIGHT HYMN TUNES. VARIOUS COMPOSERS (1st Position)	1s. 6d.	No. 25. RÉVERIE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 22, No. 3). (Advanced)	2s. od.
No. 18. STYRIAN DANCES (LANDLER) (Op. 165). JOSEF LANNER (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.	No. 26. FOUR LITTLE PIECES. (From Op. 8) IGNAZ PLEYEL (1st Position)	2s. od.
No. 19. PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN G MINOR. J. S. BACH (Advanced)	2s. od.	No. 27. SARABANDE AND TAMBOURIN. JEAN-MARIE LECLAIR (1st to 5th Position)	2s. od.
No. 20. SONATA IN G (No. 8). JOSEPH HAYDN (1st to 6th Position)	2s. od.	No. 28. BOURRÉE AND GIGUE. J. S. BACH (1st and 3rd Positions)	1s. 6d.
		No. 29. BALLADE AND POLONAISE. HENRI VIEUXTEMPS (Op. 38) (Advanced)	2s. 0d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

London:—Printed by NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, at Novello Works, Soho, and published at 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W. 1.
Sold also by SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT AND CO., LTD., Paternoster Row, E.C. 4.—Saturday, November 1, 1919.

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS

ANTHEM FOR FOUR VOICES

Psalm cl.

COMPOSED BY

ROBERT WHYTE (circa 1530—1574).

EDITED, FROM A MS. IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM, BY JOHN E. WEST.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro maestoso.

SOPRANO. f O praise God in His ho - li - ness, in His ho - li -

ALTO. f O praise God in His ho - li - ness,

TENOR. f O praise God

BASS. f O

Allegro maestoso. ♩ = 100.

ACCOMP. (For practice only.) f

- ness, His ho - li - ness, mf O praise God in His ho - li - ness, in His ho - li - ness, mf O praise God in His in His ho - li - ness, His ho - li - ness, mf O praise God in His ho - li - ness,

mf mf mf

Another version of this Anthem is to be found in some of the old MS. books, written for eight voices, and attributed to Matthew White—a 17th century musician.

The present edition of the four-part version is transposed a fourth higher. Sufficient contrast in power should be observed between the f and mf passages throughout. (Ed.)

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

in His ho - li - ness, His ho - li - ness; praise Him in the fir - ma - ment ho - li - ness, in His ho - li - ness, His ho - li - ness; praise Him in the praise God mf in His ho - li - ness, His ho - li - ness; praise
 O praise God in His ho - li - ness;

of His pow'r, of His pow'r, praise Him in the fir - ma - ment of His pow'r, His Him in the fir - ma - ment of His pow'r, of His praise Him in the fir - ma - ment of His of His pow'r, of His pow'r, His fir - ma - ment of His pow'r, of His pow'r, His pow - er, praise Him in the fir - ma - ment of His pow - er, praise Him in the fir - ma - ment of His pow er, praise Him in the fir - ma -

 mf

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

A musical score for the hymn "O Praise God in His Holiness". The score is written for a four-part vocal choir (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one flat (B-flat major or D minor), and the time signature is common time (C). The score is divided into three systems, each containing four staves. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves. Dynamics include f (forte), mf (mezzo-forte), and fz (forzando). The lyrics are as follows:

pow'r. Praise Him in His no - ble acts, praise Him in His pow'r. Praise Him in His no - ble acts, praise Him in His no - ble
 - er, of His pow-er. Praise Him in His no - ble acts,
 - ment of His pow'r. Praise Him in His no - ble acts, praise Him in His no - ble acts, His no - ble acts; praise Him ac - cord - ing to His ex-cel-lent acts, His no - ble acts; praise Him ac - praise Him in His no - ble acts; praise Him ac - cord - ing to His no - ble acts, His no - ble acts; praise Him ac - cord - ing great-ness, His ex - cel-lent great - ness, praise Him ac - cord - ing to His ex-cel-lent
 - cord - ing to His ex-cel-lent great-ness, praise Him ac - ex-cel-lent great - ness, praise Him ac - cord - ing to His to His ex-cel-lent great - ness, praise Him ac - cord - ing

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

great - ness, His ex - cel - lent great - - ness. Praise Him in the sound of
 - cord - - ing to His ex - cel - lent great - ness. Praise Him in the ex - cel - lent great - - - - - ness.
 to His ex - cel - lent great - - - - - ness.

The first system of the musical score features four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one flat (B-flat major or D minor), and the time signature is common time (C). The lyrics are distributed across the vocal staves, with the piano accompaniment providing harmonic support. Dynamics include f (forte) and mf (mezzo-forte).

the trum - pet, praise Him in the sound of sound of the trum - pet, praise Him in the Praise Him in the sound of the trum - pet,
 Praise Him in the sound of the trum - pet,

The second system continues the musical composition. It maintains the same instrumental and vocal structure. The lyrics focus on the 'sound of the trumpet' and 'praising Him'. Dynamics include f (forte) and mf (mezzo-forte).

the trum - pet, in the sound of the trum - - - - - pet; praise Him up - sound of the trum - pet, in the sound of the trum - pet; praise Him up - praise Him in the sound of the trum - - - - - pet; praise Him up - praise Him in the sound of the trum - pet; praise Him up -

The third system concludes the musical score on this page. The lyrics repeat the phrase 'praise Him up'. The piano accompaniment features a prominent melody in the right hand. Dynamics include mf (mezzo-forte) and f (forte).

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

- on the lute and harp, praise him up - on the lute and harp. rall.
 - on the lute and harp, praise Him up - on the lute and harp. rall.
 - on the lute and harp, praise Him up - on the lute and harp. rall.
 - on the lute and harp, praise Him up - on the lute and harp. rall.

[illegible]

Musical score for the hymn "Praise Him in the Cymbals and Dance". The score is written for four parts: Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass. The key signature is one flat (B-flat), and the time signature is 4/4. The lyrics are: "Praise Him in the cym - bals and dan -". The score includes various musical notations such as notes, rests, and dynamic markings like f (forte).

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

f

Praise Him in the cym - bals and dan - ces ; praise
 ces, dan - ces ; praise
 (2) ces, dan - ces ; praise
 ces, and dan - ces, and dan - ces ; praise

Him up - on the strings and pipe. Praise Him up -
 Him up - on the strings and pipe. Praise Him up - on the well - tu - ned Him up - on the strings and pipe. Praise Him up - on the strings and pipe. Praise Him up - on the well -

mf
 on the well - tu - ned cym - bals, praise Him up - on the well -
mf cym - bals, the well - tu - ned cym - bals, praise Him up - on the well - tu - ned cym - bals, the
mf
 Him up - on the well - tu - ned cym - bals, praise Him up -
mf
 tu - ned cym - bals, praise Him up - on the well - tu -
mf
mf
mf

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

tu - - ned cym - - bals; praise
 well - - tu - ned cym - bals; praise Him up -
 - on the well - tu - ned cym - bals; praise Him up - on the
 - - - ned cym - - bals; praise Him up - on the loud cym -

Him up - on the loud cym - bals, praise Him up - on
 - on the loud . . cym - bals, praise Him up - on the loud .
 loud cym - bals, praise Him up - on the loud cym - bals,
 - bals, praise Him up - on the loud cym - bals, the loud

Tempo lmo.
 the loud cym - bals. Let ev - er - y thing that hath breath praise
 . . cym - bals. Let ev - er - y thing that . . hath breath praise the loud cym - bals. Let ev - er - y thing that . . hath breath praise cym - - - bals. Let ev - er - y thing that hath breath praise
Tempo lmo. ♩ = 100.

O PRAISE GOD IN HIS HOLINESS.

the Lord, praise the Lord. mf * A

the Lord, praise the Lord. mf * A

the Lord, praise the Lord. mf * A

the Lord, praise the Lord. mf * A

the Lord, praise the Lord. mf * A men, f A

men, f A

men, f A

men, f A

men, f A cres. men, A rit. men, A men.

cres. men, A rit. men, A men.

cres. men, A rit. men, A men.

cres. men, A rit. men, A men.

cres. men, A rit. men, A men.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

FOUNDED IN 1844.

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH.

No. 922.—Vol. 60.

Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage.

DECEMBER 1, 1919.

Price 4d.; Postage 2d.

Annual Subscription, Post-free, 5s.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

Conductor: SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1919, AT 2.30 P.M.

CAROLS

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MISS DORIS VANE.
MR. JOHN COATES.
MR. GEORGE BAKER.

At the Organ - - - Mr. H. I. BALFOUR.

Stalls, 5s. 9d.; Arena, 3s. 6d.; Balcony, 3s. and 2s. 4d.; Gallery
Promenade), 1s. 3d.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 3, 1920, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS CARRIE TUBB.
MISS PHYLLIS LEIT.
MR. GERVASE ELWES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

FULL CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - - - Mr. H. L. BALFOUR.

Stalls, 8s. 6d.; Arena, 7s.; Balcony, 4s. 9d. and 3s.; Gallery
(Promenade), 1s. 3d.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.A.M.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Duke's Hall, Saturday, December 6,
at 3.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, December, 9,
at 3.

LENT TERM begins Monday, January 12. ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Friday, January 9.

SCHOLARSHIPS in the following Subjects will be competed for in January:—Singing (Male), Violin, and Composition, also the Baume
Scholarship, "In any branch of Music," for Manx Candidates only.
Last day for entry, December 16.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted,
Prospectus of which is now ready.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Telegrams—"Initiative, Southkens, Telephone—"1160, Western."
London."

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: PROFESSOR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D. Litt.

The EASTER TERM will commence on Monday, January 5th, 1920.
ENTRANCE EXAMINATION, Thursday, January 1st, 1920.

A Junior Department is established for Pupils under 16 years of age.
Syllabus and Official Entry Forms may be obtained from The Registrar.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND
(Founded by Sir Ernest Palmer, Bart.). For the encouragement of British Composers and Executive Artists.

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

CLAUD AVELING, Registrar.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

HANDEL FESTIVAL, JUNE, 1920.

Members of the Festival Choir who have not received the October circular are invited to write to Mr. WALTER W. HEDGCOCK, Musical Director, Crystal Palace, S.E. 19, stating voice and present address.

ÆOLIAN HALL.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 3, AT 8.30.

Concert of Music of the Russian Orient.

FIRST APPEARANCE IN ENGLAND OF

L. SAMINSKY

Director of the Tiflis (Caucasus) People's Conservatoire de Musique,

WITH THE KIND ASSISTANCE OF

MISS ZOIA ROSOWSKY

MR. M. CHELMINSKY

MR. S. LASSERSON (SOLO VIOLIN)

Tickets, 12s., 5s. 9d., and 3s. Hal and usual Agents; and IBBS & TILLET, 19, Hanover Square, W. 1.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C. 4.

PRINCIPAL LONDON RONALD.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all musical subjects. STAGE TRAINING
in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Fencing.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £7 17s. 6d. and £10 10s. per term, comprising principal and secondary Subjects,
Harmony, Sight-Singing, and / or Orchestra.

Weekly Orchestral Practices.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local School
Examinations (open to general public), free on application.

Tel.: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS.

Examination Regulations, List of College Publications, Lectures, &c.
may be had on application.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Sec.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

BACH'S CHRISTMAS ORATORIO,

Parts I., II., and IV.,

At St. Anne's, Soho, with Full Orchestra and Organ,

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, AT 4 P.M.

Tickets gratis, from Rector, 28, Soho Square, W. 1.

(Send stamped addressed envelope.)

MORECAMBE MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

MAY 6, 7, AND 8, 1920.

SYLLABUS of COMPETITIONS is NOW READY, and may be had (price 7d., post-free) on application to Wm. C. Fawcett, Secretary, 75, Victoria Street, Morecambe.

ADVANCE IN PRICES.

The prices of certain of the Novello publications
were again advanced on April 1, but the charges are still unaltered in the advertisement columns.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

METROPOLITAN EXAMINATION, SEPTEMBER, 1919.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.—AS TEACHERS: Catherine Elizabeth Bowden, Hilda Feist, Ernest Firth, Thomas John Morgan, Dan Williams.

AS PERFORMERS: Marjorie Minnie Anderson, Gwendolyn G. M. Bell, Elizabeth Pretoria Blackburn, John Challis, Cecil Dorothy Chapman, Amy Winifred Griffin, Winifred Nellie Howell, Emily May Lewis, Ruth Marguerite Montgomery, Pansy Moore, Edmund Priestley, Norah W. Ransom, Elsie Florence Rowe, Hilda W. Jasper Stanley, Dorothy Syer, Arthur Hamilton Welburn.

EXAMINERS: Henry Beauchamp, Thomas Meux, Selina Pitt Soper, Arthur Thompson.

PIANOFORTE.—AS TEACHERS: Mary Stewart Abbott, Irene Beatrix Allison, Eva Amstell, Mary Townsend Archer, Harriet Millicent Armitage, Gladys May Baker, Dorothy Bance, Elsa Marjory Barker, Winifred May Beeton, Ruth Lilian Bertalot, Elsie Brewer, Edith Mary Bristow, Helena Brooks, Dora Challen Brown, Gwendolen Helena Browning, Evelyn Beatrice Beaumont Bryan, Muriel Flower Cadman, Joyce Carson, Thomas Henry Carter, Helen Edith Claxton, Winifred Eleanor Cole, Edmund Thorne Cooper, Frances Ellen Coulthard, Mary Johanna Culpin, Doris Doward, Rosalie Jean Elliott, Marjorie Elton, Ina Farnell, Norah Fell, Phyllis Lena Fricker, Mary Elizabeth Fuery, Gladys Jessie Garjulo, Marshall McLaren Gilchrist, Marjory Lilian Gollop, Mary Rosalind Gordon, Ann S. Grant, Arthur James Grubb, Eleanor Mary Halcombe, Ella C. Hendy, Bertha Marie Heyne, Dorothy Ida Hill, Ethel Marjorie Holt, Margaret Little Jardine, Lilian M. Jones, Alice Mabel Kimber, Olive Mabel Lambert, Alfred John Lean, Florence Miriam Ling, Annie Longworth, Rita Lowenadler, Ethel Frances Mann, Helen Edith Matthews, Clara Iris Mattock, Ernest Hazelton McClenaghan, Muriel Craig McKibbin, Beatrice Mary Mein, Dorothy West Mellor, Victoria A. Mitchell, Gladys Helena Mitchinson, Nancy Moss, Hilda Kathleen Munday, Winifred Blanche Munday, Beatrice E. Nineham, Eva Helen Ogg, Ida Wilson Parish, Arthur John Allen Pawley, Winifred Edith Pellow, Eva Gladys Ramsey, Agnes May Rees, Alexandra Annie Reynolds, Margaret Humphrey Ritchie, Helen Violet Sutcliffe Roberts, Phyllis Winifred Russell, Kathleen Irene Salisbury, Winifred M. Scott, Edith May Shackleton, Nora Harriet Sheldon, Helen L. Smallwood, Constance Smith, Doris Snowden, Lisb-l Edith Spankie, Kate Stephenson, Margaret Mary Hagar Stockdale, Elaine Rosamond Suffert, Ethel Sullivan, Irene Lily Tarr, Marjorie Thompson, Mary A. Thomson, Evelyn Isobel Tucker, Dainie Vickers, Minnie Vickers, Gladys L. J. Vincent, Ethel May Vinnicombe, Nita Mary Virtue, Marion Warbrick, Marjorie Waterman, Marie Way, Phyllis Mary Whiteway, Gladys May Williams, Cecilia Elizabeth Yeoman.

AS PERFORMERS: C. Isabel Adams, Annie Florence May Driver, Emilie Helen Hodgkinson, John Adam Horner, Dorothy Hugo, Ernest Albert Frederick Jenner, Clifford Marshall.

EXAMINERS: Carlo Albanesi, Oscar Beringer, Victor Booth, W. J. Kipps, T. B. Knott, Tobias Matthay, Frederick Moore, Claude Pollard, Charles F. Reddie, Cuthbert Whitmore.

ORGAN.—Patrick Anderson Black.

EXAMINERS: Stanley Marchant, Mus. B. Oxon.; H. W. Richards, Mus. D. Dunelm.; Reginald Steggall.

VIOLIN.—AS TEACHERS: Netta Parker Hunter, Annie Dora Walwin.

AS PERFORMERS: Dora Hughes, H. Jean Robley.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Spencer Dyke, H. Wessely, Rowsby Woof. THEATRICAL CONDUCTORSHIP—Walter Almgill.

EXAMINERS: P. F. Battishill, F. Corder, Major J. Mackenzie Rogan.

ELOCUTION.—AS TEACHERS: Francis Thomas Brooks, Vincent John Curran, Mary E. Doe, Lilian Eugenia Edwards, Gertrude Maud Taylor, Catherine Helen Bruce McKenzie Watson.

AS PERFORMER: Florence Esther Eldridge.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton Bond, Annie M. Child, F. Corder, Katie Thomas.

ASSOCIATESHIP BY EXAMINATION—Lyle Neave.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor.. .. Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus. Doc., LL.D.
 Director GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A.

SESSION 1918-1919.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 23 to December 21); WINTER TERM (January 20 to April 5) SUMMER TERM (April 7 to June 28).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY OF DURHAM.

Examinations for degrees in Music are held as follows: Matriculation, January, July, and October; First Mus. B., March and September; Mus. B. and Mus. D., September only.

For particulars, apply Secretary of Examinations, University Offices, Durham. Copies of former Examination Papers, 1s. 6d. per set.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

BOARD OF EXAMINATION.

DR. HORTON ALLISON, Mus. D. Dublin; Mus. B. Cantab.; F.R.A.M.

DR. F. J. KARN, Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. AUGUSTUS HOLMES, Esq., Director of Examinations.

(For a full list of the Examiners see Syllabus.)

EXAMINATIONS—LOCAL AND HIGHER.

The NEXT EXAMINATION for Certificates in Pianoforte, Violin, Singing, Elocution, Organ, Theory of Music, &c., will be held in London and at the various Local Centres in the Provinces in APRIL. Last day of entry, Monday, March 15th.

SYLLABUS, and Forms of Entry, on application to the Secretary.

Silver and Bronze Medals and Book Prizes are awarded at the Examinations in accordance with the printed regulations.

The HIGHER EXAMINATIONS for the Diplomas of Associate (A.L.C.M.) and Licentiate (L.L.C.M.) take place in April, June, July, and December, and for the Diplomas of Associate in Music (A. Mus. L.C.M.), Licentiate in Music (L. Mus. L.C.M.), and Fellowship (F.L.C.M.), in June, July, and December.

LOCAL CENTRES may be formed in districts unrepresented, either in the United Kingdom or abroad; particulars on application. SCHOOL CENTRES may also be arranged.

In the Educational Department students are received and thoroughly trained in all musical subjects under the best Professors at moderate fees. Lessons may commence from any date. Spring Term begins Monday, January 5th. For full information apply,

A. GAMBIEK HOLMES, Secretary.

Telegrams: "Supertonic, Reg. London." Telephone: Central 3870.

INCORPORATED GUILD OF CHURCH MUSICIANS.

Founded 1888.

Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament XXX. and XXXI.

Victoria, Cap. cxxxi., § 23.

President: THE RT. REV. BISHOP J. E. C. WELLDON, D.D.,
DEAN OF DURHAM.

ASSOCIATE (A.I.G.C.M.) LICENTIATE (L.I.G.C.M.), FELLOWSHIP (F.I.G.C.M.) EXAMINATIONS in London and at approved Provincial Centres in April, July, and December.

COMPETITIONS, 1919.

SILVER MEDALS are awarded for the best ANDANTE for the ORGAN, and a SHORT ANTHEM with Treble Solo.

BRONZE MEDALS for the best HYMN-TUNE, DOUBLE CHANT,
and KYRIE.

VICTORY BANQUET, Holborn Restaurant, Thursday, January
29, 1920.

Organist (Members) have the FREE use of the Register of Vacant
Appointments.

Calendar (gratis) and further information of DR. LEWIS, Warden.
158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W. 11.

VICTORIA COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

LONDON.

(Under the direction of the Victoria College Corporation, Ltd.)

INCORPORATED 1891.

158, HOLLAND PARK AVENUE, KENSINGTON, W.-11.

President: THE MOST HON. THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEY.

Board of Examination:

Principal: J. H. LEWIS, D.C.L., F.E.I.S., Mus. Doc.

Chairman: J. M. BENTLEY, Mus. Doc., Cantab., Hon. F.R.A.M.

Hon. Director of Studies: CHURCHILL SIBLEY, Mus. Doc., F.I.G.C.M.

Registrar: J. G. COOPER, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

ROBERT FOX FREW, Mus. Doc. Dunelm.

Rev. NOEL BONAVIA-HUNT, M.A. Oxon.

Secretary: H. PORTMAN LEWIS.

Metropolitan and Provincial Examinations in all subjects, including the Diplomas of A.V.C.M., L.V.C.M. F.V.C.M., also for the Teachers
Professional Diploma in the Art of Teaching, April, July, and December.

Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals are offered for Competition.

Local Secretaries required for towns not represented.

Lessons given in Pianoforte, Singing, Elocution, Harmony, Counterpoint; and all other Subjects connected with the culture of Music.

SPECIAL CINEMA COURSES in Orchestral, Piano, and Organ-
Playing.

All communications to be addressed to The Secretary, Registered
Office, 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C. 2.

THE ART OF VOICE-TRAINING.

Mr. FIELD HYDE will conduct a

CHRISTMAS VACATION COURSE IN LONDON,

From Wednesday, DECEMBER 31, 1919, to JANUARY 7, 1920.

TWELVE LECTURE-DEMONSTRATIONS will be given, and the Course will include:—

1. THE PRINCIPLES OF TEACHING.
2. A COMPLETE EXPOSITION OF VOICE-TRAINING METHOD.
3. COMPARISONS OF VARIOUS SYSTEMS WHICH ARE FOUNDED UPON DIVERSE THEORIES.
4. PRACTICAL DEMONSTRATIONS IN VOICE-TRAINING AND TEACHING.
5. PERMANENT NOTES (LETTERPRESS) OF THE VOCAL METHOD.
6. VOICE CHARTS, AND A COMPLETE SERIES OF EXERCISES AND STUDIES.
7. MUTUAL DISCUSSIONS AND QUESTIONS ON PERSONAL DIFFICULTIES.

Mr. Field Hyde's Method and the Course of Lecture-Demonstrations have had the recommendation of many of the best Authorities—Musical and Medical, Cathedral and University Organists, Conductors, Principals and Professors, of some of the greatest Musical Institutions, the Editors of the chief Musical Journals, and of every Teacher and Student who has attended the Course.

The following extracts are selected from amongst hundreds of similar spontaneous expressions of opinion:—

"The Course afforded me one of the MOST ENJOYABLE WEEKS I ever spent, the educational value of which I can never forget.—F. A. C."

"Your Course seems IDEAL in that it can be taken by teachers using different methods from your own. They must INEVITABLY BE BETTER TEACHERS afterwards.—F. B., L.R.A.M."

"You SOLVED, I might say, all my DIFFICULTIES, and I do not regret having travelled the thousand miles which I did, as the Course was worth it.—J. R."

"I have for many years been a keen reader, student, and teacher of music, but never in my experience have I thought anything so necessary to be said on the subject of singing and teaching, as that which you said (or revealed) in your recent delightful course. It is easy enough to define or explain a thing, it is another matter to make it understood.—A. E. R."

"I wish to say how much I enjoyed your holiday course. You score where others fail, in that you back up all you say or teach by demonstrations with your own or pupils' voices. I have attended a good many courses, but I can honestly say that yours BEATS THEM ALL, and easily too.—J. T. S., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M."

Your excellent course has added greatly to my success as a choir-trainer and adjudicator. It has brought me new engagements this month. Your splendidly-designed charts are extremely helpful in gaining experience. My candid opinion is that it is impossible to get better instruction.—T. J. M., L.R.A.M., F.T.S.C."

For Syllabus and full particulars, address early application to:—

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE, 4, WIGMORE STUDIOS, 40, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

NEXT TERM COURSES (WEEKLY LECTURES):—

THE TEACHING OF CLASS-SINGING, at the Royal Academy of Music, on Saturday Mornings.

THE ART OF VOICE-TRAINING, at the Training School for Music Teachers, on Saturday Afternoons.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing." 3s. 6d. each, post 3s. 10d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MISS

MARGUERITE SWALE

VOICE-PRODUCTION, SINGING, DICTION, AND INTERPRETATION.

GRAND OPERA AND ORATORIO COACH.

120 F, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, W. 1.

Tel.: Mayfair 1710.

THE "WINDSOR CASTLE SINGERS."

FREDERICK SMITH (ALTO). EATON COOTER (BARITONE).
MALCOLM BOYLE (TENOR). LEWIS STAINTON (BASS).
(All direct from St. George's Chapel and H.M. Private Chapel.)

THE "WINDSOR CASTLE SINGERS"

Specialize in OLD ENGLISH PART-SONGS, and are now available for CONCERTS, AT-HOMES, RECITALS, RECEPTIONS, MASONIC FUNCTIONS, ETC.

Communications to USUAL AGENTS, or Mr. Malcolm Boyle,
22, The Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

MR. CHARLES TREE.

RECITAL-LECTURES ON VOICE-PRODUCTION.

CHELTEMHAM, Oct. 31.—"An exceptional treat, musically and educationally. His own vocal powers, rich, free, and pure in quality, illustrate the method he recommends."—Looker-on.

"A rare treat. He showed how true speech became song. His illustrations of his theories of the use of the resonators, the forward voice &c., were fine."—News.

HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE, by CHARLES TREE.

It is extraordinary what a great percentage of vocalists just fail to get their voices right forward on to the "mask," the only position which allows of nasal resonance, variety of vocal colour, and clear enunciation. The life of the voice, too, depends largely on this frontal position.

Engager, booking lecture, writes, November 16, 1919: "Am glad to say am doing better than ever before—not one vacancy for pupils. Am using your method with great success."

Concerts, Lectures, &c. Address, 29, King's Road, Chelsea, S.W. 3.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Examinations in Theory held in March and November at all Centres in Practical Subjects in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 11th, 1920.

SCHOOL EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 4th, 1920.

Theory papers set in Examinations of past years (Local Centre or School) can be obtained on application. Price 6d. per set, per year, post-free.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at the R.A.M. or R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from—

JAMES MUIR, Secretary,

14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C. 1.

Telegrams: "Associa, London."

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: Sir THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £20, and for Wind Instrument Course, £15.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BREMA.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

THE INCORPORATED LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 22, Princes St., Cavendish Square, W. 1.

Branches; Hampstead Conservatoire, N.W. 3, and
117, Seven Sisters Road, N. 7.

Principal: T. H. YORK-TROTTER, M.A., Mus. Doc. (Oxon.).

Rhythmic Method of Music Teaching. Special Classes for Teachers.
Special Training in Music and Elocution. Private and Class Lessons
in every subject by the best Teachers.

ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES WEEKLY.

Frequent Students' Concerts. Examinations in Music and Elocution,
July and December. Spong Rhythmic Dancing. For Prospectus and
Examination Syllabus apply to the CENTRAL ACADEMY, 22, PRINCES
STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W. 1.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice or Church Services, &c. Telephone Paddington, 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC. FOUNDED 1892.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

Twenty-eighth Year opened on Monday, October 6.

All Branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons.
Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, and Art of Teaching, &c.

Opera Class, "The Golden Web," by GORING THOMAS.

Students' Performances: Musical Afternoons, Nov. 22, Dec. 6 and 13;
Chamber Concert, Dec. 2, and Orchestral Concert, Dec. 22.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY. (NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL)

OFFICES: 19, BERNERS STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

*For the Fostering and Encouragement of British
Music at Home and Abroad.*

Patron: THE RT. HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

President: THE LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN.

Hon. Secretaries for Foreign Correspondence:

MR. E. J. DENT. MR. FRANCIS TOYE.

Director: DR. A. EAGLEFIELD HULL.

CAN YOU HELP

By ARRANGING HOME MUSIC CIRCLES?—By CONCERTS OR LECTURES?—By OBTAINING NEW MEMBERS?—By HELPING
TO FOUND A BRANCH IN YOUR TOWN OR DISTRICT?—By ASSISTING AT CENTRES (LONDON, MANCHESTER, BIRMINGHAM, LIVERPOOL, GLASGOW, ETC.) WITH LIBRARIES & CATALOGUES?

A. EAGLEFIELD HULL, Acting-Secretary, 19, BERNERS ST., W. 1.

NOW READY. Illustrated. Price 10s. Limited issue.

"STERNDALE BENNETT & SHEFFIELD."
(The Bennett Family—Derbyshire, Cambridge, and Sheffield, &c.)

By W. T. FREEMANTLE, Barbot Hall, Rotherham, of whom it may be had, and through all Book and Music Shops.

If you MUST practise incessantly "to keep up technique," has it ever occurred to you that such an unstable basis proves wrong methods?

THE THREE T^S OF THE SUCCESSFUL PIANIST (Technique—Touch—Tone).

A COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS IN MODERN PIANO PLAYING well and truly lays the foundation to a technique that is thoroughly practical, sure and permanent.

Beginners, elementary and advanced pianists should write for free booklet to

THE CHAS. A. GILLETT
CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL,
Studios: 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

PIANO PLAYING KEPT UP without keyboard practising.

Not the least of the many benefits which the use of my System confers upon pianists is that of being able to keep "in practice" without keyboard practising.

Even when circumstances make keyboard work impossible for several months, definite progress is often made in touch, increased powers of execution, and in general command over the keyboard.

This is one of the many reasons why pianists of all grades of proficiency should take my Postal Course.

Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 12,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard" Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing,"
will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System.
When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

PIANO SCORE OF THE BALLET:

"LA BOUTIQUE FANTASQUE."

MUSIC BY ROSSINI.

ARRANGED BY OTTORINO RESPIGHI.

Performed with the Greatest Success by the RUSSIAN BALLET at the Alhambra and Empire Theatres.

Price 10s. net cash.

J. & W. CHESTER, 11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH ST., LONDON, W. 1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MR. DONALD REID (ALTO).

(St. Paul's Cathedral.) Special Services, Oratorio, Organ Recitals, &c.
Also free for Sunday Evening engagements. 64, Burlington Avenue,
Kew Gardens, S.W.; or St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.

J. J. MALTBY (TENOR).

(Late of Chester Cathedral)
Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin.

Open for Oratorios, Ballads, &c. For terms, apply as above.

CHARLES T. BATCHELOR (BARITONE).

Oratorio, Recitals, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
10, Roche Road, Norbury, S.W. 16.

LAURENCE HALBERT (BARITONE).

Ballad Concerts, Receptions, &c.
138, Hither Green Lane, Lewisham, S.E. 13.

MR. ERNEST A. FLAMBE (BASS).

Oratorio, Concerts, Receptions, &c.
Address, 67, Ashbourne Avenue, Mitcham, Surrey.

TENOR VOCALIST.

Concerts, Oratorio, &c. Moderate fees.
"A. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

ARCHIBALD CURTIS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

(Teaching Singing.) Professor of Singing and Voice-Production.
Special Postal Course for Teachers' Diplomas.
20B, North End Rd., Golder's Green, N.W. 4; and 14, Hanover St., W. 1.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS

(TENOR)

Address—164, Bank Buildings, Ewell Road, Surbiton.

ERNEST MAYHEW

(TENOR).

57, Sydenham Road, S.E. 26. 'Phone: Sydenham 841.

MR. WILLIAM SHEEN

(TENOR).

Oratorio, Concerts, &c.
62, Grosvenor Road, Ilford.

HERBERT TRACEY

(BASS-BARITONE).

Address (temporary): 5, Clarence Place, Clapton Square, N.E.

MR. AMBROSE COVIELLO

Associate and Professor of the Royal Academy of Music, is now
demobilised, and arranging times for Private Tuition in Pianoforte
Playing and Teaching, at his studio, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore
Street, W. 1.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

GRADED POSTAL COURSES:—

- | | |
|---------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| (1) L.R.A.M. Course. | (3) A. and F.R.C.O. Courses. |
| (2) A.R.C.M. Course. | (4) Mus. B. and Mus. D. Courses. |
| (5) General Musical Knowledge Course. | |

"Short Revision Courses" also, for each Diploma.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSSES.

For Prospectus, Address, 48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

MUS. BAC. DEGREE.

COMPLETE POSTAL PREPARATION.

Latest Successes: 4 First Mus. Bac.

4 Final Mus. Bac. 2 Final Mus. Doc.

THESE STUDENTS PASSED AT FIRST ATTEMPT.

DR. N. SPRANKLING, Mus. Doc. (Lond.),
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

THEORY DIPLOMAS

The following can be obtained in

THEORY OF MUSIC
(without Playing Tests):

A.R.C.M. (Theory of Music),
A. and L. Mus. T.C.L.
Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.

Candidates can therefore receive

FULL PREPARATION BY CORRESPONDENCE
(Graded Courses for each Diploma).

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.); L.R.A.M.,
48, Linden Road, Redland, Bristol.

DO YOU CAROL?

IF NOT, WHY NOT?

Write for particulars to

SECRETARY, NATIONAL CAROL LEAGUE,
224, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-FOUR YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING.

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W. 2.

*. The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly
permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates
who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS.D. and MUS.B.
at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities,
Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M., A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916),
and L.R.A.M. Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the College of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post,
to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

DR. CROSSLEY.—SINGING, PIANO, COM-

POSITION. Special coach for Degrees, &c. Lessons at Forsyth Bros., Deansgate, Manchester; also by Correspondence.
Terms, &c. Radcliffe, Manchester.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-19 .. 144 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-19 .. 33 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

(formerly Mangelsdorff) of the British Expeditionary Force,
France. Pianist and Teacher of Pianoforte, Cole Bank School of Music, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS in MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c.,
apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W. 11

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 389 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and
A.R.C.O., &c. 3, De Burgh Park, Banstead, Surrey. 'Phone, Burgh
Heath, 345.

DR. HARRIS REVISES AND PREPARES MSS.

FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written and Works Scored for Orchestra. Address as above.

ENGAGEMENTS ACCEPTED AND POSTAL

LESSONS given by Mr. C. T. HEAVISIDE, SOLO PIANIST, Cellist, &c., 27, Torwood Street Torquay.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Professor of

Singing, R. A. Music. Private Pupils received at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W. 1.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.

Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.

Address, 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W. 3

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for

L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes,
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd. West Kensington.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W. 1.

DR. LEWIS, Mus. Doc., F.E.I.S., Warden, Incorporated Guild of Church Musicians, gives LESSONS, Personally or by Post, in HARMONY and COUNTERPOINT. 158, Holland Park Avenue, Kensington, W.-11.

DR. LEWIS' TEXT-BOOKS:

HARMONY. (2 vols.) 5s. each, net.
COUNTERPOINT. 5s. net.
DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT AND CANON. 5s. net.
FUGUE. 1s. 6d. net.
ELEMENTS OF MUSIC. 2s. 6d. net.
DEVELOPMENT OF ANGLICAN CHURCH MUSIC. 2s. net.
PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS. 6d. net.
MATERIAL OF MELODY. 3d. net.
IMPROVISATION. 1s. 6d. net.

The above, complete, will be forwarded (carriage paid) or £1 5s.

HARMONY, ORCHESTRATION.—Postal Lessons a speciality for 14 years. Professor, London College, has SIX VACANCIES, ladies or gentlemen. 30s. per Course. "S." West Lodge, Whittingham, near Preston.

L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.—TEACHING SINGING
 L. Exams. Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation. Pupil writes: "Your Course is excellent, and my singing work has greatly improved, thanks to your tuition.—A.F." Mr. W. Lee Webster, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. (Teaching Singing), 22, Lucknow Avenue, Nottingham.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.

RECENT SUCCESSES:

2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
 (Pianoforte Teacher), A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte and Vocal Teacher). Correspondence Lessons, Theory, Harmony, Form, Art of Teaching. Successes at R.A.M. and T.C.L. Metropolitan Examinations. Compiler, Musical Terms (English first), Novello, 4d. Bawburgh Vicarage, Norwich.

L.R.A.M. CANDIDATES, Vocal and Instrumental,
 ARE OFFERED FINAL REHEARSALS with first-class Accompanist, who would accompany at Exams. if desired. Moderate terms. Central Studio, Wrie, Miss G. Underwood, L.R.A.M., 30, Bernard Street, Russell Square, W.C. 1.

WELLS CATHEDRAL.—SOLO BOY WANTED immediately. Age 11 or 12. Board, lodging, and education free. Apply, Rev. Dr. Davis, The Liberty, Wells, Somerset.

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.

ALTO LAY-CLERK REQUIRED. Candidates should be under 30 and Commun cants. Good Reader essential. Duties at present, Evensong five days in the week, and the usual Sunday Services. Salary, £70. Applications, with testimonials (copies), should be sent not later than December 15, to Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, Palace Yard, Gloucester.

ALTO WANTED, for All Saints', Margaret Street.
 Good Reader. Apply, by letter, Precentor, 84, Margaret Street, W. 1.

THERE ARE VACANCIES in the CHOIR of ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL for TENOR and BASS SINGERS. The age limit of 30 might be extended to suitable candidates. The terms offered are more advantageous than hitherto. Intending competitors should apply for all particulars to The Rev. The Succentor, St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C. 4.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—WANTED, TENOR.
 £110, with additional £50 if qualified as Assistant-Teacher in Choir School. Apply, with references and testimonials, Precentor, Ely Cathedral.

RIPON CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There are VACANCIES for TENOR AND BASS LAY-CLERKS. Salary, £100 per ann. Candidates must be Communicant members of the Church of England. Good Sight-reading essential. Applications, with copies of three recent testimonials, to be sent to The Precentor, The Rev. R. Macpherson, The Cathedral, Ripon, on or before 15th inst.

TENOR WANTED, at Church in W.C. district.
 £10. Moderate music. Write, R. W. Ready, "Valmar," Crichton Road, Carshalton.

TENOR LEADER AND SOLOIST WANTED, for important Nonconformist Choir in North London. Must be experienced and good Reader. £25. Apply to Colin Baker, 26, Cecile Park, N. 8.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.—There is a VACANCY in the CHOIR for a BASS CHORAL SCHOLAR. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year, with certain allowances. The Competition will be held on Thursday, December 18. Applications to be sent in not later than December 11. For further information apply to The Dean, King's College, Cambridge.

TENOR AND ALTO REQUIRED, for St. Philip's,
 Kennington. £12. Light duties. Write, Organist, 7, Martindale Road, Balham, S.W. 12.

BASSO (not Baritone) WANTED, for a Blackheath Church. Good Reader, with experience of Church music essential. £20. Apply, "F. L. C.", 41, Farnley Road, South Norwood.

WANTED.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, for Parish Church of Llangollen. Salary, £60. Apply, Vicar.

ALL HALLOWS', Tottenham Parish Church.—
 ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER. Churchman. Salary, £70. Personal references. Apply, by letter, to Mr. Arthur Richards, 127, Northumberland Park, Tottenham, N. 17.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED.—
 Wesleyan Church, Nunhead. Apply, stating qualifications, experience, salary required, Paynter, 85, St. Asaph Rd., Brockley, S.E. 4.

LADY SEEKS POST as ORGANIST, in or around
 London. Pupil of eminent London Organist. Ten years' experience in Choir-Training and Conducting. Good Accompanist. Apply, "Dulciana," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

AN HON. FELLOW of the Royal Philharmonic
 Society, of long experience as Church Organist and Choir-Trainer (also as an executant in Organ Recitals), wishes for an APPOINTMENT in A TOWN CHURCH, in any position readily accessible by the District Railway system, where it is desired to have a high-class Musical Service. A good organ indispensable. Address, "Diapason," c/o Frost's, 62, High Street, Wimbledon.

ACCOMPANIST (YOUTH) REQUIRED by Singing-master. Eastern County. Excellent Sight-reading important. 30s. weekly. References, experience, &c., to "H. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

PIANIST (Young Lady) requires Engagement as ACCOMPANIST to Soloist or Orchestra. Bronze Medallist, L.A.M. Elsie Lewis, 23, Kilmore Road, Forest Hill, S.E. 23.

STANDARDISED ORGANS (Pipe).—TWO-
 MANUALS and Pedals, as built to order, by Richardson's, specially to meet the requirements of the times. 100 to 500 guineas; in nine sizes. Entirely new introduction. These Organs are voiced and toned and adapted according to size, &c., of Church. Specifications and Estimates, W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—
 Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

ORGANS AND PIANO.—FOR SALE, TWO
 ORGANS. One- and Two-Manual; full compass; modern instruments. Also HORIZONTAL GRAND PIANO, in Inlaid Buhl-work Case. Henry Speechly & Sons, Organ Works, St. Mark's Road, Dalston, E. 8.

FOR SALE.—CHAMBER ORGAN (St. Cecilia).
 Giant Gilt Pipes; perfect condition. 8 feet by 5 feet. Sweet-toned; One-Manual. Suitable small Church or Hall. £48. "Pengree," 9, Daniel Street, Bath.

AMERICAN ORGAN WANTED.—Two Manuals
 and Pedals preferred. Lowest cash price to M. T. Moore, 54, City Road, London, E.C. 1.

FOR SALE.—COMPLETE BLOWING APPARATUS, sufficient for large 4-Manual Organ, comprising Bellows, Pulley, Shafting, Cranks, &c., together with 2-h.p. "CROSSLEY" GAS ENGINE, No. 24,750, Tube Ignition, complete with Tank, Pulley, Silencer, Gas Bag, and all Pipes and Fittings. Requires to be overhauled. Can be disposed of separately or together. Offers and inquiries to Mr. A. Heath, Organist, St. Margaret's Parish Church, King's Lynn, Norfolk.

WANTED.—Compact, good, 8-Octave PIANO, in exchange for perfect high-grade Player-Piano, 65-Note. Sell, £95. Offers to Box, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

WANTED.—SECOND-HAND SEMI-GRAND
 BLÜTHNER PIANO. Must be in good condition. Particulars to "H.," 1, Victoria Street, S.W. 1.

VIOLIN, by ANDREAS GUARNERIUS.—Magnificent specimen; glorious tone; labelled. In private hands for past 40 years. Hill's guarantee. J. E. Lacy, Baden House, Felixstowe.

VIOLONCELLO.—Old English; good condition.
 "V," 829, c/o Deacons, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3.

HARP (SEBASTIAN ERARD) FOR SALE.—Suitable for Orchestra. £40. Apply, Mrs. Allan Herbert, Old Bank House, Andover.

FOR SALE.—Second-hand Music, for Violin, Piano, and other Instruments. Also Songs, Oratorios, Cantatas, and Part-Songs. Catalogue on application to Miss Collins, West Hill, Rochdale.

WANTED TO PURCHASE.—SCHOOL OF
 MUSIC; or would BUY SHARE. London or easy radius. Send full particulars, in confidence, to "L. R. A. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W. 1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE

PRINCIPAL—

MR. ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

—GUARANTEE COURSES—

Tuition until Successful - - For ONE FEE—

MUS. BAC.

Durham, London, Dublin. Guarantee Course for the full Degree, including Matric.

A.R.C.O.

Guarantee Course for each Diploma.

F.R.C.O.

Guarantee Course to cover both Diplomas.

A. MUS. T.C.L.

L. MUS. T.C.L.

G. C. as for A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O.

A.R.C.M.

L.R.A.M.

SINGLE SUBJECTS.

Harmony: Counterpoint: Composition: Art of Teaching: Memory Training.

The Modern Corr. College provides Guarantee Courses for the following:—

Oxford and C. Locals.

B.A. Certificates.

College of Preceptors.

B.Sc. Froebel.

A.C.P., L.C.P.

L.L.A. Responsions.

Previous.

AVOID RISKS

BY TAKING UP COURSES THAT HAVE CONVERTED

FAILURES INTO SUCCESSES.

“ST. MORITZ,” Ilkeston Road, NOTTINGHAM.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

(INSTITUTED 1872.)

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

December 1st and 15th, at 3 p.m.—MR. T. F. DUNHILL delivers two lectures on British Chamber Music with illustrations.

December 3rd, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

December 6th—Last day of entry for the January Diploma Examinations, also for the next open competition for Scholarships (see below).

December 10th, at 3 p.m.—Recital by DR. C. W. PEARCE and Mr. PRCSKAI of Sonatas by Bach, for Clavier and Violin.

December 11th, at 3 p.m.—Elocution, Chamber Music and Choir Concert at Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour Street, W.

December 17th, at 3 p.m.—Special Students' Recital.

December 20th, at 3 p.m.—Orchestral Concert at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, W.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are Thirty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music of the London University.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

EDWARD MACDOWELL Celebrated Studies

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

Op. 39.

In Two Books, price, each, 3s. 6d. net; or each Study may be had separately.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.

1. Hunting Song
2. Alla Tarantella
3. Romance
4. Arabesque
5. In the Forest
6. Dance of the Gnomes

BOOK II.

7. Idyll
8. Shadow Dance
9. Intermezzo
10. Melody
11. Scherzino
12. Hungarian

While each of these Studies has a definite educational aim, they contain some of MACDOWELL'S most melodious work. Acquaintance with them will give as much pleasure from a recreational point of view as it will advantage to technical requirements.

Complete List, post-free, on application.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, W. 1.

And of all Music-sellers.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE—

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. 9d.

1. Ring Out.
2. A Babe ys Born.
3. Welcome Yule.
4. Christmas Day.
5. When Christ was born.
6. Yonder in Bethlehem.

Separately, 3d. each.

THOMAS ADAMS—

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. 9d.

1. 'Tis at Christmas.
2. No more Sadness.
3. Into this World.
4. Born is the Babe.
5. Christmas Bells.
6. How bright was the Glory.

Separately, 3d. each.

THE BOSWORTH CAROL ALBUM

1s. 6d. net.

"Many Old and New Friends."

A wonderful collection. 25 Carols. 48 pages.

JUDE—

SIX ORIGINAL CAROLS. 9d.

BRIDGE—

BIRTHDAY BOOK. 5s.

(Shakespeare and Music.)

Now again in print. A very suitable Christmas Present.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

PARSIFAL

A SACRED FESTIVAL DRAMA

IN THREE ACTS

BY

RICHARD WAGNER

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

BY

CLAUDE AVELING.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1, 1919.

TO OUR READERS.

The last number of a Volume is a suitable place for a few words about our future plans. The revival of musical activities and the widening of interests calls for some development on the part of the musical press, and we hope the following details of our prospective arrangements will show that we are at least alive to the needs of the hour, even if we do not succeed in fully meeting them.

First, we are glad to be able to say that the January number will find the Musical Times at its pre-war size—fifty pages of reading matter and music.

The new volume will, we trust, do something towards bringing about increased public appreciation of the work of living composers, especially those of our own country. Mr. Edwin Evans's articles on 'Modern British Composers' have done good work in this direction, and we are glad to be able to say that there are still more to come.

The chief London concerts of the month will be dealt with by Mr. Alfred Kalisch, and Mr. Francis E. Barrett will write on 'Opera in London.'

Owing to the success of the Russian Ballet, there is likely to be increased interest in choreography and its music. Mr. Edwin Evans will keep our readers fully informed on this subject.

Mr. William McNaught will contribute 'Choral Notes and News,' Mr. William Child will review new music, and in 'The Musicians' Bookshelf' 'Feste' will deal regularly with the latest volumes of interest to musicians.

Church and Organ Music will continue to receive a liberal amount of space, special consideration being given to the needs of the Parish Church. The Editor will contribute a series of articles on Bach's organ works, dealing with the subject from the point of view of the modern player.

As the Competitive Festival Movement will soon be once more in full swing, we shall resume the practice of including as a Supplement the Competition Festival Record.

News from the various parts of England has always been an important feature of the Musical Times. We feel that with the opening up of new musical centres the time is ripe for an increase in this department.

In addition to these regular features, we hope to maintain the journal's reputation for articles of general interest.

A good many readers have lately complained of the difficulty of obtaining copies. We take this opportunity of reminding them of the advantages of becoming subscribers, referring them for particulars to our advertisement on page 714.

MODERN BRITISH COMPOSERS.

By EDWIN EVANS.

(Continued from November number, page 592.)

VI.—GUSTAV HOLST (concluded).

This Sanskrit period came to a head in 'The Cloud Messenger,' an ode for chorus and orchestra founded upon a poem of Kalidasa. Although dated 1910, this work occupied the composer for several years, and is the fruit of much thought. The adaptation of the text is his own, but he acknowledges indebtedness to that of Mr. R. W. Frazer, which is contained in the latter's book 'Silent Gods and Sun-Steeped Lands.' This impressive work is one of the landmarks of Holst's development as a composer. In its pages will be found in full deployment many traits of which indications are scattered throughout his earlier compositions. Did space allow, it would not be difficult to illustrate an essay on his style with quotations from this score alone. His melodic invention, his fondness for strongly accented rhythms, and all the characteristic features of his choral writing are shown here, side by side with his penetration of the poetical subject. It is not without significance that with 'The Cloud Messenger' he has taken a farewell of his Sanskrit studies, for one feels that he has expressed his point of view so fully that there can be little to be added to what he has stated here. The following example comprises the opening bars:

'THE CLOUD MESSENGER.'

Ex. 3. Adagio.

It must not be supposed that during the five years which were occupied with these studies Mr. Holst neglected other forms of music. Still less should one picture him as steeped in an artificial Orientalism. There is in fact as little of the real Oriental atmosphere in his Vedic settings as there is in the hymns themselves, which are eminently Aryan. For genuine Eastern colouring one must turn to another work of the same period, the Oriental Suite in E minor entitled 'Beni Mora,' which is founded on reminiscences of Arab tunes heard during a holiday in Algeria. It comprises two contrasted dances, and an extended Finale, 'In the Street of the Ouled Nails,' from which the following is a characteristic quotation :

'BENI-MORA.'

The musical score for 'BENI-MORA' is presented in three systems. The first system includes parts for Oboe (Ob.), Flute (Fl.), and Violoncello (Celli.). The second system includes parts for Flute (Fl.) and Cor Anglais (Cor. Ingl.). The third system includes parts for Flute (Fl.) and Violoncello (Celli.). The music is written in 4/4 time and features a variety of melodic and rhythmic patterns, including a prominent flute melody in the first system and a more complex, syncopated melody in the second system.

In a programme note the composer asks the listener to 'imagine himself in the dry, still air of the desert at night. As he approaches the oasis he hears a flute in the distance, and sees the dim outlines of a white-robed Arab procession wending its way from street to street. Above this flute melody are heard fragments of tunes answering one another. All grows more definite until he reaches the "Rue des Ouled Nails," and pausing at different entrances he hears one dance after another, each in a different key and rhythm, amidst which the procession-music remains unaltered.'

Apart from the fact that I, too, have learned to love the music of the Arabs, 'Beni Mora' has a personal interest for me inasmuch as the frequently recurring double chord :

originated as a musical dedication. There are several ways of representing the East in terms of music. First, there is the alleged authentic method, which consists in using genuine Oriental material. As the latter loses most of its peculiar twang by transposition into the tempered scale the authenticity is usually a polite fiction. Then there is the conventional manner, in which stale theatrical devices mingle with reminiscences of exhibition side-shows to produce what the man in the street, who has never been east of Tilbury, imagines to be Eastern 'atmosphere.' Thirdly, there is the method which I would describe as objective impressionism, analogous to that by which Debussy evokes a vision of Spain in his 'Iberia.' In its general features 'Beni Mora' comes under this heading, but the complete divergence of the respective temperaments, and the employment of definite reminiscences instead of vague distillations of them, produce a result which is several degrees nearer to realism without however approaching dangerously near to that shoal on which so many musical ideas have foundered. Apart from all æsthetic classification, 'Beni Mora' gives a vivid picture of the East, and one which stimulates the listener's imagination with a force to which no conventional Eastern music can attain. To the same date approximately belongs another orchestral work, the Suite in F major entitled 'Phantastes,' and comprising four movements—Prelude, March, 'Sleep,' and Dance, of which the first is the most successful. The music is closely associated with the spirit of Lewis Carroll.

The first important works which followed upon the Sanskrit period were choral. One is a setting of 'Hecuba's Lament' from 'The Trojan Women,' for contralto solo, female chorus, and orchestra, and the other is the 'Hymn to Dionysus' from the 'Bacchæ.' The latter is published, and in perusing it one realises, first, how much the composer profited by the experience gained in setting exotic texts, and, second, how little there was of exoticism in those settings, for the method is similar, except that it has perhaps gained in fluency and consequently in effectiveness. In all these works, whether Indian or Hellenic, the basic idea maintains its supremacy, and such local colour as may be used is incidental and subordinate. In the treatment of the 'Hymn to Dionysus' there is little that is Greek from a purely musical point of view, but the feeling that animates the music is not far removed from the Greek attitude. The inspired frenzy of the Bacchæ was purely religious, and completely devoid of the licentious element with which it became infected in the days of the Greek decadence. A certain ruggedness of harmonic colour is demanded by the subject. A frenzied exaltation cannot be expressed in neutral tints, even when it has a religious character, or perhaps then least of all. On the other hand, realistic harshness would be a palpable intrusion. To hold the balance is here the composer's problem, and with his copious experience behind him Mr. Holst was well equipped for its solution.

The present stage of his evolution is represented by two works of outstanding significance, one orchestral and one choral. The former has only once been performed in its entirety, at a private function on the eve of the composer's departure for Salonika; but five of its seven movements have been given by the Royal Philharmonic Society, and three of them are included in the scheme of the Queen's Hall Symphony Concert of November 22. This monumental suite, 'The Planets,' is to be judged solely as music. Like the theosophy of some of Scriabin's later works, Holst's astrology, whilst supplying a poetic basis, does not need to be accepted by the listener for him to appreciate the musical inspiration derived from it. I have long been of the opinion that the elaborate programme of 'Prometheus' is an obstacle to its appreciation as music. 'The Planets' is in no such danger, because the programme, instead of being elaborate, is extremely simple. The generally accepted astrological associations of the various planets are a sufficient clue in themselves to the imagination. One may be sceptical concerning horoscopes, but one will nevertheless be carried away with the aggressive rhythm of 'Mars,' the 'Bringer of War,' and any schoolboy pictures 'Mercury' as the 'Winged Messenger.' The very word joviality connotes 'Jupiter,' and the sand-glass and scythe connect 'Saturn' with old age. It may be new to some to regard 'Venus' as the 'Bringer of Peace'—as she is, astrologically speaking—for many hold her responsible for strife in worldly affairs. It is also unfamiliar to hail 'Neptune,' the sea god, as a mystic, and 'Uranus' as a magician; but once these relations are established in the titles of the movements, it is easy to fall into the mood of the respective tone-poems. That is, in fact, the way to describe this work. It has outrun the dimensions of a suite, and become a cycle of seven tone-poems.

Each has its own qualities, and preferences will depend upon the individual. Perhaps 'Mars' is the most vivid, and 'Neptune' the most imaginative; but among those which appeal most readily to the listener are 'Mercury' and 'Saturn,' from which the following examples are taken:

'MERCURY.'

'SATURN.'

Of the work as a whole, it is difficult to speak in measured terms whilst still under the spell of the impression of its first hearing. It is certainly one of the most ambitious achievements in modern British music, and it has had the effect of placing its composer, in the estimation of the musical world, on a level which only a limited circle considered to be within his reach formerly. It is possible that greater familiarity may moderate, as it so often does, our first inclination to indulge in superlatives, but allowing for the laws of perspective, these seven symphonic poems seem destined to maintain their hold on our admiration for some time to come.

The other work is the 'Hymn of Jesus,' set for two choruses, semi-chorus, orchestra, pianoforte, and organ, of which a performance is promised us by the Royal Philharmonic Society in association with the newly-formed Philharmonic Choir. The text is adapted from the Acts of the Apostles, and the composer has brought to bear upon it all the experience gained in recent years.

Of other recent works should be mentioned the 'Japanese Suite,' which was originally planned for the dances of Michio Ito at the Coliseum, but has now taken its place in the repertoire; the songs for voice and violin, from which quotations were given in the portion of this article which appeared last month; and a number of choral settings of folk-songs. In these, Mr. Holst has been remarkably successful, and despite their unpretentious scope, many of his admirers rank them with his most characteristic work. I have had occasion to bring these part-songs, and also those of Mr. W. G. Whittaker, under the notice of Continental musicians, who have invariably greeted in them the expression of the true folk instinct. In fact, only the difficulty of providing a text reflecting the spirit of the original has stood in the way of their performance in many foreign musical centres.

Mr. Holst has now arrived at a very interesting stage of his development, and one which is destined to exercise the skill of the musical prophets. Will he join the ranks of the symphonists, as 'The Planets' would seem to suggest (not astrologically), and thus take his place in the present trend of European music, or will he turn more and more to the composition of those massive choral works which have always been a characteristic feature of the English province? There is no reason why he should not fulfil both predictions, except that experience shows that one tends to react upon the other to its detriment. However, these are speculations which may be left to the future. For the present, it is sufficient to place on record the degree of eminence to which he has reached in both spheres.

LIST OF WORKS.

- 1895—Op. 1, 'The Revoke,' opera (one Act).*†
 1896—Op. 2, Fantasiestücke, for oboe and strings.*†
 Op. 3, Quintet, for pianoforte and wind.*†
 Op. 4, Four Songs:
 'Margaret's slumber song,' (Laudy & Co.).
 'Soft, soft wind' (Laudy & Co.).
 'Soft and gently' *
 'Awake, my heart' (Schmidt, Boston, U.S.A.).
 1897—Op. 5, 'Clear and cool,' five-part chorus and orchestra.*†
 1898—Op. 6, 'Ornulf's Drapa,' scena for baritone and orchestra.*†
 1899—Op. 7, 'Walt Whitman' Overture.*†
 1900—Five part-songs:
 'Sylvia' (Novello).
 'Love is enough' (Novello).
 'Autumn.'
 'Come away, death.'
 'Love song' (Laudy).
 'Ave Maria,' eight parts, female voices (Laudy).
 Op. 10, Suite in E flat (Patron's Fund), called 'Ballet suite' (Novello).
 Op. 8, 'Cotswolds,' Symphony* (performed at Bournemouth, 1902).
 1902—Op. 11, 'The Youth's Choice,' opera.*†
 Op. 12, Part-songs:
 'Dream Tryst' (Novello).
 'Ye little birds' (Novello).
 'Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee.'
 'Now is the month.'
 1903—Op. 13, 'Indra,' Symphonic Poem.*†
 Op. 14, Quintet for wind.*†
 1902—Op. 15, Six baritone songs:
 'Invocation to Dawn.'
 'Fain would I.'
 'Sergeant's song.'
 'In a wood.'
 'Between us now.'
 'I will not let thee go.'
 Op. 16, Six soprano songs:
 'Calm is the morn.'
 'My true love.'
 'Weep no more' (Stainer & Bell).
 'Lovely, kind.'
 'Cradle song.'
 'Peace.'
 1903—Op. 17, 'King Estmere,' ballad for chorus and orchestra (Novello).
 1904—Op. 18, 'The Mystic Trumpeter,' soprano solo and orchestra (Patron's Fund).*
 1905—Op. 19, No. 1, 'Song of the night,' violin and orchestra.*†
 1911—Op. 19 No. 2, 'Invocation,' cello and orchestra (May Mukle, Queen's Hall, 1911).*
 Op. 20, (a) Songs from 'The Princess,' for female voices (Novello).
 (b) Four Carols for mixed voices (Bayley & Ferguson).
 1906—Op. 22, Songs without Words: 'Marching Song,' 'Country Song,' for small orchestra (Novello).
 Op. 23, 'Sita,' opera in three Acts.*†
- 1907—Op. 24, 'Hymns from the Rig-Veda,' for solo voice:
 'Dawn,' 'Varuna,' 'Creation,' 'Indra,' 'Maruts,' 'Frogs,' 'Faith,' 'Vac,' 'Varuna' (ii) (Chester).
 'The Heart Worships,' soprano song (Stainer & Bell).
 Op. 21, (a) 'Songs of the West,' orchestra (Selection of West Country Songs).*
 (b) 'Somerset Rhapsody,' orchestra (produced by Edward Mason).*
 1908—Op. 25, 'Savitr,' opera di camera (produced 1916).*
 Op. 26, 'Choral Hymns from the Rig-Veda' (Stainer & Bell):
 1908—Group 1, Mixed chorus and orchestra.
 1909—Group 2, Female voices and orchestra.
 1910—Group 3, Female voices and harp.
 1912—Group 4, Male voices and orchestra.
 (Produced in London by Edward Mason)
 1909—Op. 27, (a) Incidental Music to 'A Vision of Dame Christian' (a Masque at St. Paul's Girls' School).*
 (b) Incidental Music to Stepney Pageant (for children).*
 Op. 28, (a) First Suite for Military Band.*
 1911—Op. 28, (b) Second Suite for Military Band.*†
 1910—Op. 29, No. 1, Oriental Suite in E minor for orchestra, 'Beni Mora' (produced at Balfour Gardiner concerts).*
 1911—Op. 29, No. 2, Fantastic Suite for orchestra, 'Phantastes' (produced at Patron's Fund concert).*
 1910—Op. 30, 'The Cloud Messenger,' Ode for chorus and orchestra (produced at Balfour Gardiner's concerts) (Stainer & Bell).
 'Christmas Day,' chorus and orchestra (Novello).
 Four Whittier Songs, 'Part-Songs for Children' (Novello).
 1911—Two Eastern Pictures, part-songs for female voices and harp (Stainer & Bell).
 Op. 31, No. 1, 'Hecuba's lament,' from 'The Trojan women,' for alto solo, female chorus, and orchestra.*†
 1913—Op. 31, No. 2, 'Hymn to Dionysus,' for chorus and orchestra (produced at Balfour Gardiner concerts) (Stainer & Bell).
 1912—Two Psalms for chorus, strings, and organ (Augener).†
 1913—Suite in C, for string orchestra *†
 1914—Dirge for Two Veterans, part-song for male voices and brass (Curwen).
 1915 Op. 32, 'Mars' } 'The Planets,' Suite for large 'Venus' } orchestra (produced at 1916— 'Mercury' } Royal Philharmonic Con-
 'Jupiter' } cert, 1919, with the excep-
 'Saturn' } tion of 'Venus' and 'Uranus' } Neptune').*
 'Neptune' }
 1916—Op. 33, Japanese Suite for orchestra (produced a Coliseum, 1916, and Queen's Hall Promenades, 1919).*
 1916—Op. 34, Part-songs for mixed voices:
 'To-morrow shall be my dancing day' (Augener).
 'Bring us in good ale' (Curwen).
 'Terly Terlow' (Stainer & Bell).
 'Lullay' (Curwen).
 Op. 35, Four songs for voice and violin:
 'Jesu Sweet.'
 'I sing of a maid.'
 'My soul has nought.'
 'My leman is so true of love.' } (Chester.)
 Choruses from 'Alcestis,' for female voices, harp, and flutes.*†
 Op. 36, Three hymns for chorus and orchestra (Stainer & Bell):
 'Let all mortal flesh keep silence.'
 'Turn back, O man.'
 'A festival chime.'
 Op. 36, Six Choral Folk-Songs (Curwen):
 'The seeds of love.' 'Matthew, Mark.'
 'The blacksmith.' 'Swansea Town.'
 'I love my Love.' 'There was a Tree.'

- 1917—Op. 37. The 'Hymn of Jesus,' for two choruses and semi-chorus, orchestra, pianoforte, and organ (Stainer & Bell, for the Carnegie Trust).
 1917—Op. 37. Part-songs for children :
 'The corn song' (Arnold).
 'Song of the lumbermen' (Arnold).
 'A dream of Christmas' (Curwen).
 1918—Ballet for orchestra to opera, 'The Perfect Fool.*†
 1919—Ode to Death, chorus and orchestra (words by Walt Whitman). *†

A SLOVAK MUSIC-DRAMA.

BY ROSA NEWMARCH.

In an earlier article on Czechoslovak music contributed to this journal I drew a distinction between the popular melody of western Bohemia, which has passed under foreign influences and become more regular in its rhythms and more ordinary in its tonal system, and the folk-music of Moravia and Slovakia, which still retains its relations with the old Church modes, and shows structural peculiarities and a rhythmic pliancy not to be found in the Czech songs. Not in music alone have the peasantry of these eastern provinces preserved their old-world characteristics. Their picturesque customs, their beautiful dresses, their sense of form and colour displayed in their embroideries, pottery, and peasant arts in general, vie with their songs and dances in giving expression to a strongly-marked racial temperament. It is not surprising that the national movement of the last few decades should have taken special cognisance of these districts, which have remained the sealed treasury of ancient customs and sentiments. The mountaineers (the Vallachians) are a tragic and struggling folk, but the Moravian-Slovaks, besides being æsthetically gifted, are a handsome race; hospitable, warm-hearted, passionate-tempered; fond of good wine and good horses; ardently addicted to singing, dancing, and festivity.

Some years ago a little colony of artists settled at Hodonin, not far from the Hungarian frontier. The leader of this group of painters, Joseph Uprka, has reflected in his brilliant pictures the glowing colour and energetic movement of the Slovak peasantry at work and at play. Happily—as I think—no school of music has, so far, made a similar conscious effort to exploit the local colour of Slovakia, but a good many composers have introduced touches of it into their works, while others have made complex artistic settings of some of the folk-songs in order to supply the demands of such highly organized choirs as the Society of Moravian Teachers, and others.

It was not, however, until the spring of 1916 that Leos Janacek made a more ambitious effort to interpret the soul of his race in music. An opera dealing in a realistic way with peasant life in Moravia, 'Jeji Pastorkyna' (Her Foster-daughter), although produced at the National Theatre, Prague, under war-time conditions, and at a moment of great political tension, became instantly the topic of the hour. Janacek was unknown as a composer of dramatic music, but it was no secret that he had dwelt among the folk whose life he illustrated in his opera, and that he was intimately acquainted with their psychology, their music, and the accent and cadence of their speech. Of his success in reproducing these peculiarities in his vocal phrases I am no judge, but Slovaks have told me that with their eyes blinded they would instantly recognise the protagonists of 'Jeji Pastorkyna' as Moravian peasants.

I imagine that the first plan of the opera if it had been strictly adhered to might have proved a dramatic failure. Janacek endeavoured to pack into it the sum-total of his knowledge of the people. The result would have been an over-filled canvas—confusing in its wealth of detail, somewhat sordid in its realism. Fortunately for this work of genius in the rough, experienced advice effected a judicious selection and polishing of material, while the same experience showed how the orchestration might be artistically treated without losing its individual character. In a word, Janacek found a Kovarovic, as Moussorgsky found a Rimsky-Korsakov.

Because in a naturalistic opera dealing with everyday life, in which no atmosphere of romantic glamour or historic pageantry diverts us from the value of the plot and its literary treatment, the book is of equal importance with the music which clothes it, I make no apology for dealing with the libretto of Janacek's work in a detailed fashion. The author, Gabriella Preiss, is a woman; but her text is a strong and virile achievement. The full title of the opera is 'Jenufa: her foster-daughter; an opera from Moravian peasant-life, in three Acts.' The characters are:

Old Grannie Buryja	...	...	Contralto
Laca Klemen	{ stepbrothers,	...	Tenor
Steva Buryja	{ her grandsons }	...	Tenor
Widow Buryja	(daughter - in - law of
Grannie Buryja,	a sacristan's widow)		Soprano
Jenufa (her foster daughter)	...	...	Soprano
An old villager	...	...	Baritone
The Mayor	...	...	Bass
The Mayor's wife	...	...	Mezzo-Soprano
Karolka (their daughter)	...	...	Mezzo-Soprano
A maid	...	...	Mezzo-Soprano
Barena (the servant at the mill)	...	...	Soprano
Jano (a shepherd boy)	...	...	Soprano
Auntie	...	...	Contralto

Act 1 takes place on an autumn afternoon in front of a lonely mill in the mountains. Grannie Buryja, in the foreground, is busy with a big basket of potatoes. In the background Jenufa is standing beside the mill-stream watering a pot of drooping rosemary. Presently she sets this down and, shading her eyes with her hand, gazes long into the distance. On a fallen tree trunk on the left, sits black-haired Laca, whittling and peeling a switch. We soon see very clearly what is going on in the minds of this trio. Jenufa, standing apart from the others, sings a soliloquy which reveals at once the germ of the tragedy about to be developed. 'Evening is here,' she sings, 'and Steva has not returned. What if he is taken as a recruit? What if there is no wedding, and I am brought to shame?' And her song has a recurrent phrase, passionate and despairing: 'O, Mary, our Lady, come to my rescue!' Grannie Buryja calls Jenufa to come and help her, reproaching her for leaving her to look over the potatoes with her old, dim eyes. Laca breaks in bitterly: 'True Grannie, your eyes are too old to see everything. They cannot see the faults of Steva. But I can see clearly that I am not of your blood. All my life you have made me feel the difference.' Jenufa fires up in defence of Steva, but her anger soon subsides. She shows her plant to Grannie: 'Alas! my rosemary is dying, and they say when rosemary dies, happiness withers away.' When Laca and Jenufa are left alone for a few minutes, he makes some advances to her. She repulses him indignantly, and takes up her work on the potatoes. Laca, sore and miserable, goes back to his seat and his switch. Enters the Old Villager. He sharpens Laca's knife for him, and while they chat together, the dark and saturnine young man reveals more of his jealousy and hopeless passion for Jenufa. It is he who has killed the rosemary—Steva's gift. News of Steva's home-coming is brought in. He has managed to get off from military service. Already the village band is heard escorting the recruits, and soon the stage is filled with the lads and their friends. Steva, handsome young reprobate, his golden locks blown over his brow, swaggers tipsily forward, swinging his hat with its wreath of flowers. Taking some money out of his pocket, he tosses it to the musicians and calls for a dance and a song. It is evident that Jenufa is too infatuated with the young fellow's good looks and careless generosity to seriously resent his condition. He silences her mild reproach by confessing that he is drunk, but 'all right'; the girls will dance with him just the same. Has not a pretty girl wreathed his hat with flowers on his way here? As the wild dance ends, Steva puts his arm round Jenufa: 'Come along,' he cries, 'let's dance to our wedding!'

At this juncture Jenufa's Foster-mother intervenes. With a gesture she stops the musicians. Then this proud, respectable, pious woman speaks her mind: 'It is always like this with us,' she says, 'recklessness, irresponsible haste, extravagance.' Jenufa shall not marry Steva until a year's probation has proved him worthy. All consider that the Stepmother is too stern, except Laca, who kisses her hand gratefully. Steva looks annoyed. He is not so tipsy but that he feels his vanity affronted before the villagers. Jenufa weeps. When the company has cleared off, Grannie Buryja comforts the lovers. Steva is just a big child who has been led away by bad companions. Jenufa must not cry; to all lovers comes a time of suffering. Left alone with Steva, Jenufa confesses her condition, her shame and anguish, and appeals to his love. Steva is in no mood to face the responsibility of his wrong-doing. His self-esteem is still smarting under the Foster-mother's rebuke. He—the village favourite, with all the girls at his beck and call—he, refused as a son-in-law, turned back for a year's probation! He boasts of other conquests, and Jenufa grows furiously jealous. In her anger she shakes her debonair, ne'er-do-weel lover. Good temperedly, but tipsily, he assures her she is the best looking of the lot. He admires her 'smooth apple cheeks.' But the consequences of his passion pass him by. Jenufa is growing desperate when Grannie appears in the porch: 'Leave the lad alone,' she advises, 'his wits will be clearer in the morning.'

The last scene of Act 1 is occupied by a violent scene between Laca and Jenufa. He comes in, having dropped his switch, but still carrying the open knife, and begins by a fierce condemnation of the unworthy Steva. He picks up the hat lying on the ground, and points to the garland: 'Would you wear this?' he asks. 'It was given him by another girl!' Jenufa replies that she would gladly wear what was given 'to honour her lover.' Laca scoffs at the word 'honour'; works himself into a frenzy of baffled tenderness; strives to take the girl in his arms; and, being contemptuously repulsed, loses his head and scars her cheek with the knife. Jenufa's cry brings out Grannie and the servant from the mill. Jenufa presses her handkerchief to her cheek, and staggers indoors. Laca, stunned by the consequences of his rage, rouses himself at Grannie's command to go and fetch the Foster-mother. Jenufa has fainted.

Act 2 shows the interior of a Slovak cottage, the Foster-mother's dwelling. She is a good churchwoman. Religious pictures deck the walls; a holy-water stoup hangs near the door; a bench, an old carved press, and a bed piled with feather mattresses complete the furniture. Jenufa, pale and dejected, the scar still showing on her cheek, sits sewing. The dialogue which ensues between her and the Foster-mother gradually unfolds the soul-state of each woman. Jenufa is benumbed with grief. The Foster-mother's former energy has turned to a restless agony. They speak of the baby asleep in an adjoining room. It is clear that Jenufa loves him in spite of all the suffering his birth has entailed. 'He is so quiet, my little son, he never cries.' 'He'll howl loud enough by and by,' answers the Foster-mother; 'he'll drain my life and reason away.' Yet in her bitterness—the bitterness of a woman of intense respectability and limited tenderness—the Sacristan's Widow still loves Jenufa, and yearns over her past pride in the child she has brought up. Presently, when the girl has crept to bed, the elder woman gives vent to her anguish. How she has prayed and prayed that God would spare her the humiliation of a base-born baby under her roof! And Steva has never been near. He does not want to be reminded of his paternity. But to-night he must come. She has sent for him. If the villain will not marry Jenufa . . . ? All this to music full of poignant feeling. Then a few terrible phrases in which the germ of the evil thought shows its first small roots. 'The baby is a week old; it breathes, it lives; there is no likelihood of its dying. . . .'

At this moment Steva walks in. He has not the air of a villain, but of a careless, somewhat embarrassed youth, quite unable to grasp the tremendous responsibilities he has incurred. He hopes there is nothing wrong with Jenufa. He has not been before, because like all the neighbours he believed she had gone on a visit to Vienna. What? There is really a child? 'Yes,' replies the Foster-mother, 'go and peep at him, Jenufa is asleep.' But if she expects to awaken Steva's paternal instincts she is mistaken. He peeps into the room and returns: 'Poor little brute,' he says. 'And "poor" Jenufa,' cries the Foster-mother. Then the proud and righteous woman abases herself before this graceless young peasant, using every argument to persuade him save the family from shame by making an honest woman of Jenufa. Steva is sheepish, but obdurate. 'Tis a bit of bad luck,' he says. He was in love with Jenufa's gaiety, with her bright eyes and 'apple cheeks'—such things will happen. Then once—on the day of his return—he caught a glimpse of her hidden nature. Something austere and earnest—'like you, and I always was afraid of you, the Sacristan's Widow'—and then her scratched face, her good looks gone . . . it was all over. 'I'm not in love with her any more. Besides, 'tis too late, yesterday I got engaged to the Mayor's daughter, Karolka. So now you know. There's my answer!' He goes out, and leaves the wretched woman to her distracting grief and shame.

Laca appears on the scene. He has seen Steva's departure. He asks: 'Has Jenufa returned from Vienna? Is she well? Does she still care for Steva?' At the sight of Laca a gleam of hope shines upon the Foster-mother. She resolves to confide to him the whole story. Laca's devotion is of the kind that bears the test. Only when she mentions the baby he baulks for a moment. 'A child—Steva's child. This is like a sword piercing my heart! How shall I bear the agony?' The Foster-mother is terrified lest this straw of hope should be carried beyond her reach on a flood of furious jealousy. Suddenly she faces the suffering man: 'Laca, believe me, the child died.' 'Does Steva know this?' 'Yes, . . . no, . . . no, . . . Do not speak of him. Go quickly and find out the date of his marriage to Karolka! Run!' The woman stands alone in the room. She is committed to her falsehood. Her immortal soul in exchange for her good name—and Jenufa's. She goes muttering about her hideous task. 'Now, at once, before the ice breaks . . . no trace . . . no pain . . . I take him home to God.' She creeps stealthily into the next room and comes out with a bundle in her arms. 'He came by sin; by sin he departs!' She lifts the latch and disappears into the night.

Jenufa awakes during her Foster-mother's absence. She misses the child. Her head is weak and confused, and she has a kind of delirious premonition of disaster. She thinks she hears the baby cry, and rushes to the door only to find it locked. She swoons. When she recovers she is calm and happy. Of course, she thinks, her Foster-mother has taken the child to his father. 'When Steva sees those blue eyes, so like his own, all will be well.' While she is praying before the picture of the Virgin, she hears a knock at the window. 'Let me in,' says the widow, 'here is the key, my hands shake so with the cold I cannot turn the lock.' When Jenufa sees her Foster-mother's arms are empty, she is filled with joy. 'Steva has kept him,' she exclaims, 'Steva cares for him, and to-morrow he will come himself and bring the baby to me!' 'Child, are you still wandering?' asks the elder woman, 'Don't you know you have been ill and delirious for two days and that meanwhile your baby is dead?' Jenufa weeps bitterly. Eventually she is a little consoled to feel that the child has been spared an embittered life, and is now, as the Foster-mother reminds her, 'with the angels.'

When Laca returns, the elder woman, before letting him in, whispers to Jenufa that he knows all, and does not judge her harshly. Laca goes humbly and gently up to Jenufa: 'God comfort you! Will you not give me your hand?' And presently he adds: 'Could you not take me now, Jenufa?' Jenufa replies that she is no fit wife for him. Beauty, honour, first love—all are gone; she has nothing to give. But Laca pleads, and the Foster-mother joins him. Suddenly a strange terror possesses the widow. She rushes to the window and opens it. 'Do you not hear it? A cry of anguish?' Laca lays his hand kindly on her shoulder and asks her what she fears. She turns a stricken face to his: 'I thought I saw Death grimacing at the casement.'

In Act 3 the curtain rises on the same scene in the Foster-mother's cottage, but now Jenufa, looking grave but not unhappy, is making simple preparations for her wedding with Laca. The villagers begin to drop in and offer congratulations. Tender and attentive, but curbing his exultation, Laca hovers near his bride. The Mayor and his wife arrive. She rallies Jenufa on the simplicity of her costume: no bright colours, no garlands. Laca, taking Jenufa apart, entreats her to wear the bridal wreath he has journeyed to the town to fetch.

Again he assures her that his great love has driven out all bitterness. He has even invited Steva and his betrothed to the wedding. When these two walk in, Jenufa bids the half-brothers to be reconciled. 'Each of you has his good qualities,' she says; 'Steva is handsome, but Laca has a divinely tender heart.' Only the Foster-mother seems apprehensive and ill at ease. She starts and trembles at the sight of Steva. 'Will he bring us trouble once again?' Now the village girls flock in and sing a marriage song. The cottage is crowded to witness the pretty ceremony, in which the bridal pair kneel to receive first the blessing of Grannie Buryja and then that of the Foster-mother. But just as she lifts her hands to lay them on their bowed heads, a clamour is heard outside. She starts in terror. A voice without is heard saying: 'Poor child! What brute can have caused its death?'

All hasten to the window. Jano, the shepherd boy, now takes up the rôle of the Messenger in Greek tragedy, relating all that must not be seen upon the stage. 'Just down there, where the ice is thawing . . . a baby . . . in all its swaddlings . . . it looks alive still . . . hark at the folk weeping . . . O, horrible, horrible!'

The Foster-mother gives a demented scream: 'Save me, hold me, save me!' and sinks in a swoon. Grannie Buryja goes to her aid. Steva's betrothed clings to him: 'O, Steva, this is terrible, their wedding is quite spoilt.' Then a sudden cry from Jenufa, who has run out of the cottage, thrills the little crowd: 'God and the saints in heaven, it is my boy!' Laca tries to hush her cries: 'Collect yourself, Jenufa, everyone will hear you.' But she struggles from his grasp: 'Let me go! I tell you it is my boy, my Steva!'

The entrance of the Mayor, carrying some of the child's wrappings, brings matters to a crisis. Jenufa recognises the clothes and turns to Steva, 'Go,' she cries, 'and bring him in—your child!' At this the neighbours cry scandal, and gather threateningly around Jenufa. But Laca stands in front of her and warns them off. The Foster-mother, now aroused from her stupor, comes forward. 'I did it,' she proclaims, 'I drowned Jenufa's child. I wanted to save our good name. I could not endure that the girl I had brought up should fall into disgrace. God, Thou knowest I could bear no more . . . It was cold and dark . . . the babe never stirred . . . Since that hour the crime has weighed me down . . . Jenufa is innocent.'

Steva's betrothed then turns to him with a reproachful gesture: 'All the guilt is yours. Mother, take me home.' Steva is no husband for me.' The young man hides his face in his hands. His shame has found him out, and he fumbles with the door-latch, seeking escape. 'Aye, let him go,' shout the villagers, scornfully: 'Go and join the gipsies!' Meanwhile the Foster-mother, with a wild cry, rushes into the next room intending to kill herself, but on the threshold she remembers Jenufa. 'I must live to bear witness for her,' she says. Then she confesses that egotism rather than love has inspired her conduct. A real mother would have loved the girl better than her honour. 'God comfort you,' says Jenufa. And so, forgiven, the Foster-mother follows the Mayor to judgment.

Laca and Jenufa remain in the cottage. She tells her lover he must go his way and leave her to face her ruined life alone. But Laca's love is of the quality that grows strong through adversity. Gravely he shows her that his only way of happiness lies in sharing her shame and sorrow. Then Jenufa opens her arms to him. 'At last,' she exclaims, 'I know what love is—the love that God himself approves!'

So in an atmosphere of pity, and reconciliation, and quietly-dawning hope—an atmosphere as mellow as that which pervades the last Act of some late Shakespearian play—this remarkable drama comes to an end.

The music of 'Jeji Pastorkyna,' though strongly tintured with the folk spirit, is in substance a very individual creation. The form of the opera is modern in the sense that it presents no set numbers, duets, trios, &c. Janacek makes use of a style of melodic recitative which, whether it be specifically Slovak or not in rhythm and accent, is at any rate admirably adapted to the utterance of the most varied and poignant emotions. The vocal phrases, whether they follow each other continuously or are broken by pregnant pauses, whether they are rapid or languid; suddenly tense with emotion or as suddenly quiescent, have a singularly natural effect. The swift dialogue leaves on us the impression of a swift, eloquent interchange of speech—now vehement now tender, now charged with horror or despair. It has an affinity with the realistic idiom of Moussorgsky's operas, in that the composer relies for his dramatic element upon 'the melody of the spoken word.' But the more efficient musicianship of Janacek has produced in 'Jeji Pastorkyna' a far less uneven work than the Russian composer's 'Marriage,' for example. When produced in Vienna the work was compared, not inaptly, with Charpentier's 'Louise.'

Rhythmically, as with most Slavonic music, 'Jeji Pastorkyna' contains much that is interesting, not merely as regards the clever combination and interweaving of various measures into a complex and supple rhythmic tissue, but because of what, for the want of a better word, I must describe as its emotional rhythm.

The orchestration, generally speaking, has a colour and tang entirely its own. Occasionally there are effects which are no doubt purposely naïve and aim at the close imitation of the local instruments used by the Slovaks: a small bagpipe, the pastoral flute (fujara), cymbals, &c. Each Act is preceded by a short orchestral introduction which prepares us for the special dramatic aspects of life to follow, and leaves us in the right frame of expectancy. I was much struck by the originality of the opening pages, which form not so much a thematic as a psychological exposition of the drama. In clear, dry tones the xylophone gives out a persistent figure against the pizzicato notes in the basses, suggesting to my fancy the ceaseless, relentless click-clack of the mill-wheel, which turns stolidly on, through situations of extreme tension.

The composer is fond of these whirling, revolving figures. The triplets in the Prelude to Act 2, which first accompany melodic passages for wood-wind, and afterwards so much of the unhappy dialogue between the Foster-mother and Jenufa, again sounded like the turning of the wheel of fate, which in this drama revolves mostly through emotional storms and clouds. But how glad I am that there is no 'comic relief' in 'Jeji Pastorkyna'! In our passions and griefs we are all more or less united, without distinction of class or nationality; but in our sense of humour we are infinitely differentiated, and what amuses a Slav will bore a Latin. So, remembering the terrible keeper, or bailiff, in Smetana's 'Two Widows,' I give thanks for the unbroken seriousness of 'Her Foster-daughter.'

These generalisations about the music of 'Jeji Pastorkyna' by no means do the composer justice; but they are all I care to write on the subject after one hearing only of a work which I found so arresting that it left me too breathless to consider details. One more observation must conclude this too-lengthy article. The strong local colour and picturesque scenery and costumes of Slovakia are undoubted assets alike to the writer, the painter, and the dramatic composer; but this is no peasant opera in the sense that it depends on these externals for its success. Both Kovarovic's 'Psohlavci' and Janaeck's 'Jeji Pastorkyna' might be transferred—the former to the realm of Scottish Border history, the latter to a village in Brittany, and yet each would retain its musical and dramatic interest. I venture to say that both works have that quality of sincere emotionalism combined with sound art that merits, and generally finds, success in any country in the world.

Interludes.

BY 'FESTE.'

The beginning of the present autumn saw the launching of four new musical journals, and the inception of several series of ballad and other concerts avowedly 'run' by music publishers. The fact is significant, and demands consideration if only because it must inevitably lead to discussions on the subject of commercialism in art. Already some well-worn phrases are being bandied about: 'mere commercialism,' 'shop,' 'trade in the things of the spirit,' 'art in commercial trammels,' and so forth. The time seems opportune for an attempt to get down to a commonsense view of a question that is too often dismissed by such phrases. We have to recognize that all the conditions of modern life tend to make art more and more a matter of business. Before we lament the fact, let us try to see exactly whether it calls for tears, or cheers, or both.

On the whole both—as is the case with most things on this piebald planet. But (to begin at the beginning) when was art of any kind outside and above commercial considerations? The professional of a thousand years ago had a good deal in common with his descendant of to-day. Like the prima donna and the pianistic lion, he toured, taking on his way such tribute as was forthcoming. Many people starved in the Middle Ages, but I doubt if there was ever a minstrel among them. Kipling's True Thomas declined a knighthood—an example which few, if any, of his successors have followed:

And what should I make wi' blazon and belt,
Wi' keep and tail and seizin and fee,
And what should I do wi' page and squire
That am a king in my own countrie?

But did he harp for nothing? Hardly:

And some they give me the good red gold,
And some they give me the white money,
And some they give me a clout o' meal,
For they be people o' low degree.

To-day the good red gold (or its paper equivalent) and the white money go to the box office. The True Thomas of to-day would be insulted if you met him outside Queen's Hall and tendered him the price of your seat. What he would feel like if I and other people of low degree offered him a clout o' meal, I shudder to think. And the original Thomas was a practical sort of democrat, too:

And the song I sing for the counted gold,
The same I sing for the white money,
But best I sing for the clout o' meal
That simple people given me.

This is real playing to the gallery—the only kind that needs no apology.

Now we may be sure that True Thomas knew which of his songs was the likeliest to produce substantial results, from red gold to a handful of meal. And we may be equally sure that at every stopping-place that song was sung just before the collection was taken up. ('Mere commercialism,' said an art-for art's-sake-highbrow on the edge of the crowd, leaving just before the hat reached him.) Later, when the printing press was invented, Thomas became a publisher as well as a singer, hawking the ballads as he sang them. Was he less of an artist because he was now a tradesman as well? He still put his best work into his best songs; and if, with an eye to his next meal, he wound up with what is now known as a 'winner,' who shall blame him?

If you want a literary reference to the royalty system, you will find it (like everything else) in Shakespeare:

Autolycus. This is a merry ballad; but a very pretty one.

Mopsa. Let's have some merry ones.

Autolycus. Why this is a passing merry one; and goes to the tune of 'Two maids wooing a man'; there's scarce a maid westward, but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mopsa. We can both sing it; if thou'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Dorcas. We had the tune on't a month ago.

Autolycus. I can bear my part; you must know, 'tis my occupation: have at it with you.

(Song. 'Get you hence.')

Autolycus the publisher having sold a copy of 'Get you hence,' paid the royalty to Autolycus the singer—direct action, with no profits lost on the way. To-day, 'Get you hence' would bear on its cover the words:

'Sung with immense success at all his engagements by Mr. A. U. Tolycus.'

The royalty system is anathema in many quarters. I was as hot against it as anybody until I reminded myself that, after all, the royalty singer is merely a commercial traveller, going round with samples, like his fellow bagmen, but bearing samples of music instead of grocery or hardware. The system itself is sound enough: the mischief is that his wares are too often bad, and the public, which has a keen scent for the indifferent in bacon, boots, and the rest of the things that matter, is easily imposed on where music is concerned. What we need is either no royalty system, or a great deal more of it. I want to see singers carrying the fiery cross of good music through the country, singing fine songs at all their engagements, and getting sixpence per song more than they get for the wretched specimens they now propagate.

Critics lament that English audiences show no discrimination, apparently enjoying the bad no less than the good. But reverse the statement, and see what a hopeful look there is about it. Are there not possibilities in a public that enjoys the good as much as the bad?

The sound judge in music, as in literature, is made, not born. The bookman of to-day was more often than not an omnivorous reader in his youth, enjoying good and bad alike. There must be appetite before there can be taste. If the public were indifferent to music, the case would be hopeless. But they are the reverse of indifferent: they are avid. Those who enjoy bad music do so because they get so much of it, and because it is the kind that is the most widely and skilfully advertised. What type of song is helped by having its opening phrases quoted in newspapers circulating among millions of people? Never the fine song; rarely even the second-rate. It is usually the most banal and obvious. You will reply that the best songs depend so little on a few bars of catchy tune that they cannot be quoted with advantage. But you will see how little there is in this objection if you realise how much your interest in a given piece of music has been quickened by a few music-type illustrations in an analytical article that would otherwise have left you indifferent. And as an example of the possibilities in public taste when properly directed, see what the Competitive Festival has done. We have to-day hundreds of thousands of people familiar with and enjoying choral music of a type that twenty years ago would have had no meaning for them. Familiarity has bred content.

I saw somewhere the other day a question asked about Elgar's first Symphony. The writer was lamenting its rare performances to-day, and, wondering why it had a record number during the first year of its appearance. I think I can give him the answer in one word—'publicity.' The Symphony was well written up—not merely in the musical press, which reaches only a handful of the public, but in the daily papers, which go everywhere. One of the most widely read of all (I think it was the Daily Mail) even quoted its main theme. On how many thousand domestic pianofortes was that fine tune played for several days? How many were interested who would otherwise have been indifferent, or even ignorant of the fact that Elgar had written a symphony? When good music is given as much publicity as the bad, we need have no fear of the result. I wish some musical millionaire would spend his surplus cash on a gigantic development of the royalty system. The Patron's Fund public rehearsals of new works are a step in this direction. But we want more than a step. The popular taste in songs would be changed in a few years if singers were paid to make a feature of our best work in this field. At present fine modern music is usually the most expensive to buy, and the performer not only receives no royalty, but often has to pay a fee himself. My millionaire would put things right in a very short time. The royalty system might have been a great power for good. It has become a curse because it has been almost confined to third-rate songs, and has therefore got into the hands of the least educated and most vain and superficial branch of the profession. What would become of the physical health and palate of the community if manufacturers sent out commercial travellers with samples of their worst products?

In order to realise how much the music trade and profession as a whole have to learn in the matter of publicity, read 'Commercial Advertising,' by Thomas Russell, a recently-published set of lectures delivered at the London School of Economics and Political Science. It is an unexpectedly interesting book, and leaves one with the uncomfortable conviction that real live propaganda is as a rule used only on behalf of food, patent medicine, soap, and poor music.

Not that Mr. Russell has much to say about our art and its advertisement. But human nature is pretty much the same all round, and the psychology that makes us buy the soap or cocoa that is best advertised will also make us buy the music that is kept well in our eyes and ears.

The brief passage Mr. Russell devotes to music contains some curious statements. Speaking of the importance of the choice of medium for advertisement, he says:

Why is the Daily Telegraph the unequalled medium for advertising concerts, sheet-music, and pianofortes? Not because it has a larger circulation than any other London daily—it has not—but because it is read by musical people. Probably the basic reason is that the Daily Telegraph, being owned by Jews, has always had a big Jewish circulation, and everyone knows that the Jews are the most musical race in the world. Nearly all the great composers were Jews. Most of the best executants have been Jews. Thus the Daily Telegraph was read by Jews, used as a medium by Jews in the music business, and became the accepted medium. Presently Christians interested in music—what few there are of us—followed; and when a great part of any advertising settles into one medium, the whole of that kind of advertising gravitates towards it.

I had always thought that the position of the Daily Telegraph in the musical world was chiefly due to the fact of its having been one of the first daily papers (if not the first) to give a recognized musical critic plenty of elbow-room. The Saturday music-page has done so much for the Daily Telegraph that it is surprising to find no other newspaper following suit. True, the press as a whole is increasing the space devoted to music, but the amount is still small compared with that given to the drama and sport. The reference to nearly all the great composers having been Jews serves to remind us of a few who were not—Palestrina, Bach, Handel, Purcell, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Wagner, Strauss, Elgar—we present Mr. Russell with the remaining great ones. He will not find many of the chosen race among them when he has counted Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer.

One point clearly established by Mr. Russell is worth noting. The effect of a new entry into a given branch of trade might be expected to damage the firms already operating in that branch. Usually the reverse is the case: the result is to increase the consumption of the article concerned. We need not argue this point. A glance at the music trade will convince us. Undoubtedly some new firms have come into existence as a result of the increased popularity of music, but it is no less clear that the demand has grown enormously because of the increase in the number of publishers, and the consequent extensive advertising of music of all kinds. That is why the existing musical journals welcome the four new arrivals alluded to at the beginning of this article. The effect will be to increase the public for magazines of the kind. New sections of the community will be tapped, and as it is a common experience that few musical people confine themselves to one journal, it is certain that the old established organs will gain new readers.

Having said this, I am going to raise a mild protest in regard to one of the four. Three openly declared themselves to be founded by music publishers, and so long as they maintain the excellent literary standard of their first issues, nobody need be a penny the worse for the fact of their being to some extent business organs. On the contrary, both readers and publishers should benefit. We have long since seen the falsity of the old idea that in a business transaction one party is necessarily a victim. The essence of all sound trading is that both parties gain. The fourth journal, I think, made a fatal mistake. It began by announcing that its policy was 'complete independence in expression of opinion,' and went on to say (in heavy type) that it was 'neither influenced nor controlled by any organization, trade or otherwise.' I might have been less sceptical had not the first number consisted of thirty-one pages of advertisements and only twenty pages of reading matter. How can a journal with such an overwhelming portion devoted to trade announcements be 'completely independent,' and 'uninfluenced by any trade?' What would happen if one of its contributors spoke unfavourably of any of the pianos, gramophones, or music advertised in those thirty-one pages? I am not objecting to the presence of the advertisements, and I am sure that a case might be made out for the editorial blue pencil in the case of too drastic a criticism of the advertiser's wares. My sole objection is to a claim of independence that simply cannot be sustained. Nor do I dwell on the facts that the address of the publishing office is identical with that of a well-known organ of the pianoforte trade, and that pianoforte manufacturers are the chief advertisers. These things may be mere coincidences, and even if they are not, there is no harm done. The only flaw in the concern is the untenable and unctuous claim of being superior to commercial considerations.

It is doubtful, in fact, if any musical journal can ever be entirely without bias. Even one unconnected with any music-publishing house, and with no advertisements, would be pretty sure to become sooner or later the organ of a clique, or of an institution. The only way in which we can get a comprehensive survey of current musical thought and activities is to read all the musical journals, adding or deducting a slight percentage here and there. After all, this is what we do, or should do, in regard to the daily press, if we want to be really broad-minded on social and political questions. Why should we demand of musical papers a detachment that we do not ask or expect of other newspapers?

You will have noticed that when hard words are flying round on the subject of the commercialising of music, the publisher gets the biggest share. The labourer is worthy of his hire—save when he is a publisher. The world hears of his sensational successes, and makes unpleasant remarks—though thoroughly awake itself when any bargaining is to be done. It says nothing of his failures, even if it hears of them. Nor does it take notice of the works that most publishers of repute bring out chiefly for honour and glory—works that they know can never make a wide appeal, and for which the only return is that shadowy one known as 'the credit of the house.' How does the artist stand in comparison with the publisher so far as commercialism is concerned? Here is a significant passage from Ethel Smyth's 'Impressions that Remained':

Shortly before the war Kreisler told me a horrible thing; he said, 'I have visited every town in the world, almost, of over 100,000 inhabitants, and of them all I know only the railway station, the hotel, and the concert-hall.' I exclaimed it was a hideous, degrading life; why did he go on with it? He spoke of relations to support, financial crises, and so on; and when I uttered the German equivalent of 'bosh!' he replied, 'Yes, you are right; one gets into the groove and can't or won't get out of it. . . . This is the sort of madness of which I wish the war would purge the world.'

Is Kreisler any the less a great artist because he stops in these towns only long enough to earn and collect his hire? Do we think less of the 'Choral Symphony' because it was written to order, and even paid for in advance? It belongs in fact to that great mass of fine music written to enable the composer to live, though we use the contemptuous term 'pot-boiler' only when a minor composer is concerned, and when the work is a song.

Does the splendid choralism of this country suffer from the fact that it is due chiefly to the enterprise of a music-publisher who nearly a century ago placed the choral masterpieces in the hands of the public at a price about 75 per cent. lower than their previous cost? Art has everything to gain from legitimate and enterprising trade. Her chief enemy is the anti-commercial humbug which began with the long-haired poseur who had a soul above money, but who none the less managed to do himself pretty well—and other people, too, sometimes. (The most out-and-out opponent of commercialism, you will remember, was that exceedingly knowing butterfly, Mr. Harold Skimpole.) Let us have our heads in the clouds when we are music-making, by all means. But, between whiles, the better we can hold our own as men and women of the world, the better for the world, for us, and for our music. We must clear our mind of cant. (I am afraid I hear a faint echo—'can't!')

NATIONALITY IN MUSIC.

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON.

A good deal has been written and said—not always wisely—about the future of British music. It would be more pertinent to speak about the future of music—though in one sense such discussion must be superfluous: music can take care of itself. The common error, however, seems to be to speak of a part instead of the whole; or, rather, to divide in parts where we ought to contemplate an entirety. Nationality, with all its grades leading downward to the provincial and the parochial, may have its value, its attractive features, its piquancy; but nationality at its best should never be more than secondary. Our first regard should be for the universal. Morality may tell each one of us to be good in the family, good in citizenship, good as patriots; but it must go still farther unless it is to be stunted and narrowing: it must tell us to be good as citizens of the world. Does not the same 'must' apply in matters of art as well? The ideal is not for the home alone, for the country alone, but for humanity. When we think of Homer or Dante or Shakespeare, our first view may embrace their local and temporary conditions, their age and country; but the world's final judgment has passed beyond all this and appraised their universal significance. Homer's secondary characteristics were Greek, as Dante's were Italian and Shakespeare's English; but their primary qualifications, those things that ensured their vitality and endurance, belonged to human nature at large, and by these alone they have affected and influenced readers at the four corners of the earth. Too much has often been made of the local, the temporary, the incidental. Race, we will admit, is a powerful element in each one of us, though far too complex for any arbitrary or positive classification; but behind race lies something that is stronger still, less varying, less complex, and that is our common humanity.

Our passions and instincts and sorrows are the same 'from China to Peru.' Music, with the other arts, makes a claim to universality, and is a voice that speaks for something more widely spread than manner or costume or dialect.

What, then, does nationality in music mean? Unless it applies to secondary features only, it must be a sheer limitation, a segregation, a division into camps, a breach of the unity that should be the ideal of all art. Music will never be the better because it is English or Russian or French, though it may seem better to some hearers—just as there are persons who care to read only their local newspaper. To take an instance from literature: Joseph Conrad, a Russian Pole, has come to England and written great English novels. If he had remained in Poland he might still have written great novels with a more pronounced Slavic tone, but with the same genius behind them. The great things in his books are not the Slavic or the English features, but their fine psychology in the treatment of general human nature: he gets to the roots of the human, not of the merely racial. Beethoven, born in a different century or in a different country, would have composed differently so far as the superficial manner of his work is concerned; but the great features of his music, those that make it of any value to us to-day, would have been the same. When hearing the best music, as when reading the best poetry, we are absorbed by its universality; we are not constantly reminding ourselves that 'this man is a Russian, or a German, or an Englishman.' If we are thus constantly reminded, there is something in which the work falls short of the highest. There may of course be a local idiom or an individual idiom which at times recalls the composer's identity; but this does not so obtrude as to veil the greater unity, that whole of which the individual is a part. A touch of local accent may be very charming, but it does not really add value to that which is said, except when it lends attraction to the trivial and the unimportant.

If an Englishman sets out to make his music English—or British, to use the more generally acceptable word—what is he going to do? In music there is no ready-made racial idiom, unless we resort to folk-music, which stands by itself and belongs to its own limited conditions. Folk-music, like folk-poetry, is often of wonderful interest and beauty. But a serious composer cannot model his work on folk-music, even if he is content at times to borrow a little from it. Moreover, if the work is to be 'British,' there is still a further complication; for we have Scots folk-music and Irish and Welsh, as well as English. Which idiom is the composer to take, or must he produce a blend of all? It may be said that the British character is such a blend, and that British music may be the same. This may be true of the British nationality, but the question now is of nationality in the least abstract and least localised of all the arts. Or, ignoring folk-music, shall the composer go back to Purcell and Lawes and Lock and Arne? Or to Handel, much of whose work, in spite of his German birth, is probably as English as any of them?

Even this, we feel instinctively, would not do; the result would be a cramping and a fettering. Some writers, aware of these grave difficulties, seem willing to admit that there is no ready-made national idiom, and they propose that one should be created. Then who is to create it, and enforce its acceptance? If a great composer arises among us, he may indeed have his own mannerism—though the less of it the better unless it is entirely secondary; and his influence will undoubtedly form a school and perhaps a lasting tradition. Such a school, such a tradition, might conceivably do great things; but its result would spring from individuality, not nationality. What does difference of language matter if we have anything to say? And music, happily, has no such division of languages; surely we do not wish to produce any. Music is a universal language, and speaks for that which is universal. We are trying gradually to escape from the limitations of Babel; we are trying to understand and meet each other, to break down partitions, to attain an ideal of wide brotherhood. In music such a condition is already existent. The great man is coloured by his surroundings, but not produced by them. Burns, born in Scotland, wrote Scots songs; born in Italy, he would have written Italian songs. The secondary value of his work is that which is local and temporary; the true value of his work is something deeper. Some are only strong enough to be local and temporary; they have their reward, their local and popular applause; they never join the band of the immortals. If we counsel British musicians to consciously produce British music, we are counselling them to limitation. An idiom, it is true, may conceal paucity of thought, it may veil defect of originality; it may be a fine thing for the second-rate. The mere fact that it can be assumed at will condemns its conscious assumption. Some local colour we may be unable to escape; it may affect our manner of saying a thing; also, if personality be strong, there will be some personal mannerism. But to assume a mannerism is always deadly. When we look at our best native composers to-day we may congratulate ourselves that, in their purest music, they have not ostentatiously sought to be British, but have simply tried to express what was in them. Only so far as they have done this have they risen above the commonplace. However marked its idiom, we do not want British music to be a national commonplace. Art must satisfy two requirements that may seem contraries but are really complementaries: it must be both individual and universal. There is no room for the merely national.

The illustrated souvenir booklet of the Borough Organists' Camp Entertainments at Dover is a record of excellent work carried out throughout the war under the direction of Mr. H. J. Taylor. This organization supplied concerts to no fewer than forty-eight camp centres in the district.

CONCERNING CUTS.

BY ALFRED KALISCH.

There is hardly a question connected with music about which there is more fine confused thinking than that of cuts; or, to speak more academically, abbreviations; or, to quote a phrase from Sir Thomas Beecham's announcement of the production of 'Parsifal,' 'the elimination of unnecessary detail.'

In fact, most people do not think about it at all. They are content to jog along unquestioning, in the inherited belief reiterated by many teachers, that it is lèse majesté to cut the classics, because cuts spoil their form; that the moderns may be cut, because, poor dears, they have no form, and if they have, it is so bad that a change can only improve it. To think otherwise is not respectable: only the half-educated or the very young with a wild desire to shock their elders would think otherwise. The present writer is certainly not young, and does feel that current opinions require reconsideration.

We pretend that we do not cut the classics. But is it so? How often do we hear a classical work with all the repeats. Is there ever a performance of 'Dio Giovanni,' or 'Figaro,' with all the numbers in it? Or of the B minor Mass or the 'St. Matthew' Passion of Bach? It may be doubted, too, whether the individual numbers of these works are not shortened. But we make a fine show of not noticing it.

It would surely be better to acknowledge that we do these things. If it were done openly we should be much more likely to evolve a reasonable system, and to discover when cuts are allowable and when not. It is really a question that goes deeper than the technique of form. It is rather a question of psychology. We do not live in a deliberate age, and the world is impatient of control. It is no good telling the world that it ought to like long works; it refuses to do so.

Our present way of thinking, or not thinking, about these things leads to a great deal of insincerity. There are scores of violinists who really think in their heart of hearts that the Finale of Beethoven's Violin Concerto and the first movement of Brahms's Concerto are too long—but they never dare to say so, except in private. There are pianists also who think the same of the last movement of the 'Emperor' Concerto; and of every movement of the 'Hammerklavier' Sonata, but they have not the courage of their convictions. They are afraid of what would happen to them if they acted on them in public.

It may seem a startling paradox, but a liberal, almost revolutionary policy in this respect is probably the only thing that will prevent a rapid defection of many music-lovers from the ranks of devotees to the classics. It may be deplorable, but the mentality of the age has to be reckoned with. The time will soon arrive when concert-givers of all types will say with reason that people will not come to hear the unabbreviated classics, and that they must be shortened or put on the shelf. The first alternative shocks the musicians' sense of propriety—naturally. But the second would be a real disaster. A regrettable choice of evils; yet many signs point to the fact that it will soon have to be made. It is better to make it deliberately, to let those who really know suggest how it should be done, than to leave such things to the caprice of individual performers and conductors as is the case now.

Two concrete instances—extreme ones, it is true—will help to enforce this argument. We all know that Schubert's C major Symphony is a masterpiece, and that its appearance on a programme suffices to empty a concert hall. The 'Unfinished' is a sure draw. People often say 'But there are finer bits in the C major than anything here.' If anyone had the courage to reduce that Symphony to a size equal to that of the 'Unfinished,' it would become as familiar as its fellow. It would be known and loved by thousands who never hear it now.

Another instance is 'The Ring.' It is a thing in a class by itself, of course, but in a little conversation at which I was once present on the subject of cutting 'The Ring,' things were said that are of universal application. The late Dr. Richter was once inveighing against the wholly inartistic cuts that some conductors made, and a singer said the present want of system was distracting. He had sung the same part in three different theatres in a fortnight, and had had to study three different versions. A third person then suggested that a commission consisting of the Doctor himself, Levi, and Mottl—both of whom were then also alive—should publish an authorized abbreviated version for everyday use of all the Wagner music-dramas. He said it would be an artistic crime. It was pointed out that the absence of guidance from inspired quarters led to the perpetration of worse crimes. And so it is throughout the realm of music.

There is a cognate point on which another article might be written. It is tacitly assumed to be a sin to play one movement of a Symphony, or a Quartet, or a Suite. The result is that many beautiful movements are practically moribund, or certainly are not heard as often as they ought to be, because of the dead weight they have to carry with them. The most striking case is that of the early Symphonies of Beethoven. Each of them, the 1st, 2nd, and 4th, has one movement which hundreds would love to hear, but never do hear, only because the whole Symphonies would keep audiences away from a concert. So it is with the 'Pilgrims' March' from Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony or the Scherzo of the 'Scotch' Symphony, and instances might easily be multiplied from Quartets, Trios, and Sonatas of all types. Here too is an opportunity of clearing our minds of cant.

Some very good people hold up their hands in horror when they hear the 'Dorabella' Variation of Elgar played by itself, but when asked why the procedure is dreadful, they really do not know, except that 'the movement is torn from the context.' But presumably the composer sanctions it, and he knows best. Probably the composers of the past would be more broad-minded than the purists of to-day, and would have a clearer perception of the artistic necessities of the present.

THE HUMOUR OF STRAVINSKY.

By LEIGH HENRY.

Among the vanguard of musical humorists stands Igor Stravinsky, in whose work music attains not only a new objective treatment based directly upon investigation of the aural nature of sound, but also an intrinsic expression of humour unknown to it before. The expressive capacities of sound which his empiric experiments have brought to light have given music a range of human mood-content hitherto unknown. In this content, humour, as in actual life, naturally occupies a prominent place, not only as a 'literary' motive, as has up to the present been the case, but also in the actual aural matter of the media in which it is expressed.

This intrinsically musical type of humour is naturally a comparatively late development in Stravinsky's music. Its potential presence is apparent, however, in his earliest work. There is latent whimsicality in the quality of the music he composed for the three Pushkin poems, entitle collectively 'Shepherdess and Faun.' This has a semi-literary quality, however, owing to the French classical sentiment of the words. Of a like suggestive type is the 'Fantastic Scherzo' for orchestra, as also are certain imitative effects in 'The Fire Bird.'

It is in the burlesque ballet-scenes of 'Petroushka' that the objective development of Stravinsky's humour, both spiritually and musically, is first apparent. Here Stravinsky takes place with the world's greatest comedy-writers. 'Petroushka' is informed throughout by psychological insight, by keen critical observation of human significances and relationships. Incorporate with this insight is an understanding compassion which, while never degenerating into sentimentality, yet places the work on that high level of comedy in which humour and tragedy are continually juxtaposed. One has but to recall the little passage, full of pained, bewildered, child-like questioning accompanying the unfortunate Petroushka's examination of his grotesque, bruised body, to realise the element of human pity. Yet even here Stravinsky avoids all bathos. He is no sentimental romantic; the misery and childish perplexity of the wretched doll-clown are there; but so also are his clumsiness, ineffectuality, and stupidity:

Adagietto.

("Petroushka," Tableau 2.)

EX. 1.

(Piano with Orchestra.)

Yet the humour is far from absolute farce. So far, indeed, that the next moment, when Petroushka, having vainly invoked the Charlatan, breaks out in fury and crashes his arms through his cell-wall, only to find a blank vista of stars, the comedy borders very close on tragic poetry. One can imagine what orgies of orchestral dynamics a German composer would have indulged in. This is what Stravinsky does—with a cornet:

The score, however, has no 'profound' pretensions. It teems with little tinkling melodies which, 'real' in the most descriptive sense, are full of a rollicking mockery, such as the two organ-grinders' phrases:

Throughout the whole of the fair-scenes, a perception of mass-psychology is the dominant feature. Here again the humorous sense gives the distinctive quality and accuracy. Moussorgsky, in 'Boris' and 'Khovantchina,' could never resist the temptation to idealise his crowds, and expend his sentiment on them. Stravinsky never loses sight of the crowd as a concrete, objective reality; he discerns its group-aspects and potentialities, but in so doing does not obscure his perception of its component whimsicalities, its collective incongruities. For him the type is never submerged in the sentimental ideal.

He is not cynical. Cynicism is usually disappointed idealism; Stravinsky's mind is of a pragmatic order. His irony has nothing acrid about it. Nor does he segregate himself in an aloof atmosphere of intellectual condescension.

Few passages have more personally-experienced exhilaration in them than that with which 'Petroushka' commences:

Nor is it easy to find anything more full of spontaneous merriment than this:

For Stravinsky's humour, like all great modern art, is true to human idiosyncrasies in its character-delineation, without ideal premise or modification. He is not a 'realist' in the current sense: his work is real in that it penetrates to, and expresses, the spiritual elements which give to actuality its significances. His dramatic work, as that of his countryman, Chekof, is a direct presentation of life as he apprehends it, without palliation, exaggeration, or modification; nor does he subvert it to intellectually-conceived purposes.

THE RACIAL FACTOR IN THE WORK OF STRAVINSKY.

In this sense, and in its ever-recurrent humour, the work of Stravinsky is the most representatively Russian music to date. For in no national literature, not even excepting France, has objective humour played so great a part as in that of Russia. And literature is the primary expression of a race.

The first Russian stage-work was a comedy, not an epic, or mystery, as is the case with other nations. This comedy was written by Gregory, pastor of the Sloboda in the 17th century.

The first Russian literary verse, written by Prince Kantemir (1708-44), was satirical, and commenced that distinctive type which has persevered, in varying forms in the fables of Krylof, the 'Contes' of Count Nulin, and even in writings by the classic Pushkin, to poetry such as that of Sologub to-day.

Russian prose, commencing with Gogol, derived from him that irony which, differing from preceding poetry, transferred humour from fables and fantasy to the ordinary incidents of everyday, and this has remained a persistent element of Russian prose, giving us one of the world's greatest satirists, Michael Saltykof-Shedrin (1826-89), and countless other writers, such as Count Alexis Tolstoi (not to be confused with the more famous Leo Tolstoi), who wrote as 'Kuzma Prutkof.'

Russian humour has achieved its apex of irony, that of burlesque self-criticism, as witness the work of Saltykof referred to, where the whole social system is pilloried; or that of Loskof and Pisemsky, who extended their mockery even to the popular reformers; or Sologub, whose 'Little Demon' is satire directed against himself, or rather the elements of his subjective mentality.

That Stravinsky possesses an identical capacity for self-analysis is evinced in his 'Chant du Rossignol,' where he parodies themes taken from his own lyric-drama, 'Le Rossignol,' the somewhat sentimental Fisher's music being given to a cornet.

THE OBJECTIVE DEVELOPMENT OF STRAVINSKY'S HUMOUR.

I have referred to 'Petroushka' as the first manifestation of the objective musical development of Stravinsky's humour. Yet even here much of the comedy is not of an independently musical type. Nevertheless, signs of the composer's later development are to be seen. Apart from the burlesque section, there is something aurally mirth-provoking in themes such as the ludicrously sentimental preamble with which the Charlatan introduces his show:

Ex. 6. (Flute.) ad lib.

("Petroushka," Tableau 1.)

'The Nightingale' is full of similar instances, though less obviously.

There are few conversant with music in which 'local-colour' is given weight, who will not feel the comedy of the 'Marche Chinoise,' or the artistic appositeness of the amusing scene at the close of the comedy, where the Emperor confronts the ostentatiously mourning courtiers:

Ex. 7.

('Le Rossignol,' Act 3.)
(Le rideau tombe lentement.)
L'EMPEREUR.

Don - jour à tous.

On the other hand, they may not be disposed to recognise the satirical inferences against the intelligentsia in the music accompanying the effusions of the courtiers on hearing the frogs which they presume to be the famous bird favoured by the Emperor:

Ex. 8.

COURTISANS.

('Le Rossignol,' Act 1.)

mf

C'est lui

The humorous aural quality of this is, however, obvious, and it is by the introduction of this latter quality into music that Stravinsky may claim to first rank among creative artists, apart from the value of all his other innovations. In so doing he has rid music finally of the last shreds of subordination to literary purpose which dates from the inception of romanticism.

It is true that, in carrying his humour from burlesque to satire, Stravinsky has recently deliberately associated his music with a text, both actually and by tradition, permeated with literary satire. The work in question is the 'Renard: histoire burlesque en un acte,' for male voices and chamber-orchestra. The 'Roman du Renart,' from which this text derives, through centuries of similar work which includes the American 'Brer Fox' tales, is the earliest example of the practice of making bestial personages a vehicle for irony, as distinct from the materialistic fables of writers such as Aesop.

The setting by Stravinsky is no mere perfunctory appendix to the text. Both here and in the later vocal works ('Pribaoutki,' 'Berceuses du Chat,' and 'Histoire du Soldat') the music plays an independent informative part, and is intrinsically humorous, apart from all ideas of the text. I cannot but feel something essentially comic in passages such as:

EX. 9.

There are many to whom this later humorous development of Stravinsky is something in the nature of musical degeneracy. These find humour derogatory to that art which has been enshrined on solemn heights by Beethoven—as in the tune of the Choral Symphony. But there are many who believe that this solemnity often cloaks a lack of real originality and vital impulse.

The form of the later works also, by its brevity and lack of worked-out dimensions, renders these trivial to those who judge value by quantity, not quality. Life, however, goes swiftly at present, and our moods and their expression follow its course. It would further be an absurdity for Stravinsky to incorporate his light wit in the voluminous body of conventional academic forms. The most refined type of literary humour is the epigram, the essence of which is brevity. To this type of expression the later work of Stravinsky approximates.

Those who find his persistent humour lowering to the status of creative musical art cannot differentiate between 'musical comedy' and comedy in music. There is a great mass of purely humorous work, ludicrous in subject, which is yet among the world's greatest literary possessions. If we rule out humour and irony as the basis of certain types of creative art, then we must eliminate Rabelais, Cervantes, Swift, Samuel Butler, Lewis Carroll, Lear, Boccaccio, and much of Shakespeare, not to speak of thousands of lesser talents. But we are not likely to do this if sanity remains, for, in the world's present weariness of pathos and tragedy, we all have need of those things which contribute to life—'Laughter and rallying.'

'PARSIFAL': A NEW ENGLISH VERSION.

On November 17 'Parsifal' received its first performance in English, and on the same day the house of Novello issued a new English edition of the opera. Two of the first questions that arise concerning a publication of this kind have to do with the translation and adaptation of the libretto and with the pianoforte version of the score. Let us look at the new edition with these points in view. A few years ago very little importance was attached to the former need, if we may judge from the absurdities that seemed to be expected of a libretto translator. We are more exacting to-day, and any notable improvement there may be is due to our tardy realisation of the fact that such an adaptation demands much more than a mere knowledge of the two languages concerned. The adapter must have this to begin with, but he must be able to add some poetic feeling, musical knowledge (especially in regard to singing), and a good ear for rhythm and accent, both musical and literary. An adaptation must inevitably lose something of the original flavour, but, given one with these qualifications, the loss is more than made up by the convenience of having at hand an edition in the vernacular. In the Novello publication the English version has been made by Mr. Claude Aveling, whose abilities in regard to libretti, both original and adapted, are well-known. His work in this edition of 'Parsifal' will add to his reputation.

The pianoforte score contains some features calling for notice. In works of this kind, where the orchestration is of prime importance, something more than a mere pianoforte arrangement is required. An edition is doubly valuable to the student if indications of the orchestration are given. For example, a singer studying a rôle at the pianoforte wants to know a good deal about the orchestral cues. Those of the audience who really go to listen need to be familiar not only with the musical matter, but with the manner of its presentment. For such as these, the Novello edition will be invaluable. The indications are so fully marked that the pianoforte version is an excellent substitute for the full score. If there be any other edition of the kind more fully marked, we have not yet seen it. We choose, almost at random, a few bars of a quotable kind:

Lento.
LANGSAM.
Cl.-B. Solo.

p
Fag. II. III.

piu p
Fag. I.

C.-Fag.

Cl.-I. Solo.

piu p
Fag. II. III.

pp Fag. I.

Cl. B.

The advantages of this feature need no emphasising. From the player's point of view, the version is perhaps somewhat more difficult than the average of such works; but where this is so, the increased difficulty is brought about by the introduction of more orchestral detail. The anonymous arranger has certainly done his work with notable thoroughness and ability. The lay-out is very convenient. A glance at the Flower-maidens' chorus, for example, shows the music of the four groups of singers so arranged that the eye falls easily on the required stave in turning over. The four sections are indicated alternately by Roman and Arabic numerals. The print is of the usual vocal score size; and, despite the occasional complexity, is beautifully clear. The edition on all grounds (including that of cost) should be warmly welcomed.

Occasional Notes.

Speaking at the Opera House, Dudley, on October 30, in response to an address of welcome presented by the Mayor, Sir Edward Elgar said he was glad to hear that the local scheme for a war memorial included a concert hall. He regarded such a hall as an essential to every town, and he hoped Dudley would lead the way. We hope this need of concert halls is being realised by those drawing up projects for memorials. There are many large towns where the provision for concerts is miserably inadequate. It is a scandal that space and material seem to be available everywhere for variety theatres and cinemas, while so few large towns seem able to build a hall suitable for choral and orchestral concerts. Our local governing bodies need rousing in this matter. They may be helped to a favourable view if they can be brought to see that a fine concert hall is one of the most valuable of public properties. It lends itself to many non-musical purposes, such as dances, receptions, bazaars, and meetings of all kinds, which at present have to make shift in parish halls and schoolrooms.

On November 13, at the Royal College of Music, the Patrons' Fund launched what should be a very useful scheme. As our readers are aware, the old plan of giving concerts has been dropped in favour of a series of public rehearsals of new works. At the first of these rehearsals five compositions were tried: 'A Miracle,' by Frederick Laurence; 'Bergamask,' by Jane M. Lane; a Nocturne, by Albert Cazabon, a 'Setting without words' of Keats's 'Ode to Melancholy,' by R. T. Woodman, and a Symphonic poem, 'Serbia,' by Edric Cundell. There was a good level of promise in all these, and if the 'Bergamask' and 'Serbia' impressed the most, the fact need not be regarded as a depreciation of the others. A rehearsal is obviously an occasion when one records impressions, but does not venture to criticise. Here we have perhaps a hint as to a direction in which the scheme might be improved. Would it be possible for the first 'run-through' to be held privately? It is good that the public should be invited, and we hope they will come in crowds, but we doubt the wisdom of asking them to listen to anything but an approximately fair performance of the works. The stoppages and re-trial of passages are of interest to the musician, who is able to 'carry on' over the hiatus, but to the average hearer the result is a loss of interest and appreciation. It should be added that the London Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Adrian Boult, rose gallantly to the occasion. The next rehearsal takes place on November 27, at 10.0 a.m. Among the works down for trial on that and subsequent occasions are movements by Thomas F. Dunhill, Harold E. Darke, the late Ernest Farrar, Greville Cooke, John Greenwood, Edgar Bainton, and Franklin B. Sparks.

At the Royal Choral Society's New Year Concert, on January 3, the Lord Mayor will attend in State.

Programme 'howlers,' like 'Spoonerisms,' are sometimes manufactured. Among the best efforts of this kind was Rossini's 'Starboard Martyr.' The inventor was also a prophet, for in a Toronto church service list just to hand we find:

Anthem .. 'Inflammatu' (from 'Starboard Martyr') .. Rossini

In a recent issue of the Guardian appeared an advertisement recommending an organist, among the qualifications stated being: 'Would make excellent manservant, either indoors or out.' This opens up a likely field for a branch of the profession which is notoriously ill-paid. The organist-butler is perhaps a way out, though it might be difficult to say off-hand whether he should be regarded as a butler who organates, or as an organist who buttles.

From Punch, November 19:

'PUSSYFOOT' IN EGYPT.

From the programme of a cinema theatre in Cairo: Overture, 'Pumps and Circumstances.' Famous composition by Elgar.

May we suggest as another suitable item: 'Band of Hope and Glory'?

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS.

BY HARVEY GRACE.

(Concluded from November number, page 618.)

II.

First, a few words about the Passacaglia of Sonata No. 8. It is not the only specimen of Rheinberger's skill in the treatment of an Ostinato. There are four good specimens among the shorter works, the 'In Memoriam,' Op. 156, No. 1; Passacaglia, Op. 156, No. 11; Ostinato, Op. 174, No. 11; and Monologue in B flat minor. This one stands out, however, because of its ample proportions and wealth of resource.

The latter quality is severely tested, because Rheinberger adopts the old plan of keeping the theme in the same key throughout. Later composers, Karg-Elert especially, dodge rather than overcome the risk of monotony by enharmonically changing the key of the theme, or a portion of it, thus opening up new harmonic possibilities. Karg-Elert also writes an occasional variation in the major. The result is some gain in variety, but hardly enough, I think, to balance the loss in another direction. The ground bass, like the fugue, is a form with great dramatic possibilities. (Have we not recently had a proof of this in Elgar's 'Carillon'?) In the case of the Passacaglia the significance is largely due to the brooding insistence of the theme, with its minor key and solemn, measured tread. Occasional variations may be bright, and the ending animated, but all the time we are conscious of the fateful personality in the background. The bright treatment often merely accentuates this dour basis, like a sunbeam on a crag.

Rheinberger gives us twenty-four variations, and there is not one too many. The dynamic variety is greater than usual in his organ music, and much of the success of the movement is due to the fact that the ear is not fatigued, anything like a prolonged stretch of loud treatment being reserved for variations 20-24 and the Coda.

There is no lack of fine organ works in this form, the four best perhaps being by Bach, Rheinberger, Widor (the rather free specimen called 'Variations' in the eighth Symphony), and Karg-Elert in E flat minor. Most organists will put Bach's at the head, with Rheinberger's a good second. With some trepidation I vote the other way. Both produce an effect of nobility, and both are simple in essence. The other two achieve rather less, with more obvious effort. If Rheinberger's is more interesting than Bach's, it is chiefly because the latter, by leading without break into a fugue, has no proper ending. When played alone, as it usually is, one feels that it does not end: it merely leaves off. If it is played with the fugue, its impression has faded long before the fugue is over. On the other hand, a listener who had remained indifferent during the greater part of Rheinberger's Passacaglia could hardly avoid sitting up from the twentieth variation to the end. It is not only a perfect voluntary, with its quiet reflective opening and crescendo of interest; it makes an ideal recital item for the serious part of a programme. Probably most organists who have played it have had the same experience as I have—they have put it into the menu as caviare, and have been surprised to find it popular. The composer evidently prized it, for he arranged it for pianoforte solo, pianoforte duet, and full orchestra.

We are generally agreed that one of the most convincing proofs of a composer's originality is his ability to say something vital in an old form. Almost invariably, too, he will leave the form a more expressive medium than he found it. Rheinberger's fugues, like the Passacaglia, are remarkable examples of this power. They are also the most convincing of replies to modernists who, apparently, suppose that in order to be emotionally expressive, music must be nebulous or chaotic.

Fine as are the first movements of Rheinberger's Sonatas, the fugues are even better. It is not always possible to lay one's finger exactly on the points that make a piece of music convincing or otherwise. Here it is not only possible, but easy. We shall begin by noting that the excellence of Rheinberger's fugues is due primarily to their subjects. The importance of the subject has too often been lost sight of by fugue-composers. The early writers produced lengthy fugues on well-worn tags, fragments of the scale, the call of the cuckoo—any series of notes served the purpose. Many subjects were laboriously designed with a view to fitness for canon or stretto, the result too often being unfitness for anything else. Really significant subjects were rare before Bach. Even some modern composers seem to write their fugue subjects at a moment when the inventive powers are in abeyance. With Reger, for example, the most crabbed and uninteresting string of notes too often served. Merkel's subjects are clean and melodious, but lacking in character. The fact is, a perfect fugue subject is much more difficult to invent than the uninitiated might suppose. Mere tunefulness is not sufficient—indeed, a very melodious subject is apt to come out of the ordeal rather the worse for wear, if the fugue be lengthy. What is most needed is character: like a strong human personality, it should be striking rather than attractive on first acquaintance, and only the final cadence should see the end of a revelation of its excellences.

Rheinberger's best examples answer these requirements, being strong and enterprising, with an arresting quality that gives his fugues the best possible send-off. A half-dozen are quoted, in order that certain characteristics may be seen at a glance:

Ex. 1. $\text{♩} = 112.$ (Sonata iii.)

(a)

(b) (Sonata vii.)

(c) $\text{♩} = 84.$ (Sonata ix.)

(d) $\text{♩} = 76.$ (Sonata xi.)

(e) $\text{♩} = 72.$ (Sonata xii.)

(f) $\text{♩} = 66.$ (Sonata xiii.)

The interest in these, and in Rheinberger's fugue subjects generally, is threefold—melodic, harmonic, and rhythmic. The first is the more obvious quality, and need not be dwelt on. In regard to the second, the chromatic auxiliary notes not only give freshness to the theme, but lead to interesting harmonic developments later. For example, the G sharp in (a) is sometimes treated as a harmony note, sometimes as an auxiliary. In the latter case it is boldly used against the natural.

At first sight, the beginning of the third bar of (c) looks like an engraver's error. It would be interesting to see how examination candidates would treat this unexpected and apparently illogical F sharp. The simple plan is to regard the false relation as being one to the eye only. For example, here is Rheinberger's very natural harmonization, with the subject in the bass:

Ex. 3.

In (b), (c), (d), and (e) we have examples of a favourite construction of Rheinberger's, the subjects consisting of two contrasted sections, the first weighty, the second more animated. We find the same feature in the Fugues of Nos. 2, 5, 7, 10, 14, and 17. Undoubtedly the movements gain much in rhythmic variety from this fact. Is it treason to say that some of Bach's organ fugues suffer from the subject being too continuously in semiquavers? The fault is less apparent in the '48' because of the variety that may be imparted by accent. Rhythmically the above subjects speak for themselves. Before leaving this point, I add that if any further proof of Rheinberger's knack of turning out striking themes for fugal treatment is needed it will be found in his 'Twenty-four Fughettas in Strict Style'—a fine set of tabloid fugues, full of invention, and much less strict than the threat in the title would lead one to expect. It is, of course, another aspect of his gift for writing excellent short pieces, and for being able to say something interesting at once, with no preliminary working up steam.

Rheinberger's concessions to the text-books usually end at a very early stage in these fugues. Where is the regular counter-subject? Where are the episodes, evolved as per rule from some portion of the subject or counter-subject? Where is the faithful sticking to the text, so that every bar of the fugue shows the relationship thereto? Where are the cunning devices of the scholastic fugue?

There are no regular counter-subjects in Rheinberger. Episodes of the usual kind are present, but they are often the merest links. In no less than eleven of the seventeen fugues the necessary contrast is provided by entirely fresh material, or by the use of a theme from the first movement. It may be argued that the introduction of such irrelevant matter may result in an interesting movement, but that the movement is not a fugue. Similarly, we know that the older theorists hardly mentioned Bach, regarding his fugues as poor models. And one of our native worthies (Dr. Crotch) pencilled comments in his copy of the '48,' pointing out Bach's sins as a fugal writer.

Certainly Rheinberger's practice may be justified by one or two experiments of Bach.

In some of the '48,' e.g., the E flat Fugue in Book 1, Bach shifts the centre of interest from the working of the subject to the episode, and the organ fugues contain examples of the introduction of important sections of new matter—the 'Wedge' fugue is the most striking case. Rheinberger, however, makes a useful development of a practice to which Bach was evidently feeling his way. If the 'Wedge' experiment is not entirely successful, it is because the irrelevant matter is decidedly less interesting than its surroundings. I suppose most of us will agree that the movement falls off somewhat hereabouts. The very fact of the 'Wedge' giving an impression of being, as Parry says, 'singularly loose in structure' proves that Bach had not solved the problem of 'relieving the extreme insistence on the striking subject.*' The solution has certainly been found by Rheinberger. His fresh matter is in every case a decided contrast in style to what has gone before; it increases, or at least maintains, the interest, and (most important of all) despite its independence it invariably fits well into the scheme.

Rheinberger adds to these sins as a fugal writer a very sparing use of the skilful devices on which the older composers laid such store. This, we know, was not from lack of ability. If you want to see what he could do with canon, turn to the charming specimen in F, in the first set of Trios, and the canon-fugue which forms the middle section of 'Solemn Festival'

Op. 174, No. 7. That his fame as a contrapuntist was well-earned is proved on almost every page of his works, but you find little use of skill for skill's sake. Even in the Ricercare of Sonata No. 15 there is an amount of freedom that probably no other Ricercare ever showed, and a shorter work bearing the same title in Op. 174 is not only free from pedantry, but has a delightfully tuneful second theme which has no connection with the subject proper. The only fugue in which Rheinberger seems to be laying himself out to be clever is in that of the first Sonata, a scholarly piece of work with some imposing passages, but just a little obvious in its exploitation of strettos, augmentation, and so forth. By the way, this fugue and that of Sonata No. 4 are the only two that have not first-rate subjects. No. 1 is too stolid, and No. 4 is the chromatic scale—though in the latter case a much better fugue results than might be expected, thanks to the admirable diatonic foil provided by the free passages.

A good stretto is an excellent wind-up to a fugue, but a better way, I think, is that adopted by Rheinberger in some cases, i.e., an emphatic statement of the subject. For example, here is his way of saying good-bye to the subject (c) quoted above:

Ex. 4.

Note at the beginning two examples of the composer's favourite false relation—the leading note in one part, capped by the tonic 7th in another.

Another example of this method is to be found in the fugue in F (Sonata No. 7), where we have a really thrilling last page, the subject being massively delivered, and then carried on over a tonic pedal. The fugue in B (Sonata No. 17) ends with the subject stalking along in the bass, under rich four-part polyphony. In some cases the Coda consists of a sonorous restatement of a subject from the first movement—a fine effect when the Sonata is played in full. In the B flat and B major fugues (Sonatas Nos. 9 and 17) a subject from the first movement is worked into the texture of the fugue with excellent results, especially in the case of the former.

Of double fugues there are only two examples, F and B minor (Sonatas Nos. 7 and 10). Few double fugues escape being tedious, because the exposition of the second subject comes on the hearer at a time when he has a right to expect some increasing interest in the treatment of the first. Moreover, the length is almost invariably excessive. Rheinberger avoids both pitfalls, the B minor fugue being the shortest of the set, and the F major only moderately long. In both cases, too, the subjects are concise.

* Parry, 'John Sebastian Bach,' p. 511.

So much for the general character of the movements. Let us look at a couple in more detail. I choose those from Sonatas Nos. 13 and 15 partly because they differ widely in character, but even more because they are not so often heard as they deserve to be. As I said last month, there is an unfortunate tendency to overplay a few of the earlier Sonatas to the detriment of the remainder.

We will take the Ricercare from No. 15 first, because it is slightly the stricter of the two. A Ricercare, we all know, is supposed to be a fugue in which scientific device is very much to the fore, and certainly there is no lack of skill in the example before us. The subject covers a good deal of ground, owing to its octave leap, but is otherwise less striking than is usual with Rheinberger:

The treatment is far less strict than we should expect in a Ricercare. There is no regular counter-subject, and the closest stretto work, curiously, appears not in the fugue, but in the introduction, where the subject is announced in diminution with some close imitative treatment of its first six notes. Nor does the composer feel bound to live up to the title by avoiding anything like a digression. On the contrary, after two-and-a-half pages of working the subject in the ordinary way and by inversion, he comes to a cadence on the dominant, draws a double bar through the score, changes the key-signature from D to F, and begins a section headed 'Intermezzo.' By way of connecting link with what has gone before, he takes the first few notes of the fugue subject, inverts them, and makes them do duty for the commencement of the new theme:

As in all the fugues containing interpolated matter, effective contrast is obtained. Here we drop polyphony in favour of a tune, a running accompaniment, and the simplest of basses. The Intermezzo lasts for two-and-a-half pages, the Ricercare being resumed with eight bars of stretto. The join is made very naturally by using the inverted form of the subject, which, as we have seen, provided the beginning of the Intermezzo theme. This little bit of stretto over, the real business of the final portion starts, the fugue theme, now right side up, being given to the tenor, with a new counter-subject of an unexpectedly lighting character. This counter-subject is used consistently during the rest of the fugal portion of the movement, save for the final entry of the subject, which is given to the pedals with a characteristic maestoso accompaniment, the Sonata ending with a broad version of the pastoral theme with which it opened. The whole movement is an excellent example of fine workmanship used in an attractive way. It is rather difficult, but yields full value for the necessary work.

The other fugue to be considered is that in E flat minor, the subject being quoted in Ex. 1 (f). The first two-and-a-half pages consist of somewhat sombre working in five parts. The key of D flat is then established, and a full close is apparently imminent, when the cadence is interrupted and we plunge at once into new matter:

One does not look to a fugue for such a violent change as this. The impatient thrusting aside of the rather austere five-part polyphony is really dramatic. The wedge-shaped subject holds the field for a page, after which the fugue-subject reappears in D minor, accompanied by a single part in quavers, which thus carries on some of the feeling of the wedge-subject, and prepares the way for an emphatic statement (in F minor) of the subject by the pedals, under three- and four-part manual work of increasingly animated character. The climax is reached on the following page, with the subject again in the pedals, richly accompanied:

After a page of this we have a bridge-passage (quoted in the November Musical Times, Ex. 8), leading to a Coda based on the broad second subject of the first movement, a triumphant ending to a remarkably fine fugue, one full of emotion, and with here and there a note of real passion. Such works as this help us to modify our views on the fugal form, and to see what Vaughan Williams is driving at when he says 'perhaps Bach was attracted to the fugal means of expression because of its romantic possibilities.'*

With the above examples of Rheinberger's un-academic methods before him, the reader will appreciate the unconscious humour of the following expressions by the late J. F. Runciman in The Chord, Nos. 1 and 3:

' the dreary wastes of counterpoint, called organ sonatas, by Rheinberger. Surely a page of noble Bach is better than the wretched contrapuntal exercises of Rheinberger—no one but an organist would dream of calling them music.'

The fugal form has suffered, perhaps more than any other, from the fact that it has been too often the kindest of friends to the composer with nothing to say. He had only to write down a series of notes, add a counterpoint to the answer, and he was well on his way. One thing brought up another, and by the time the counter exposition was passed he had produced something that really sounded far better than it deserved to. Sometimes in working so far the mental friction generated a little warmth, or even struck out a few sparks, with the result that the form lifted the composer a bit above himself. But he and his like so damaged its reputation that the very title has almost become a synonym for dullness. It is a pity that although almost all the great composers wrote fugues, the results do not, as a rule, show them at their best. Only two men have given us not a few, but many, proofs that, so far from the fugue being a strict form it is one of the freest and most expressive. Appropriately, both men were organists—Bach and Rheinberger.

* Grove's Dictionary, Art. 'Fugue.'

THE 'CLAUQUE' IN ITALY.

BY CLAUDE TREVOR.

If I mistake not, the claque as it is known to us originated about a century ago in France, gradually finding its way to other countries and becoming one of the necessities of the theatrical artist, both operatic and otherwise, and also at the same time one of the annoyances of the intelligent of the theatre-going public, and by its tyranny adding not a little to the already thorny pathway inseparable from the histrionic career. My own career as a singing-teacher of very many years' standing in Italy has brought to my notice the pernicious influence of the members of the body of individuals who should without hesitation be banished from every theatre with the slightest pretention to be seriously considered as worthy of any regard as a temple of art. It is therefore with the claque of Italy I propose to deal in the present article, though a few words as to its origin in France may first of all be of interest.

When these applaudisseurs engagés first became a recognized part and parcel of the theatre they, as to-day, occupied the very best portion of the parterre under the chandelier suspended from the centre of the auditorium, and were known by the titles of chevaliers du lustre and sometimes romains du parterre. A little more than half a century ago the name claque or claqueurs took the place of the former more grandiose denomination of the body of these 'gentlemen,' with whose assistance singers of the foremost rank would no sooner think of dispensing than they would with their stage 'make-up.' About the middle of the last century the leader of the claque, known as the chef de claque, would treat in the most business-like manner with the management of the theatre where his followers and himself were employed, and sign a regular contract specifying the obligations to be discharged during the performances of the operas to be presented during the season. Some time back I was shown, among other interesting French newspapers of the period treating of musical events, a paragraph which I here reproduce. It ran thus:

'Some days prior to the first representation negotiations are entered into between the claque and the composer. The chef is present at all rehearsals, and is made to understand where the most salient and effective portions in the work occur, the situations of greatest importance, the weaker points which are to be covered by judicious approval, and those in which unbridled applause must break forth with irresistible ardour—even to the interruption of the action. After treating with the composer comes the turn of the singers. This one requires a great deal of encouragement on his or her entrance on to the stage; that one does not care so much for the greatest applause in the first two Acts, but approbation must be unlimited in Act 3, where the greatest effect is expected to be made. Another wishes for discreet applause all through, but insistent demands to appear alone after the fall of the curtain. Of course those disposed to make the handsomest terms with the chef will naturally receive greatest enthusiasm, and only when he has thoroughly understood what he and his satellites are expected to do with regard to composers and artists does the management announce the date of the first performance.'

In Italy the services of the claque are certainly more artistically arranged (if the name Art may be desecrated by such, in many cases, false approbation), the members being dispersed about the theatre, knots arrested the creature, and departed with him to the police office. It was gratifying to learn later he was not only condemned to a term of imprisonment, but heavily fined into the bargain; yet on his term of incarceration being ended he returned to the scene of his old triumphs! I rejoice to say that without the use of the claque the lady scored a huge success, though her companions with whom she sang had recourse to her persecutor's gang of followers. It is a great pity other singers have not followed her example, but signs are not wanting that some are at length heartily sick of the system, for a short while ago several singers of the Scala, Milan, collaborated to denounce the extortionate demands of the claque at that theatre. It is greatly to be hoped that this may be the beginning of the end of such a state of things, at any rate in Italy. I have never yet heard of any attempt, up to now, to eradicate the nuisance in France. It has been the boast of Londoners that no such system exists at Covent Garden. This is quite a mistake. I have night after night seen knots of individuals (always the same) scattered among the throng in the amphitheatre who are as great claquers as are to be found anywhere else. Of course it is not recognized—like other evils that flourish!

[Mr. William Child's review of new music is unavoidably held over.—ED., M.T.]

For applause on entrance, if a gentleman 25 francs.

„ if a lady ... 15 „

Ordinary applause during performance,
each 10 "

Insistent applause during performance,
each 15 "

Still more insistent applause 17 ,,

For interruptions with 'Bene!' or
'Bravo!' 5 "

For a 'Bis' at any cost	50	..
---------------------------------------	----	----

Wild enthusiasm ... A special sum to be arranged.

The above will give an idea of the systematic and ludicrous scheme. I will give an example of an artfully arranged ruse played upon the gang by a celebrated tenor at the Carlo Felice Theatre, Genoa, on the occasion of his singing there some years ago in 'Cavalleria Rusticana.' He was well known to be past-master of long breaths, but his success on the occasion referred to was beyond expectation, particularly in the Brindisi. In his famous high note with which he ended, after holding it for many seconds (naturally already arranged), part of the claque began applauding while another part hushed it down, giving the singer time to take fresh breath and go on with the note, never, to the ordinary listener, having relinquished his hold on it. Only the initiated saw through the trick ; but it succeeded admirably, and have rarely experienced such a scene of delirium that it called forth. The claque is really not more absurd than the habit of handing wreaths and garlands up to the singers when often they have done quite the reverse to deserve them. A diva once came to sing in Florence, and knowing the lady and greatly admiring her delightful talent, I wished to present her on her benefit night with a corbeille of choice flowers. Failing to find anything worthy of her acceptance, one florist told me in confidence that her husband had bought up everything in the way of a blossom to make a grand display ! This is only one of hundreds of cases. Often on a benefit night in Italy handsome gifts in the way of jewellery, &c., are presented to the bénéficiaire. These are not infrequently hired for the occasion, and returned to the owners next day !

I should add that the claque, in spite of all their well-paid exertions, cannot possibly always guarantee a success, even to the handsomest remunerators, who often have more money than talent or voice; but their efficacy in guiding and manoeuvring applause is beyond controversy, provided their employers are possessed of genius. I remember once discussing and condemning the claque system with a celebrated singer, who defended it in this way:

'My dear friend, we singers have the moments of our glory counted, even those of us with the longest careers; applause being the breath of our nostrils, the more we get of it the happier we are, and even the entire approval of the general public does not suffice if by opening our purse strings we can get still more. Once off the stage and we have freed ourselves from our make-up, who cares any more about us. And when the time comes when from waning voice or ill-health we must perforce retire, if we live twelve, fifteen, or twenty years beyond the expiration of the first period we are forgotten, and when death at length claims us, the majority may consider themselves lucky if a funeral eulogy of a dozen lines finds a corner in one of the daily papers, notwithstanding the thousands and thousands to whom we have given pleasure, or moved to tears in every part of the globe. If, therefore, we are greedy for all the applause we can get during our short triumph, and are willing to pay for a good deal of it, don't grudge our indulging our weakness.'

There was something infinitely pathetic in my friend's argument, but it did not change my opinion, and I consider the whole claque scheme one to be entirely and unconditionally condemned.

The Musician's Bookshelf.

BY 'FESTE.'

Truth may or may not be stranger than fiction: well set forth it is certainly more interesting. That is why Ethel Smyth's 'Impressions that Remained' (Longmans, Green, & Co., two volumes, 28s. net) is one of the most engrossing of recent books. To use an expression in keeping with a record wherein sport has no small share, it can give even a good novel a start and a beating. Those of us who have wondered at the masculine vigour of Miss Smyth's music will wonder no longer after reading these memoirs. Only an uncommonly powerful personality could have overcome the obstacles which lay between her and the musical career on which she had set her mind, and for which she fought her parents for years. The output of such an one could hardly be airy and graceful trifles. It is interesting to speculate on the possible development of her talent had she been born thirty years later, when the bitter prejudice against a woman's adoption of the musical profession had almost died. She would no doubt have gone to one of our principal teaching institutions, and all would have been plain sailing—comparatively, that is, for she was not called 'the stormy petrel' for nothing. Any academic groves frequented by Ethel Smyth would have been calm only at intervals. But thirty years ago a woman who wished to take music seriously, or to be taken seriously herself, simply had to go to Germany. It was not that she could get better tuition in Germany than in England. Miss Smyth describes her lessons from Reinecke and Jadassohn as 'farcical.' Maas, her pianoforte tutor, was 'conscientious but dull.' For teaching of that kind she need not have gone abroad. Germany, however, had one thing which England had not, and to Miss Smyth it was the chief need:

To me [she says] the only thing that counts, being a matter that boom and fashion cannot affect, is the general level of musical intelligence in a country, including the part played by art in domestic life; and certainly at that time Germany was ideal in that respect.

For musical readers, the chief interest of the volumes will centre round the years spent in Germany and Italy, especially the former. But there is much good reading before that stage is reached, the palm going to Chapter iv. ('My Father'), a delightful sketch that ensures Major-General Smyth a niche beside Colonel Newcome. No less admirable, though less amusing (save for one priceless passage on page 46) is the description of the author's mother. Indeed, this knack of hitting off neat pen-portraits is a gift of which Miss Smyth has far more than the average share.

One of the earliest musical influences in her life was the arrival in her neighbourhood of an officer in the Army Service Corps named Ewing, since known the world over as the composer of the hymn-tune to 'Jerusalem the Golden.' Here was a composer who appealed to others of the family:

Even my father, who hadn't an ounce of music in his composition, may have been moved by the news, for that hymn-tune, in which there is a sort of groping ecstasy confined in 'Ancient and Modern' fetters, was considered almost as integral a part of the Church Service as one of the Collects.

Fortunately, Ewing turned out to be not only 'a real musician,' but 'one of the most delightful, original, and whimsical personalities in the world.'

From him the future composer received her first harmony lessons. More, this hymn-tune composer, whose 'real instrument was the organ,' introduced her to Wagner. He was a clumsy pianist, but, 'aided by a very harsh, cracked voice, he banged and bellowed his way through the scores of "Lohengrin" and "The Flying Dutchman."' Among the batches of letters in the volumes, an honourable place must be given to those written by the excellent and enthusiastic Ewing to his pupil. The lessons were not long continued, the paternal foot coming down heavily. Ewing the hymn composer was one thing; Ewing the teacher who was aiding and abetting a rebellious daughter was quite another. But there was no stopping the young enthusiast. On the evening of a day on which she had been to a concert in London, and had come back full of Brahms and resolution there was a discussion at dinner as to which Drawing Room I had better be presented at. Suddenly I announced it was useless to present me at all, since I intended to go to Leipzig, even if I had to run away from home, and starve when I got there.

This was the beginning of the last round in the fight, and it was shortened and won by methods 'used afterwards in political warfare by other women, who, having plumbed the depths of masculine prejudice, came to see this was the only road to victory.' She made things so hot for those at home that in self-defence they had to let her go, and on July 26, 1877, she went.

She fell on her feet, as may be expected, and was soon very much at home. Very early she found what she wanted in the domestic side of music in Germany. Here is a little picture of the Röntgen ménage at Leipzig. Röntgen was leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra, and he and his family were among the first friends Miss Smyth made on her arrival in Germany. They were a family that could raise a pianoforte quintet among themselves and, together with their Röntgen cousins, a small orchestra. Every violin sonata, every pianoforte trio or quartet printed, would Frau Röntgen or her daughter tackle—the mother's performance unplanned, perhaps, but of a fire and musicality that carried all before it. Their one servant was seldom a cooking genius, and always needed supervision, and between two movements of a trio Frau Röntgen would cry: 'Line, thou canst take the Scherzo,' and fly off to the kitchen, Line replacing her on the music-stool till eagerly swept off it again. I remember one occasion when dear old Papa Röntgen, as we used privately to call him, who had a delicate digestion, complained of the Egg-Dish (I do not know how else to translate that basis of German existence, 'die Eier-Speise'), and his wife said with simple contrition: 'Yes, I know, it is my fault; I ought to have waited to see her brown it. . . . But thou knowest how I love that Andante!'

Was ever Egg-Dish ruined in a better cause? Here was indeed a wife above rubies, though only to be fully appreciated by an eupeptic husband. But perhaps Herr Röntgen began as such, becoming dyspeptic as a result of favourite Andantes.

Here is another glimpse of the Röntgens, at a New Year's Eve revel:

We had a grand feast, with sweet champagne in very long narrow glasses that held nothing, pâté de foie gras, and hot punch—a red essence of some unknown alcoholic derivation, mixed to one's taste with boiling water. . . . After supper we all sang part-songs in which I was tenor, when not bass, and it was remarked by Papa Röntgen that the more punch was drunk the more I pushed up the pitch,—an interesting effect of alcohol which makes one think that to hand it round before certain a cappella pieces at concerts would be a good plan.

'Papa' Röntgen made a beautiful end. As leader, it fell to him to play the exacting violin solo in the Benedictus of Beethoven's Mass in D, which was performed annually. On one occasion he played it so superbly that his hearers were amazed, saying that even in his prime he had never done better. 'He went home like a man in a happy dream, and remarked at supper, "For the first time in my life after the Benedictus I can say it . . . to-night I satisfied myself." Uttering which words he leant back gently, smiled . . . and was dead.'

In 1887 came a meeting with Henschel, of whose gifts and personality Miss Smyth writes with enthusiasm. Soon after, Brahms came on the scene, and Miss Smyth was suddenly presented to him after a rehearsal of his D major Symphony. Henschel had shown him some of her compositions, telling him that she had never studied:—

At that time Brahms was clean shaven, and in the whirl of emotion I only remember a strong alarming face, very penetrating bright blue eyes, and my own desire to sink through the floor when he said, as I then thought by way of a compliment, but as I now know in a spirit of scathing irony: 'So this is the young lady who writes sonatas and doesn't know counterpoint!' I afterwards learned that Henschel had left a MS. of mine (two songs) with him, that he subsequently looked at them, and remarked to Frau Röntgen that evidently Henschel had written them himself!

Miss Smyth became a devout Brahmsian, but only so far as his music was concerned. The man himself she found neither attractive nor impressive. His reputation for brains and wit, she thinks, rested on slender foundations. But the German standard of humour may be to blame. A woman with so uncommonly developed a sense of humour as Miss Smyth must have been somewhat exacting. She reproduces a Brahms repartee which was much quoted as a brilliant effort:

After some performance, Limburger once remarked in his airy way, 'Really, Herr Doctor, I don't know where you mean to take us in the slow movement, whether to Heaven or Hell!' and Brahms replied with a mock bow, 'Whichever you please, Herr Consul.'

If this was 'brilliant,' what must the other kind have been like?

But Brahms's taste in jokes, we are told, 'left much to be desired.' Miss Smyth gives us one specimen, mercifully leaving it in German, though one need be no linguist to understand it—with rising gorge. His manners were on a level with his humour, save in a few quarters where he really felt respect and showed it. Miss Smyth ends her very interesting Brahms chapter by admitting that her impressions hardly do him justice. But she rightly says that a writer of memoirs must give first-hand views:

I saw integrity, sincerity, kindness of heart, generosity to opponents, and a certain nobility of soul which stamps all his music; but on the other hand I saw coarseness, uncivilisedness, a defective perception of subtle shades in people and things, lack of humour, and of course the inevitable and righteous selfishness of people who have a message of their own to deliver and can't run errands for others.

The glimpses of Joachim do not show him in very favourable light. The fact that he regarded Miss Smyth as having no talent matters little, especially as he solemnly retracted this view in later years when the composer 'didn't care two straws what he thought.' She was then glad she had never been among his favourites. 'As a rule pedantry and total absence of the sacred spark were their chief characteristics, and with very, very few exceptions they all fizzled out in after life.' His refusal to introduce her Violin Sonata in London drew a letter that must have touched the violinist on the raw:

I said that of course an honest opinion could never be resented, but at the same time I much wondered if he considered Mr. So-and-so a genuine talent—this being a youth never heard of before or since, whose deadly dull Opus 1 he had recently produced in London, and whose mama was a giver of smart musical parties, at which the Joachim Quartet performed about once a fortnight, for fabulous fees, throughout the season. This letter received no reply.

It was certainly not an easy one to answer.

Fortunately, against these unpleasant aspects of the great we have to set many delightful ones, e.g., the passages referring to, and letters from, Grieg, Tchaikovsky, Henschel, Clara Schumann and her daughters, Lili Wach (née Mendelssohn), Hermann Levi, Jenny Lind, Sullivan, Sir Walter Parratt, and others.

Miss Smyth's reason for taking up organ-playing is characteristic:

We now had a very decent little organ at Frimley Church, and I became bitten with organ-playing, which, as a sort of athletic exercise, appealed to me far more than the violin, not to speak of the prospect of tackling Bach on his own instrument.

There speaks the horsewoman, swimmer, skater, mountaineer, tennis player, golfer, cricketer, cyclist, and militant suffragist! She took organ lessons at Leipsic, and later on, at Windsor from Sir Walter Parratt, 'revelling in Bach as played by him, who better than any other organist I have ever met, knows how it should be done.'

One result of this branch of study is seen in a set of six short choral preludes published in 1913, dedicated to Sir Walter. Five of the six might have come from Bach's pen, and No. 6 bears the stamp of Brahms in every line. No. 3, on 'Schwing dich auf zu deinem Gott' is a gem, full of the Bach spirit as well as the letter. But why did the composer make such liberal use of the tenor clef, and thus prevent them from being so well-known as they deserve to be? We can imagine her deciding that every organist worthy of the name should be at home in other than the commonly used clefs, and refusing to compromise. But very few players, their student days over, are ever called upon to read from alto and tenor clefs, and so they cannot be blamed for getting rusty.

Her leaning towards the organ was no doubt helped on by a meeting with Ouseley, with whom she spent a week end at Bramshill, near Frimley:

Strange to say, a new musical experience awaited me at Bramshill—Sir Frederick, who had studied music at Leipsic under Mendelssohn himself, being one of the very last of the old race of improvisers. He would ask you to give him a theme for a fugue. You invented, of course, as crackjaw a one as possible, and off he started. A good deal of it was learned padding, but immensely musical and effective, and I, who had heard nothing like it at Leipsic or elsewhere, was much impressed.

Apropos fugues, we have an amusing account of Clara Schumann and a fugal essay of Miss Smyth:

I had written a little 'Prelude and Fugue for Thin People,' thus styled because the hands crossed rapidly and continually, deeply invading each other's territory. This piece she [Clara Schumann] determined to study, and when I gently demurred, from modesty of course, she flared up in her own peculiar fashion with: 'Aber so stark bin ich doch nicht!' ('I'm not so fat as all that!') . . . Her daughters reported her as completely engrossed in this athletic problem, muttering to herself amidst her struggles: 'Gehen muss es aber!' ('It must be managed!'), and in the end it was dedicated to her, title and all, by special request.

Miss Smyth saw a good deal of those two most industrious of biographers, Spitta and Chrysander. In view of the present important work being done in reviving the output of our old polyphonic writers, it is interesting to read that Chrysander told Miss Smyth (in 1879) that 'there were masses of yet undeciphered Early English music in the British Museum compared to which the work of Palestrina & Co. was the groping of little children,' or words to that effect. She might have retorted that the Germans had to have Bach re-discovered for them after a generation of neglect.

Perhaps Miss Smyth's vivid orchestration is almost entirely owing to a remark of Tchaikovsky, who held (and Miss Smyth felt bound to agree with him) that the Brahms School was neglectful of colour:

'Not one of them can instrumentate,' he said, and he earnestly begged me to turn my attention at once to the orchestra, and not to be prudish about using the medium for all it is worth. 'What happens,' he asked, 'in ordinary conversation? If you have to do with really alive people, listen to the inflections in the voices . . . there's instrumentation for you!' And I followed his advice on the spot, went to concerts with the sole object of studying orchestral effects, filled notebook on notebook with impressions, and ever since have been at least as much interested in sounds as in sense, considering the two things indivisible.

This question of orchestration was one of those that sent Miss Smyth back to Germany time after time. At the end of one spell in England (largely given up to cricket, 'a very jolly mania while it lasted'), it became more and more clear that unless my musician's soul was to be lost I must go back to Germany; back to a country, to mention one point only, where friendly conductors give one a free run-through of one's first orchestral attempts—a thing impossible, of course, in mercenary England.

If Miss Smyth had been at the Royal College of Music on November 13 she would have rejoiced to see that, thanks to the Patron's Fund, our orchestral composers are now blessed with the opportunity denied her. This is only one respect in which the reader of her book will be conscious of great progress in England, though there is still much leeway to make up.

Hereabouts I begin to see that many of the notes I had made on the musical matters in 'Impressions that Remained' must be scrapped for want of space. But I must find room to remove some inevitably false impressions. First, this review being written for a musical journal, must concern itself only with that side of the book which has to do with our art. It has needed some self-denial so to restrict myself, because the main interest of the work is by no means musical, and I am anxious that the reader should not suppose that it is merely a set of musical reminiscences. It covers very wide ground, and its interests are literary, social, sporting, and, above all, intensely human. The non-musical portions contain an abundance of good stories, shrewd bits of observation, and happy character sketches. Nor is it by any means a book of amusing gossip. There are many touching pages, and the account of the author's friendship and breach with Elizabeth von Herzogenberg is full of poignancy. On this, as on the rest of the more intimately personal revelations, the reviewer is disinclined to dwell. Such things are to be read, but not discussed. I have only to say that they make up an arresting picture of a vivid and extraordinary personality.

Miss Smyth has a gift of literary expression rare among musicians. In purely technical matter, such as punctuation and other details (e.g., her frequent misplacement of the word 'only') she is rather careless, but in what matters far more, the power of making us see what she wants us to see, her skill is remarkable. I spoke of her knack of hitting off a character, shown specially in the chapters devoted to her parents. It is worth noting that this power is revealed not only in dealing with human beings. There is perhaps nothing more delightful than the passages in which her dog 'Marco' figures. Dog-lovers will feel that they know 'Marco' as well as they do their own particular four-footed chum, and will mentally pat him. 'Impressions that Remained' will take its place among the best books of memoirs in our language. Its readers, noting that it breaks off at the year 1891, will hope that the author will before long take up her parable again, and give us her impressions of the two subsequent decades.

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS.

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

IV.—WILLIAM CRANE.

Although it is unfortunate that Crane's compositions have been lost, or at least have so far eluded discovery, yet his importance as a contributor to the development of Tudor music-drama and his reconstruction of the Chapel Royal music cannot be overlooked. As deputy to Cornish (whose biography has previously been given*) he took part in several music-plays, and early attracted the notice of King Henry VIII. Cornish, Kite, and Crane were then prime favourites

* See William Cornish: No. III. of present series, p. 607, November issue.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL FOR FOUR VOICES.

Words by the Rev. J. M. NEALE.

Tune from Piae Cantiones, 1582.
Set for Chorus (S.A.T.B.) by GEOFFREY SHAW.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Briskly.

SOPRANO. f Good King Wen - ces - las looked out On the feast of Ste - phen,

ALTO. f Good King Wen - ces - las looked out On the feast of Ste - phen,

TENOR. f Good King Wen - ces - las looked out On the feast of Ste - phen,

BASS. f Good King Wen - ces - las looked out On the feast of Ste - phen, PIANO. f (For practice only.) Briskly.

When the snow lay round a - bout, Deep, and crisp, and e - ven: Bright-ly shone the

When the snow lay round a - bout, Deep, and crisp, and e - ven: Bright-ly shone the

When the snow lay round a - bout, Deep, and crisp, and e - ven: Bright-ly shone the

When the snow lay round a - bout, Deep, and crisp, and e - ven: Bright-ly shone the Copyright, 1919, by Novello and Company, Limited.

moon that night, Though the frost was cru - el, When a poor man came in sight,

moon that night, Though the frost was cru - el, When a poor man came in sight,

moon that night, Though the frost was cru - el, When a poor man came in sight,

moon that night, Though the frost was cru - el, When a poor man came in sight,

This system contains four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The vocal parts are in treble clef with a key signature of three flats (B-flat, E-flat, A-flat). The piano accompaniment is in bass clef. The lyrics are repeated four times across the staves.

Gath - 'ring win - ter fu - - el.

Gath - 'ring win - ter fu - - el.

Gath - 'ring win - ter fu - - el. mf "Hith - er, page, and stand by me,

Gath - 'ring win - ter fu - - el.

Gath - 'ring win - ter fu - - el. mf

This system continues the musical score. It includes four vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are repeated four times. The third vocal staff includes the instruction mf and the text "Hith - er, page, and stand by me,". The piano accompaniment also includes the instruction mf in the final measure.

(humming.) p

h'm h'm

(humming.) p

h'm h'm

If thou know'st it, tell - ing, Yon - der pea - sant, who is he? Where and what his dwell - ing?"

(humming.) p

h'm h'm

p p

mf

"Sire, he lives a good league hence, Un - der - neath the moun - tain;

mp legato.

h'm

(humming.) legato. mp

h'm

mf

Right a - gainst the for - est fence, By Saint Ag - nes' foun - - tain."

mf h'm mf h'm mp legato. mf h'm h'm

This system contains the first five staves of the musical score. It includes vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "Right a - gainst the for - est fence, By Saint Ag - nes' foun - - tain." Dynamic markings include mf (mezzo-forte) and mp legato. (mezzo-piano, legato). The tempo is marked h'm (half-minute).

"Bring me flesh, and bring me wine, Bring me pine-logs hith - er; Thou and I will see him dine,

p h'm p h'm mf p h'm mf p mf

This system contains the next five staves of the musical score. The lyrics are: "Bring me flesh, and bring me wine, Bring me pine-logs hith - er; Thou and I will see him dine," Dynamic markings include p (piano), mf (mezzo-forte), and h'm (half-minute). The tempo is marked h'm (half-minute).

ah Page and mon-arch forth they went, Forth they went to - ah Page and mon-arch forth they went, Forth to -

When we bear them thith - er." Page and mon-arch forth they went, Forth to - ah Page and mon-arch forth they went, Forth to -

- geth - er; Thro' the rude wind's wild la-ment, And the bit - ter wea - ther.

- geth - er; Thro' the rude wind's wild la - ment, And the bit - ter wea - - - - - ther.

- geth - er; Thro' the rude wind's wild la-ment, And the bit - ter wea - ther.

- geth - er; Thro' the wind's la - ment, And the bit - ter wea - - - - - ther...

A very little slower.

p

"Sire, the night is dark - er now, And the wind blows strong - er; Fails my heart, I pp h'm

pp h'm ah

pp h'm

A very little slower.

pp

a tempo. mf

know not how, I can go no long - er." ah

a tempo. mf ah

a tempo. boldly (melody well standing out). f

"Mark my foot-steps, good my page, Tread thou in them

a tempo. mf ah

h'm

a tempo. f mf mf

First system of the musical score. It features a vocal line with lyrics and a piano accompaniment. The vocal line includes the lyrics "bold - ly : Thou shalt find the win-ter's rage Freeze thy blood less cold - - ly." and two "ah" vocalizations. The piano part includes a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. Dynamics include mf (mezzo-forte).

mf mf

ah

mf

ah

bold - ly : Thou shalt find the win-ter's rage Freeze thy blood less cold - - ly."

mf

ah

A little slower, and dignified.

Second system of the musical score. It features a vocal line with lyrics and a piano accompaniment. The vocal line includes the lyrics "In his mas-ter's steps he trod, Where the snow lay dint - ed ; Heat was in the ve - ry sod" repeated three times. The piano part includes a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. Dynamics include f (forte).

f

In his mas-ter's steps he trod, Where the snow lay dint - ed ; Heat was in the ve - ry sod

f

In his mas-ter's steps he trod, Where the snow lay dint - ed ; Heat was in the ve - ry sod

f

In his mas-ter's steps he trod, Where the snow lay dint - ed ; Heat was in the ve - ry sod ..

f

In his mas-ter's steps he trod, Where the snow lay dint - ed ; Heat was in the ve - ry sod

A little slower, and dignified.

Third system of the musical score. It features a piano accompaniment. The piano part includes a grand staff with treble and bass clefs. Dynamics include f (forte).

f

Which the saint had print - ed. Therefore, Chris-tian men, be sure, Wealth or rank pos - sess - ing,

Which the saint had print - ed. Therefore, Chris-tian men, be sure, Wealth or rank pos - sess - ing,

Which the saint had print - ed. Therefore, Chris-tian men, be sure, Wealth or rank pos - sess - ing,
There - - fore, be sure,

Which the saint had print - ed. There - fore, be sure, Wealth or rank pos - sess - ing,

ff

poco rit. very broadly. fff
Ye who now will bless the poor, Shall your-selves find bless - - ing.

poco rit. very broadly. fff
Ye who now will bless the poor, Shall . . your-selves find bless - - ing.
Shall your-selves find . . bless - - ing.

poco rit. very broadly. fff
Ye who now will bless the poor, Shall find bless - - ing.
Shall your-selves find bless - - ing.

poco rit. very broadly. fff
Ye who now will bless the poor, Shall find bless - - ing.

very broadly.

poco rit. fff

(Continued from page 682.)

with the English monarch, and it is remarkable that Kite, who was Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal, and was also a Prebendary of Lichfield and Chichester, was promoted to the primatial see of Armagh on October 24, 1513, retiring therefrom in 1521 for the bishopric of Carlisle.

The earliest official appearance of William Crane in Court records is on June 3, 1509, when as Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, he was appointed by the young King as Water-bailiff of Dartmouth. He took part in the Court Revels of November 14, 1510, and again on February 12 and 13, 1511, in which the King was a performer. On August 18, 1511, he was granted certain tenements in London, and on October 6, 1512, he was licensed to export six hundred sacks of wool. In 1512, and again in 1513, he received a loan of £1,000 (a large sum in those days); and in July, 1513, he paid £94 7s. 1d. for cables, for the King.

On January 6, 1514, Crane took part in Cornish's Mask of 'The Triumph of Love and Beauty,' and he set music for Henry Medwall's Morality, 'The Finding of Truth,' which followed the Mask. Prof. Wallace, from imperfect knowledge, refers to the author of 'Nature' as 'the impossible Medwell [sic]', but it is now agreed that Henry Medwall (not Medwell) was no unworthy precursor of Shakespeare. I may add that the only known copy of his play 'Fulgens and Lucrese,' printed by John Rastall, in 1519, was sold by Sotheby in March, 1919, for £3,400.

On February 21, 1514, Crane was appointed Comptroller of the Petty Customs in the Port of London. At a Court Play on January 6, 1515, he and Master Harry Stevenson of the Chapel were resplendent in 'plunket satin.' He was also present at the 'Field of the Cloth of Gold' in June, 1520; and in January, 1523, was in the train of Lord Berners, Deputy of Calais.

At length, on March 25, 1523, on the resignation of William Cornish, the coveted position of Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal was given to Crane. This position was materially improved by the Eltham ordinances in January, 1526, when the number of boys in the Chapel was increased from ten to twelve, and the salary of the Master augmented from 40 marks to £40. It was also ordered that the Master, with six of the Children and six Gentlemen of the Chapel, 'shall give their continual attendance in the King's Court, and daily to hear a Mass of Our Lady before noon, and on Sundays and Holy Days Mass of the day besides Our Lady Mass, and an Antempe in the afternoon.' This early recognition of the anthem as part of the evening service is noteworthy, as it has been frequently stated that anthems were introduced under Elizabeth. And it must not be forgotten that as early as 1502 Dr. Fairfax got 20s. from Princess Elizabeth 'for setting of an Anthem.' Anyhow, it is distinctly to the credit of Crane that he increased the number of choirboys in the Chapel Royal, and improved the musical services—with the cordial co-operation of the Dean of the Chapel, Dr. Sampson, who held office from 1523 to 1540, and who was a composer of no mean order.

The following is the official list of the Chapel Royal establishment in 1526, under Crane:

Dean, Richard Sampson, LL.D.....	£33	6	8
Master, William Crane.....	26	13	4

Ministers of the Chapel Royal at 7½d. a day:

Ric. Ward, Thos. Hall, Ric. Elys, Ant. Dogget,
Thos. Wescot, Emery Tuckfield, Andrew Tracey,
Nic. Archbold, William Walker—Priests.

Robert Pende, John Fisher, Henry Stephenson,
Thos. Bury, Wm. Colman, Robert Jones, Robert
Phillips, Avery Burton, Hugh Rhodes, Thos. Byrd,
Richard Bowyer, Richard Piggot, Edm. Peckham,
Robert Perry, Wm. Barber, John Fuller, Robert
Richmond, John Aleyn, Richard Stephen—Gentlemen.

In the Patent Rolls, under date of May 12, 1526, the grant to William Crane is duly enrolled, and we read that the Master was to be paid '£40 a year for the instruction, vestures, and beds of twelve boys.' Some months later (January 28, 1527) he was licensed to import five hundred tuns of Toulouse wood or Gascon wine. A year afterwards (May 6, 1528) he was appointed to fit out three ships and three galleys for the King. On November 26, 1531, a grant, in fee, was made out in favour of Wm. Crane, Armiger, by which he became owner of Beaumonts Inns, parish of St. Michael, Cripplegate, and two other messuages, 'void by the forfeiture of Francis Lovell, late Lord Lovell.'

No previous investigator of the career of Crane has noted that he was commissioned to impress choirboys for the Chapel Royal—a form of conscription that was used as far back as 1420, a fact which I made known for the first time in 1912. The commission to Crane is missing, but I find payment made to him for his expenses in going to the country to procure suitable choristers, in a document dated June 15, 1531—the amount of the expenses being given as £3 6s. 8d.

Crane, like his predecessor Cornish, was a married man, and had a daughter, a fact which we learn from an interesting letter written by the Archbishop of York to Christopher Draper on January 29, 1535, wherein the Archbishop regrets that he cannot give Draper a prebend 'unless he were in orders, at least tonsured,' but that as Draper 'was insured [engaged] to Mr. Crane's daughter of the Chapel' he could not get the promotion.

Further marks of royal favour continued to be poured on Crane, who, on July 2, 1535 (Prof. Wallace gives the date as June 28) was made Water-bailiff of Lynn, in Norfolk, vice George Lovekin deceased. His friend Richard Sampson, Dean of the Chapel Royal, was given the post of Coadjutor Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, on February 20, 1536, inasmuch as Dean Pace had become mentally afflicted, and on June 11, he was appointed by Henry VIII. as Bishop of Chichester (retaining his Deanery of the Chapel Royal), being dispensed by Archbishop Cranmer (July 20) to hold the Deanery of St. Paul's in commendam, on the death of Richard Pace.

On January 7, 1538, Master Cromwell paid Mr. Crane 100 marks for Havering Park. Two years later, on March 3, 1540, Crane and his wife Margaret were granted ten tenements and certain rooms at St. Helen's, Bishopsgate. About this time Bishop Sampson did not show sufficient zeal in the cause of the 'new-fangled doctrines,' and in July he was imprisoned, and deprived of his Deanery of the Chapel Royal, which was then given to Thomas Thirlby, newly created Bishop of Westminster, with Richard Wade as Sub-Dean.

On March 6, 1542, Crane was licensed to export four hundred tuns of double beer; and on May 2, 1543, he got custody of certain lands. This is the last entry we meet with concerning this many-sided and wealthy Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal, save that he presented the customary Court play in the Carnival period of 1544.

A noteworthy event of Crane's last year was the Introduction of the Litany, 'set for five voices, according to the notes used in the King's Chapel,' and published by Grafton, in October, 1544. Crane received his last payment as Master on April 21, 1545. He fell seriously ill in June, and on June 30, Richard Bowyer was appointed his successor. He made his will on July 6, and died soon afterwards, being interred in the Church of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate. Although his will was not proved till April 6, 1546, it is tolerably certain that Crane died in September or October, 1545, as his successor's appointment was confirmed by Patent dated November 6, 1545.

Church and Organ Music.

THE NEW ORGANIST OF THE CHAPEL ROYAL.

The post of organist at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Harford Lloyd, has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. Bac. (Cantab.), F.R.C.O. Mr. Roper was a Westminster Abbey boy from 1888 to 1893. Later he became a pupil of Sir Frederick Bridge, playing occasionally at the Abbey until in 1889, when he gained an organ scholarship at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. While at the University he studied with Sir Charles Stanford, Dr. Charles Wood, Dr. E. W. Naylor, and Dr. E. T. Sweeting. He took his B.A. degree in 1902, Mus. Bac. in 1903, and the F.R.C.O. in 1906. He became organist and choir-master of Hammersmith Parish Church in 1903, remaining there ten years.

Photo by Lionel Kough.

The Chapel Royal is familiar ground to him, as he acted as assistant-organist there from 1904 to 1916, being also Sir Frederick Bridge's assistant at the Abbey during practically the same period. Mr. Roper has been organist and choir-master at St. Stephen's Walbrook since 1913. At this beautiful City church, famous for its fine organ, he has done excellent work as a recitalist. For over four years he gave a regular weekly recital for War Funds. As musical director at the Bishopsgate Institute he has made a great feature of Luncheon Hour Concerts. He is a Professor at Trinity College, and among other posts he fills is that of conductor of the Lothbury and Stock Exchange Male Voice Choirs.

We have received a copy of the music to be sung at a Festival service at St. Martin's, Birmingham, in connection with the 1920 Midland Competition Festival. This marks a useful departure, and is an attempt to raise the standard of the congregational side of Church music. The choice in this case has fallen on admirable hymn-tunes by Percy Buck and Basil Harwood, the Old Hundredth, with Fauxbourdon by Charles Wood, and a delightful English Traditional Melody. The canticles are to be sung unaccompanied to the setting of William Russell in A. and the anthems are Tye's 'Sing to the Lord,' Tchaikovsky's 'Hymn to the Trinity,' and Handel's 'Let their celestial concerts all unite.'

Programmes of modern British organ music have been recently played by Mr. Alban Hamer, at All Souls' Church, Leeds, and by Mr. Reginald Waddy at St. Catherine's, Plymouth. The composers drawn upon have included C. Harford Lloyd, E. Bristow Farrar, W. G. Ross, John E. West, Thomas F. Dunhill, Stanford, A. Hollins, Frank Bridge, John Ireland, E. C. Bairstow, and W. Wolstenholme. Our native organ school is forging ahead, and is much helped by such propaganda.

We are glad to hear that the long-deferred rebuilding of Gloucester Cathedral organ is to be commenced in the near future, thanks to the munificence of Sir James and Lady Horlick. The gift is as a memorial to their son, Major G. N. Horlick, who died on active service in July, 1918. The present position of the organ will be retained, and the original case preserved. It is hoped that the work will be completed in the summer of 1920.

The late Alfred James Eyre's name is so widely known, and his circle of friends so large, that it is felt that many might be willing to take their share in raising a fund to perpetuate his memory in connection with St. John's Church, Upper Norwood, where he served so devotedly for thirty-eight years. Contributions should be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. R. J. Bush, 48, Auckland Road, Upper Norwood, S.E. 19.

Mr. D. E. Roberts, of St. Peter's Church, Peterhead, has been appointed organist and choir-master of Inverness Cathedral. Mr. Roberts finished three and a half years' military service in January last, with the rank of acting-captain of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers. While in the Army he did excellent work in organizing male-voice and other choirs.

Mr. J. A. Meale has recently added historical interest to his mid-day recitals at the Wesleyan Central Hall, by the inclusion of some of the excellent 'Old English organ music,' edited by Mr. John E. West.

Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung at Southwark Cathedral, with full orchestra, on Saturday, December 20, at 3.0 p.m. The annual Carol Service takes place on December 27, also at 3.0 p.m.

The Thursday mid-day (1.10) recitals at St. John's, Red Lion Square, Holborn, have recommenced, and some well-known players are announced.

ORGAN RECITALS.

Mr. Harold M. Dawber, St. George's, Stockport—Allegro (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Capriccio, John Ireland; Epinikion, Rootham.

Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End (four recitals)—Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; In Paradisum, Dubois; 'In Memoriam' Overture, Sullivan; Fantasia and Fugue (Sonata No. 9), Rheinberger; Meditation, Bonnet; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Toccata in E, Renzi; Prelude 'St. Cross,' Parry; Chant de Mai, Jongen.

Mr. Hugh Fowler, St. Peter's, Budleigh Salterton—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Funeral March, Tchaikovsky; Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Triumph Song, Pearce.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Nicholas, Cole Abbey (four recitals)—Processional March, German; Idyll, 'The Sea,' H. Arnold Smith; Prelude to 'Colomba,' Mackenzie; Marche Nuptiale, Guilmant; Fantasy-Prelude, Charles Macpherson; Romanza and Allegretto, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Hugh Bramwell, Central Hall, Westminster—Sonata in D flat (first movement), Rheinberger; Scherzo in F minor, Sanaiford Turner; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. John Theodore Wise, Southfields Baptist Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Sursum Corda, Elgar; March on a theme of Handel, Guilmant.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, Unthank Road Baptist Church, Norwich (two recitals)—Allegretto in B minor, Guilmant; Choral Prelude, 'We all believe in one God, the Creator,' Bach; The Storm, Lemmens; Solemn March, Luard-Selby; Festival Prelude on 'Ein Feste Berg,' Faulkes; Chromatic Fugue, Rheinberger; Imperial March, Elgar.

Mr. C. E. Bylton Dobson, Central Mission, Nottingham, (four recitals)—Fantasie and Fugue in D minor, Stanford; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Idyll, 'The Sea,' Smith; Adagio Cantabile, Hopkins; Festive March in D, Smart; Coronach, Barrett; Intermezzo, Hollins.

Mr. G. H. Sadler, Holywell Cross Church, Chesterfield—Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Canzone and Grand Chœur, Guilmant; Carillon, Wolstenholme; Fantasia on a Welsh Air, Best.

Mr. Allan Brown, City Temple (four recitals)—Overture in C minor, Hollins; Romance, Wheelton; Grand Chœur, Guilmant; Overture to 'The Meistersinger.'

Mr. Fred Gostelow, Luton Parish Church—Overture in C, Hollins; Larghetto in A, Mozart; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Meditation, d'Eury.

Dr. G. J. Bennett, Lincoln Cathedral—Toccata in F, Bach; Andante Cantabile (String Quartet), Tchaikovsky; Allegro Risoluto and Choral (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; 'A deserted farm' and 'To a wild rose,' MacDowell; Scherzo (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Schiller March, Meyerbeer.

Mr. Norman Collie, St. Luke's, Tunbridge Wells (five recitals)—Cornelius March, Mendelssohn; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Epinikion, Rootham; Summer Sketches, Lemare; Sonata in G, Elgar; Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Guilmant; Song of Triumph, West; Con moto moderato, Smart; Autumn, Lyon; Scherzando, Widor. At St. Mary's, Petworth—Epinikion, Rootham; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Suite, Arensky.

Mr. B. D. Hylton Stewart, All Saints', Hertford—Jour de Noces, Stuart Archer; Légende and Arabesque, Vierne; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach.

Mr. Walter Wild, First Presbyterian Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa., U.S.A.—Caprice, Wolstenholme; Sonata in A minor, Borowski; Barcarolle in F, Sterndale Bennett; Grand Chœur in C, Hollins.

Mr. W. Brennan Smith, St. Austell Parish Church—Introduction and Fugue in F sharp minor, Handel; Scherzo in D minor, Tchaikovsky; Romanza and Finale (Sonata No. 1), Peace.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—'Rheims,' (Sonata Eroica), Stanford; Second Organ Sonata (first two movements), Bossi; Cathedral Preludes, Nos. 2 and 3, Harwood; Fugue in F, Thomas Adams.

Mr. Herbert Gisby, St. Thomas's, Regent Street—Symphonic Piece, Grieg; Capriccio and Idyll (Sonata No. 18), Rheinberger; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns. At St. Clement Danes, Strand—Sonata No. 14, Rheinberger; Nocturne, Quef; 'La Tristesse du Printemps,' Sibelius; Meditation and Minuet, Gisby; March in B flat, Silas.

Mr. Albert Orton, St. John's, Newport, I.W. (six récitals)—Larghetto from 'New World' Symphony; Sonatas Nos. 1, 3, and 4, Mendelssohn; March for a Church Festival, Best; Triumphal March, Guilmant; Postlude in D, Smart; Elegy, Silas; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Finale in F, Thorne.

Mr. C. St. Ervan Johns, Chepstow Parish Church—Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Romance, Svendsen; Variations de Concert, Bonnet.

Mr. Lewin Spackman, Corsham Parish Church—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Berceuse, Lemare; Visione, Rheinberger; March on a Theme of Handel, Guilmant.

Mr. John Pullein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger; Sursum Corda and Alla Marcia, John Ireland; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Musette—Meditation, Ravanello; Final, Frank.

Mr. Herbert E. Knott, St. Anne's, Moseley, Birmingham—Agitato (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Solitude and Meditation on the name of BACH, Brewer; Idyll, 'Recessional,' Gray; 'Ranz des Vaches,' Oliver King.

Mr. W. J. Cowley, All Saints', Hertford—Overture to 'Tamerlane,' Handel; Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme; Complainte and Madrigal, Vierne; Marche aux Flambeaux, Guilmant.

Mr. Herbert Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool (two recitals)—Overture to 'The Bartered Bride'; Overture to the 'Occasional Oratorio'; 'A Dream of Love,' Liszt; Coronation March, Tchaikovsky; 'The Pilgrims' Progress,' Part 7, Ernest Austin; Symphony No. 5, Widor.

Mr. F. J. A. Eccles, Holy Trinity, Leamington—Offertoire in B flat, Ambrose Thomas; Sonata No. 11, Rheinberger; Vespérale, Cyril Scott; Berceuse, Wheelton.

Mr. Sydney Crookes, Maxwell Parish Church—Sonata No. 4, Merkel; Preludes on 'Rockingham' and 'St. Cross,' Parry; Pastorale and Finale (Symphony No. 2), Widor.

APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. W. R. Anderson, organist and choirmaster, Highgate Presbyterian Church.

Mr. R. T. Bedford, organist and choirmaster, Bognor Parish Church.

Mr. W. G. Breach, organist and choirmaster, St. John's, Clapham Rise.

Mr. Walter Cunliffe, organist and choirmaster, Manchester Road Wesleyan Church, Haslingden, Lancashire.

Mr. A. B. Garrard, organist and choirmaster, Holy Trinity, Beckenham.

Mr. Arthur W. Lurcock, tenor, Canterbury Cathedral.

Mr. F. C. J. Swanton, organist, Biw Church, King's Co.

Mr. E. Douglas Tayler, organist and choirmaster, Lancaster Parish Church.

Mr. F. E. Wilson, organist and choirmaster, St. John's, Meads, Eastbourne.

London Concerts.

BY ALFRED KALISCH.

The concert fever has, if anything, raged more fiercely in London during November, especially on Saturday afternoons, than in October. I have calculated that if I were to try to refer to every concert given, and keep within the limits of space assigned to me, there would be room for eight-and-a-half words about each. This simple mathematical fact must serve as an apology to those who are passed over.

First in importance is one of the first concerts in point of time which has happened since my last chronicle. At its opening concert, on October 27, the London Symphony Orchestra produced the composer conducting. The concert was marked by two circumstances unfortunately characteristic of our great country and this great metropolis. The announcement of an important new work by our foremost living composer with the composer conducting, did not suffice to fill the hall to overflowing, and the principal new work was obviously under-rehearsed. It is easy to make a fetish of rehearsal, but equally easy to trust too much to the power of British musicians to work miracles. The new Concerto is an extremely interesting experiment in scoring. Sir Edward Elgar has set himself to solve the problem of making the 'cello come through the orchestra without making the orchestral web too tenuous, and without losing variety of colour. To give the experiment a chance of success, even to enable hearers to judge how far it has succeeded, specially careful preparation would have been needed. There is undoubtedly much charm and delicacy in the slow movement. The gaiety and open-air feeling of the Finale, in which there is some beautiful and characteristic scoring, and the poignant close, made an instant appeal. The Scherzo left us doubtful, partly because that is the movement which depends most on delicacy, rhythmical impulse, and grip in the performance. Mr. Felix Salmond was the soloist, and undoubtedly enhanced his reputation very greatly in spite of the adverse circumstances under which he laboured. The conductor-in-chief was Mr. Albert Coates, who secured a performance of Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase' of matchless brilliancy, emotional depth and energy. In comparison the playing of Borodin's B minor Symphony was almost reticent. Sir Henry Wood's performance of the same work a few days later was more rugged and highly coloured.

ELGAR'S NEW VIOLONCELLO CONCERTO,

Mr. Coates was the conductor also of the last concert in point of date to be mentioned—the first concert of the 108th season of the Royal Philharmonic Society, on November 20, and again Scriabin was his battle horse. 'The Divine Poem' caused a sensation. It looks as if we were on the eve of a period of Scriabin worship. At any rate he is being extolled by those who found him a problem not so long ago. At the same concert Holbrooke's 'Ulalume'—which, I believe, had not been heard in London since Sir Henry Wood produced it about fifteen years ago—pleased much more than it did then. The soloist at the concert was M. Cortôt, who played César Franck's Symphonic Variations as only he can play them; and the most important musical event of the concert was his playing of Debussy's Fantaisie for pianoforte and orchestra.

THE FIRST PHASE OF DEBUSSY.

The Fantaisie, which is not mentioned in most of the books on Debussy, was written in 1893, before the 'Démouille Elue.' It is always interesting to notice the early developments of composers who later on become innovators. In this work young Debussy was as innocuous as Richard Strauss himself in the days of his youth, or a Scriabin in his Chopinesque period. The chief influences traceable are those of Wagner—notably in the third movement—and D'Indy. Not only are the themes clear cut and the separate movements precise in structure, the moods are definite and unmistakable. There are four movements, or two movements of two sections each, and one principal theme pervades them all. The orchestration is fuller and more solid than in the later Debussy, and there are not many traces of attempts to discover new sound-colours. Technically the most interesting point is the use of a version of the principal theme as a sort of basso ostinato to the Finale. The pianoforte part is extremely brilliant and difficult, but it is used rather as a part of the orchestra than as a solo instrument in the usual sense. The Philharmonic Society may pride itself upon having given London the chance of hearing the very first performance of the work. It has not been heard in Paris yet.

M. Cortôt was the soloist also at the Queen's Hall Symphony concert on November 8, and played Rachmaninov's third Concerto with wonderful verve and fine feeling. Many consider it a greater work than the second, but it is not likely to be as popular. A notable performance of Berlioz's 'Fantastic' Symphony was the principal feature of the concert on October 25. The only novelty heard so far at these concerts has been Florent Schmitt's brisk 'Rhapsodie Viennoise,' which would have been more suitable for a Saturday night at the Promenades. Casella's 'Couvent sur l'Eau,' which had made its mark at a Promenade concert, was repeated on October 25, and fully justified itself.

Another Italian work which was practically new, and was very pleasant to hear, was Respighi's 'Fontane di Roma,' a set of most poetical mood-pictures, fresh without eccentricity, scored with complete mastery and avoidance of excess. Under

Mr. Hamilton Harty it was remarkably well played. The occasion was the first of four orchestral concerts (on November 11) by Mr. Anderson Tyrer, a young pianist from Lancashire, for whom, by reason of his ample technical acquirements and his vigorous temperament and artistic taste, a fine future may be predicted.

CHAMBER MUSIC AND RECITALS.

The farewell appearance of M. Moiseiwitsch, on November 3, must be mentioned. Mr. Lloyd Powell has reappeared with matured powers, and Miss Lilian Mackinnon's tasteful and temperamental playing of Russian music deserves acknowledgment (November 17). The fact should also be recorded that Signor Busoni played the 'Appassionata Sonata' at a Melba concert at the Albert Hall, and was well rewarded for his courage. Madame Tetrazzini has given a triumphant farewell concert at the Albert Hall, and is now in America; and of the many singers who have appeared and given promise of various degrees of excellence, Mr. Steuart Wilson is perhaps the most deserving of mention. Madame Desirée Ellinger, well known in the Beecham Company, proved herself a very pleasing concert-singer. Miss Jelly d'Aranyi also gave a recital at Wigmore Hall, and has been hailed by some critics as among the greatest players of the day. There will be opportunities for discussing her work fully next month. The return of M. Achille Rivarde to the concert-platform was welcome. He is an artist in the strictest sense of the word.

The London Chamber Concert Society at its first concert brought the Bohemian Quartet back to London. They played Tanéïev's Quartet with the temperamental vigour, delicacy, and almost orchestral richness of tone of which they have the secret. At one of the two concerts, with Miss Fanny Davies, they introduced (November 3) a Pianoforte Quintet by Suk, which, like all his works, has melodic flow and is prolific in its working out, and makes one wonder why his admirers say his music is wholly Slavonic and non-Teutonic. The most interesting of the concerts given by the Classical Concert Society has been that devoted to the works of Ravel, on October 29. The Quartet we know to be a masterpiece. In the Pianoforte Trio, which we do not know so well, the composer often seems to be trying to say more than three instruments can manage, and to be groping after something he cannot find, but there are moments which have the fine poetry and dignity of the beautiful 'Pavane.' Anyway, we desire better acquaintance with it. We heard also the new Suite for pianoforte, 'Le Tombeau de Couperin.' A Parisian critic said of it that it was rather the tomb of Ravel's dead reputation. That is unduly severe, but the work will not add to his fame. There were, too, some new songs, very unvocal, but with delightfully piquant pianoforte accompaniments. The better-known songs are best. Miss Olga Haley sang them all, as well as they can be sung. Four of them are on subjects borrowed from the Zoological Gardens.

The British Music Society, under the energetic guidance of Lord Howard de Walden and Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, has recently held inaugural functions of branch centres at Manchester, Sheffield (where Sir H. Hadow took the chair), Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, and Leeds. The Liverpool branch is indebted to Messrs Rushworth & Dreaper for a Music Club Room and Library. A foundation fund of £15,000 is being raised, with Lord Howard de Walden's offer of £5,000 as a nucleus. The treasurer is Mr. W. R. Davies, Kingsclear, Camberley, Surrey.

THE RUSSIAN BALLET AT THE EMPIRE.

BY EDWIN EVANS.

The season of Russian Ballet at the Empire Theatre has given us only one novelty, but as those introduced in the summer at the Alhambra had not had sufficient performances to lose their freshness, the répertoire retains its powers of attraction. The coincidence of the railway strike with the opening week naturally had its effect upon the audience, but it rapidly wore off the moment the lovers of the ballet ceased to be menaced with the discomfort of travelling home under the conditions then prevailing.

The one production new to London was 'Parade,' which, though often promised, was held back until November 14. It was originally given in Paris during May, 1917, when it met with a mixed reception, probably owing to the attitude of those who had heralded its appearance as an event in the world of art. In London no such pretensions were put forward, with the result that the audience took it readily for what it really is, a brilliant joke, a piece of leg-pulling executed by extremely clever people. It is derived from the exhibitions given in front of a booth to attract the public within. Massine, who considers that choregraphy should admit every kind of ordered gestures, has very cleverly adapted those of a Chinese conjurer, an American song and dance turn, and a pair of acrobats, all of which, in their normal sphere, have evolved conventional movements capable of adaptation to the purposes of the modern ballet. Those of acrobats, for instance, have often been burlesqued, but never before used as the raw material of choregraphy. Picasso has added cubist designs which reach their fullest effect in the costumes of the rival managers, Parisian and American. There is also a comic horse borrowed from the same order of ideas. Erik Satie's music to this 'merry display' is perhaps its weakest point—not that it falls below the level of humour shown in his well-known smaller pieces for pianoforte, but simply because his form of humour, when expanded to these dimensions, gives the ear time to unmask the element of bluff on which so much of it depends.

The performance is brilliant. M. Massine's pseudo-Chinese antics are very exhilarating, and the acrobats, as represented by Madame Nemtchinova and M. Zvereff, deliver a remarkably effective piece of irony. But apart from the invention of the ballet, which is Massine's, the honours go to Madame Karsavina, whose impudent, but somewhat tired flapper, emerging from a none too well-spent youth, and dancing in ragtime to the jingle of a typewriter in the orchestra, is an amazing piece of characterization.

Even if dancing had never been thought of, Madame Karsavina would still be one of the most remarkable characters upon the stage. Some new parts have been added to her répertoire, notably that of Mariuccia in 'Good-Humoured Ladies.' Where, among our most applauded actresses, is one who could without apparent effort impersonate the puppet in 'Petrushka,' the vampire princess in 'Thamar,' the miller's wife in 'The Three-cornered Hat,' Columbine in 'Carnaval,' Mariuccia, and the American flapper, in a way to carry conviction, meanwhile appearing as the embodiment of classic grace in 'Les Sylphides'? She has often performed three of these parts on the same evening, and the display of histrionic virtuosity is simply bewildering to those accustomed to see an actress appear in a succession of parts which differ only in name.

'La Boutique Fantasque,' 'The Three-cornered Hat,' 'Good-humoured Ladies,' and the other Massine ballets have remained firm favourites with the public throughout the season. It is welcome news to many that the music of these productions is now procurable in print.

The symphonic interludes have remained an integral feature of the performances, but their profusion has been less. English music has been represented by a successful orchestral version of Arnold Bax's well-known pianoforte piece 'In a Vodka Shop.' Of the Russian novelties the most important consisted of two movements from Borodin's unfinished third Symphony. The first is an Allegro of arresting beauty, the second a brilliant Scherzo, the main portion of which is in a quintuple rhythm of quavers. This latter piece also exists in the form of a String quartet. It was thus played at the famous Belaieff gatherings, and is included in 'Les Vendredis.'

Rimsky-Korsakoff contributed 'A Fairy Tale,' a delicately-imagined piece of tone-poetry, which belongs to his early period, but has somehow been overlooked by organisers of orchestral concerts. Balakireff's Symphony in C was introduced to a London audience by Sir Henry Wood on September 26, 1899, but has never been repeated. At the Empire we had the opportunity of hearing its Finale, a brilliant movement founded upon three dance tunes. His Overture on Russian themes has served as a Prelude to 'Petrushka,' not inappropriately, as one of the folk-tunes employed occurs also in Stravinsky's popular ballet. Other relatively new pieces were a Scherzo by Liadoff and an Overture, 'Fête Villageoise,' by Zolotareff; the latter was heard once at Queen's Hall two years ago.

Great interest attaches to two Gymnopédies by Erik Satie, orchestrated by Claude Debussy, for they are an instance of the way in which the latter's personal method of harmonization was sometimes anticipated by the former, though he never possessed the skill to apply it to the same purpose, as one quickly realises on comparing the Sarabandes of Satie with that of Debussy.

M. Ansermet being called away in the first week of the season to fulfil his engagements in Switzerland, his place was taken by Mr. Adrian C. Boult, with Mr. Edward Clark as his second in command. The task of conducting the ballet has special difficulties of its own with which no concert or opera conductor is confronted. It is on record that in Petrograd on one occasion even Nikisch narrowly escaped a catastrophe. It is the more remarkable that Mr. Boult was able to assume his full duties at short notice and carry through the season in a manner which reflects great credit upon him. Mr. Clark's duties have been lighter, but he has acquitted himself no less ably. It is the first time that the orchestra of the Russian Ballet has been entirely in English hands.

We will hope that further recognition of the claims of English musicians is to follow as occasion arises. There are rumours even of an English ballet. May they materialise!

TEACHERS OF MUSIC IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

A successful meeting of teachers of music in Training Colleges and Secondary Schools was held in the Central High School, Jesmond, on Saturday, October 25, Mr. W. G. Whittaker being in the chair. The discussion which followed resulted in the formation of an Association of Teachers of Music in the Training Colleges and Secondary Schools of Northumberland and Durham. Mr. W. G. Whittaker (Armstrong College) was elected president. The hon. secretary and treasurer is Mr. Rollason, Chester-le-Street. Mr. Thomas Henderson (Darlington) then gave a delightful paper on 'Music in Secondary Schools: its Enemies and Friends,' which was much appreciated by the members present. The hon. secretary will be pleased to give any information to those interested in Secondary School music.

Letters to the Editor.

THE 'MISSA DE ANGELIS.'

SIR,—Mr. Hughes's article in your September issue is very interesting reading; but in some of his statements he is surely in error. He says, inter alia, that the 'De Angelis' is given 'a place in the latest editions of the official books of Rome, after—but not among—the other Plainsong Masses of the "Ordinarium Missæ." I have half-a-dozen editions of the approved Vatican 'Ordinarium Missæ'—one obtained direct from Rome less than six months ago—and there is no indication in any of these of such an arrangement. None of my R.C. friends at Westminster Cathedral and elsewhere have heard of it; and I understand that the R.C. Bishop of Southwark has just ordered the 'De Angelis' Credo (Vatican, No. 3) to be sung in every church in his diocese on each Sunday throughout the year. No! What the Vatican authorities have done is to rearrange the 'Ordinarium Missæ.' The 'De Angelis' Mass, formerly No. 5, is now No. 8, and there are ten other Masses following it. The 'Missa Regia' is omitted altogether. Possibly Mr. Hughes has confused this Mass with the 'De Angelis.'

While writing on this subject, may I be permitted to offer some comments—the result of considerable study and experience—in connection with two other points suggested by Mr. Hughes's article?

(1.) It is often very difficult—indeed, practically impossible—to state with any degree of precision the date of a traditional Plainsong melody. The mode in which it is written is no indication whatsoever. Some of the most ancient melodies in the Gradual are in the 5th and 6th Modes—e.g., the Introit of the 'Missa de Profunctis,' the splendid Sanctus of Mass No. 17, &c. I imagine that the Solesmes Benedictines, in suggesting dates for the melodies of the 'Ordinarium Missæ,' after the examination of every available manuscript, have given proximate dates for the melodies in the form which they had assumed when they became, as it were, standardised. It is certain that many of the melodies, in less developed forms, are much older than the dates given. For example, it is generally believed that the Kyrie, 'Orbis Factor,' was either composed or developed from an older form of the melody by the Irish musician, S. Tutilo, in the 9th or 10th century; and it was further modified at a later date. The Solesmes Fathers give its date as (X), 14th-16th centuries; and this is, no doubt, a substantially accurate estimate of the age of the melody as an artistic element of the Church's music. Every melody in the 'Ordinarium Missæ' has been subjected to similar changes. Some time ago I tabulated the melodic variations in a 14th century MS. compared with the latest Vatican Ordinarium. In Credo No. 1 (the 'Old English Credo') there are at least forty variations; the Kyrie, 'Dominator Deus,' has been so much modified as to be hardly recognizable; and so on throughout. Perhaps the most permanent form of melody I have ever noticed is the 'Agnus Dei' of the Requiem (used also in Mass No. 18).

As regards the 'De Angelis' Kyrie, Mr. Hughes has shown that the melody is much older than the 15th-16th centuries. But its earlier form, as given by Mr. Hughes, is very crude when compared with the really beautiful and artistic melody now in the Gradual. I have myself formerly queried many of the dates suggested in the latest Gradual; but the more I have studied the subject the less I am inclined to doubt the conclusions of the patient and scholarly Solesmes investigators.

(2.) It must not hastily be assumed that a melody is a folk-song, or derived from one, on account of certain peculiarities of mode or outline. Any man who is looking out for melodic coincidences or similarities can find them on every hand. What is more likely than that the last part of the 'De Angelis' Kyrie was derived from 'Sumer is i-cumen in'?

or both from 'Three Blind Mice'?

Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata (Op. 81a), his 'Leonora' Overture No. 1, Wagner's Overture to the 'Flying Dutchman,' and many other notable compositions, are of course derived from the first phrase of 'Three Blind Mice'; while one of the most common Recitative formulae is found in 'Dashing away with the Smoothing-iron':

Your thorough-going, fully-obsessed folk-songist will accept almost anything. One of them solemnly assured me some time ago that 'most of the melodies in the Ordinarium Missæ are of folk-song origin, the Kyries in particular being suffused with the folk-song idiom.'

All through the ages ecclesiastical and secular melodies have run along, so to speak, in two adjacent streams, acting and reacting on each other. Often this mutual intercourse has been helpful to both; but whenever the secular stream has seriously encroached on the other the result has been disastrous. Witness, for example, the state of music in the Roman Church in the middle of the 16th century. It is said that some members of the Council of Trent, 1545-63, even went so far as to suggest the exclusion of all music from the Church Services.

By all means let us encourage Mr. Hughes and other scholars to continue their interesting historical investigations; but we must avoid being side-tracked by minor issues.—Yours, &c.,

RALPH DUNSTAN.

30, West Side,
Wandsworth Common, S.W.-18.

THE GRAMOPHONE AS AN AID TO MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

SIR,—I have been much interested in the two letters on the above subject which appeared in the September and October issues of the Musical Times. A gramophone record lasts no longer than four minutes, and cuts have to be made in the music in order to present an overture or a movement from a quartet in that space of time. Your September correspondent suggests that the invention of the double turntable would solve the difficulty. The double turntable would, I presume, imply a double arm and sound-box, so that the needle on the first sound-box could be changed while the second sound-box was playing the second record. But such an instrument would be of little use for playing the best double-sided records that are now being produced. These records have, say, the first movement of a quartet on one side, and the second movement on the other. Clearly the second movement, or the second part of any double-sided record, could not follow immediately on the first; the record must be turned. The point has some importance, because it is possible to obtain now—and this is due mainly to the enterprise of the 'Columbia' firm—an excellent series of double-sided records of chamber-music. Thus there are published, each on two records, both double-sided, Elgar's Violin Concerto, Beethoven's 'Kreutzer' and 'Spring' Sonatas, and Quartets by Beethoven, Mozart, Ravel, and Schumann. There are also published two movements each (one double-sided record) of a Brahms Quintet, Violin Sonatas by César Franck and Grieg, and Quartets by Brahms, Debussy, Tchaikovsky, Glazounov, Dvorák, and others. The series is being continued, and will have grown considerably by the time the double-turntable invention could appear on the market. And when it did appear, it would have no advantage over our present instruments in the playing of these records. Until, therefore, an entirely new gramophone is evolved, the more satisfactory solution would be, I believe, in the development of the 'double-sided record' policy. It is obvious that in such records as I have mentioned considerable cuts must be made in order to bring a movement from one of these works into the compass of one side of a record. But if exactly double the space were given the works could be recorded practically in extenso. This would mean issuing, for example, a Beethoven Quartet on four double-sided records instead of two. The question is really not so much one of mechanical contrivance as of financial consideration on the part of the gramophone companies. People who would be willing to buy two records of mutilated chamber-music could not always be expected to buy four instead for the sake of having the works in a more satisfactory form. And yet one cannot help feeling that if those who love music were to demand these records in large numbers, the gramophone companies would meet the demand. All the quartet records mentioned above are by the London String Quartet, and even in their imperfect form are a source of infinite pleasure. It would be a great pity if the possibilities foreshadowed by these records—of having the best chamber-music continually at one's command—were not to be developed and realised to the full. If the schools of the country were to unite to support the development of such records, and to use them in the musical education of their scholars, the movement might have far-reaching results.

I may be pardoned a reference to the school from which I write. Here at Ampleforth we have a School Musical Society for the VI., V., and IV. Forms which meets weekly to listen to serious music. Gramophone records are mainly used; but the members also read papers, and play or sing to illustrate them. We have found it possible to obtain a large variety of records of the best music by composers such as Palestrina, Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Wagner, Brahms, Tchaikovsky, Borodin, Rimsky-Korsakov, Glazounov, Dvorák, Debussy, Franck, Ravel, Elgar, Grainger, Vaughan Williams, Frank Bridge, &c.

Many others among your readers will also no doubt have discovered the value and importance of good gramophone records for educational purposes, and it would be interesting to hear their experiences. At this time, when an English musical renaissance is in progress, it seems to me that no effort can be too great to cultivate a sound, critical taste in the youth of the nation. As a step towards the fulfilment of this ideal, it might be possible, if the necessary co-operation were forthcoming, to approach the gramophone companies with a view to the development of the double-sided record.—Yours, &c.,
J. BERNARD McELLIGOTT
(O.S.B.).

Ampleforth College,
Malton, Yorks.

MUSIC IN CAPE TOWN.

SIR,—In your issue of September 1, a letter appears over the signature of M. von Someren Godfery in which the writer, after referring in appreciative terms to the excellent work of the Cape Town Municipal Orchestra, remarks: 'This is a country where six years ago symphonies had not been heard, and where no orchestra existed within many thousands of miles.'

One can only assume that your contributor is a new-comer, and that he did not take the trouble to inquire what conditions prevailed prior to his arrival in the country.

Symphonies by Haydn and Mozart had been performed in Cape Town before I joined the orchestra of the Cape Town Musical Society in 1895, the Society in question having been the centre of local musical effort since 1864. During a period of nearly twenty years whilst I remained a member of the orchestra, two or three symphonies were performed each year, and in addition to those by the composers named, works by Beethoven (three or four of the Nine), Mendelssohn, Dvorák, Tchaikovsky, and Cliffe were played. One does not claim that these attained anything approaching the standard since established by the Municipal Orchestra, but it is interesting to note that the leader of the latter and several of its players were formerly members of the old Cape Town Musical Society.

Some ten or twelve years ago a second orchestra was formed in Cape Town, with equally lofty aims, which also included symphonies in its programmes and, as in the case of the Musical Society, numbered about fifty performers. At that time we could also boast of several less ambitious but no less active suburban orchestras.

By a curious coincidence, in your same issue, Miss Racster—who was well known in Cape Town as a musical critic both before and after the evolution of the Municipal Orchestra—gives some interesting reminiscences, and refers incidentally to the ambitious choral Festivals which were a feature of the musical life of Cape Town some ten years ago, and with which we have, unfortunately, nothing to correspond to-day. Those of your readers who had not read, or had forgotten, the favourable references to those Festivals which appeared in the Musical Times of that period, must have experienced difficulty in understanding how such exacting works as Berlioz's 'Faust' and others mentioned by Miss Racster could have been rendered adequately in a country where, according to Mr. Godfery, there was no orchestra within thousands of miles. The hope that the foregoing may solve the mystery must be my apology for encroaching upon your valuable space.—Yours, &c.,

Green Point, Cape Town,

W. HERRING.

October 20, 1919.

THE ALTO VOICE.

SIR,—I have read your Magazine for some considerable period, and have not only derived much valuable knowledge, interest, and pleasure from doing so, but have been impressed with your readiness to give space to letters from your readers; also the fairness with which you have often expressed your views on matters raised by them.

I cannot recall, however, any article or letter referring to what I venture to suggest is an important subject, namely, the alto (or counter-tenor) voice. This rare, but very necessary voice seems to be treated with some degree of indifference; inasmuch as, although all types of voices are represented on our concert platforms, the alto singer appears to be limited to a church choir, a quartet, or has to go to the other extreme and become a female impersonator on the music-hall stage. I should like to ask if there is any legitimate reason for the alto singer being barred from, say, the ordinary ballad concert, since the alto voice can be just as capable of rendering certain kinds of songs with as much beauty and expression as other voices?

Rare things and accomplishments are usually sought after (and I am given to understand that a pure alto voice is a rarity), so I think one might ask with reason why the alto voice is never heard excepting in the cases I have mentioned.

I am anxious to get information on this subject, and should be grateful if you could spare space for these few remarks.—Yours, &c.,
ROLAND PLUMTREE.

35, Church Street,
Kensington, W.-8,
November 1, 1919.

MUSIC TEACHERS AND UNIVERSITY DEGREES.

SIR,—Would it be possible for me, through the medium of your valuable paper, to draw the attention of the public to the position given to music-teachers under the new scale of salaries?

I do not know if it is the case everywhere, but in the Gloucester High School for Girls a music-teaching diploma is placed on the non-degree scale. Is it likely that music-teaching in schools will become a popular profession when the Board of Education refuses to recognise any qualification but a University degree? That is to say, those who hold the A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. diplomas, together with training at a recognised centre, are placed on the non-degree scale below any (Welsh) B.A. Practically all the work for Mus. Bac. is useless for Secondary School teaching.

I think it is time that this state of affairs should be brought to notice.—Yours, &c.,
MADELINE M. BURTON
(A.R.C.M.).

39, Donovan Avenue,
Muswell Hill, London, N.-10.

SANSKRIT LITERATURE.

SIR,—Mr. Edwin Evans makes two serious mis-statements in his article on Mr. Holst. Though the statements in question have no especial bearing on music, yet the errors and ignorances prevailing in this astonishing country on the art and culture of India are so appalling and multitudinous that an attempt must be made to stem the tide, more especially when erroneous statements are made by so eminent a critic as Mr. Evans. Having behind them all the weight of Mr. Evans's authority they would naturally be accepted without question by musicians.

Mr. Evans speaks of Sanskrit literature as falling into two periods. This is quite correct. But when he speaks of the older period—the period, that is, of the Vedas—as the classic period, he is wholly wrong. The period known to Sanskrit scholars as the classical period is the later period, which includes the great epics of India to which Mr. Evans alludes.

Again, Mr. Evans speaks of a time 'when probably Hindus and Persians were one race, that is to say before the Aryans settled in India' (my italics). This is a truly astounding statement. The Hindus and Persians are Aryans: they are the descendants of the very Aryans who settled in India and Persia when the race left its primeval home, which is generally considered by ethnologists to have been somewhere in central Asia. The ancient name of Persia is Iran and of India Arya-varta. This shows the close kinship between the two.—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHUSRU SORABJI.

175, Clarence Gate Gardens, N.W.1.
November 5, 1919.

ARAB INFLUENCE ON SPANISH MUSIC.

SIR,—I have read Mr. Farmer's letter with great pleasure, and have communicated with him and with the friend who showed me the Arab MSS. referred to in Sevilla some years ago. When I have received fuller details, additional to those I already know, I will communicate the whole to you, for those interested.—Yours, &c., LEIGH HENRY.

34, Stanley Gardens, Belsize Park, N.W.3,
November 11, 1919.

CHAMBER MUSIC FOR AMATEURS.

SIR,—On page 631 of the Musical Times for this month I see a reference to a scheme for bringing together amateur chamber-music players. I am taking a class in Musical Appreciation, and am endeavouring to widen the vision of members of the class. It seems to me that my teaching can be most effective if I can get plenty of illustrations of chamber music fairly well performed. Can you put me in touch with several good amateur players who would be willing to play chamber music to my class on Wednesday evenings for about one or one and a half hours? As no funds are available for this purpose, I must rely on the goodwill of those amateurs who may respond to my appeal.

—Yours, &c.,

GEORGE LANE.

53, Wroughton Road,
Clapham Common, S.W.-11.
November 2, 1919.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

ROBERT FELIX GOODWIN, aged sixty-seven, director, since 1876, of the firm which afterwards became Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, Ltd. He had many personal connections with musicians throughout the land, and was actively interested in the cause of British music.

ARTHUR BOOSEY, at the age of sixty-two. For twenty years he was head of the well-known firm of music publishers and instrument makers, and he directed the Boosey Ballad Concerts at the Royal Albert Hall.

Mlle. BERTHA BROUSIL, at the age of eighty-two, a well-known violinist. The noted Brousil family was much in demand at Court and other functions during the 'fifties and 'sixties.

Sixty Years Ago.

From the Musical Times of December, 1859:

AS ORGANIST or DEPUTY at Church or Chapel.—No remuneration required. Address, T.S., 9, Bridport-place, New North-road.

AS ORGANIST.—The Advertiser desires an engagement at Christmas. Salary not a consideration. Address, M., care of Mr. Brown, Stationer, 195, Strand. (W.C.)

ORGANIST.—The Advertiser offers his services in or near Town. Salary no object. Address, H.P., Mr. Houghton's, 30, Poultry (E.C.).

ORGANIST WANTED at the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum Chapel, Old Kent-road, to perform a plain congregational service twice on each Sunday and once on Wednesday evenings. Salary £25 per annum.

DEATH OF LOUIS SPOHR.

We have to record the death of the venerable composer, Louis Spohr, who died, after a short illness, at Hesse Cassel, on the 22nd of October. . . . Louis Spohr's creations are a legacy bequeathed to thousands, and will be hailed with enthusiasm as long as music shall have charms to attract mankind.

BRIGHTON.—On Monday evening at the Town Hall, Herr Kuhe gave a grand concert, assisted by the following, artistes—Mdlles. Titiens and Vaneri, Madame Borchardt, Signori Giuglini, Corsi, Aldighieri, and Violette. Harmonium, Herr Engel. Pianoforte, M. E. de Paris, and Herr Kuhe. Conductor, Signor Ardit. Such an array of talent could not fail to attract, and the hall was full to overflowing. Mdlle. Titiens obtained an encore in Balfe's song, "I'm a merry Zingara," and Madame Borchardt much applause in "Home, sweet home." The other artistes exerted themselves to the utmost, and continued bursts of applause was the reward. The concert closed with Flotow's beautiful quartetto, "Buona notte."

MENDELSSOHN.—The colossal statue of the late Mendelssohn Bartholdy, modelled by Mr. Bacon, was cast on the 22nd ult., in bronze, at the works of Messrs. Robinson and Cottam, Lower Belgrave Place, Pimlico, in the presence of many of the late composer's most eminent admirers. The erection of a statue to the memory of Mendelssohn originated with the Sacred Harmonic Society, about seven years ago, the Council of the Society commencing the list by a donation of 50 guineas; but the idea had no sooner been promulgated than Her Most Gracious Majesty forwarded a similar amount in furtherance of the objects of the Society. . . . The fidelity of the likeness and the close resemblance of the costume worn by the composer, were the theme of universal approbation, and while the model was in progress it was inspected by the Prince Consort, who was pleased to express the great satisfaction he had experienced in viewing so faithful a counterpart of the illustrious original. The quantity of metal used in the statue is about a ton and a half; it will stand eight feet high, and will be elevated on a granite pedestal. With respect to the site on which the statue will be placed, it is stated that application has been made to Her Majesty's Government to allow it to be placed in the Mall in St. James's Park, but the answer has not yet been received.

The syllabus of the Royal Philharmonic Society promises a season of high interest. The following first performances are announced: Debussy's Fantaisie for pianoforte and orchestra, played by M. Alfred Cortôt; Malipiero's 'Le pause del silenzio' (first time in England); Delius's 'The song of the high hills' (choral); Holst's 'The hymn of Jesus' (choral); and Liapounov's second Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Katherine Goodson as soloist. The singing body is the new Philharmonic Choir, under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, which is to take part in two concerts. Other items of interest are Holbrooke's 'Ulalume,' Scriabin's 'Divine Poem,' a Handel Concerto played by Mr. Goss Custard, and the Choral Symphony. The orchestral conductors are Mr. Albert Coates, Mr. Geoffrey Toye, Mr. Adrian Boult, and Mr. Landon Ronald. The season consists of seven concerts.

OPERA IN LONDON.

BY FRANCIS E. BARRETT.

THE BEECHAM COMPANY'S SEASON AT COVENT GARDEN.

It was generally supposed that London would be without any representation of opera this winter, for when most of the arrangements for the season were made known, nothing was said upon the subject. At a late hour the welcome announcement was made that Covent Garden would open its doors to opera, and that the performances would be given by the Sir Thomas Beecham Opera Company, Limited. This is the new style of the organization that has been 'carrying on' with such effect during the war. The business-looking title the Company now possesses implies that it is established on a firm financial basis—a matter for congratulation where opera in English is concerned. So far, however, there has been little expansion of the undertaking, and it still remains somewhat in need of strengthening.

But that doubtless will come with time, more especially as the opportunity for adding to the operatic force is greater than it was, since opera is to be made a subject of special study at one at least of the London schools of music, the way being led in this instance by the Royal College of Music. But the effort is young yet, and has had no time to exercise its influence.

The Company consequently has remained much the same as it was in previous seasons, but with some notable additions. One of these is found in the person of Madame Stralia, who seems to be permanently engaged, and others are Mr. Edmund Burke, well-known at Covent Garden, Mr. George Milner, an American, who has sung a good deal in opera in Germany, and last, but not least, Mr. Dinh Gilly, who has made regular and successful appearances in London under the auspices of the Grand Syndicate. Thus there has been a small acquisition of strength. As far as the season has been carried out down to the time of going to press, it has been somewhat evident that the reinforcing process must be begun soon if the new organization is to win permanent success.

The arrangements for the season are somewhat unusual. The repertoire seems to take it for granted that the public knows all about opera, and that it is now ready to deal with its latest phases. In spite of the fact that the audiences have been of good dimensions this is really a mistaken view. It is giving the public a move up before it is ready. We have still a war-time public in search of any kind of amusement, and ready to take anything that is offered. But it is impossible to build on this foundation. The real ground-work of an operatic education has still to be laid down. Nothing in the present scheme, for example, illustrates the process of the development of opera, and nothing has been done to enable the would-be opera-goer to acquire real appreciation of the art by illustrating its growth. It may be that such a plan is ideal, but the fact remains that if any lasting appreciation of opera is to be cultivated, it must be inculcated on sound principles. The present procedure is simply a form of tickling the public: of attracting the child's attention with the pretty pictures, and leaving out all the long words.

The greater part of the scheme has been made up of what may be termed all the higher mathematics in the operatic sum; the addition and the subtraction have been ignored. To take the season in chronological order, which I think a better plan than to pick out the plums and pass over the remainder, a beginning was made with the masterwork of a master-hand in the shape of Verdi's 'Othello.' In this most of the exponents were familiar. Mr. Frank Mullings repeated his impersonation of the Moor which undoubtedly has the distinguishing merit of being perfectly sincere. It is only his method as a singer and as an actor that places a limit on its effect. Miss Jeanne Brola, who was the Desdemona, carried out an effort that was new to London. There was much charm in it, only discounted—intentionally or unintentionally—by a suggestion that she was thinking too much of '... crime unconcil'd as yet to Heaven and grace' and conveyed it by a persistent tremolo in her voice. The Iago was the new-comer, Mr. George Milner, who showed himself possessed of a gratifying familiarity with the stage and an ease of deportment that did much to augment the impression of his work, of which as yet no further example has been seen. Mr. Webster Millar's Cassio stood out well, and Miss Edith Clegg was the Emilia, operatically a rather insignificant person. Sir Thomas Beecham conducted an energetic performance of the wonderful score, showing up the good qualities of the orchestra at his command. From Shakespeare a move was made on the second night to Old Russia, when Borodin's 'Prince Igor' was given. Its first representation in English was seen during the Grand season in the summer, and on this occasion the cast was much the same. Mr. Edmund Burke was the Prince Igor—a dignified figure, but one that seemed to feel some strangeness in his surroundings, which found expression in poor articulation of the words. Madame Stralia sang brightly as the Princess, but did not show complete familiarity with the part. Good work was done by Miss Edna Thornton and Mr. Norman Allin as the members of the friendly tribe that captured the Prince, and the wild dances of the Polovetz were a special feature under the direction of M. Gavrillov. Mr. Albert Coates conducted. Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Coq d'Or' followed. This opera-ballet or ballet-opera the British performers have made their own. Truth to tell it is somewhat inane, but the singers and actors showed that it could be amusing. Mr. Foster Richardson as the King—the personification of satire—was distinctly funny, a fact that could be appreciated, thanks to his admirably clear articulation of the words. Mr. Herbert Langley gave him loyal assistance. The Queen's 'kickery-kick' music was delivered by Miss Sylvia Nelis, and Miss Doris Lemon was the Bird. As a joke the thing was entirely successful. Mr. Percy Pitt conducted. The next night brought contrast in the shape of the marvellous 'Falstaff' of Verdi. Decided service to the operatic art is done by placing such a monumental example in the repertoire, but that service would have been rather more graceful had the Company prepared themselves a little more. There was much too great a tendency to speak instead of sing the words, and there was some disposition to 'guy' the performance, as the word is behind the footlights. The cast—which included Mesdames Agnes Nicholls, Gladys Ancrum, Miriam Licette, and Clegg, and Messrs. Maurice D'Oisley and Sydney Russell—can and must do better. Happily the Falstaff of Mr. Frederick Ralalow saved the situation. It was a very 'rich' piece of work, amusing without being farcical. The Bardolph and Pistol of Messrs. Heather and Wynn had all the necessary 'cat-a-mountain' looks, and Mr. Percy Heming was an excellent Ford. Mr. Eugène Goossens, jun., conducted in rather utilitarian fashion.

Wagner's 'Tristan,' which followed, exercised its wonted appeal on a section of the community which attended in large numbers. There was a familiar exposition of this the longest, if not the greatest, operatic duet in existence at the hands of Miss Rosina Buckman, the Isolda, and Mr. Mullings, the Tristan, whose efforts were supplemented with good effect by Miss Ancrum, the Brangane, and Mr. Norman Allin, the King Mark. Mr. Percy Pitt's reading of the score was sound but not inspired. The final production of the week was Puccini's 'La Bohème,' which has certainly come into its own as far as London is concerned. Miss Miriam Licette made her appearance as Mimi, but without investing the part with any great vocal distinction owing to her unfortunate method of emitting her upper notes with an effect that is more penetrating than pleasing. Mr. Millar was a debonair Rudolph, and with the help of the others and Mr. Percy Pitt at the conductor's desk there was a spirited performance rather more British than French in tone. Later the list was swelled by M. Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' with an alluring Delilah in Miss Edna Thornton, a vigorous Samson in Mr. Frederick Blamey, and a very fine Aged Hebrew in Mr. Norman Allin, with Mr. Pitt as a watchful conductor.

Fresh ground was broken a few days later when the Company offered a curious mixture of operatic styles by giving Wolf-Ferrari's 'Susanna's Secret,' and Stravinsky's 'The Nightingale,' both for the first time in English. The former suffered a little from want of rehearsal, but it was clear that in due course both Miss Brola's Countess and Mr. Ralalow's Count will be having distinction, to say nothing of the miming of Mr. Langley as the Servant. Mr. Albert Coates laid rather heavy hands on the orchestral score. As to the Stravinsky work, it is for the future rather than the present to decide its merits. The scheme is apparently years ahead of present-day language. The piece was magnificently mounted, with special attention to the Reception Scene, with the aid of M. Komisarjevsky, specially engaged. Miss Sylvia Nelis, Miss Clegg, Mr. D'Oisley, and Mr. Foster Richardson took the principal parts. Mr. Eugène Goossens had charge of the instrumental side, which presents weird noises or enchanting sounds according to one's degree of 'healthiness'—entirely a matter of point of view. To the plain man, there is much to be done before we arrive at the particular stage this writing represents. A matinée performance of 'Madame Butterfly,' with Miss Desirée Ellinger as an ideal Cio-cio-san, as far as looks were concerned, but with a voice of insufficient volume for Covent Garden, Mr. Webster Millar an excellent Pinkerton, and the Sharpless represented by Mr. Dinh Gilly, who made his first appearance in opera in English and showed an exemplary command of the art of singing the English tongue, completed the first phase.

The latest production, and one to which only brief reference can be made at this hour, was that (in English) of Wagner's sacred music-drama 'Parsifal.' There is much to be said about it. The introduction in the British repertoire of this compound of legend, spiritualism, and religion is a question that should be discussed. It cannot be passed over lightly, but in brief it may be said that the exponents excelled themselves and did work of a highly commendable order, affording striking testimony to the ability of the British operatic singer to rise to the occasion. It was done in our own way, but it was uncommonly well done, when its difficulties are remembered. The details I prefer to leave until another occasion.

GILBERT AND SULLIVAN.

Contrast to the strenuous striving above recorded has been found in the performances of the Gilbert and Sullivan works. There is an appropriate hint of topsy-turvydom in the announcement of the performances at the Prince's Theatre. It runs: 'By arrangement with Charles B. Cochran, Gilbert Miller presents Rupert D'Oyly Carte's season of Gilbert and Sullivan Operas.' The public it is that gets the benefit of this arrangement. It is satisfactory to find that one was not wrong in calling for representations of these famous works in Central London as an antidote, if nothing else, to the rubbish that passes for light music. Every performance since September 29 has been given to full houses. 'The Gondoliers' has been succeeded by 'Iolanthe' and 'The Mikado.' The last is very well done, for it is done in the right spirit, which is everything. The unwise or the ignorant have been inclined to bring accusations of 'gagging' against Ko-ko, but Mr. Carte has very promptly pointed out that such slight changes as were made had the written authority of Sir W. S. Gilbert. As a matter of fact the pieces needed very little bringing 'up-to-date,' for there was something of Shakespeare's prescience in Gilbert, with the result that his thirty-five year old text still has all the point of a present-day libretto—rather more than less, as he himself would have remarked. Making allowance for the enormous changes that have come about in stage methods and in vocal attainment the performance is remarkably good all round. Every one knows the opera and its history: how it has been banned in this country and performed in Germany—no recommendation, possibly, in the latter event—and that its words and music have become incorporated in our every-day life. There is a capital Pooh-Bah in Mr. Leo Sheffield, and a Katisha of the real, true type in Miss Bertha Lewis. The others do well. They are Miss Helen Gilliland (Yum-Yum), Miss Nellie Briercliffe (Pitti-Sing), Miss C. Ferguson (Peep-Bo), Mr. Derek Oldham (Nanki-Poo), and Mr. Frederick Hobbs (the Mikado). The chorus is again excellent, and Mr. Geoffrey Toye, the conductor, shows for so essentially modern a musician a very keen appreciation of the genius of Sullivan, a genius that is being accorded the recognition that is its due. Certainly Gilbert and Sullivan have the 'longest run' to their record, since from the year of its production, in 1884, 'The Mikado' has never been 'off the road'—and, it is to be hoped, never will be.

MR. DINH GILLY, the well-known French-Algerian baritone, who is singing at Covent Garden in English for the first time.

Photo by Sydney J. Loeb.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A chamber concert was given on Wednesday afternoon, November 19, the programme of which included a number of interesting items. Arensky's Variations on a theme by Tchaikovsky were performed by the Junior Orchestra under Mr. Spencer Dyke. This orchestra also played the accompaniments to the first movement of Bach's Concerto in D minor, the pianoforte part being given by Miss Sybil Barlow (Thalberg Scholar). Miss Desirée MacEwan was heard in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, while Jean Pougnet led the first movement from Beethoven's Quartet in G, Op. 18, No. 2. The programme also included songs by Granville Bantock, Waddington Cooke, and Paul Kerby (student).

The R. A. M. Club will hold its next meeting in the Duke's Hall on Saturday evening, December 6, at 8 p.m. This meeting will take the form of a 'welcome' to those connected with the R. A. M. who have served in H. M. Forces, and who will be the guests of the Club for that evening. It is hoped that the programme will be contributed by some of those who have been demobilized. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will be present and will welcome the guests on behalf of the Club. As the addresses of many past pupils are not known to the Secretary, all those who would like to receive invitations are asked to communicate with Mr. J. Percy Baker, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W. 17.

The following award has recently been announced: The Sainton-Dolby Prize for Sopranos, awarded to Miss Christabel Edwards (a native of South Africa), Miss May Blyth being very highly commended and Miss Féadora Turnbull commended. The Adjudicators were Miss Janie Blake and Miss Katie Moss.

On Wednesday afternoon, October 29, and the two following Wednesdays, Sir Alexander Mackenzie lectured upon the Evolution of Music, tracing its development up to the use of opera and oratorio. In his first lecture he showed the intimate connection between musical culture and the Church during the Middle Ages—referring to the work of Hucbald, Franco, and Guido d'Arezzo—the early attempts at notation, the beginnings of harmony and rhythm. In his second lecture he dealt with the different kinds of popular singers of the Middle Ages, the Trouveres, the Jongleurs, the Troubadours, the Minnesingers, and the Meistersingers—also to some of the chief vocal forms of those times, the Canon, the Motet, and the Madrigal, leading up to the work of Orlando di Lasso and Palestrina. In his third lecture he discussed the combining of music and poetry, and the development of dramatic expression which culminated in use of the opera, referring to the work of Cambert and Lulli, and the development of the orchestra and the Lulli overture.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

The past month has been one of varied activity at the College. Besides the usual chamber and orchestral concerts, at which advanced pupils perform, 'Informal' concerts have, after experiments in previous terms, become a permanent institution. At these concerts young performers and composers try their strength before friendly gatherings of fellow-pupils and relatives, with a view to a later and more ambitious appearance at the regular College concerts. Even single movements of quartets and concertos have been played, and College composers have had practical demonstrations of the effect in performance of the works composed in the course of their training.

At the College concerts, in addition to the usual features, an organ and choral recital has been given, the choral works being Bach's eight-part Motet 'Come, Jesu, come,' and two movements of Vaughan-Williams's 'Sea Symphony.' During the month Dr. Vaughan-Williams paid a visit to the choral class, who had the honour of singing the 'Sea Symphony' in his presence.

Besides the recently established classes for Teachers and Conductors, and for Breathing, and the lectures on History and Extemporisation, the remodelled Operatic Class, under Mr. Albert Coates, is now in operation, and in this connection M. Gavrilov, of the Beecham Opera, Covent Garden, has begun his Stage Gesture and Rhythmical Movement Classes.

Armistice Day was commemorated by an impressive little ceremony in the Concert Hall. The teaching staff and pupils assembled just before eleven, when the director, Prof. H. P. Allen, read the Roll of Honour of the thirty-six members of the College who fell in the War, and after the Silence Sir Hubert Parry's 'Jerusalem' was sung.

The first of the rehearsals of works by British composers, under the new scheme of the Patron's Fund, was held on November 13, in the presence of a large gathering.

In addition to Mr. Albert Coates and M. Gavrilov, some interesting appointments to the teaching staff may be recorded, namely, Dr. Vaughan-Williams (composition), Mr. G. Holst (theory), Mr. Clive Carey (singing), Mr. Claud Biggs and Miss Kathleen Long (pianoforte), Mr. Ivor James (violinocello), and Lieut. Charles Hoby, Mus. D. (military music).

CHAMBER MUSIC FOR AMATEURS.

First or second violin wishes to join amateur band or quartet; music of any school. Lancaster or Preston; any hour of any day except Sunday.—WAVELET, c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (first or second), and 'Cellist wish to join chamber-music party. Moderately difficult music of any school; Tuesday evenings.—JOHN THEODORE WISE, 6, Routh Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W. 18.

Viola player, chamber-music or orchestra. Streatham or neighbourhood; evenings and Sundays.—MISS K., 7, High Road, S.W. 16.

First or second violin.—Romford, or any neighbouring district on G.E.R.; any evening except Tuesday.—FIDDLER, c/o Musical Times.

'Cellist wishes to join good amateur quartet for study of standard chamber works; can give access to large library of compositions; Dulwich or neighbouring districts; evenings.—W. F., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to join small party (South London preferred) for performance of good music, not too difficult.—FRESA, c/o Musical Times.

Baritone.—For quartet and glee-singing, or similar small choral forms.—FRESA, c/o Musical Times.

Viola.—Classical or modern quartets; Finchley or North London; any evening.—E. S. H., c/o Musical Times.

Vacancies for viola, 'cello, and bass in orchestra of musical society.—B. M. S., 2, Little Ebury Street, S.W. 1.

Pianist wishes to play with chamber-music parties; Sutton, Surrey, or in London, West End.—QUINTET, c/o Musical Times.

Young pianist wishes to join good players for classical and modern music.—F. PORTE, 56, Mayall Road, S.E. 24.

Pianist wishes to form trio for practice of chamber-music with violinist and 'cellist, or would join violinist only; afternoon, weekly or fortnightly; S.W. district.—C., c/o Musical Times.

Flautist, duets and trios, for Flutes concertante. West Hampstead; Sunday afternoons.—FLAUTIST, c/o Musical Times.

[We shall be glad if those making use of this scheme will kindly let us know when their announcements have borne fruit. Failing such notice, advertisements will be inserted three times.—ED., M.T.]

Choral Notes and News.

For many years Handel's 'Deborah' has occupied an honoured position in history-books, where it has been allowed to remain undisturbed. Some of its choruses deserve a better fate—notably the double chorus 'Immortal Loid of Earth and Skies,' 'See the Proud Chief' (five parts), and the concluding six-part 'Alleluiah.' Great praise is therefore due to Mr. Ernest Harcourt and his Norwich singers for reviving interest in the oratorio. A performance given at St. Andrew's Hall, on November 13, attracted and delighted a large audience, and provided some of the best choral singing that has been heard at Norwich. We understand that influential requests have been made for a repetition. The proceeds of the concert were destined for St. Dunstan's Hostel and the Norwich Y.M.C.A. It remains to be added that the solo parts were creditably sung by pupils of Mr. Harcourt.

The most interesting of recent events in London choral affairs has been the formation of the Philharmonic Choir, under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott. The advance programme of the Royal Philharmonic Society gives evidence that the worthy aims of the Society are to be well forwarded in its first season's work. The Choir is to appear at two concerts. On February 26 it is to give the first performance of Delius's 'Song of the high hills,' and to join in the Choral Symphony under Mr. Albert Coates. The programme on March 25 consists of Bach's 'God goeth up,' Holst's 'The Hymn of Jesus' (first performance), Percy Grainger's 'Morning song in the jungle,' and 'Father and Daughter,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah.'

The annual evening concert of the Royal Albert Institute, Windsor, was given on November 3, under the direction of Sir Walter Parratt. The programme included Beale's Madrigal for men's voices, 'Come let us join the roundelay,' C. H. Lloyd's 'Hope,' Cowen's 'The Heroes,' de Rillé's 'Gentle peace,' and Hatton's 'Tar's Song.' The choristers were heard alone in Bainton's 'The filling of the swamps,' and H. G. Ley's 'There's a clean wind blowing,' and 'Where go the boats?'

Dulwich Philharmonic Society gave 'Elijah' on November 5, under the direction of Mr. Martin Kingslake. The future arrangements of the Society include 'A Tale of Old Japan' on December 17, Haydn's third Mass in D, and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' on February 18, 'Messiah' on Good Friday, and 'Faust' on April 21.

Lincoln Musical Society—comprising a band and chorus of two hundred and fifty—announces 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha' on December 3.

Letchworth Philharmonic Society has Elgar's 'King Olaf' in preparation for a concert in December, and will give 'Messiah' on Good Friday.

Excellent work is being done by the Portsmouth Philharmonic Society under the direction of Mr. Hugh Burry. Three Promenade Concerts on successive days in October provided a feast of well-chosen music, including part-songs and madrigals, well-known overtures, &c., concertos and symphony movements. On December 11, the complete cycle of 'The Song of Hiawatha' is announced, and the programme on March 18 will include Charles Macpherson's 'By the waters of Babylon,' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise.'

An excellent programme was chosen for the South London Philharmonic Society's concert at Goldsmiths' College on November 1. Besides Elgar's 'From the Bavarian Highlands' the choir sang Gibbons's 'The silver swan,' J. Saville's 'The Waits,' and Wilbye's 'Sweet honey-sucking bees.' Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto was played by Mr. George Woodhouse, Miss G. Ffrangcon-Davies sang Mozart's 'Deh Vieni,' and the orchestra was heard alone in Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony.

The North Staffs District Choral Society gave a concert on October 23, with Bach's 'Jesu, priceless Treasure' as the chief work in the programme. The singing of this noble music was worthy of its theme, and fully sustained the high reputation of the choir. Other choral pieces were Elgar's 'O happy eyes,' Faning's 'Daybreak,' and Benet's 'All creatures now are merry-minded.' Mr. Ernest C. Redfern conducted, and solos were given by Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Robert Radford, Mr. Albert Sammons, and Mr. Arthur Cooke.

The programme of a concert given by the Southend Madrigal Society on November 12 included Marchant's 'Love is a sickness full of woes,' Fletcher's 'The Islet,' Leslie's 'A Rose of the Garden,' Brewer's 'The boy,' Caldicott's 'Winter days,' Elgar's 'As torrents in summer,' Balfour Gardiner's 'Cargoes,' and Leslie's 'Charm me asleep'—an excellent list. Mr. W. L. Booth conducted.

The Stockport Vocal Union gave the first concert of the season on November 3, under Dr. T. Keighley's direction. The choral pieces in the programme included Morley's 'Now is a month of maying,' Faning's 'Daybreak,' Dr. Keighley's 'The Leprehaun,' Elgar's 'O happy eyes,' and Balfour Gardiner's 'News from Whydah.' The orchestra played Massenet's 'Scènes pittoresques,' and, conducted by Mr. Harry Mortimer, accompanied Dr. Keighley in two movements from Guilmant's Symphony in D, Op. 42. 'Messiah' is announced for December 22, and Verdi's 'Il Trovatore' for February 9.

The English Folk and Carol Choir, which did good work last year on behalf of charities, is again active. Mr. Martin Shaw conducts, and the secretary is Miss Constance C. Russell, 11, Bigwood Road, N.W. 4.

'Messiah' will be given by Cheltenham Philharmonic Society under Mr. C. J. Phillips on December 16.

Mr. Bernard Langdale has been appointed conductor of Wombwell and District Choral Society.

RUSSIAN CHURCH MUSIC.

The forty-sixth session of the Musical Association opened on November 4, with a paper on 'Russian Church Music' by Mr. A. M. Henderson, the organist to the University of Glasgow. He remarked that while the literature, and much of the musical art of Russia was familiar and appreciated in this country, the beautiful and characteristic music of the Russian Church was unknown here. This could be accounted for partly by the difficulty of the language, though suitable translations had now been provided, and partly by the difficulty of performance, all the works being intended for unaccompanied singing, while many of them were in six, eight, ten, and even twelve parts. The Russian nation had been described as the most religious in Christendom, and no doubt in no other country did the people give a more whole-hearted allegiance to the Christian Church in its local embodiment. The Orthodox Church was not merely national in the technical sense, it was national because it enshrined the deepest convictions of an overwhelming majority of the Russian people. In some respects the Greek Church resembled the Roman Catholic. There were however, many differences between East and West. The Church architecture was entirely different. There were no organs in Russian churches, nor were there any seats. Sermons were preached only occasionally, at important seasons of the Church's year. What they had was worship. The language in which the service was conducted was archaic, and called Church Slavonic, but it was understood by the congregation.

For us in the West, the history of Russian Church music might be said to commence with Bortniansky (1751-1825), before whose time the musical service of the Russian Church consisted almost entirely of a kind of free type of chant or plainsong. He was sent by Catherine the Great to continue his studies with Galuppi at Venice, where he remained for eleven years. On his return to Russia in 1779 he was appointed director of the Imperial Chapel choir, a position he retained until his death. The singing of the choir had left much to be desired, but Bortniansky set himself to improve matters, with the result that it reached a standard of excellence which had made it admired from Bortniansky's time to this day. He was a very fine choirmaster, but as a composer, while he wrote some excellent Church music, he left much that was very dull and even commonplace. Italian music was then the vogue, and Bortniansky evidently thought it the right thing to compose on fashionable Italian models, with the result that his own personality—as a Russian composer—was almost entirely obliterated. This Italian influence has been gradually but steadily eliminated until at the present time, in the writing of men like Nikolsky, Kalinnikoff, Kashalsky, Ippolitoff-Ivanov and others, we meet with work so strong in character, so national, so indigenous, that at once we feel it could never have been written outside of Russia.

In Tchaikovsky we meet with the first great modern composer for the Russian Church. His works comprise a setting of the Liturgy, an Evening Service, and some very fine Motets. In these we find a style of composition very different from that of the Symphony writer so well known to us all. In his Church music Western influences had but little place. Instead, all was coloured by the plainsong of the Eastern Church, giving a strength, character, and fascination not often found in the instrumental writing. Balakireff did excellent work as director of the Imperial Chapel Choir, for which he wrote six pieces, characterised by splendid colour, vitality, and variety of treatment. The brilliant career of Kalinnikoff, one of the most gifted of modern Russian composers, was unfortunately cut short at the early age of thirty-five. His beautiful and deeply felt Church music, so sincere, so full of character and originality, had all been published since his death. The twenty pieces he left represented the highest achievement in Russian Church music.

Rachmaninoff has published ten sets of remarkably fine Church Motets, conceived mostly on bigger lines than those by Tchaikovsky. The music is of exceptional beauty and originality, eminently vocal and gratefully written for all the voices. 'To Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul' was, in the lecturer's judgment, one of the most beautiful pieces of Church music ever written, and this excepting no school and no composer. It is only twenty-two bars long, but within these limits were comprised more inspiration, beauty, and sheer genius than were to be found within the covers of many a large and pretentious work.

The outstanding and characteristic features of this great and splendid literature were first the all-pervading modal influence, giving a colour and ecclesiastical quality to all this Church music, and second, the influence of the national folk-song not only in the curves of the melodic line, but also in the freedom of the rhythms. Many of the pieces were either not barred at all, or only by dotted lines for the first guidance of the singers. Another feature was the wonderful yet musical freedom of the part-writing, comparable to the writing for a string quartet, but withal it was ever vocally, and not instrumentally, conceived. Above and beyond all this, there was the spiritual beauty of the music, for it had a nobility, a dignity, and a quality and elevation quite its own. These were surely features frankly to be desired in our own Church music, especially at a time when so much was tolerated that was utterly trivial, cheap, and unworthy. The introduction of some of this Russian Church music would have an immediate effect in raising the standard of our choir singing, it would bring a purer and more worthy type of music into our churches, and it should also react helpfully on our own composers, encouraging them to give us work worthy of themselves and worthy of use in places consecrated to the worship of Almighty God.

The paper was illustrated by examples from the works of the composers mentioned, sung by members of the Streatham Congregational Church Choir under the direction of Mr. Frederick Haggis. J. P. B.

Music in the Provinces.

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

BELFAST.

The forty-sixth season of the Philharmonic Society was inaugurated by an interesting concert on October 24. The work of the choir consisted of Bach's double chorus 'Now shall the grace,' and Dvorák's Te Deum in G. The careful training and skilful conducting of Mr. E. Godfrey Brown ensured excellent presentations of both works. The orchestra provided the accompaniments, and also played Beethoven's 'Coriolan' Overture, Wagner's 'Rienzi' Overture, and Massenet's 'March du Cid.' The greatest success of the concert was, however, the performance by Miss Irene Scharrer, of Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor, and several works of Chopin. Miss Scharrer, who had never before performed at Belfast, electrified the audience by her playing. It is indeed difficult to imagine that any pianoforte reading could be more perfect, combining as it did fine interpretation and unerring technique.

Miss Ellen Suddaby, who possesses a charming soprano voice, also made her first appearance at Belfast, her singing being highly appreciated. Mr. Newell, a very good local baritone, also sang.

BIRMINGHAM.

An excellent start was made in October in the local musical world, the many concerts given being all well attended and appreciated. The Appleby Matthews Sunday evening orchestral concerts at the Futurist Cinema continue to draw crowded audiences, and one is glad to see that works by new English composers find their proper place in the programmes. Mr. J. D. Davis, a native of Birmingham, and sprung from a musical family, was represented by a newly orchestrated piece, the prelude from his Russian opera 'The Zaparogues,' given at the Theatre Royal by an amateur company in 1895. The new concert-arrangement of the work, based on three main themes, is framed on a big scale. Another Birmingham musician, Mr. Clifford Roberts, organist of St. Jude's Church, personally conducted his 'Pastorale' for strings, a distinctly melodious composition which was well played and enthusiastically received.

A Saturday evening concert was given at the Town Hall on October 18, arranged by our local baritone, Mr. Sidney Stoddard, in aid of the National Institute for the Blind. The principal artists were Miss Rosina Buckman and Mr. Maurice D'Oisly, who in operatic selections and some popular old songs—Tosti's 'Good-bye,' and 'Sullivan's 'The Sailor's Grave'—brought down the house, as the saying goes. The other contributors to the concert were Miss Cecilia Yeoman (pianoforte), Miss Nancy Guest, and Mr. Alfred Askey (vocalists), Miss Dorothy Roe (reciter), and Dr. Rowland Winn, an excellent accompanist.

The first of Mr. Max Mossel's series of four popular concerts was held in the large Central Hall, when the programme was devoted to a pianoforte recital by Benno Moiseiwitsch. It was his only appearance here previous to his extended American tour. His excellent and varied selection comprised Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Liszt's wonderful Sonata in B minor in one movement, Schumann's Carnival, Op. 9, Ravel's 'Jeux d'Eaux,' Debussy's 'Clair de Lune,' and Brahms's 'Variations on a Theme by Paganini.' There are twenty-eight variations, but these were not played in the order in which they were written, the performer making his own choice according to his fancy. It was the crowning effort of the recital, in which the artist showed that he is probably the finest living interpreter of Brahms. His technical facility is marvellous in its suggestion of effortless ease, while his readings of Bach, Schumann, and Liszt were marked by pronounced individuality and artistic conception.

Mr. Bernard Jackson, the founder of the Birmingham Bach Society, gave an interesting chamber concert at the Royal Society of Artists' gallery on October 23, which served also to introduce William Fenney's Rhapsody, Op. 26, No. 3, for pianoforte and 'cello. The composition was worthy a hearing—indeed, it made such an excellent impression that it was repeated at the close of the programme. Mr. Fenney has already shown that he possesses inventive talent in a marked degree, and his Rhapsody, excellently played by Mr. Bernard Jackson and Miss Joan Willis, afforded delightful hearing. The programme included also Beethoven's Sonata in A, Op. 69, for pianoforte and 'cello, Schubert's rarely-heard Pianoforte Sonata in C minor, Op. posth., and two groups of songs by Haydn, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Handel, Pergolesi, and Veracini, which were sung by Miss Eveline Stevenson with much charm. Madame Minadiou accompanied the songs in her artistic manner.

Madame Minadiou's first Matinée Musicale of the season was held at the Grosvenor Room, Grand Hotel, on October 25, and consisted of a vocal recital by the eminent Russian tenor, M. Vladimir Rosing, in which he was accompanied on the pianoforte by Signor Veroli, a perfect master in this difficult art. He took the place of Madame Rosing, who, on account of indisposition, was not able to be present. In an exhausting programme, M. Rosing gave 'The four Seasons of Love'—Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter—as portrayed by Rimsky-Korsakoff, Rubinstein, Schubert, Brahms, Duparc, Tchernepin, Tchaikovsky, Martini, Chausson, Schumann, and Cyril Scott. Unusual temperament and passion characterised his magnificent and expressive singing—indeed, he seemed to fascinate his audience in a marked degree. Not the least impressive contributions were comprised in his encores, viz., Grieg's 'Le Rêve,' and Leoncavallo's 'Vesti la Giubba' from 'I Pagliacci.'

In connection with the University of Birmingham, Prof. Tovey gave a recital of a series of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas at the Midland Institute on October 24 and following Fridays. He is no doubt a Beethoven player par excellence whom all students should hear. It is rare to listen to so graphic a reading of the 'Appassionata' as Prof. Tovey's. His conception and mastery strongly recalled such memorable interpretations as those of Anton Rubinstein and Madame Carreño.

The Midland Musical Society, which has already in the past vindicated its affection for Coleridge-Taylor's 'Song of Hiawatha,' once more placed this wonderfully original choral work in its season's programme, presenting it in the Town Hall on October 25, when it was conducted as usual by Mr. A. J. Cotton. A gratifying performance was secured which had many excellent points, the choir (especially strong in female voices) putting plenty of energy into its task along with emotional and dramatic fervour. The interpretation of the picturesque orchestral score was evidently a labour of love for the players, which they ably discharged. Excellent service was also rendered by the three principals, Miss Margaret Harrison, Mr. William Heseltine, and Mr. Alfred Askey.

The first of the Quinlan Subscription Concerts was given in the Town Hall on October 28, in the presence of a packed audience, the great attraction being Madame Tetrizzini, who had not appeared here since 1914. Her voice is now fuller in its lower register than formerly, otherwise there is no difference in the quality of her high soprano timbre, and technically her vocalisation touched the phenomenal, as hitherto. In addition to the Mad Scene from Ambroise Thomas's 'Hamlet,' and Verdi's 'Ah! fors è lui' from 'Traviata,' she contributed no end of encores, among them being 'Voi che sapete' from Mozart's 'Figaro,' and 'The last rose of Summer,' sung in English, which was given with slight ornamentations. She had for her coadjutors an excellent Italian tenor, Signor Lenghi Cellini, Madame Renée Chemet, the accomplished violinist, and Signor Pietro Cimara, an artistic accompanist.

Sir Edward Elgar appeared at the Opera House at Dudley on October 30 at a Victory and Peace concert under the auspices of the Dudley Madrigal Society, when he conducted an impressive performance of his 'Carillon,' the poem being graphically recited by Miss Katrina Lund. The programme also comprised 'The Spirit of England' and other of the composer's compositions. Mr. John Coates was the solo vocalist, and Mr. Lewis conducted. The Mayor of Dudley (Mr. T. W. Adshad) presented an address of welcome to our great English musician, which, bound in red velvet, with silk doublings, and tooled in gold, was the work of Mr. Ivor B. Shaw (Principal of the Dudley School of Art).

Madame Clara Butt sang at the Town Hall on October 29 and 30, and at a matinée, a unique event in itself which proved quite successful. A special attraction was the appearance at each concert of the complete band of the Coldstream Guards, under the baton of Major Mackenzie Rogan, the veteran conductor. The volume of sound was at times too ponderous for the Hall, but all the same it was delightful to hear such glorious tone-quality in some excellent selections, given with splendid technique and unflinching precision. Madame Clara Butt was in fine voice, and wielded her wonted charm over the audience. Mr. Kennerly Rumford, who was also of the party, shared the honours with Madame Butt.

Mr. Hubert S. Brown's first concert given at the Midland Institute on November 1 was entirely devoted to a pianoforte recital by M. Arthur de Greef. The accomplished pianist, who has rarely played with more attractive charm and finish, presented a number of well-known pieces, including Mendelssohn's 'Variations Sérieuses,' of which he has made a special study, Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, Liszt's twelfth 'Rhapsodie Hongroise,' Scarlatti's Caprice, and Landon Ronald's melodious trifle 'A Pensée Musicale.'

Miss Beatrice Hewitt's second chamber concert at the Repertory Theatre on November 1 was principally noteworthy on account of the excellent performance of Richard Strauss's early Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte, which received a masterly interpretation at the hands of Mr. J. C. Hock and Miss Hewitt. Saint-Saëns's Sonata in C minor, Op. 32, for the same instruments, was also played, Miss Hewitt giving for her pianoforte solo Beethoven's 'Waldstein' Sonata, with perfect mechanism and intelligence. The vocalist was Madame Elma Baker, a well-known local soprano.

The concerts this season seem to increase every day, and only restricted reference can be made to the numerous events up to date. Certainly within the writer's life-long experience of local concert work, this season by far surpasses all previous efforts in the way of music-makings.

The Chamber Concerts Society's first concert of the season, on October 4—the executive being the Catterall String Quartet—enlisted a great deal of interest on account of the first hearing here of Elgar's great Pianoforte Quintet, in which Miss Marjorie Sotham undertook the pianoforte part. The Royal Society of Artists' Gallery was so crowded on this occasion that many had to stand in the entrance lobby. The work made a deep impression, especially the luscious slow movement. The players also gave a vivid reading of Beethoven's String Quartet, Op. 59, No. 2, and Haydn's String Quartet, Op. 54 No. 1, in G major.

On the same evening Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted at the Town Hall Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and the Good Friday music from 'Parsifal.' He had a splendid orchestra under his baton, which did complete justice to both orchestral scores—indeed the playing was the finest yet heard this season. Mr. Matthews's admirably trained choir, augmented on this occasion, sang with intelligence and feeling. Mr. Gervase Elwes was once more cast for the part of Gerontius, singing with the wonderful fervour and expression for which he is famed, Miss Helen Anderton sang most beautifully in the Angel's music. Mr. Harold Howes sustained the Priest's part, and Mr. C. W. Perkins officiated at the organ with his customary skill.

The Festival Choral Society's magnificent performance of 'Elijah,' given at the Town Hall on November 5, was probably the finest heard at Birmingham for many years past, approaching in grandeur, in glorious ensemble and penetrating tone-power, the memorable performance at the last Triennial Musical Festival under Sir Henry Wood in 1912. Mr. Allan K. Blackall had a great share in the preparation of the choir. It was a great musical treat to hear such sublime choral singing. In the matter of principals, Sir Henry Wood was well served, for in Captain Horace Stevens we had an Elijah who recalled the finest traditions—another Henschel in his best days—and Madame Elsa Stralia, Miss Elsie Chambers, and Mr. Walter Hyde completed a perfect cast of principals. Mr. C. W. Perkins was a host in himself at the organ.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company gave a fortnight's season at the Prince of Wales Theatre, which opened on November 8 with 'Tannhäuser.' The repertory comprised all well-known operatic works, but no novelty. The artistic personnel however included several new-comers.

A bright and spirited concert-performance of German's 'Merrie England'—a work that always appeals to a popular audience—was given at the Town Hall on November 8 by the Birmingham Choral Union. Mr. Richard Wassell, the conductor of the Society, is one of the most energetic and hard-worked musicians we have in the Midlands, and whether as teacher, organist, accompanist, or conductor, he seems to excel in each department. The orchestra was quite up to the mark, and the principals—Miss Eva Rich, Mr. George Counter, and Mr. Sidney Stoddard—rendered brilliant service.

The list of concerts up to the date of writing includes a pianoforte recital by Mr. Leonard Raynor, Miss Fanny Davies's concert, assisted by the Bohemian Quartet, and a concert by Miss Dorothy Howell, the rising young composer-pianist.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The operations of the winter music season were begun with great déclat in the second week of October. Mr. Dan Godfrey's policy with regard to the Symphony Concerts has undergone no change, and everything points to a highly successful season. With Mr. Godfrey again occupying the dual positions of general manager and director of music which he has combined for so many years with such unique and unqualified distinction we have no fear of these fine concerts suffering any decline. The Municipal Orchestra itself is maintained at its full strength of fifty performers, and although a few inevitable changes in the personnel occur now and again, its well-known efficiency is assured by the retention of almost all the old members, who may truly be described as proved and experienced instrumentalists. Considering that the Orchestra is rather under-manned in the strings department it is interesting to find how satisfactory a balance is secured. The loss of the harp from the orchestral ranks, however, is very much felt, not a few of the compositions performed being robbed of much of their effect by reason of its absence.

Both novelties and familiar compositions have indiscriminately jostled each other in the programmes of the first four concerts with that bold impartiality that, if more frequently exercised, might prove so beneficial to the art of music. In fact, at the first of the series, there was a clear preponderance of new works, 'A song of Agincourt' (C. V. Stanford), 'The joyful homecoming' (H. Balfour Gardiner), and a Violin Concerto in G minor (Vivaldi-Nachez) coming under this heading. Indisposition, however, prevented the writer from attending this inaugural concert, and it is impossible to give first-hand information respecting it. But we understand that the programme, which included also Brahms's second Symphony and the 'Leonore' Overture (No. 3) was very creditably performed throughout, and that Mr. Godfrey Ludlow's playing in the Violin Concerto proved exceedingly attractive.

Only three items went to the composition of the programme of the second concert, namely, Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto, a nautical Overture, 'The Fighting Téméraire,' by S. H. Braithwaite, and Rachmaninoff's Symphony in E minor. This last work, however, is extremely lengthy—too diffuse, indeed, although it is compacted of beautiful, albeit somewhat cloying, sounds. Magnificently played, the performance of the work was quite a triumph for Mr. Godfrey and the Orchestra. Equally brilliant, too, was Mlle. Juliette Folville's interpretation of the Concerto, which revealed even more than its usual attractions owing to this fine pianist's captivating playing. Mlle. Folville, who is also a very talented composer, introduced a Cadenza of her own writing, an uncommonly clever interpolation. The overture, a novelty, contains some sane and breezy music of an easily assimilated character.

Beethoven's A major Symphony and the 'Flying Dutchman' Overture were the popular mainstays of the concert on October 31. Both received good performances, that of the Symphony in particular being strikingly successful. A new tone-poem—an actual 'first performance'—by Arnold Trowell, entitled 'The Sirens of Paphos,' revealed the composer's growing mastery in technical skill and subtlety of treatment, though the musical substance in itself was scarcely so convincing as in some of his other works. Mr. Trowell appeared as executant, and naturally we enjoyed some most expressive playing in Jules de Swert's rather commonplace 'Cello Concerto in C minor.

On November 6 a glowing performance of Elgar's picturesque 'Cockaigne' Overture was the feature of the afternoon. Never have we heard this particular composition played better at the Winter Gardens. Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony was another feather in the orchestral cap. The first performance in England of a tone-poem, 'Les Fantômes,' by Alexandre Jurassowsky—a composer hitherto unknown by name to the writer—will not, we hope, be the harbinger of other new works of a similar nature from a Russian source, for with its strained effects, the music was tiresome to a degree. Miss Winifred Purnell, finally, was the soloist in a performance of MacDowell's rather superficial Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, which she played in a commendable manner.

BRISTOL.

We have had a busy month at Bristol since my last letter, and equally busy times are ahead. It is a great pity that all these good things seem to arrive in lumps. Four or five concerts come together; then there is a break, when another four or five are announced. To the reflective mind, an interesting thing about Bristol music is the progress that organ recitals are making. We have before referred to Mr. Ralph T. Morgan's fine work as organist of St. Mary Redcliff, and the notable organists he has induced to give a series of recitals there. At one of Mr. Morgan's most recent recitals this popular musician drew a crowded congregation to St. Mary's: but this is by no means an unknown event at the historic parish church.

Miss Olive D. Sturgis, the holder of the Bristol Scholarship at the Royal College of Music, and a pupil of Visetti, gave her first vocal recital at the Victoria Rooms, and exhibited a flexible and full-toned soprano voice. Her artistic and intelligent readings called forth much praise. Mr. Albert Visetti came from London specially to accompany his pupil.

A great treat was the Bristol Choral Society's performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' One critic began his notice thus: 'Splendid! Splendid, indeed! Heartiest congratulations to the Bristol Choral Society on its first concert after the war (the eighty-eighth, by-the-way), at full strength.' Colston Hall was crowded, as it ought to be, seeing that for twenty-five shillings and sixpence you get a first division ticket for the series of six fine concerts. The choir and band of over five hundred gave a performance that was full of imagination and power. The choruses, particularly the 'Hail, Gladsome Light,' and the epilogue, were magnificently sung. One would have to search far and wide to discover finer singing than that of Mr. Riseley's well-known choir. Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. John Coates, and Mr. Herbert Brown were the principals. This was Mr. George Riseley's Jubilee of his work for music at Colston Hall. The Lord Mayor came specially on to the platform to offer the veteran but ever-young conductor the heartiest congratulations of choir and audience. Mr. Riseley was most warmly applauded, the audience also showing unbounded admiration of the performance. Three well-known items concluded the programme—the '1812' Overture, Liszt's Rhapsody No. 1, and Weber's 'Jubilee' Overture, which Mr. Riseley conducted for the first time forty years ago at a Monday Popular Concert. Of the 'Flying Dutchman' concert, the second of the series, we shall have something to say next month.

Perhaps the most conspicuous feature of the past four weeks' music was the visit of Tetrizzini and her party, which, needless to say, was a great success. A few days later Dame Melba and her party gave a concert before another large and eager audience. Both these concerts were welcomed in true Bristol fashion, but it seems a pity that great artists cannot present to an English audience great English works. Why is it necessary for them to place as the leading items on their programmes those hackneyed old Italian songs that our mothers or grandmothers—even the very Victorian barrel organs—delighted in? Is there no modern music worthy of the concert room, and a great singer's attention?

To open the seventeenth season of the Clifton Chamber Concerts, a truly classical programme was given at the first concert at the Victoria Rooms by quite a clever quartet of players—Madame M. F. Adolphi (first violin), Miss Hilda Barr (second violin), Mr. Alfred Best (viola), and Mr. Percy Lewis (cello), with Mr. Herbert Parsons at the pianoforte. A Beethoven Quartet, Op. 18, No. 2, was delightfully played, as was a 'patchy' Quartet of H. W. Warner. An appalling Rachmaninoff Trio, an elegiac in 'D minor' (violin, cello, and pianoforte), took up close upon an hour. It contains some beautiful moments, but these are few and far between. Mr. Parsons played a Ravel Pianoforte Sonatina of uncommon construction uncommonly well.

Gloucester is not so far from Bristol that Bristolians are not uninterested in the long overdue reconstruction of the Cathedral organ there. Sir James and Lady Horlick are generously providing the necessary £2,000 as a memorial to their soldier son, killed in the war.

A matter of the highest importance that must not be passed over is the effort being made in the columns of the Bristol Evening News to promote a Symphony Orchestra of the highest class for Bristol. The greatest sympathy has been shown to the attempt by local musicians, who recognise how weak Bristol is in this respect. Mr. P. Napier Miles, the well-known amateur, has stated his views at length in the 'Sister Arts' special article of the above paper. His ideal is that of an 'Opéra Comique' with an orchestra of forty to forty-five performers, perhaps attached to a Repertory Theatre. He estimates it would take a thousand pounds a year for five or six years as a guarantee fund, but he doubts whether the citizens individually, or the rates, would provide it at present. He emphasises the fact that the aim of reconstruction in music is to give the people a higher and a better life, and pertinently asks, 'Can our fellow citizens and our Corporation be made to realise this?' The writer of the article, in which Mr. Miles's views are set forth, concludes with the statement that 'A guarantee fund of a thousand pounds for six years is not a great sum to ask from Bristol's merchant princes.'

DEVON AND CORNWALL.

DEVON.

So satisfactory and successful were the performances given in Exeter Cathedral by the Exeter Oratorio Society at its autumn festival (reported last month) that the Dean and Chapter have granted the use of the Cathedral for the spring performances. 'Elijah' and a Bach Motet have been put in rehearsal. The only disadvantage in the use of the Cathedral is that it perforce confines the attention of the Society to sacred music, and thus it runs the risk of getting into a rut in choral singing.

Devonport Cecilian Male Choir, conducted by Mr. T. Downing, gave a very good account of itself in choruses, glees, and part-songs before a large audience on October 29; and on the same date the choir of the Mint Church, Exeter, which is undergoing excellent training under Mr. Lancelot Holden, sang Bairstow's anthem 'Save us, O Lord,' Hollins's 'The Name of the Lord,' and Varley Roberts's 'Seek ye the Lord.' Mr. Holden played interesting organ pieces: 'Dorian March' (Goodhart) and Bach's Toccata in C. The choir was augmented to a hundred voices on November 12, for an oratorio concert. The 'Passion' of Woyrsch was represented by instrumental episodes; the solo 'Jesu, by that shuddering dread,' from 'The Dream of Gerontius,' was very finely sung by Mr. S. J. Bishop; from 'Elijah' 'Hear ye Israel' (Madame I. Hickson) and 'Be not afraid' were selected; Mr. Dean Trotter sang 'Waft her, angels,' and the Hallelujah Chorus closed the programme.

A new male choir has been formed by Mr. Alfred Long among the members of the Y.M.C.A. at Barnstaple, and its first performance on November 12 was distinctly encouraging to the conductor. After re-organization Exeter Male Choir (conductor, Mr. W. J. Cotton) appeared on November 9 and sang with good tone and expression Cooke's 'Strike the lyre,' a Lullaby by Brahms, Fleming's 'Integer Vitæ,' Grieg's 'Landerkennung,' and music by Sullivan and Laurent de Rille.

News comes from Exmouth that the Choral Society has been re-formed with Mr. Raymond Wilmot again as conductor. 'Messiah' has been put in rehearsal for the initial concert. Crediton Musical Society has been revived, with Mr. C. G. Church as conductor.

Plymouth Madrigal Society—now in its seventh year and conducted by Dr. Harold Lake—made a great success in its first concert for this season on November 12. The choir, with its male sections now refilled, numbered a hundred and twenty-five voices, the quality of tone and blend leaving nothing to be desired, the basses giving a sure foundation. The light and shade and sense of contrast gave beautiful effect to madrigals in five and six parts by Wilbye, and part-songs by Stanford, Charles Wood, Bantock, Coleridge-Taylor, and Caldicott. M. Vladimir Rosing gave examples of his great power of characterization in song, and Mr. Louis Godowsky played violin music by Bach and Paganini.

The South-Western Section of the I.S.M., holding its annual meeting at Exeter, resolved on a more vigorous programme than has been possible of late years. It was felt that now something must be done to make membership worth while and justify the existence of the Section. As a beginning it was decided to invite Mr. Cyril Scott to give a lecture-recital. Mr. Reginald Moore resigned the hon. secretaryship after thirty-four years' valuable work.

An organ recital given in the Mint Church, Exeter, by Mr. Sidney H. Nicholson, was of great interest to organists. The standard of organ playing is very high at Exeter, conspicuously so in relation to that of other forms of music in the city, and Mr. Nicholson's playing of the 'Wedge' Prelude and Fugue, Harwood's 'Dithyramb,' three of Parry's 'Choral Preludes,' and a charming modern and impressionistic 'Chant du Mai' by Joseph Jongen, was much enjoyed. Mr. L. Holden, organist of the Church, has arranged a series of recitals, and Dr. Alcock will be heard on December 10.

Mr. Gilberthorpe (Exeter) gave an organ recital on October 25 before members of Torquay and District Organists' Association, playing Wesley's 'Choral Song and Fugue,' a Toccata by Callaerts, and the Finale from Stanford's 'Sonata Britannica,' also some lighter pieces. Mr. W. L. Twinning, president, gave an address.

Plymouth Guildhall concerts have had a successful first month's run, and artists who have appeared have included Senhor Edgardo Guerra, a brilliant and artistic violinist, Miss Julia Caroli, Miss Maria Yelland, Miss Gladys Moger, Miss Gertrude Winchester, Mr. S. J. Bishop, Mr. Joseph Farrington, and Mr. A. E. Old.

The Plymouth Sunday Ballad Concerts re-opened on November 9 with a visit from Miss Gladys Moger, Mr. Walter J. Douglas, Mr. Harold Samuel, Mr. Ivor James, and Miss Josephine Lewis. This party also gave a concert at Torquay on November 10. Pupils of Miss Guerra da Fontoura gave a song recital at Barnstaple on November 7, and one or two good voices were heard, chiefly among the contraltos.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company performed works from their repertoire at Plymouth during the week beginning November 3. Miss Lila Field's company of English dancers gave daily performances at Torquay during the same week, including ballets, 'Cupids Revels,' and 'Comedy-land,' a phantasy in two scenes, besides characteristic and national dances. They were supported by the Pavilion orchestra.

The band of the 2nd King's Own Scottish Borderers made its first appearance at Plymouth on October 22, playing in the Pier Pavilion, conducted by Mr. T. Wilson.

Under the unusual conditions of free admission and a silver collection, a chamber-music concert at Plymouth, on October 24, drew a large audience. The performers were Miss Phoebe Cooke (cello), Miss Margaret Hawke (pianoforte), and the music represented Coleridge-Taylor (Variations in B minor), Boccherini (Sonata in G), Sammartini (Sonata in G), Saint-Saëns (Allegro Appassionata), César Cui (Orientale), and Glazounov (Serenade Espagnole). Miss Doris Montrave sang songs by Debussy ('Mandoline' and 'Romance'), Rimsky-Korsakov ('Aimant la rose'), Borodin, Parry, and Quilter.

The Rev. Greville Cooke, who is a Mus. Bac., and Mr. Orlando Jolliffe, gave a pianoforte and vocal recital at Tavistock on November 6, several of the pieces being compositions of the pianist.

A musical Society has been formed at Budleigh Salterton, under the conductorship of Mr. H. Hugh Fowler. The first concert, of a miscellaneous character, is to be held in January.

CORNWALL.

Choral music is the chief interest in Cornwall, and this is largely due to the incentive provided by the County Competitions, of which Lady Mary Trefusis is hon. secretary. Next year the competitions will be held again at Truro, and it is anticipated that the syllabus will approach pre-war dimensions.

Stithians Male Choir is one of the most active, and Mr. J. Bowden on October 15 at Mabe conducted excellent performances of 'Hail, smiling morn,' 'To arms,' 'Comrades' Song of Hope,' and some old-time pieces. Mousehole Male Choir (Mr. Fred Roach), at Penzance, on November 2, sang 'Strike the lyre,' 'To arms,' 'Destruction of Gaza,' and the 'Gloria' of Mozart.

At Queens, on October 22, Bugle Ladies' Quartet sang remarkably well in 'Three fishers' and other pieces.

Helston Wesleyan Choir, conducted by Mr. H. Lees Dawson, gave a festival on November 2, singing choruses, anthems, and 'Hear my prayer.' The Falmouth Orpheus Quartet also took part in the concert. Camborne Centenary Choir visited Constantine on November 6, and gave a concert on behalf of the local choir fund, conducted by Mr. Everson Luke. A massed choir, assisted by St. Austell Musical Society, trained by Mr. S. Davey Collins, sang part-songs at Stenalees on November 6.

Stenalees and District Massed Choirs, assisted by St. Austell Music Society, gave an excellent programme at Stenalees Wesleyan Hall on November 6, in aid of St. Austell Hospital, Mr. S. Davey Collins conducting.

DUBLIN.

Dr. John F. Larchet, musical director of the Jesuits' Church, St. Francis Xavier's, Gardiner Street, has been appointed teacher of vocal music at Marlborough Street Boys' School, under the Board of National Education, in succession to Mr. Brendan Rogers.

Parts 1 and 2 of the 'Creation' were given on October 21 at Rathmines Parish Church, under the capable conductorship of Mr. Raymond Revelle, with Mr. W. C. Glover at the organ. Madame Borel, an established favourite, was the soprano, and was in excellent voice.

The first Quinlan Concert, at the Theatre Royal, took place on October 24, with Tetrizzini as the star. The other artists included Madame Renée Chemet, Signor Lenghi Cellini, and Signor Pietro Cimara. All seats had been sold beforehand, so that, with the addition of standing-room ticket-holders, there was an enormous house. Tetrizzini received a most enthusiastic reception, and was in glorious voice, her 'Mad Scene' being uproariously applauded. Madame Chemet's violin-playing was delightful, her purity of tone being a revelation; Signor Cellini evoked encores by his songs—although some were hackneyed; while both as pianoforte soloist and accompanist Signor Cimara charmed the vast audience, excelling however in his accompaniments.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a three weeks' season at the Gaiety Theatre on October 27, with the popular 'Tales of Hoffmann.' The perennial vogue of Wallace's 'Maritana' was evidenced by the large audience on Saturday night, November 1. Only one novelty was presented, namely, Colson's 'Pro Patria,' which was well received. Mozart's 'Figaro,' on November 7, was delightfully rendered, Miss Woodall proving an ideal Cherubino; and 'Tannhäuser,' on November 14, was tolerably good.

Dublin music-lovers are delighted at the prospect of the two forthcoming song-recitals at Aberdeen Hall, on December 3 and 4, by Mr. Gervase Elwes, the distinguished English vocalist.

The famous Brodsky Quartet opened the season of the Royal Dublin Society on November 3, receiving an enthusiastic reception. The leading novelty was Elgar's beautiful work, Op. 83, dedicated to this Quartet of players, which received a charming interpretation, and was vastly enjoyed.

Mr. Gerald O'Brien's début at Covent Garden on November 4 had much interest for Dublin musicians, because under his patronymic of Albert Crawly (not 'Crowley,' as given in some papers) he won the Stanley Cochrane Cup at the Feis Ceoil in 1911, after which he studied at Milan with Sabatini, and Mr. Thomas Blackburne, a Dublin man. His success, as recorded in the London Press, has proved most gratifying to his many friends.

A crowded house attended the monster musical afternoon concert on November 6, given for the benefit of Mr. J. Jackson, the last surviving member of the old Gaiety orchestra of forty-eight years ago, who is threatened with blindness. Some of the principals of the Carl Rosa Opera Company kindly assisted, and there was an orchestra of sixty performers from the Dublin theatres, under the conductorship of W. S. Nabarro, John Mundy, and Dr. Esposito. Miss Annie Lord was solo pianist, and Mr. T. H. Weaving was a sympathetic accompanist.

Dr. Esposito's pianoforte recital in the theatre of the Royal Dublin Society, on November 10, presented a diversified programme, and attracted a discriminating audience. The Debussy and Schumann items were a sheer joy, and contrasted well with the selection from Scarlatti.

The second Quinlan Concert, on November 15, had many attractions, including Miss Mignon Nevada, Madame Suggia, Miss Astra Desmond, Miss Margaret Cooper, and Mr. Albert Sammons, with Mr. George Reeves as accompanist. Brisk bookings ensured a full house to reward the undoubted enterprise of the promoter.

There is a hope of Dublin having at last a good concert hall. At present, the city cannot boast of a public hall suitable for concerts, and therefore high expectations are formed of the new Scala now in course of erection.

On November 17, Miss Annie Lord and Mr. John Mundy are announced to give a pianoforte and 'cello recital at the Royal Dublin Society, which we hope to notice in next month's issue.

EDINBURGH.

Under the auspices of the 'International Celebrities' Series of Concerts, Dame Melba, Mr. Tom Burke, and Signor Busoni visited Edinburgh on October 18. The concert was of the usual ballad type, the chief interest centring round the fact that it was Mr. Burke's first visit to this city. His choice of songs for a ballad concert left something to be desired. The ballad-lover expected songs which did not demand an imaginary stage setting, and was rather disappointed in hearing operatic selections. The other artists were as great as usual.

The same date saw the revival of the Classical Concerts under the direction of Mr. J. R. Simpson. Reference has frequently been made in these columns to the great work these concerts have done for classical music in Edinburgh. The London String Quartet, who were the executors, presented a programme that included Elgar's String Quartet, Op. 83 (first time at Edinburgh), Debussy's String Quartet, and Beethoven's C minor Quartet, Op. 18, No. 4. The performances were admirable.

On October 22 a very interesting programme of vocal and instrumental music was given by Miss Phyllis Graves (vocalist), Miss Esther L. Cruickshank (violinist), and Miss Ruby Dunn (pianist). The programme was an ideal one, and was well arranged. It included César Franck's Sonata for Violin and Pianoforte, Debussy's 'Air de Lia' from 'L'Enfant Prodigue,' a group of British songs by Landon Ronald, Hubert Parry, Walford Davies, and Granville Bantock, and some fine specimens of folk-songs. Such a programme might well be repeated at certain schools and colleges. We wish this combination of talent well.

On October 25, at the second Quinlan Concert, we had a visit from the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Hamilton Harty. M. Arthur de Greef, as pianist, was in great form in Liszt's familiar 'Hungarian Fantasia.' The programme also included Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations and Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony.

On October 30 a 'cello and pianoforte recital was given by Miss Marcel and Miss Saxe, when a Sonata by Locatelli for these instruments received a most cordial reception, and Brahms's Sonata in E minor had an artistic reading. Miss Marcel cleverly handled an Adagio by Nardini and an Allegro by Senaillie, beautifully contrasted numbers. Miss Saxe's novelties included Moussorgsky's 'Impression de voyage en Crimée.' Miss Joan Singleton was an excellent accompanist.

Moiseiwitsch gave a recital on November 1. He has now become one of Edinburgh's favourites. Military band items have also figured in the month's music. Two concerts were given by the band of the Scots Guards on November 5 and 6 under the baton of Lieut. F. W. Wood. On November 8 and 9 the band of the Coldstream Guards, assisted by Madame Clara Butt and Mr. Kennerley Rumford, gave delightful performances of classical and popular numbers.

GLASGOW.

The four weeks' season of the Beecham Opera Company was eminently successful, as was evidenced by the crowded audiences which assembled night after night at the Theatre Royal. Two notable features of the performances were the fine playing of a very adequate band and the almost perfect enunciation of the vocalists. It is a pity that 'Phœbus and Pan' was presented only once, and that on the last night of the Company's visit; and many people were disappointed to find that the reserved seats for this performance had been fully booked before the season opened.

Promoters of chamber concerts in Glasgow have in the past met with only lukewarm support, which makes the boldness of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir in venturing upon an entire week's performances by the London String Quartet almost remarkable. The venture, however, was fully justified by the results, and already a similar scheme for next season is assured. No finer ensemble playing has ever been heard in Glasgow, while the programmes were drafted with a skilful discrimination which left no field of chamber music unexplored. Among the numbers performed were Quartets by Schubert, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, and Dvorák, and by such moderns as J. B. McEwen, Frank Bridge, Percy Grainger, H. Waldo Warner, Walford Davies, Debussy, and Ravel. With Mr. Wilfrid Senior as pianist, a first performance in Scotland was given of Elgar's Quintet, the same gifted player taking part also in César Franck's Quintet in F minor and Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44). Songs by Misses Boyd Steven and Jenny McIntyre agreeably varied the instrumental programmes.

Under the auspices of the Society of Organists, on October 28, a lecture on 'Song Interpretation' was given by Sir George Henschel, than whom none is more competent to speak authoritatively on such a topic. The occasion attracted a large and keenly interested audience. Messrs. Horace Fellows (violin) and Wilfrid Senior (pianoforte) played Beethoven's twelve Violin and Pianoforte Sonatas at three recitals on November 3, 10, and 17. The Thursday evening Chamber Concerts, under Mr. Philip Halstead's direction, at the Royal Institute of Fine Arts, somerservell's setting of 'James Lee's Wife,' for voice, pianoforte, and string quartet, was given a first performance here by Miss Denne Parker (vocalist), Mr. H. A. Carruthers (pianoforte), and the Fellows String Quartet. The only other local effort to record is the Bach Choir's chamber concert on November 17, when Miss Bessie Spence (violin), Mr. Alfred Pictou (flute), and Mr. R. Finnie McEwen (pianoforte) interpreted a programme which included the Suite in E minor, the Sonata in E flat for clarinet and flute, and the Trio in C minor (from the 'Musical Offering') for flute, violin, and continuo. Miss Marie Thomson contributed two Bach Arias with flute and violin obbligato respectively.

Among visiting performers to Glasgow have been the Hallé Band, conducted by Mr. Hamilton Harty, Moiseiwitsch in an excellent pianoforte recital, and Madame Tetravzini and Madame Clara Butt in their customary programmes.

HASTINGS.

Having at last realised the importance of music as one of the chief attractions of a pleasure resort, the Hastings Corporation recently took the bold step of engaging Mr. Julian Clifford to conduct a permanent winter orchestra. The soundness of the scheme was put to the proof at the inaugural concert on November 1, in the Pavilion of St. Leonards Pier, where the orchestra is housed. And if doubt had lurked in any ratepayer's mind it was promptly dispelled by the immediate success of Mr. Clifford and his instrumentalists, most of whom, we understand, have long played under his baton at Harrogate.

Hastings is thus provided with a conductor of the first rank and a highly-trained set of players, a fact soon recognised by the audience which filled the Pavilion. Mr. Clifford's new tone poem, 'Lights Out,' was played con amore and heard with much interest, for it is an arresting work, beautifully scored, and is a distinct gain to orchestral literature.

At the first symphony concert, on November 6, Beethoven's C minor was played with every attention to the best traditions. Excepting some faulty ensemble in the Andante (probably due to the strangeness of the hall) there was a sense of security throughout the Symphony, the first movement particularly being treated with real impressiveness. Mr. William Lindsay appeared in the solo part of Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto. Though his tone was pleasant it was not always audible in the louder passages, and while his playing is that of a serious musician, he would have shone to greater advantage in a more matter-of-fact work.

No lack of life and vigour could be complained of in the playing of Mr. Mark Hambourg on November 8, when he gave a Chopin recital followed by Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia.' Many were the recalls insisted on by a packed but not over-discriminating house. Beginning with six of the Preludes, Mr. Hambourg soon knocked a few unisons out of tune, but he went merrily on to Valse and Mazurka, and finally emerged from the Sonata in B flat minor having repeatedly transgressed the laws of good taste and set at naught all accepted readings of the Polish master. Mr. Hambourg goes his own way, and by sheer force of personality almost persuades us that it is the right way. He was irresistible in Liszt's showy Fantasia, wherein he was ably backed by Mr. Clifford and the Municipal Orchestra. Indeed, with its exuberant spirit and wild abandon, the work could have been left in no better hands than those of Mr. Hambourg, his masterful interpretation calling forth an uproarious ovation.

Chamber music is not to be neglected. Miss Annie Kenwood announces a series of Chamber Concerts which will introduce many British works, and will have the assistance of that excellent pianist Mr. Harold Samuel.

LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

The Philharmonic Society's first concert, on October 28, opened with a brilliant performance of Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Capriccio Espagnole,' which Sir Henry Wood conducted. Rachmaninoff's second Pianoforte Concerto also received a fine interpretation, the solo part being very ably and expressively played by Miss Myra Hess.

Great expectations had been aroused over the first performance here of Miss Dorothy Howell's symphonic poem 'Lamia.' They were certainly fulfilled as regards externals, and the assimilation of modern harmonic idioms and modern orchestral methods by this young lady of twenty-one is extraordinary in its extent and variety. But on a first hearing the creative gift of the composer is less apparent than her technical skill. The programme was completed by Madame Donalda's songs, and two choral items, 'My bonny lass' (Morley) and 'Irish tune from County Kerry' (Grainger), crisply sung by the choir conducted by the chorus-master, Dr. A. W. Pollitt.

The second Philharmonic concert, on November 11, was in the nature of a personal triumph for Mr. Albert Coates, who likes to remember his early experiences as a schoolboy at the Liverpool Institute—a school which has turned out many clever men—and later as a student of chemistry at the University of Liverpool, under Sir (then Prof.) Oliver Lodge. Mr. Coates's fame as a conductor was clearly upheld on this occasion, when he had drawn up a programme largely of Russian music, with which he has such intimate acquaintance and evident sympathy. It contained his master, Rimsky-Korsakov's, 'Procession of Princes,' from 'Mlada,' Liadov's 'Eight Russian Folk-Songs,' characteristic trifles, and Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase,' which was kept to the last and overtopped all else. Mr. Coates secured a performance of this extraordinary music which will long dwell in memory. He certainly managed to convey to his listeners much of the marvel, mystery, and mastery of the amazing score, which requires seven horns and five trumpets, gong, bells, celesta, with extra harp, and organ. It is without doubt a stupendous creation, but ordinary people will find little comfort in it as music. More pleasure, if less psychology, was found in Cyril Scott's two 'Passacaglias,' immensely clever orchestral variations of two Irish tunes, the dismal 'Famine Song' and the lively 'Poor Irish Boy,' in which Mr. Scott has made an old form throb with new life in ultra-modern harmonies and orchestral colourings. The composer is heard at his best in these attractive examples. Not so Debussy, whose 'Berceuse Héroïque' is a pièce d'occasion which will add little or nothing to his reputation. A line is due to the impassioned vocalism of Mr. Frank Mullings, whose ardent, full-voiced singing of 'Celeste Aida,' and Bantock's gorgeously-coloured Epilogue, 'Ferishta's Fancies,' roused the audience to enthusiasm. The delicacy of the singer's art in Roger Quilter's 'O Mistress mine' was in fine contrast to his robust periods. Mr. Walter Bridson was an admirable accompanist.

At the Rodewald Society's first concert, on October 27, we breathed the air of the mountain tops in such music as Mozart's Quartet in E flat (K. 428), Elgar's Quartet in E minor, Op. 83, and the Brahms Quartet in C minor (Op. 51, No. 1), played by the Catterall Quartet. Elgar's strongly individual music had a welcome first hearing. It is full of fine ideas effectively handled. Vigour there is in plenty, and also tenderness, while the music achieves greatness without apparent effort. Its message is delivered in language that all can understand, and the manner of its three movements is spontaneous and unaffected.

Mr. Cyril Scott, with Miss Astra Desmond, and the McCullagh String Quartet, sustained the programme of the Crane Hall Wednesday afternoon concert on October 22. It was entirely devoted to Mr. Scott's compositions, the pianoforte solos including representative examples in 'Sphinx,' 'In the Forest,' Pastoral No. 11, the familiar 'Ode Héroïque,' and 'Rondeau de Concert.' Less compelling in general interest and charm were two groups of songs, although these had the advantage of Miss Desmond's fine singing and the composer's accompaniments. It was left to the String Quartet to essay the meaning of what appeared on a first hearing to be rambling, invertebrate music in the Prelude, Pastorale, Elegy, and Rondo Retrospective. But the Scherzo made amends. It is really a jig, and a delightful example of what Mr. Scott can do on definite lines when he so chooses.

The enterprise of Mr. Max Mossel was rewarded by a large audience at the first of his four subscription concerts on October 25. The occasion was a pianoforte recital by M. Moiseiwitsch. It was a magnificent performance on a magnificent instrument (English). Such executive and mental mastery leaves but small opening for any reservation in the use of superlatives. It was perhaps a matter of mood in the listener to desire force occasionally rather than finish, this more especially in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Schumann's 'Carneval.' But many gifts unite in making Moiseiwitsch nearly the perfect player, and nothing could be more beautiful or masterly than his interpretation of Liszt's B minor Sonata and of Ravel's 'Jeux d'Eaux.'

The interest taken in the establishment of the local branch of the British Music Society at Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper's headquarters in Islington was shown by the crowded attendance at the formal opening on November 10 by Lord Howard de Walden. Thanks to the public spirit and enterprise of Mr. William Rushworth the Society now enjoys the use of the handsomest club premises in the provinces, where members can foregather and enjoy social amenities as well as incidentally helping on the good cause of British music. On the opening evening the members were formally received by Mr. E. A. Behrend, chairman of the local branch, and Lord Howard de Walden in his few and felicitous remarks recognised the leading part played by Liverpool in the new movement. His lordship has made a notable gift to the new library in presenting a reprint of a valuable manuscript book of 15th century two-part harmony. During the reception Mr. Joseph Greene by request deftly played a pianoforte solo—Cyril Scott's 'Pierrot' piece, No. 2. A recital of John Ireland's music followed, with the composer himself at the pianoforte, assisted by Miss Helen Anderton as singer, and Mr. Arthur Catterall as violinist. It was delightful to hear Mr. Ireland's delicately perfect playing in his own 'Island Spell,' 'The Undertone,' 'Fire of Spring,' 'Chelsea Reach,' and 'Ragamuffin,' while his accompaniments gave a new and subtle flavour to such well-known gems as 'Sea Fever' and 'Blow out, you bugles.' His Violin Sonata No. 2, in A minor, is on a first hearing unequal in interest, though strongly individual, and possessing many moments of beauty and newness in its strange harmonies. The violin part, which is secondary, mostly lies high, and was fortunate in having for its exponent such a suave and impeccable player as Mr. Catterall. Before the recital Dr. Eaglefield Hull, a notable leader among literary musicians, as well as organizer par excellence, made some useful remarks explanatory of Ireland's music.

The National Institute for the Blind has recently created a new post, that of Musical Adviser, who must necessarily be a sighted professional musician fully conversant with 'Braille,' especially modern Braille music, including textbooks and music to be published in Braille for blind music-students and musicians. He will also supervise the rendering into correct sighted manuscript, the works of blind composers for engraved or music-type reproduction, and the 'sighted' editing of the same through the period of publication. The Adviser will be charged with keeping a 'sighted' musician's outlook on the musical world generally, and upon anything which can possibly affect the blind musician in his efforts to keep pace with his sighted compeers. It is a progressive programme intended to give the blind musician his chance, especially the blind composer, and in the next few years no doubt the works of many of these greatly-gifted men will be available in printed editions. Sir Arthur Pearson and his committee may be congratulated at finding the right man in Mr. Edward Watson, of Liverpool, who has recently been appointed to the new post, to act in collaboration with the Institute's Musical Director, Mr. Warriow. Mr. Watson's interest in Braille music is lifelong, and his Primer on the subject is the standard work available. The appointment is all the more an acceptable outlet for Mr. Watson's musical and literary energies, following his resignation of the post of organist at West Derby Church after a tenure of eleven years.

The Welsh Choral Union gave a fine performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and 'Death of Minnehaha' on November 15. The romantic story so picturesquely unfolded makes an especial appeal to the temperament of these singers, who were heard at their best. Nothing could be finer than their glorious, full-voiced tone, notwithstanding the shortage of tenors. Counsels of perfection require invariable alertness in attack and also delicacy in piano singing, but generally the performance sustained the choir's high standard. An excellent trio of principals was found in Miss Caroline Hatchard, a singer with a beautiful soprano voice expressively used, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. David Brazell. The band, led by Mr. Akeroyd, was adequate, and Mr. Hopkin Evans occupied the conductor's post with distinction. His 'Brythonic' Overture found favour. It is a musicianly and cleverly scored work, especially effective in its national allusions.

For Mr. Quinlan's second subscription concert, on November 13, a fine array of singers and players was provided. It included Miss Mignon Nevada, Miss Astra Desmond, Miss Margaret Cooper, Madame Suggia (whose cello solos were especially successful), and Mr. Albert Sammons, with Mr. George Reeves, an extremely good accompanist.

The Warrington Musical Society opened its season auspiciously on October 30, when Mr. Frank H. Crossley conducted his fine chorus of two hundred, and orchestra led by Mr. R. H. Pearson, in Elgar's six Choral Songs, 'From the Bavarian Highlands,' H. R. Hulbert's Choral Song 'Victory Bells,' and Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to Music.' Miss Jo Lamb contributed cleverly-played violin solos, and Miss Margaret Cooper enlivened the evening with her inimitable 'Songs at the pianoforte.'

The Warrington Musical Society's Opera Section, conducted by Mr. Crossley, gave successful performances of Edward German's opera 'Merrie England' in the Royal Court Theatre, Warrington, during the week commencing November 10.

MANCHESTER.

The annual meeting of the guarantors of the Hallé Concerts has not yet been held, owing to the serious illness of Mr. Aikman Forsyth. As everyone will be relieved to hear, he is now well on the road to recovery.

The past season of the Society resulted in a loss of £725, which will necessitate a call for a small amount from each guarantor. The committee in its report announces as a satisfactory sign of the strong desire to carry on the concerts, that in spite of the deficit, eighteen new guarantors, each for £100, have joined the Society since the last meeting. The roll of guarantors is now a hundred and seventy-six, the amount of the fund being £13 563.

It is hoped that the orchestra will soon regain its pre-war numbers. Judging by the large audiences on the first two evenings, much would seem to be expected of this organization, and if such is fulfilled, these concerts will no doubt receive adequate support. It was announced that on October 30, Sir Thomas Beecham would conduct, but Mr. Goossens, jun., at the last minute, took his place. On that evening the playing of Moiseiwitsch was supreme. For sheer beauty of tone and absolute command of his instrument he surely is incomparable at the present time. Having heard him on the Monday and Tuesday of the same week, it was perhaps pardonable to think there were no more surprises in store, and yet the ease with which he played the Paganini Variations of Brahms and the wonderful lightness and delicacy of some of his passage-work left one breathless. The interpretation of the 'Emperor' Concerto did not give a fresh point of view, but was perfect in its handling. Mr. Goossens's reading of Chabrier's 'Rhapsody España' was infused with a warmth and glow that had not been reached in any of the programmes previously. The 'Little Symphony' (1640) of Leonardo Leo seemed hardly worthy of inclusion, except that it was typical of the Neapolitan School of the 17th century. Delius's tone poem 'Paris' at once conveyed to us the subtle reminiscence of Charpentier's 'Louise' that seems to have occurred to others; but if a tone poem can be compared with an opera, the comparison is rather to the detriment of the latter.

At the second concert, on November 8, conducted by Mr. Albert Coates, Mr. Vladimir Rosing sang, his version of Nevstrouff's 'Song of a Poor Wanderer' being a revelation in dramatic as well as vocal art. We do not remember hearing anything approaching such intensity of feeling since Madame Ackté sang here some years ago. M. Rosing's interpretation of Moussorgsky's 'Song of the Flea' was a gem of sardonic humour.

The 'Two Passacaglias' of Cyril Scott, given for the first time at these concerts, are clever pieces of orchestration based on two Irish airs. The first, the 'Famine Song,' is vivid, particularly as it nears the end. Here the organ is employed in a manner which is nothing short of overwhelming. The second, 'Poor Irish Boy,' found an immediate response in the audience, in the strong dance rhythm with which it is suffused.

This feast of good things paved the way for such a masterpiece as Scriabin's 'Poem d'Extase.' Of this we can only say that, at least momentarily, we were seized by the composer's own rapture. The abiding impression of the work is a strong desire to hear it again—and along with it also 'Vers la Flamme' and 'Prometheus.' Would it not be possible, too, for one of the many pianists to give us a Scriabin recital? It is difficult for the ordinary concert-goer to assimilate the Scriabin idiom without hearing more of him. At the concert on November 17, Mr. Landon Ronald conducting, the only new work given was Edward German's 'Theme and Six Diversions.' The composer has characteristically endowed his work with a haunting theme which might have been taken from an old Welsh air. The variations are interesting, but have no particular individuality. Miss Myra Hess played the Rachmaninoff Pianoforte Concerto No. 2 with great power, but seemed, however, to be not quite equal to the demands of this work. It was in a movement from Scarlatti, given as an encore, that the elasticity and beauty of her touch were heard to the best advantage.

The first Gentlemen's Concert was held on October 18, when M. Moiseiwitsch gave as much joy as usual. At the second concert the programme was composed almost entirely of songs by Landon Ronald, with the composer at the pianoforte. Mr. Walter Hyde, Miss Olga Haley (in place of Miss Rosina Buckman), and M. de Greef, were the soloists. One feels that a composer needs to be of outstanding merit for an audience to be able to listen to his works for a whole evening.

That two important concerts were held on the same night shows the amount of music on hand, but such an arrangement is a drawback to those who wish to hear both. In such manner, on November 13, the 'cello recital of Mr. Carl Fuchs clashed with Miss Margery Sotham's concert, at which she was assisted by the Catterall Quartet. At the former, Mr. Fuchs had a tremendous reception after his long absence from this city. He gave, among other items, Reger's Suite in D minor (first performance here), and with the accompaniment of Mr. Frank Merrick the Dohnányi Sonata in B flat. Of Miss Sotham's concert we heard only the Elgar Quintet. Undoubtedly a great work, it yet seemed, until the last movement, to lack grip. But probably this suggestion would vanish at a second hearing. At the Brand Lane concert on November 9, Sir Henry Wood conducted and M. Cortôt played. As it was All Souls' day, the pianist followed the custom of Continental concert-rooms and added to his programme Schubert's 'Litany of All Souls.'

The Bowden Chamber Concerts began their season with a Moiseiwitsch recital. The second concert, on December 29, is to be of a miscellaneous character.

The Quinlan Subscription Concerts have submitted two programmes which included such names as Mesdames Tetrizzini and Suggia, and Miss Mignon Nevada. Two more concerts are to be given early in the New Year.

The Manchester Vocal Society inaugurated its fifty-third season on November 12 with an interesting selection of songs. Dr. Keighley conducted. That the Society has had such a long life goes far to prove its worth, for in the North indifferent choral singing is not tolerated for long. Other recitals have been too numerous to treat in detail in this issue. A national conference on the 'Leisure of the People' is to be held here from November 17-21, at which Prof. Walford Davies is lecturing on 'Music and the People.' At the reception, the music will be provided by the Ancoats Girls' Choir, under the able conductorship of its founder, Miss Say Ashworth.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE AND DISTRICT.

The Newcastle-upon-Tyne Bach Choir was founded in 1915, in the midst of the war. Its success may be gauged from the fact that its scope is gradually enlarging, and now includes four chamber concerts in addition to the usual four choral and orchestral concerts. Since 1915 it has produced Bach's 'St. John' Passion, twenty-four Church Cantatas, two secular Cantatas, the six Motets, ten Concertos, besides Suites, Sonatas, Fugues, songs, and a large number of Chorales. In addition to this the Choir has given works by British composers of the Madrigalian period, Purcell, and by a host of modern composers of the younger British School. Four concerts are arranged for the present season, the last two of which will be devoted to the 'St. Matthew' Passion—Part 1 on the afternoon of Saturday, March 27, and Part 2 in the evening. Of the four chamber concerts, one by the London String Quartet was given on Wednesday, October 15, when Elgar's Quartet in E minor, Walford Davies's 'Peter Pan' Suite, and Beethoven's Op. 59, in E minor, were included in the programme. The second concert will be a viola recital by Mr. Lionel Tertis, with Miss Ellen Tuckfield at the pianoforte. The third programme will be supplied by the Catterall String Quartet, the last concert of the series being a pianoforte and violin sonata recital by Mr. Alex. Cohen and Mr. F. Anderson Tyrer. Besides these events, the Choir will give two recitals of Bach's Church Cantatas in the Cathedral, with strings, oboes, trumpets, timpani, and organ.

The Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union has resumed its rehearsals, which are being directed by Mr. W. G.

Whittaker, conductor of the Bach Choir, Dr. Coward having resigned.

All the local choral Societies are picking up their lost threads again. The Middlesbrough Musical Union will give a concert on December 3, at which Sir Edward Elgar will conduct. The programme will include 'The Spirit of England,' 'The Banner of St. George,' the 'Cockaigne' Overture, the 'Wand of Youth' Suite, and what the prospectus calls the 'Emgona' Variations, thus adding another insoluble riddle to this delightfully perplexing work. The 'St. John' Passion of Bach will be given on March 31, conducted by Dr. Kilburn. The London String Quartet gave a concert on October 28, at which Beethoven's C minor Quartet, Op. 18, No. 4, was played, and, with Miss Ethel Hobday, a remarkably fine performance of Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet. A second chamber concert will be given by the Catterall Quartet on January 29. Mr. Felix Corbett has also resumed his concerts at Middlesbrough, of which four are announced and two have already been given. Madame Tetrizzini was the sensational attraction of the first of the series, about which nothing more need be said, and the second was devoted to a programme by the Hallé Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Hamilton Harty, with Fifi de la Côte as vocalist and M. de Greef as pianist. Middlesbrough is likely to be crowded with concerts this winter, as Mr. Lionel Powell also announces four and Madame Clara Butt two music-makings. The first of Madame Butt's concerts was given on Saturday, November 15, when the prima donna was assisted by the Coldstream Guards Band, conducted by Major Mackenzie Rogan, and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. After the recent exhibition of Italian coloratura it was a treat to hear Madame Butt and her husband in some real English numbers, conceived in all the dignity and artistic soundness of presentation that usually characterises our best native singers.

Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society, founded in 1856, suspended its operations during the war, but has resumed this season with rehearsals of Stanford's 'Revenge,' Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' and the Bach Motet 'Jesus, Priceless Treasure.'

The Chamber Music Society managed to sustain its activities throughout the war period, and this year has a larger number of subscribers than ever. The London String Quartet supplied the programme of the Society's concert on October 16, and three other concerts are promised, one of which will be by the Catterall Quartet.

Stockton and Thornaby Choral and Orchestral Society is rehearsing 'Acis and Galatea' and Stanford's 'Revenge.'

NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

From Derby comes the very encouraging news of the success of municipal effort in concert work. At the first attempt, on October 31, the programme of the Bohemian String Quartet included Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D and Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet, with Miss Fanny Davies taking the pianoforte part. She was also heard in solos by Chopin, Brahms, and Suk, the latter a member of the Quartet. The Derby and District branch of the National Federation of Discharged Soldiers and Sailors Military band gave an interesting concert on November 2 at the Hippodrome, under the direction of Mr. Sydney Sadler. The band was heard in works by Auber, Gounod, and Massenet, and solos for his instrument were given by the Russian pianist Cernikoff, who contributed numbers by Bach, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, and Scriabin.

Mr. John Coates and M. Cortôt were the chief attractions at the first Nottingham Subscription Concert on October 28. The former selected a programme both ancient and modern, that ranged from Byrde to Josef Holbrooke, while Cortôt made Chopin's twenty-four Preludes his chief item, followed by Liszt's Rhapsody No. 2.

A visit from Melba on October 29 was also the first opportunity afforded to local music-lovers of hearing Mr. Tom Burke, therefore a crowded house was the happy lot of the first International Celebrity Concert here. Miss Una Bourne was the solo pianist, and Mr. Frank St. Leger accompanied. On November 2 Mr. Bernard Johnson, with Master Stanley Kaye as solo pianist, filled the Albert Hall at his fortnightly organ recital, the chief item in the programme being MacDowell's Pianoforte Concerto, Op. 23. On November 5 Mr. Johnson's popular concert took place, the programme being supplied by the London String Quartet.

Leicester recently had the privilege of hearing Tetrassini—a privilege denied to Nottingham, from some unknown cause—when, on October 20, she sang songs by Tosti, Grieg, and her accompanist Cimara, as well as operatic selections from Mozart and Verdi. A large and appreciative audience assembled to enjoy the occasion. Assisting her efforts were the tenor, Signor Cellini, Madame Renée Chemet, the violinist, and Signor Cimara, the pianist. On October 27, the Melba party visited the town, and achieved a similar success to that at Nottingham.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

After a lapse of thirteen years, Berlioz's 'Faust' was performed at the first concert of the Sheffield Musical Union. The full effect of the large chorus was to some extent marred by the smallness of the platform, which necessitated the placing of all sopranos and contraltos in the side balconies. The men, facing the audience, made the most of the showy choruses allotted to them, and sang brilliantly. The choruses of Students and Soldiers, and, later, the Pandemonium scenes, were boldly done. The balance being good, the maximum effect was achieved. One of the finest movements was the section 'Faust's Dream,' which, though a maze of ordered intricacy, vindicated the reliability of Dr. Coward's clever choir. The orchestra played the March with abundant dash, and was efficiently delicate in the 'Dance of Sylphs.' The strings, though weak numerically, played neatly, and the brass was excellent. Miss Madeline Collins, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. William Hayle, and Mr. Stanley Beckett were the soloists.

The second Promenade Concert proved the most successful of the series so far given. The orchestra of upwards of sixty players is settling into a sympathetic and accurate ensemble. Drawn chiefly from the Hallé Orchestra, the wood-wind department revealed a finished technique in Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic Symphony,' playing with great beauty of tone and phrasing. Mr. J. A. Rodgers, who conducted, secured an expressive performance from his responsive players, which augured well for the treatment of Rachmaninoff's second Symphony, announced for the next concert. The orchestra, too, made the most of Grieg's 'Lyric Suite.' Here the strings showed their quality in some well-graded crescendos and noticeably in unity of phrasing and richness of tone. Mr. Cecil Baumer played the solo part in MacDowell's second Pianoforte Concerto. His virile style and rhythmic consistency suited well the American composer's exuberant music, the performance being a complete success. Percy Grainger's 'Mock Morris,' along with other pieces, completed the programme.

The Foxon 'Five o'clocks' pursue their interesting way. Among pleasant works recently done have been Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole,' played by Miss Yvonne Yorke with nice sense of style; a group of modern pianoforte pieces, including Dohnányi's fine Rhapsody 'Dies Irae' and Debussy's 'Poissons d'Or' by Miss Helen Guest; Grieg's Sonata in C minor for violin and pianoforte, played with mutual understanding by Miss Georgie Evans and Mr. Allan Smith; and some neatly played salon pieces—including Paderewski's 'Cracovienne Fantastique'—by Miss Minnie Wilson. At these refined concerts the art of accompanying is demonstrated to virtual perfection by Miss Ethel Cook.

At the first Sheffield Subscription Concert, Cortôt played Vivaldi's 'Sonata da Camera' and the whole of Chopin's Preludes, his masterly interpretations creating a profound impression. His return to Sheffield will be eagerly awaited. Mr. John Coates sang songs of British origin, and Miss Margaret Fairless was the solo violinist.

YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

The distinctive event of the past month has been the performance by the Leeds Philharmonic Society, on November 12, of Beethoven's 'Missa Solemnis,' which, as one of the monumental things in music, was chosen as a suitable means of celebrating the Society's jubilee. Under Dr. Bairstow's direction the chorus has acquired such high efficiency that it was more than equal to the extreme difficulties of this sublime work, and one has rarely heard it sung with greater ease and finish, not only the broad effects, but the minute shades of expression being cared for. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Robert Radford, an excellent quartet. Such a performance could be equalled only at a festival, where the conditions allow of a full rehearsal, and the principals, band, and chorus do not meet for the first time at the concert. The Mass was preceded by the 'Eroica' Symphony, of which the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Bairstow's direction, gave an excellent interpretation.

On November 8 the second of the Saturday Orchestral Concerts took place, the feature of a programme of general interest being a 'Coronach' by a Scottish musician, Mr. David Stephen, who himself conducted it. It was designed as a tribute to those who fell in the war, and is not unworthy of its theme, being characterised by a gravity and dignity that are not inconsistent with romantic charm. How far the themes are derived from traditional sources I do not know, but at any rate the spirit of the old Celtic dirges has been most happily caught, and in both form and colour this expressive elegy or rhapsody has distinction. The remainder of the programme was on familiar lines. Mr. Hamilton Harty, whose influence as conductor is already showing itself in the orchestra, secured excellent performances of Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony, Debussy's 'L'après-midi d'un Faune,' and other works, while Miss Agnes Nicholls sang some dramatic scenes with great effect.

The O'Mara Opera Company's visit to Leeds opened on November 3 and lasted three weeks, introducing new works which had not been previously heard at Leeds—Puccini's 'Manon Lescaut' and Verdi's 'Ballo in Maschera.' The principals are all efficient, and among them Miss Eleanor Felix, Miss Dorothy Phillips, Mr. John Oliver (a recent recruit, and a very artistic baritone), Mr. Browner, and Mr. Joseph Griffin, may be specially mentioned. The orchestra is more nearly complete than on previous visits, but the chorus requires strengthening, particularly in the male voices. Mr. R. J. Forbes and Mr. Arthur Fagge shared the duties of conductor. The large audiences furnished a clear testimony to the growing love of opera among the people, and Mr. O'Mara should be encouraged to raise the standard of his productions still higher. On October 22 Miss Doris Grover, hitherto known as an artistic pianist, gave proof of a diversity of gifts in a recital of songs sung 'at the pianoforte,' and her selection of songs by Brahms, Borodin, Moussorgsky, Medtner, Rimsky-Korsakov, Grieg, Albert Mallinson, and Debussy showed her good taste no less than her clever playing of the accompaniments. Miss Kathleen Frise Smith played, in excellent style, some pianoforte solos by Bach-Busoni, Mozart, Chopin, and Scriabin. Mr. Alban Hamer, organist of All Souls' Church, gave a recital of British organ music on October 28, when he played pieces by Stanford, Hollins, Wolstenholme, Bairstow, Frank Bridge, and John Ireland—a programme which vindicated the national honour very satisfactorily.

The Quinlan Subscription Concert on October 20 was of much more than customary interest, for the Hallé Orchestra, under Mr. Hamilton Harty, appeared in a programme well calculated to display their great prowess, its central feature being Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony, which was quite brilliantly played, as were Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations and other pieces. M. Arthur de Greef was the solo pianist, and gave a sensational performance of Liszt's 'Hungarian Fantasia.' The concert was repeated at Huddersfield the next day.

BRADFORD.

Two of the Subscription Concerts have happily made us forget the first, which was obviously designed for money-making purposes. Hardly less popular, one was glad to note, was the second, on October 24, when M. Moiseiwitsch gave a pianoforte recital, Bach's Chromatic Fantasia, Liszt's B minor Sonata (a noteworthy effort, placing this remarkable work in an exceptionally favourable light), and a selection from the Paganini Variations of Brahms receiving masterly performances. The third concert, on November 7, was even more notable, for on this occasion Mr. Albert Coates conducted the Hallé Orchestra for the first time, and made a most favourable impression by his fine and intimate interpretations of the 'Meistersinger' Overture and the 'Siegfried Idyll,' evidently favourite works with him. The latter was marked by a freedom which might be considered exaggerated, were it not carried out with such artistic judgment. One felt that the frequent 'liberties' were not merely for the sake of effect, but as a means of expressing the spirit of the music, so that one could unreservedly accept them. Scriabin's 'Poème de l'Extase' was included at the tail-end of the programme, a position not very favourable to its appreciation, especially by those who, like the writer, had to catch a train, but its power was manifest. Mr. Albert Sammons was the soloist in Delius's Violin Concerto, which seemed to lack variety, being rather too continuously in the same meditative mood, but there is no doubt about the poetic charm and originality of the music, and its qualities seemed to be thoroughly appreciated by the soloist. On November 15 the Bradford Permanent Orchestra began a new season, with a programme that mingled the old and the new in well-considered proportions. It was particularly distinguished by the appearance of two works by living English composers—a symphonic poem, 'The Sirens of Paphos,' by Arnold Trowell, and an Air de Ballet for strings by Percy Pitt. Mr. Trowell handles the orchestra with assured mastery, and his work is remarkably vivid, without loss of musical qualities. It was well played under his direction. A new conductor to these concerts appeared in Mr. Godfrey Brown, who gave an effective reading of Beethoven's eighth Symphony.

Other Bradford events which deserve a word of mention are a pianoforte recital by Mr. Mark Hambourg on October 30, an organ recital at all Saints' Church on November 6, by Mr. C. Stott, who played pieces by Bach, Karg-Elert, Basil Harwood, and Stanford, and a chamber concert on October 31, by local musicians in connection with the Home Music Study Union, the programme including Violin Sonatas by Beethoven, Lekeu, and Elgar.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Huddersfield, where much music is being made this season, the production by the Choral Society, on October 31, of Bach's B minor Mass has been the outstanding event of the moment. Dr. Coward secured an interpretation which had some very good points, especially in the more strenuous choruses, but was uneven, the instrumental side of the performance leaving something to be desired. The principals, Miss Stiles-Allen, Miss Ethel Peake, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Robert Radford, were all efficient, the first and last proving especially well fitted for their very exacting tasks. The Huddersfield Philharmonic Society's concert on October 25 was conducted by Mr. Frederick Dawson, who secured from an orchestra largely amateur in its composition a highly creditable performance of Beethoven's eighth Symphony, and one of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Spanish Caprice,' which was full of go. Miss Yvonne Yorke as violinist showed decided promise, and Miss Doris Woodall, the vocalist, introduced among her songs a very charming 'Irish Lament' by Mr. Dawson. Some spirited singing was heard at the concert of the Holme Valley Male Voice Choir on November 8, under Mr. Silverwood's direction. At the concert of the Huddersfield Music Club, on November 12, the Catterall String Quartet was heard in Quartets by Elgar, Ravel, and Borodin, which were of course played with admirable power and finish.

The Wakefield Chamber Concerts are now happily resumed, and the London String Quartet, on October 31, made a great impression by their highly finished performances of well-known String Quartets by Beethoven and Schubert, and of some smaller pieces by English composers—H. Waldo Warner, Speaight, and Percy Grainger. The Hull Philharmonic Society, on November 6, resumed its full activity with a concert at which Tchaikovsky's E minor Symphony was very ably played under Mr. J. W. Hudson's direction, the programme including also the 'Zauberflöte' Overture, 'Finlandia,' and other well-known works. Miss Stiles-Allen was the vocalist.

The Cardiff Music Club, which was formed in October, 1918, has drawn up an enterprising scheme for its weekly meetings during the 1919-20 season. There are a number of set programmes arranged, and eight lectures.

Musical Notes from Abroad.

BRUSSELS.

There have been two interesting 'revivals' here during the last month, e.g., Massenet's 'Le Jongleur de Notre Dame' and Saint-Saëns's 'Samson et Dalila.' The first was a great success for the two artists MM. Salignac (as Jean) and de Clery (as Boniface). Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Sheherazade' was performed the same evening, and was received very favourably.

The interest in the revival of 'Samson et Dalila' was three-fold. First, the work had not been heard here for over five years; secondly, Anseau made his reappearance; and lastly, M. Vaur made his début at the Monnaie, singing the rôle of the High Priest. The new scenery, and the wonderful singing by the chorus were welcome features of the revival, but they lost their novelty in the appreciation of the delightful artistry and skilful acting of M. Anseau. This tenor is young, and his career will be watched with much interest by his compatriots, for undoubtedly he possesses a remarkable voice. M. Vaur sang pleasingly, but did not appear to enter altogether into the 'colour' of his rôle. He comes from Paris, where, ten years ago, he won the 'Premier Prix du Conservatoire.'

John Ireland's Violin Sonata No. 1 received its first public performance in Belgium on October 2, when it was played by M. Deru (violin) and M. Scharrés (pianoforte). The second and third movements won a big ovation, and I have no doubt as to the Sonata becoming popular here. It is to be hoped that more English music will be heard in Belgium. M. Scharrés, who introduced this Sonata, proposes to play a work by Arnold Bax at his pianoforte recital announced for an early date.

On October 19, M. Scharrés gave his first recital of the season before a large audience at the Salle Coloniale. His programme was very varied, and, among fourteen items, included six 'first public performances' in Belgium, the chief of these being 'In a Vodka Shop,' by Arnold Bax, which met with hearty applause from the audience. The concert-giver gave a fine reading of Beethoven's Sonata in G, Op. 31, No. 1, and his extraordinary technique stood him in good stead for the familiar Study in C major of Rubinstein, as also for the eccentric 'Mephisto' valse of Liszt. The 'Variations en Ut mineur' (first performance), by Gabriel Pierné, and 'Le Tombeau de Couperin' (first performance), by Maurice Ravel, were played most delightfully. The latter will certainly be heard again here. It consists of a series of charming tone-pictures, in which the modern element is not so laboriously evident as it is in some pianoforte works of the modern French School. Joseph Jongen's 'Crépuscule au lac Ogwen' (first performance) was very delicately played. M. Jongen, seated in the audience, and desisted and pointed out by M. Scharrés, was obliged to acknowledge the applause. A 'Mazurka' by Rachmaninoff concluded a most interesting programme. M. Scharrés is an accomplished artist, and certainly in the front rank of Belgian pianists. This concert was organized by L'Art Belge, Brussels.

At the Théâtre Monnaie M. Brugman's 'L'Invasion' has now been performed half a dozen times. Apart from an interesting score (the subject-matter being patriotic), it is wonderfully staged, and has delighted crowded audiences. The composer encountered many difficulties in hiding his manuscript from the Germans during the Occupation. Some parts of it, it is said, were burnt.

M. Anseau continues to be a big draw, his 'Samson' and 'Romeo' being decidedly good.

M. Alfred Cortôt played the solo part of César Franck's 'Variations Symphoniques' in his usual convincing manner and with much charm, at the first Concert Populaire of this season at the Monnaie. The work would seem to be a stock item of M. Cortôt, as the writer heard him in it early this year at Le Havre, and it is recorded that he also played it a few weeks ago in London.

J. H. WOOD.

MILAN.

Intimately connected with the reopening of the Scala with an improved stage mechanism is the opera of the late Arrigo Boito, 'Nerone.' It is again the centre of polemical speculation. A Milan paper recently stated that Toscanini had been directed by the executors of the will of the late maestro to complete the orchestration of the fourth Act, which was unfinished. This however is not true. It is common knowledge that the four Acts were completed by Boito himself. A fifth Act had been conceived, but the framework had not been filled in. Evidently Boito had hesitated to complete it for fear of jeopardizing his work by excessive length, as had been the case of 'Mefistofele' in 1868. In fact, Boito has left word that only four Acts of 'Nero' must be given. These represent 'La Via Appia' (The Appian way), 'Il Tempio di Simon Mago' (The temple of Simon Mago), 'L'orto' (The garden where the Christians assembled), and 'Il Circo Massimo' (The great Circus). The fifth Act was to have represented 'Nero's Theatre.'

There is a proposal on foot in Italy to invoke the intervention of the State in matters theatrical. It would appear that it is officially proposed to establish an 'Ufficio del Teatro' (Theatre Bureau), the aim of which would be the moral safeguarding of Italian art, through supervision by an organization statutorily authorised. The Office or Bureau would undertake the study of all problems incident to theatrical life generally. It is proposed to apply the following reforms: Moral and juridical recognition of the theatrical classes; application to these classes of the social laws actually in force; abolition of mediatory methods; reform of authors' rights; reorganization of conservatoires, of musical and elocutionary schools in general; revision of the tributary regime of theatres; expropriation of communal theatres, the management of which to be vested in specially appointed bodies or professional organizations.

Concerning the origin of Adelina Patti, the following particulars are little known. One day, in the year 1820, Gustav Barrili, maestro of counterpoint, while traversing one of the numerous side-streets now occupied by the Via Giulia, Rome, was greatly surprised to hear the tones of a glorious voice proceeding from the public washing-house situate in Vicolo dell'Armata. Irresistibly fascinated at a wealth of tone such as even he had rarely heard before, and overcome by curiosity, he entered the building. The angel of song was indeed a washerwoman, but also a young, tall, and attractive brunette. The maestro there and then proposed to the girl that he should teach her singing. She, however, thought the old maestro was trying to make a fool of her. On being asked whether she was from Rome, she replied that she came from Tivoli, and that her mother 'sold eggs at Piazza Pollarola.' Barrili at length persuaded the girl of his serious intentions, and to this end he supported both the girl and her mother, finally marrying the former, who, after three years' study, made a successful first appearance in Rossini's 'La Gazza Ladra' at the Valle Theatre, Rome (still existing), in Carneval season, 1824. Engagements followed in quick succession for Milan and Naples, where she created a furore in 'Norma.' Thence she went to the Imperial Theatre at Rio de Janeiro—unfortunately for the old maestro, as it proved, for the same season a tenor was engaged who had 'a wonderful voice and an extraordinary pair of eyes.' The tenor—Patti by name—was young and handsome, the maestro-husband old and ugly; the epilogue confirmed once again the base ingratitude of mankind. One fine evening the 'innamorati' did not make their appearance in the theatre for the performance. The poor disillusioned old maestro returned to Europe, and took the matter so much to heart that he died shortly afterwards, leaving two sons, Antonio and Pietro. The former went to Spain to his mother, who did not give him a very warm reception, because he was ugly. Tenor Patti married the widow. Four children were born to them—Carlotta, Adelina, Amelia, and Charles. It is recorded that the mother was not a good parent, and treated her children rather roughly, even after they were grown up. In a fit of ungovernable temper she pushed Carlotta down the stairs. Carlotta broke a leg, and, becoming lame in consequence, had to abandon singing in opera and limit her efforts to concert work. It is said that Carlotta had a more beautiful voice than Adelina.

It was a well-known fact that Patti never sang Wagner. On being asked the reason, she answered: 'Look at my figure, my neck, my wrists; I am not built to represent the creatures of Wagner. I admire Wagner immensely, but I cannot expect my voice to render things beyond what it has been accustomed to. On the other hand the public always wants to hear the same things over again. When I want to sing something new, I take up some of the old pieces.'

Rossini was a great friend of Patti. When he went to visit her he used to announce his presence in the house by playing on the pianoforte with one finger the old French air: 'J'ai du tabac dans ma tabatière.' She knew at once who the visitor was, and ran to meet him. But they had not always been good friends. The first time Patti went to Rossini's house she sang some of his own music, and in order to display her vocal abilities introduced her own embellishments, especially in the aria in 'Barbiere.' Rossini was furious, demanding of her, 'But whose music is this?'

E. HERBERT CESARI.

Miscellaneous.

Captain B. S. Green, M.V.O., Director of Music to the Royal Marine Artillery, Eastney Barracks, Portsmouth, retired from that position on October 31, after fifty-four years' service. Captain Green had the distinction, up to the time of his retirement, of being the oldest serving musical director in His Majesty's Forces. He came to the R.M.A. some twenty-three years ago, since when he has gained the whole-hearted esteem and affection of the entire musical unit placed in his charge. The R.M.A. Band has travelled to all parts of the world, and accompanied the King and Queen on their trips on more occasions than any other band in the Navy or Army. The R.M.A. Band, under Captain Green, went with the present King and Queen to India on the Medina, on the occasion of the Delhi Durbar in 1911. On his return King George created Captain Green a Member of the Victorian Order (Fifth Class), and presented him with a gold-mounted baton. Promotion from bandmaster to second lieutenant came in September, 1911, and in May, 1914, he was made Director of Music to the R.M.A., with the rank of lieutenant, his captaincy being gazetted in 1917. He has received gifts from the past and present members of the Band, and at a farewell instrumental concert at Southampton recently he was presented by the Mayor with a handsome tea and coffee service on behalf of many of his admirers there. A similar presentation is to be made to him on the South Parade Pier, Southsea, in the name of his admirers in Portsmouth.

Mr. Sterling Mackinlay has chosen for his eighth season of light opera revivals Audran's 'Olivette,' and 'The Vicar of Bray,' by Edward Solomon, in which Rutland Barrington took the title-part at the Savoy many years ago. 'Olivette' will be given at the King's Hall during the third week of December. Those who are interested in these revivals should apply for particulars of membership to the secretary, 32, Baker Street, W.1, as the performances are not available to the general public.

The Philharmonic Siring Quartet, along with Mr. Josef Holbrooke and Mr. Arthur Bliss, arranged to start on November 21 for a fortnight's visit to France. Their programmes include Holbrooke's Symphonic Quintet, 'Three Dramatic Songs,' 'Barrage' and 'Javanese' for string quartet, a new Quintet by Mr. Bliss, Frank Bridge's 'Three Idylls,' and the Quartets of Sir Edward Elgar and Mr. Cyril Scott, besides those of Debussy and Borodin.

The Blackheath branch of the British Music Society keeps up its busy record. Recent events have been an 'Anglo-Russian' recital by Mr. E. S. Mitchell (pianoforte) and Mr. Sidney Sheppard (violin); and a lecture, 'Notes on song,' by Mr. Cecil R. Harris. On November 21 Mr. Tom Davies inaugurated a fortnightly lecture series under the heads 'The bearing of literature on art and life,' 'The message of Piers Plowman,' and 'Walt Whitman.'

Further particulars of the scheme of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust for the publication of musical works have been issued by the secretary (East Port, Dunfermline). Works for the 1920 scheme have to be delivered at this address by February 2.

Lieut. Charles Hoby, Mus. Doc., Bandmaster of H.M. Royal Marines, Chatham Division, has been appointed Professor of Military Music at the Royal College of Music, in succession to the late Lieut. Charles Godfrey.

CONTENTS.

	Page
To our Readers	657
Modern British Composers—VI. Gustav Holst
(concluded). By Edwin Evans	657
A Slovak Music-Drama. By Rosa Newmarch	661
Interludes. By 'Feste'	665
Nationality in Music. By Arthur L. Salmon	668
Concerning Cuts. By Alfred Kalisch	669
The Humour of Stravinsky. By Leigh Henry	670
'Parsifal': a new English version	673
Occasional Notes	674
Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas—II. By Harvey Grace
(concluded)	674
The 'Claque' in Italy. By Claude Trevor	678
The Musician's Bookshelf. By 'Feste'	680
New light on early Tudor Composers.—IV. William Crane. By W. H. Grattan Flood	682
Church and Organ Music	692
The New Organist of the Chapel Royal.—(with portrait)	692
London Concerts. By Alfred Kalisch	693
The Russian Ballet at the Empire. By Edwin Evans	695
Letters to the Editor	696
Obituary	698
Sixty Years Ago	698
Opera in London.—(with portrait). By Francis E. Barrett	699
The Royal Academy of Music	700
The Royal College of Music	701
Chamber Music for Amateurs	701
Choral Notes and News	701
Russian Church Music	702
Music in the Provinces	703
Musical Notes from Abroad	712
Miscellaneous	713

MUSIC:

'Good King Wenceslas.' A Christmas Carol for Four Voices. Set to music for S.A.T.B. By GEOFFREY SHAW	683
--	-----

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this number:—

'Listen, O isles.' Anthem for the Feast of St. John the Baptist or Advent. By George B. Allen.

THE MUSICAL TIMES.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION (WHICH INCLUDES POSTAGE), FIVE SHILLINGS, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

ALLOTEY-PAPPOE, J. E.—Hymn-Tune, "Adarku" ("Happy soul, thy days are ended"). 1d.
BREWER, A. H.—"When all the world is young." Song. In D. For medium voice. In F. For high voice. 2s. each.
BURGESS, FRANCIS.—"Missa Penitentialis." For the Sundays in Advent and Lent. ("Cantiones Ecclesiae," No. 2.) 3d.
CHAMBERS, H. A.—Communion Service. In G. (No. 966, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 6d.
CLEMENS, T. L.—"A study in Three against Two." In F sharp minor. Pianoforte Solo. 2s.
EYRE, LAXTON.—"Life's Highway." Song. 2s.
HAMILTON-GELL, F. A. W.—"Emmanuel, God with us." Carol. 1d.
HANDEL, G. F.—"Wide spread His Name. Bass solo. From "Theodora." 1s.
HARNACK, F. W.—Vestry Hymn. On card. 2d.
HODSON, W.—"Sunset." Vesper Hymn. 3d.
HOLBROOKE, J.—Three Dramatic Songs (Op. 69). String Quartet Parts. 4s.
—"Reels and Strathspeys" (Op. 71B). Trumpet, 1s. Horns, 1s. Clarinet, 1s.
KENNARD, E.—Nicene Creed. In E flat. 4d.
MACPHERSON, C.—"I heard a voice from Heaven." Anthem for Soprano Solo and Chorus (or Quartet). From "Sing unto God." (No. 234, Novello's Short Anthems.) 1½d.
—"The Old Hundredth." Arranged with two Faux-bourbons. (No. 962, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.
PATTERSON, A. W.—"Ireland for ever." Irish March-Song. 4d.
RHODES, H.—Communion Service. In A. (No. 57, Short Settings.) 1s.
ROBSON, R. WALKER.—"Lo! new born Jesus." Carol. 3d.
SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW (No. 330) contains the following music in both notations:—"Ballad of Sol and the Boy." Arranged by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. "As I loitered in a wood." French nursery rhyme. Arranged with English words by EDMONDSTOUNE DUNCAN. "Mary of Argyle." Unison Song. Arranged by DAVID STEPHEN. Separately, 1½d.
SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.
No. 1185. "The Bailiff's daughter." Unison Song ... 1½d. —
"The roast beef of old England." Unison Song ... 1½d. —
SHAW, GEOFFREY.—"Good King Wenceslas." Arranged for Four Voices. (No. 922, The Musical Times.) 1½d.
SMALLMAN, C. S.—"Love's garden gate." Song. 2s.
SOMERVILLE, R.—"Who rides for the King." Four-part Song. Arranged for T.T.B.B. (No. 562, "The Orpheus.") 3d.
SWEETING, E. T.—"The Deil's awa' wi' the exciseman." Arranged as a Four-part Song. (No. 1337, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.
TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:
J. S.—"We three Kings of Orient are." Christmas Carols. (No. 45, Novello's Christmas Carols.) 1d.
—"O bienheureuse nuit." (No. 111, Novello's Christmas Carols.) 1d.
TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:
No. 2308. "Bless the Lord, O my soul." Anthem for Soprano Solo and Chorus. R. G. HAILING 2d.

Listen, O isles.

ANTHEM FOR THE FEAST OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST
OR ADVENT.

Isaiah xlix. 1, 2; Malachi iv. 6;
St. Matthew iii. 2.

Composed by GEORGE B. ALLEN,
Mus. Bac., Oxon.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante. p cres. Λ

SOPRANO.
Lis - ten, O isles, un - to me; and heark - en, ye

ALTO.
Lis - ten, O isles, un - to me; and heark - en, ye

TENOR.
Lis - ten, O isles, un - to me; and heark - en, ye

BASS.
Lis - ten, O isles, un - to me; and heark - en, heark - en, ye

Andante. p cres. Λ $\text{O} = 72$

ORGAN.
(ad lib.)

peo - ple, from a - far. The Lord hath called me from the peo - ple, from a - far. The Lord hath called me from the peo - ple, from a - far. The Lord hath called me from the peo - ple, from a - far. The Lord hath called me from the

p

LISTEN, O ISLES.

womb, and He hath made my tongue like a sharp sword, . .

womb, and He hath made my tongue like a sharp . . sword,

womb, and He hath made my tongue like a sharp . . sword,

womb, and He hath made my tongue like a sharp . . sword,

He hath made my tongue like a sharp sword.

He hath made my tongue like a sharp sword.

He hath made my tongue like a sharp . . . sword.

He hath made my tongue like a sharp sword.

p He shall turn the heart of the fa - thers to the chil - dren,

p He shall turn the heart of the fa - thers to the chil - dren,

p He shall turn the heart of the fa - thers to the chil - dren,

p He shall turn the heart of the fa - thers to the chil - dren,

LISTEN, O ISLES.

and the heart of the chil-dren to their fa - - thers. . . Re - and the heart of the chil-dren to their fa - - thers. . . Re - and the heart of the chil-dren to their fa - - thers. . . Re - and the heart of the chil-dren to their fa - - thers. . . Re -

The first system consists of four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and a piano accompaniment. Each vocal staff has the lyrics 'and the heart of the chil-dren to their fa - - thers. . . Re -' with a crescendo hairpin and a forte 'f' dynamic marking at the end. The piano accompaniment is in the lower register, providing harmonic support.

- pent ye: for the king - dom of heaven is at

- pent ye: for the king - dom of heaven is at

- pent ye: for the king - dom of heaven is at

- pent ye: for the king - dom of heaven is at

The second system continues with the same four vocal staves and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are '- pent ye: for the king - dom of heaven is at'. Each vocal staff begins with a mezzo-forte 'mf' dynamic marking. The piano accompaniment features chords and moving lines in both hands.

LISTEN, O ISLES.

hand, . . . re - pent ye, for the king - dom of

hand, . . . re - pent ye, for the king - dom of

hand, . . . re - pent ye, for the king - dom of hand, . . . re - pent ye, for the king - dom of f mf

heaven is at hand, . . . re - pent . . . ye.

heaven is at hand, . . . re - pent . . . ye.

heaven is at hand, . . . re - pent . . . ye.

heaven is at hand, . . . re - pent . . . ye.

pp

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(Continued).

WAGNER, R.—"Parsifal." English Translation by CLAUDE AVELING. 5s.
WHYTE, ROBERT.—"O praise God in his Holiness," Anthem for Four Voices. Edited by JOHN E. WEST. (No. 1071, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ANDREWS, MARK.—"Galilee." A Sacred Cantata for Soli, Chorus, and Organ. $1.25 (6s.).
BEETHOVEN, L. VAN.—"Adagio Cantabile." In A flat. From Septet in E flat. Arranged for Organ. 50 cents (2s.).
CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"Chanson des Alpes" and "La Marche des Rois." For the Organ. $1 (4s. 6d.).
HANDEL.—Overture to "The Messiah." Arranged for the Organ. 50 cents (2s.).
HELD, PAUL.—"Dolore." Tone-Poem. For the Organ. 50 cents (2s.).
KORESTCHENKO, A.—"Berceuse." Arranged for the Organ. 50 cents (2s.).
MATTHEWS, J. S.—"The Blessed of Freedom." Song. In C. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).
OETTING, W. H.—"How long wilt Thou forget me." Sacred Solo. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).
THOMPSON, VAN DENMAN.—"To an American Soldier." Elegy for the Organ. 50 cents (2s.).

OSWALD PEPPERCORN.

PROFESSOR OF SINGING AND BREATHING.

Audition free. Write, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

JOHN KIMBER

(BARITONE).

Songs, Cantatas, Oratorios.

40, Lothair Road, Finsbury Park, N.4.

ALTO WANTED, for Holy Trinity Church, West Hill, Wandsworth, S.W. Good Reader. Sundays only. £15. Write, G. H. Godwin, 27, West Hill Road, S.W. 18.

WANTED.—ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER, for St. Mary's, Windermere. Apply to G. Somervell, "Annesdale," Windermere.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED, for Evangelical Church in Switzerland. £40-£50 p.a. State qualifications and references. Apply, "Music," C. C. C. S., 9, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, London, E.C. 4.

FR.C.O., for 30 years Organist and Choirmaster, wishing to relinquish Church work, DESIRES POST in London, in ANY MUSICAL CAPACITY. No. 260, Keith & Co., Advertising Agents, Edinburgh.

TO PICTURE PALACES AND PLACES OF ENTERTAINMENT.

NOTICE.—LADY desires Engagement as PIANO ACCOMPANIST to Strings, Voices, or Small Orchestra. Thoroughly competent, vigorous, accurate, and reliable. Good at Sight-reading—runs in the family! Mrs. Aldridge, "Roxobel," Lowther Hill, Forest Hill, S.E. 23.

STUDENT-ASSISTANT WANTED by Singing-Master. Good Musician and Accompanist. Salary, £48 and first-rate Vocal Training. Part-time only. Write, "Professor," 26, Guilford Street, W.C. 1.

VIOLIN TEACHER REQUIRED at Borough Polytechnic Institute, Borough Road, S.E. 1. Afternoons and Evenings, 5s. an hour.

VIRGIL CLAVIER FOR SALE.—Light oak case, good as new; instruction book. £6. Heffer, 30, De Freville Avenue, Cambridge.

POPULAR PART-SONGS

FOR S.A.T.B.

BY

WILLIAM J. YOUNG.

GAILY THRO' THE GREENWOOD 3d.
 (Also for Soprano and Contralto.)

HAIL, MERRY CHRISTMAS 3d.

THE COMING OF SPRING 3d.

AND OTHERS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.SONGS FROM THE CHINESE.*A FEAST OF LANTERNS.

B flat, C (E to G), and D.

FROM THE TOMB OF AN UNKNOWN WOMAN.

G, A (B to F), and B.

ADRIFT.

A, B (F sharp to G), and C.

YUNG YANG.

D (D to F) and E.

PRICE, EACH, 2s. NET.

"... In 'Four Songs from the Chinese' Mr. BANTOCK has produced four numbers which are 'art songs' in the best sense of the term. They are delightful things, and they have the inestimable advantage of being well within the compass of the intelligent amateur who has imagination and a fair knowledge of music. The series can be confidently recommended to those who have a soul above the ballad cult. Indeed, it is songs like these that make the reviewer's task a joy."—Daily Express.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

And of all Musicsellers in the United Kingdom and Colonies.

THE TECHNIQUER

For all Instrumentalists. Patented in Great Britain and U.S.A. Invented by Mr. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

Extract from letter received from JOSEPH GREENE, Esq., Liverpool's Great Pianist (vide Daily Press).

In ordering six additional Techniquers, Mr. JOSEPH GREENE writes:—

"My experiments with the little instrument since I received it about a week ago, have been attended with such excellent results that I WONDER IT IS NOT STILL MORE WIDELY USED, both by performers and teachers. I regret not having made its acquaintance earlier, it being such a time-saver in so many ways."

"JOSEPH GREENE."

Send for particulars and testimonials. "Hand Development," 7d.

The Secretary, 33, Orchard Street, W. 1.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

"Orrisdale," 418, Chorley Old Road, Bolton.

DEAR SIRs,—I have opened many organs by various builders, but I wish to say this: That I have never played on a finer Pedal Board than the one which you make.

ARTHUR E. JONES, F.R.C.O., L.T.C.L.

Terms: Cash, or instalments of 20s. per month.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,

Works—Hanley, Staffs.

NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

BARITONE AND BASS VOCALISTS should buy the Song: "LOVE'S PHILOSOPHY" (Oakley). Compass, C sharp to E. Price 1s. 8d. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, W. 1.

TE DEUM in F, 2d.; Te Deum in D, 3d. Novel Settings by D. R. MUNRO. Sung where hitherto only Chants allowed.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TE DEUM in F. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS in F. 3d. each. By A. Toase. Novello & Co., Ltd.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

MUSIC FOR THE YOUNG

(AND FOR THE OLD).

SPRING IMPRESSIONS. 1s. 6d.

Lee Williams.

BY THE SEA. 2s. Arthur Somervell.

These two Albums contain works small in form and technically easy, but they will be appreciated by young and old alike.

SHORT CUTS to Piano Technique. 1s. 3d.

Douglas Tayler.

"Full of wise hints."

BEAUTIFUL VOICE (Secret of Acquiring).

1s. 3d. Lawrence.

Fifteenth Thousand.

THE LORD MAYOR MARCH. F. G. Byford.

Piano and Orchestra. A jolly march for young and old.
Dedicated to Sir EDWARD COOPER.

MOON MAGIC. Danse des Fantômes.

Wilfred Arnold

For Pianoforte, Orchestra, &c. Dedicated to LADY COOPER and her FOURTEEN MAIDS OF HONOUR.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

Publishers of the Five Great Piano Methods:

BERINGER'S TUTOR. WARD'S PROGRESSIVE TUTOR. HEMY'S TUTOR.
WICKINS'S RAPID TUTOR. GRAHAM P. MOORE'S FIRST PRINCIPLES.Publishers of Sevcik's Violin Method, Beringer's Daily Technical Studies. Macfarren's The Child's First Music Lesson.

FINE SOLO VIOLIN by THOMAS PERRY, 1767.

Formerly the property of Professor Pavey, £35.
Harrison, 1, St. Michael's Park, Bristol.

FINE SOLO VIOLIN, very old French, £14.

Harrison, 1, St. Michael's Park, Bristol.

FINE SOLO VIOLIN, old Italian; real Cremona varnish, £15. Harrison, 1, St. Michael's Park, Bristol.GRAND-TONED VIOLIN, Strad model; period 1720-1725; unique varnish, price £35. For the first time since the death of Stradivarius, nearly 200 years ago, his secret method for producing power, penetration, and delicacy of tone (recently rediscovered by a Bristol amateur), has been successfully applied in the building of the above grand model of the best period. Approval. mutual references.
T. T. Harrison, 1, St. Michael's Park, Bristol.THE FIRST PRINCIPLES OF PIANOFORTE PLAYING:Being an extract from the Author's "The Act of Touch." Designed for School Use, and including two New Chapters, Directions for Learners and Advice to Teachers.

By TOBIAS MATTHAY,

Fellow, Professor, and Examiner of the Royal Academy of Music, London, &c.

Crown 8vo, 4s.

THE ACT OF TOUCH IN ALL ITS DIVERSITY:

An Analysis and Synthesis of Pianoforte Tone-Production.

By TOBIAS MATTHAY.

With 22 Illustrations.

8vo, 8s.

SOME COMMENTARIES ON THE TEACHING OF PIANOFORTE TECHNIQUE.

A Supplement to "The Act of Touch" and "First Principles."

By TOBIAS MATTHAY.

With Illustrations.

8vo, 2s.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,

39, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON, E.C. 4.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891."Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891."Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."— Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

	Staff Notation.	Tonic Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	3d.	2d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	2d.	1d.
Two Christmas Carols	3d.	2d.

SERVICES.

SERVICE IN G	1/6	1s.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	3d.	2d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	2d.	2d.
Benedictus	2d.	2d.
Jubilate	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Pater Noster from the above	2d.	2d.
Amen ditto	1d.	1d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s.	8d.

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	3d.	2d.
Office for the Holy Communion	6d.	4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	3d.	2d.
Te Deum in B flat	3d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	3d.	1 3/4d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	3d.	2d.

ORGAN.

Voix Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
--	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Pen'tence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	1/6	1s.
--	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D. CANTAB.

SERVICES.

CHANT TE DEUM, IN E	3d.
" BENEDICITE, IN E	2d.
" BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE, IN E	3d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, IN E	3d.
CANTATE AND DEUS, IN E	3d.
COMMUNION SERVICE, IN E	6d.

ANTHEMS.

O LORD, THOU ART MY GOD—ADVENT	3d.
IN THE BEGINNING—CHRISTMAS	3d.
BEHOLD, I BRING YOU GOOD TIDINGS	3d.
IN THE BEGINNING—TONIC SOL-FA	1 1/4d.

FIVE SETS OF CHRISTMAS CAROLS, In Books. 6d. each.

All numbers printed separately, 1d. each.

The Composer will be pleased to send Specimens.

Address: 36, CHRIST CHURCH ROAD, NORWICH.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA:
THE ANCIENT MARINER

30TH THOUSAND.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ANTHEMS FOR CHRISTMAS.

*A song of joy	John E. West	3d.	*Nazareth	Ch. Gounod	2d.
And the Angel said unto them	J. P. Sweenelck	4d.	*Now is come Salvation	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
Angels from the realms of glory, F. H. Cowen 3d. ; *E. Vine Hall	3d.		*Now when Jesus	Joseph Holbrooke	3d.
*Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Geo. Elvey	14d.	O come, all ye faithful (Adeste Fideles) Arr. by G. J. Tredaway	2d.
*Arise, shine, for thy light is come	G. F. Cobb	14d.	O come hither	W. Jackson	2d.
*Arise, shine, O Jerusalem	Thomas Adams	3d.	*O come, Redeemer of mankind	Arthur W. Marchant	3d.
*Awake, put on thy strength	F. R. Greenish	4d.	*O come, Redeemer of mankind	John E. West	14d.
Before the heavens were spread abroad	Horatio W. Parker	3d.	*O Holy Babe	A. C. Mackenzie	14d.
Behold, all the earth lieth still	G. F. Huntley	3d.	*O Holy Night	Adolphe Adam	2d.
Behold, a star appeareth	Niels W. Gade	4d.	O Jerusalem! look about thee	E. W. Naylor	4d.
Behold, a star appeareth	B. Luard-Selby	14d.	*O Jerusalem! look about thee	John E. West	4d.
Behold, I bring	*J. Barnby and E. V. Hall, ea.	3d.	*O sing to God (Noël). (Female Voices)	Ch. Gounod	6d.
Behold, I bring you glad tidings	Giovanni Croce	3d.	*O sing to God (Noël). (Arranged for S.A.T.B.)	Ch. Gounod	14d.
Behold, I bring you glad tidings	*C. W. Smith and Vittoria, ea.	14d.	*O Thou that tellest	Handel	14d.
Behold, I bring you good tidings	J. M. Crament	4d.	O Zion, that bringest good tidings	J. Stainer	14d.
*Behold my servant	J. Frederick Bridge	3d.	Of the Father's love begotten	E. C. Bairstow	3d.
Behold, the name of the Lord	Percy Pitt	3d.	*Rejoice in the Lord	J. B. Calkin	3d.
*Behold the Tabernacle (Two-part Anthem)	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous	Alfred Hollins	3d.
Be peace on earth	W. Crotch	2d.	*Rejoice greatly, O Daughter of Zion	Charles H. Lloyd	3d.
Beside Thy Cradle	J. S. Bach	14d.	Rejoice, O ye people	Mendelssohn	14d.
*Bethlehem	Ch. Gounod	14d.	*Rest, weary earth	A. M. Goodhart	3d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel S.S. Wesley & The Earl of Mar, ea.	14d.		*Ring out, wild bells	P. E. Fletcher	3d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel	C. L. Williams	4d.	Say, where is He born (Trio)	Mendelssohn	3d.
*Blessed be the Lord God of Israel	E. Vine Hall	3d.	*See, amid the winter's snow	John E. West	14d.
Born to-day (Motet. S.S.A.T.B.)	J. P. Sweenelck	3d.	*Silent Night (Melody by F. Grüber)	Arr. by John E. West	14d.
Break forth into joy	*H. A. Matthews and W. G. Alcock, ea.	3d.	*Sing and rejoice	J. Barnby and John E. West, each	4d.
Break forth into joy	T. Ridley Prentice	6d.	*Sing and rejoice	Basil Harwood	14d.
Break forth into joy	S. Coleridge-Taylor and Bruce Steane, ea.	3d.	Sing a song of praise	Oliver King	3d.
Break forth	J. S. Bach	14d.	*Sing, O Daughter of Zion H. W. Wareing and W. G. Alcock, ea.	3d.
*Brightest and best	E. Vine Hall	3d.	Sing, O Daughter of Zion	H. Gadsby	14d.
*Calin on the list'ning ear of night	Horatio W. Parker	3d.	Sing, O heavens *H. Davan Wetton, Kent & T. T. Trimmel, ea.	4d.
*Christ's Incarnation	Myles B. Foster	14d.	Sing, O heavens	A. C. Mackenzie	6d.
Christians, awake	J. Barnby, 3d. ; *H. M. Higgs	4d.	*Sing, O heavens	J. H. Maunder and B. Tours, each	14d.
Christians, be joyful	Bach	3d.	*Sing, O heavens	Bruce Steane, 3d. ; *Arthur S. Sullivan	1d.
*Christmas Day (Choral Fantasy on Old Carols)	G. von Holst	3d.	*Sing, O heavens, and be joyful, O earth	A. Gaul	14d.
Come and thank Him	Bach	14d.	*Sing unto the Lord	Vincent Novello	14d.
*Come and worship the Lord	Thomas Adams	14d.	*That God doth love the world	Bach	3d.
*Come hither, ye faithful	H. Hofmann	4d.	*The Angel Gabriel was sent from God	H. Smart	2d.
*Come, ye Gentiles, hear the story	Edward C. Bairstow	14d.	*The Angel said unto them (Two-part. Sop. and Bass)	Brown	14d.
*Come, ye lofty	H. Elliot Button	14d.	*The first Christmas (Words only, 3s. per 100)	J. Barnby	3d.
*Crown Him, the Virgin's Son	B. Luard-Selby	2d.	*The Grace of God which bringeth salvation	J. Barnby	14d.
Dawns the day, the natal day	Robin H. Legge	3d.	*The hallowed day hath shined	B. Luard-Selby	14d.
Drop down, ye heavens	J. Barnby, 14d. ; J. Stainer	4d.	*The hallowed day hath shined upon us	J. Stainer	14d.
*For unto us a Child is born	Handel	2d.	*The Hymn of the Angels	John E. West	4d.
*Give the king Thy judgments, O Lord	A. H. Brown	14d.	The light hath shined	E. Silas and C. G. Verrinder, ea.	14d.
Glory be to God	Bach	3d.	*The Lord our Righteousness	Hugh Blair	3d.
*Glory to God	Bach, 2d. ; Handel	1d.	The morning stars sang together	J. Stainer	3d.
Glory to God in the highest	*Clowes Bayley and Pergolesi, ea.	14d.	The morning stars sang together	G. A. West	6d.
*Glory to God in the highest	E. Markham Lee	3d.	*The New-Born King	Percy E. Fletcher	14d.
*God so loved the world	J. Goss and M. Kingston, ea.	14d.	The star that now is shining	Oliver King	3d.
God so loved the world	J. Varley Roberts	14d.	The whole earth is at rest	J. Varley Roberts	4d.
*God so loved the world	J. Stainer	14d.	The Word is flesh become	Ch. Gounod	6d.
*God, Who at sundry times	Edward C. Bairstow	14d.	*The Word is made Incarnate	Thomas Adams	2d.
God, Who at sundry times	J. H. Mee	4d.	There shall a star	Mendelssohn	6d.
*Good King Wenceslas	Arr. by W. G. Ross	2d.	*There shall come a star	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
Hail! thou that art highly favoured	Arthur Carnall	4d.	*There shall come forth a Rod	Ferris Tozer	3d.
*Hail to the Christ (Carol-Anthem)	J. Barnby	3d.	*There shall come forth a star	O. A. Mansfield	14d.
*Hallelujah! for unto us a Child is born	W. H. Monk	14d.	*There was silence in Bethlehem's fields	J. Stainer	14d.
*Hallelujah! the light hath shined	Oliver King	3d.	*Ditto (Unison)	J. Stainer	14d.
Hark! the glad sound	*Myles B. Foster and E. V. Hall, ea.	3d.	*There were shepherds	Myles B. Foster and B. Tours, ea.	14d.
Hark! the herald angels sing	E. V. Hall	3d.	Ditto (Two-part Anthem)	Myles B. Foster	3d.
Hark! what news the angels bring	Oliver King	3d.	There were shepherds	Edgar Pettman and H. W. Wareing, ea.	3d.
Hear, King of Angels	Bach	14d.	*There were shepherds	Charles Vincent	4d.
He come forth	G. A. Macfarren	2d.	*There were shepherds	E. A. Sydenham and Healey Willan, ea.	3d.
How beautiful are the feet	Appendix to the "Messiah" Handel	3d.	This day Christ is born (Men's Voices)	Basil Harwood	3d.
I desired wisdom	J. Stainer	6d.	This is the day which the Lord hath made	J. Turle	3d.
I will set His dominion in the sea	Horatio W. Parker	4d.	*This is the month	E. W. Naylor	14d.
*In a stable lowly (Carol-Anthem)	Oliver King	14d.	*Thou art My Son	Thomas Adams	3d.
*In that day	J. F. Bridge	3d.	*Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling	Berlioz	14d.
*In the beginning	G. B. Allen and B. Luard-Selby, ea.	14d.	*Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts	J. Stainer	14d.
*In the beginning	Charles Macpherson	4d.	Unto us a Child is born	F. Adlam	4d.
*In the beginning was the Word	E. H. Thorne	14d.	Unto us was born (Two-part Anthem)	G. A. Macfarren	3d.
In the beginning was the Word	Ferris Tozer	4d.	What sweeter music can we bring	H. Walford Davies	6d.
In this was manifested	F. E. Gladstone	3d.	When Christ was born to earth	H. Walford Davies	4d.
*It came upon the midnight clear	J. Stainer	14d.	*When Jesus was born in Bethlehem	W. A. C. Cruickshank	3d.
*Jesu, Who from Thy Father's throne	F. C. Woods	3d.	*While all things were in quiet silence	Henry J. King	3d.
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem J. T. Field & E. J. Hopkins, ea.	14d.		*While all things were in quiet silence	Oliver King	14d.
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	Bruce Steane	14d.	While all things were in quiet silence	G. A. Macfarren	14d.
*Like silver lamps	J. Barnby	14d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks Geo. Elvey & E. V. Hall, ea.	3d.
*Lo, God, our God has come	Battison Haynes	3d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks	J. Barnby	4d.
Lo, star-led chiefs	W. Crotch	2d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks	W. T. Best	14d.
*Love Divine, all love excelling	E. V. Hall	3d.	*With all Thy Hosts	John E. West	14d.
*Mercy and truth are met together (Words, 3s. per 100) J. Stainer	3d.		With all Thy Hosts	A. W. Wilson	14d.

THE "LUTE" SERIES OF CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

*72 Arise, shine	T. W. Stephenson	3d.	*71 Fear not; for behold	F. J. Sawyer	3d.
*95 Arise, shine	F. C. Maker	3d.	*12 Hark! what mean (Carol Anthem)	Arthur Sullivan	3d.
179 Behold! I He cometh	Albert W. Ketelbey	14d.	143 How beautiful are the feet	W. A. C. Cruickshank	3d.
16 Behold, I bring	F. Aubrey Owen	3d.	144 Let us now go	A. Kempton	3d.
94 Behold, I bring you good tidings	Fredk. Peel	3d.	131 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem	Arthur Page	3d.
225 Behold, my Servant	C. Harris	3d.	170 Sing, O Daughter of Zion	H. Elliot Button	3d.
108 Behold, my Servant	Ebenezer Prout	3d.	180 Sing, O Daughter of Zion	Arthur Page	3d.
166 Behold, upon the mountains	A. W. Ketelbey	3d.	154 Sing, O Heavens	Coldham Hall	3d.
*59 Blessed be the Lord	J. Barnby	3d.	*48 Sing, O sing	Henry Leslie	3d.
204 Break forth into joy	F. Aubrey Owen	3d.	*83 There were shepherds	A. R. Gaul	3d.
155 Break forth into joy	J. C. Bridge	3d.	132 Unto us a Child is born	H. E. Nicol	3d.
*119 Break forth into joy	Seymour Smith	3d.	191 While all things	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
*23 Come near, ye nations	Michael Watson	3d.	*118 While shepherds watched	G. C. Martin	3d.
*35 Daughter of Zion	F. C. Maker	3d.

Anthems marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1d., 14d., and 2d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings ; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR CHRISTMAS SERVICES, ETC.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC FOR SOPRANO, TENOR AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence ; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 6s. 6d. ; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

NIELS W. GADE.

(Op. 40.)

Price One Shilling ; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.

CHRISTMAS SCENES

FOR FEMALE VOICES

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN

Price Two Shillings ; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of
Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday,
and the Festival of the Epiphany.

Vocal Score, Two Shillings ; Vocal Parts, One Shilling each.
Parts 1 and 2, 1s. ; Parts 3 and 4, 1s. ; Parts 5 and 6, 1s.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 6d.
Books of Words (per 100), 10s. Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 5s.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND THE MUSIC

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling ; Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, Five Shillings per Hundred.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI,
CHORUS AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling ; Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

YULE-TIDE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ANDERTON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d. ; cloth, gilt, 3s.

BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

BY

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

SET TO MUSIC FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA

BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THEME AND SIX DIVERSIONS

FOR FULL ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD GERMAN.String Parts, 9s. ; Wind Parts, 23s. ; Full Score, In the Press.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo ... 3s. 6d.
" " Pianoforte Duet ... 5s. 0d.

"A brilliant and genial new work—always very melodious, richly scored, and invariably distinguished by an atmosphere of romantic charm."—Daily Chronicle.

"The Diversions increase in interest. The Fourth and Sixth may be specially mentioned as being the perfection of musical light music."—Morning Post.

"Contrast is one of the leading features of the work, specially marked in the Third Diversion, which might illustrate a rural fête of bucolic frolic."—Referee.

"The delicate Second Diversion is a gem of joyous animation."—Globe.

"It is brilliant and cheerful, extremely clever, and has the spontaneity which can only be achieved by complete mastery of resource."—Star.

"It was full of grace, melodious, and, above all, lucidly expressed. The Fifth Diversion is a fine exposition of a valse theme."—Weekly Despatch.

"The composer has lost none of his virility and joyousness—it is fresh open-air music."—Observer.

"Edward German's Theme and Six Diversions provide us with a whiff of sweet English briar-rose—very refreshing."—World.

"It is a singularly smooth, and even delightful piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FOUR SHAKESPEARE SONGS

1. HARK! HARK! THE LARK.
2. WHO IS SYLVIA.
3. TAKE, O TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY.
4. ORPHEUS WITH HIS LUTE.

COMPOSED BY REGINALD STEGGALL.
Op. 28.

PRICE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

AN INTRODUCTION
TO THE
ENGLISH COUNTRY DANCE

Containing the Descriptions together with the Tunes

OF TWELVE DANCES
BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

PRICE, THREE SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE IMPROMPTU
FOR PIANOFORTE SOLOCOMPOSED BY
ALFRED HOLLINS.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORGAN MUSIC
FOR CHRISTMAS.NOVELLO'S ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

No. 8.

- | | | | |
|-----|---|-------|-------------------|
| No. | | | |
| 1. | CHORALE PRELUDE, "In dulci júbilo" | | J. S. Bach |
| 2. | PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("Christmas Oratorio") | | J. S. Bach |
| 3. | QUEM VIDISTES, PASTORES | | W. T. Best |
| 4. | VENITE IN BETHLEHEM | | W. T. Best |
| 5. | DECEMBER—Christmas Morn | | Frederic H. Cowen |
| 6. | FANTASIA ON OLD CHRISTMAS CAROLS | | William Faulkes |
| 7. | FOR UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN ("Messiah") | | Handel |
| 8. | PASTORALE | | Theodore Kullak |
| 9. | CHORUS OF SHEPHERDS | | J. Lemmens |
| 10. | CHRISTMAS PASTORALE | | Gustav Merkel |
| 11. | A CHRISTMAS PASTORAL | | B. Luard-Selby |
| 12. | FANTASY ON TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS | | John E. West |
| | ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") | | |

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ;
CLOTH, FIVE SHILLINGS.

THE VILLAGE ORGANIST.

BOOK 48.

- | | | | |
|-----|-----------------------------------|-------|-------------------|
| No. | | | |
| 1. | FANTASY on Old Christmas Carols | | Hugh Blair |
| 2. | PASTORAL SYMPHONY ("The Messiah") | | Handel |
| 3. | "IN DULCI JUBILO"—Ancient Carol | | R. L. de Pearsall |
| 4. | PASTORALE (8th Concerto) | | Corelli |
| 5. | CHRISTMAS (Op. 205, No. 1) | | Max Oesten |
| 6. | CHORAL ("Christmas Oratorio") | | J. S. Bach |

PRICE ONE SHILLING NET.

- | | | | | |
|-------------------------|--|------------------------|---|-------|
| | | | | s. d. |
| A | CHRISTMAS PASTORALE on the Introit "Hodie Christus Natus est" and the Hymns "Corde Natus" and "Adeste Fideles" | B. Luard-Selby | 1 | 6 |
| SIX | PIECES (Book 5 of Collection of Pieces) | W. T. Best | 2 | 0 |
| POSTLUDE | ("Good King Wenceslas") | G. M. Garrett | 1 | 6 |
| OFFERTOIRE | (Air with Variations). (Modern Organist. No. 9) | Léfebure-Wély | 2 | 6 |
| OFFERTORIUM | (Four Pieces, No. 2) | J. Lemmens | 1 | 6 |
| VOLUNTARY | for Christmas-tide | F. Ouseley | 1 | 0 |
| CHRISTMAS SONATA | No. 4, in D (Op. 32) | Otto Dienel | 3 | 6 |
| CHRISTMAS BELLS | | G. J. Elvey | 0 | 9 |
| FANTASIA | on Old English Carols | W. Faulkes | 1 | 6 |
| RHAPSODIE | on an Ancient Christmas Carol | W. Faulkes | 2 | 0 |
| TWO CHORAL PRELUDES | 1. In dulci Júbilo; 2. Puer Natus est in Bethlehem | D. Buxtehude | 1 | 0 |
| CHRISTMAS CAROL | (In dulci Júbilo). (Young Organist, No. 5) | Pearsall | 1 | 0 |
| OFFERTOIRE | for Christmas Day (Church Organist, Book 8) | C. Collin | 2 | 6 |
| CHORAL IMPROVISATION | on "In dulci Júbilo." | Sigfrid Karg-Elert | 2 | 0 |
| THE CARAVAN OF THE MAGI | (Approach and Departure). March from the Cantata Bethlehem (Maunder). | Arranged by E. C. Nunn | 1 | 6 |
| PHANTASIE | on "Adeste Fideles (Violin, Bells, and Organ) | T. Lea Southgate | 1 | 6 |
| FANTASIA | on "In dulci júbilo" | J. Matthews | 2 | 6 |
| POSTLUDIUM FESTIVUM | | C. W. Pearce | 1 | 0 |

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY
SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

CLOTH, GILT, SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE TIMES.

As his writing is full of illustrations of his own cheerful character, so the book is appropriately full of illustrations, drawings, and photographs, showing him at all ages, the Cathedral churches in which he has worked, his predecessors and successor at the Abbey, and all the persons and things who have "pleased him mightily."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

This cheery book . . . is playfully anecdotal . . . The author of these pleasantly written recollections . . . has much of interest to unfold.

MORNING POST.

There are many illustrations. One plate consists of portraits of the fourteen organists of Westminster Abbey since 1549, and there are numerous other pictures of interest. The whole is something more than a book of reminiscences; it can be read with interest by the non-musical, and can be turned to by the historian for light shed by an authority.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

EVENING STANDARD.

The book must be read to be appreciated. Stories wrenched from their context do less than justice to the personality which pervades the volume.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

EVENING NEWS.

Sir Fredrick Bridge's own story of his long life in the service of the Church and its music is told at length; and a very beautiful spirit of devotion to his life's task runs through the pages.

SATURDAY REVIEW.

An autobiography of the chatty, gossip order. . . . It deals now and again with serious musical topics, more particularly, of course, those which have come within the orbit of the author's own wide professional experience; and when it does so it is not only interesting, but instructive and valuable.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

REFEREE.

The volume is exceptionally interesting reading, not only to musicians, but to all who trace social progress. It is also of considerable intimate historical value, and incidentally a useful reference book, as it is excellently indexed. I should add that it contains many artistic illustrations and portraits.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.

Will interest all readers of contemporary autobiography. It is a book of high spirits and not unduly concerned with the art of music. Rather, it is the record of a man who has enjoyed with great good-humour all the phases of life he has touched and the personages with whom he has come in contact.

ATHENÆUM.

A pleasant and amusing record of a peaceful, busy life . . . his reminiscences are told lightly and with humour.

CITY PRESS.

A more chatty autobiography has not been published for a long while . . . is deeply interesting.

HUNTLY EXPRESS.

Not for a long time have we read a more charming or delightful volume. It is a story once taken up cannot be laid down until it has been wholly gone through. From the first page to the last there is not a dull or uninteresting paragraph. As an autobiography it will rank amongst the best-known works of this kind which have ever been given to the reading public. As a reward book it should be kept in mind by all school authorities—educational or musical.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER.

A charming book. Readers will see that "A Westminster Pilgrim" is a very pleasant companion, whose gossip will cheer other pilgrims for many days to come.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

MUSICAL HERALD.

So long in preparation, has been worth waiting for. One would not recommend a protracted reading at one sitting; the scenes change too rapidly. But that is just the charm of the book for a busy musician. Pick it up and read a few pages at random, and you will want to repeat such pleasure again and again.

ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER.

This is indeed a notable book, and one which stands—and probably will stand—somewhat by itself in the whole range of English autobiographical literature; . . . it is full of humour from cover to cover.

MUSICAL NEWS.

The reader of this delightful volume has the somewhat rare experience of perusing a life-story without wondering whether he has chanced to stray into some advertisement columns.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading. . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

LADY'S PICTORIAL.

A volume of exceedingly chatty reminiscences.

THE QUEEN.

Nothing could be more sprightly—genial.

ABERDEEN FREE PRESS.

Readers may be assured of finding in the book a wealth of intimate information regarding a little-known side of music and many things of interest to the non-musical. The excellent reproductions of the portraits of eminent musicians are a feature of the volume.

NOTTINGHAM GUARDIAN.

Within its 349 pages he has packed an infinite variety of reminiscence, told with a raciness of style and a command of expression which impart great effect to the extremely interesting events of which the volume treats, and which all types of readers will find of absorbing interest.

SHEFFIELD TELEGRAPH.

It is a portly volume, filled with good stories.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR OLD ENGLISH DANCES ENGLISH DANCES

SET 1.

SET 2.

COMPOSED BY

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Full Score...	...	...	...	...	10s. 6d.
String Parts	...	...	...	...	6s. od.
Wind Parts	...	...	...	...	12s. od.
Ditto (small orchestra)	...	...	...	...	9s. od.
Military Band	...	...	...	...	15s. od.
Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	2s. 6d.
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	...	...	3s. od.
Quintet (Pianoforte and Strings)	...	...	...	...	2s. 6d.
Extra Strings, 6d. each.

Full Score...	...	...	...	...	25s. od.
String Parts	...	...	...	...	9s. 6d.
Wind Parts	...	...	...	...	21s. od.
Pianoforte Solo	...	...	...	...	2s. 6d.

From the above: "MINUET D'AMOUR."

Pianoforte Solo, 1s. 6d.; Violin and Pianoforte, 2s.;

Quintet for Pianoforte and Strings, 2s. 6d.

Extra Strings, 6d. each.

Full Score...	...	...	...	...	3s. 6d.
String Parts	...	...	...	...	1s. 6d.
Wind Parts	...	...	...	...	2s. 9d.
Military Band	...	...	...	...	5s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHÉMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(OP. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO:

PRICE, COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE; SEPARATELY, 1s. 6d. EACH.

Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	complete	3s. od.
Violin and Pianoforte	...	...	separately, each	1s. 6d.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra	...	...	...	6s. od.
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra...	...	...	...	7s. od.
Ditto, for Full Orchestra...	...	...	...	12s. od.

Full Score (Full Orchestra)	...	...	...	5s. od.
Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.	...	...	...	...
Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and	...	...	...	...
Strings, each Number	...	...	...	2s. od.
Separate String Parts, 6d. each.	...	...	...	...
Military Band Arrangement	...	...	...	15s. od.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CAROLS

BY

JOSEPH C. BRIDGE,

M.A., D. Mus. Oxon. et Dunelm.; F.S.A.; Organist of Chester Cathedral; Professor of Music in the University of Durham.

1.	ON CHRISTMAS NIGHT	3d.
2.	AWAY WITH GRIEF	3d.
3.	THE MERRY CHRISTMAS MORN	3d.
4.	HOLY NIGHT	2d.
5.	AWAKE THE VOICE (S.S.A. only)	4d.
6.	CHRISTMAS IN THE FIELDS (Béarnais Melody)	2d.
7.	WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN (Chester Mystery Play)	2d.
8.	REJOICE WITH HEART AND VOICE (Old French Melody)	2d.
9.	THE SHEPHERDS' CAROL (Coventry Mystery Play)	2d.
10.	LULLABY (Coventry Mystery Play)	2d.
11.	ACROSS THE SNOW	2d.
12.	THE SHEPHERDS HAD AN ANGEL (S.S. only. For Holy Innocents' Day)	2d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

1. Lowliest! Loftiest!
2. O hearken, all ye sad and lone!

WORDS BY

G. H. F. NORRIS.

MUSIC BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

Price Threepence; Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

1. CHRISTMAS SNOWS.
2. CARMEN DILECTIONIS
(Mary's Lullaby.)

WORDS BY

ELIZABETH MERRYWEATHER.

MUSIC BY

MURRAY RUMSEY,

26, BARROW ROAD, QUORN, LOUGHBOROUGH.

From whom copies may be obtained. Price 2d. Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100, post-free.

A SPECIAL OFFER.

HAROLD REEVES has secured new sets of the following celebrated work:
LIFE OF RICHARD WAGNER. Being the Authorised English Version by W. Ashton Ellis, of Glasenapp's Monumental Biography of this Great Composer, Conductor, Prose Writer, Critic and Revolutionary, the Six Volumes Complete, with portraits, &c., over 400 pages to each volume, thick 8vo, cloth, published at £4 16s. net. New copies now offered for 30s. (postage 2s.).

A fascinating Biography of one of the greatest men the world has ever produced. It exceeds in importance the original on which it was based, as Ellis added a great deal of important and original matter.

JUST ISSUED. POST-FREE.

A CATALOGUE OF MUSIC AND MUSICAL LITERATURE, Old and Rare, Second-hand and New. All kinds of Interesting Items relating to Music and Musicians.

HAROLD REEVES is always open to purchase Music and Musical Books in large or small quantities, for cash.

HAROLD REEVES, 210, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.C. 2.
 (New Oxford Street end, next to Princes Theatre.)

SUNSET.—Vesper Hymn for Choir and Congregation. For Festival or General Use. By W. HODSON. Price 3d.
 London: Novello & Co., Ltd.

NEW CHAMBER MUSIC

BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

QUINTET

IN A MINOR

FOR PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS
(Op. 84).

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS

QUARTET

FOR STRINGS

(Op. 83)

SCORE PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.
 PARTS „ EIGHT SHILLINGS.

SONATA

FOR VIOLIN AND PIANOFORTE

(Op. 82).

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CONCERTO

IN E MINOR

FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 85).

ARRANGEMENT FOR

VIOLONCELLO AND PIANOFORTE

PRICE SIX SHILLINGS.

Full Score and Orchestral Parts on hire only.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

VALE LYRIQUE

(“THE SMILE OF SPRING”)

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

FROM THE SONG.

COMPOSED BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

REFLECTIONS

FOR

PIANOFORTE SOLO

(AFTER VERSES FROM LONGFELLOW)

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW AND SUCCESSFUL SONGS.

BREWER, A. HERBERT—

WHEN ALL THE WORLD IS YOUNG.

In D (Compass, D to E), and F.

Price 2s.

DERRY, BROMLEY—

THE RAIDERS.

(A Song of the Norsemen.)

In G (Compass, D to E flat).

Price 2s.

FARRAR, ERNEST—

BRITTANY.

In E flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), F and G).

Price 1s. 6d.

FLETCHER, PERCY—

HARK! HARK! MY SOUL.

In C (Compass, A to C), and E flat.

Price 2s.

GERMAN, EDWARD—

CHARMING CHLOE.

In D flat (Compass, D flat to E flat), E flat and F.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

In G (Compass, D to E), and B flat.

Price 2s. each.

ROSS, W. G.—

A DAFFODIL WEDDING.

In C (Compass, C to F), and D.

Price 2s.

WALKER, LEONARD J.—

MY LIFE IS LIKE A GARDEN.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C and D.

THE SUMMERTIME OF LOVE.

In B flat (Compass, B flat to E flat), C and D.

Price 2s. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CRAFTSMANSHIP AND SCIENCE

In every British Music String.

Craftsmanship—because we employ skilled, experienced workers, who take delight in turning out a beautifully-finished and uniformly good article.

Science—because we have a properly-equipped factory, designed for mass production, with all the work done under careful and rigid supervision.

The proof of the String is in performance. We offer a sample string to any musician who cares to write to us. Send for a String to-day. Put it to any test you like, and then you will agree that British Music Strings are the best that Craftsmanship and Science can produce.

Steel and covered strings for all instruments.

"Cathedral" Brand includes strings for every stringed instrument, wrapped and packed in style commensurate with extra high quality.

"Summit" Strings are a popular line at a popular price. All our Strings are artistically wrapped and packed in damp-proof envelopes. Splendid in tone and perfectly dependable.

Send for FREE Sample String.

ENCLOSE STAMP FOR POSTAGE.

This offer of a Sample String applies to Violin, Mandoline, and Banjo, and is for December only. State exact String required.

BRITISH MUSIC STRINGS, LTD.,

MONSELL ROAD, FINSBURY PARK, LONDON, N. 4.

Telegrams: "CELLO, FINSPARK, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2594.

CHAPPELL & CO.'S STANDARD OPERATIC AND CHORAL WORKS.

Messrs. CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., beg to draw the attention of Choral Societies, &c., to the undermentioned Standard Works, which are now in great demand with the resumption of performances by Choral and Dramatic Societies:—

CONCERT VERSION

OF MERRIE ENGLAND

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

SCOTTISH RHAPSODY.

THE WEDDING OF SHON MACLEAN

FOR CHORUS, SOLI, AND ORCHESTRA

By HUBERT BATH.

FAUST

By CH. GOUNOD.

CONCERT VERSION

OF

TOM JONES

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

CONCERT SELECTION

OF

A PRINCESS OF KENSINGTON

COMIC OPERA

By EDWARD GERMAN.

LOOK AT THE CLOCK

By HUBERT BATH.

THE MARTYR OF ANTIOCH

By ARTHUR SULLIVAN.

VOCAL SCORE, CHORUSES AND ORCHESTRAL PARTS.

FULL PARTICULARS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION TO—

CHAPPELL & CO., LTD., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN BY VARIOUS COMPOSERS. SET III.

PRICE, PAPER COVER, TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

CLOTH, FOUR SHILLINGS.

CONTENTS.

1. MELODY	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	A HERBERT BREWER
2. MAESTOSO	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	GEORGE CALKIN
3. AVE MARIA	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	EDWARD T. CHIPP
4. INTERLUDE	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	PERCY E. FLETCHER
5. INTERMEZZO	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	ALAN GRAY
6. POSTLUDE	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	ALEX. GUILMANT
7. SURSUM CORDA	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	JOHN IRELAND
8. LIEDER OHNE WORTE No. 22	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY
9. ANDANTE	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	GUSTAV MERKEL
10. DUETTINO IN G	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	ERNEST NEWTON
11. CAVATINA	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	JOACHIM RAFF
12. MONOLOGUE No. 5	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	J. RHEINBERGER
13. MELODY IN F	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	ANTON RUBINSTEIN
14. DREAMING	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	SCHUMANN
15. THE POET SPEAKS	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	SCHUMANN
16. SOFT VOLUNTARY	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	B. LUARD-SELBY
17. MINUETTO	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	BERTHOLD TOURS
18. ASPIRATION	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	JOHN E. WEST
19. SKETCH IN C MINOR	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	JOHN E. WEST
20. ANDANTE CON MOTO	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	W. G. WOOD

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W. 1.

INSTITUTED 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER. 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.A.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors, Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the letters A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors, Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter.

A Special Teachers' Training Course, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted, prospectus of which is now ready.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON,

Secretary.

Marshall & Rose

SUPERB GRAND & UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES

• THE PIANOS WHICH INSPIRE

THOSE who purchase the Superb Marshall and Rose Pianoforte can always be confident that their instrument will win the highest measure of praise on account of its superlatively sympathetic qualities. The Marshall and Rose Pianoforte in the making has been treated with the same care and tenderness as a rare violin; it is the supreme outcome of years of experience and steady striving after an ideal; every part of it has literally been trained towards perfection, and the result is an instrument which is almost human in its responsiveness.

The artist who avails himself of this wonderful instrument as a means of self-expression will find that his message never fails in its appeal when given to an audience in such an exceptional manner. Real connoisseurs of Music are convinced that the magic and beauty of the immortal works of the great Composers can only be adequately realised when interpreted on the Piano of Perfection—the instrument which bears the name of MARSHALL AND ROSE.

The Marshall and Rose Grand and Upright Pianofortes can also be obtained containing THE WORLD-FAMED ANGELUS PIANO-PLAYER, which gives you a Piano possessing every musical quality and the ability to play it.

Kindly call or write for Illustrated Catalogue No. 112 to the Manufacturers

SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS, LTD.,
Angelus Hall, Regent House, 233, Regent St., London, W.

Chappell Pianos

GRAND & UPRIGHT

Not to be excelled for
STONE, TOUCH,
AND DURABILITY.

Acknowledged by a discriminating Public throughout the world as the FINEST ENGLISH MAKE.

Chappell Player-Pianos GRAND AND UPRIGHT.

Agents in all the Principal Towns.

CHAPPELL PIANO CO.,
LIMITED.,

SHOW-ROOMS—

50, NEW BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.-1.

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY

3 9999 08819 009 3

OCT 8 1920

OCT 8 1920

